Before the Acquisition Officer a claim for Rs. 9,86,087 including the statutory solatium was made. In that claim Varkas land was valued at Rs. 1,787-8-0 per acre and Kharif land was valued at Rs. 2,875 per acre. The land for which building potentiality was claimed was valued at Rs. 1-8-0 per sq. yd. and the value of the loss of the right to levy assessment was placed at Rs. 19,112. It was also urged before the Acquisition Officer that there were in all 4,194 trees on the acquired land for which a sum of Rs. 76,203 should be paid.

The Acquisition Officer awarded Rs. 1,300 per acre for Kharif land in respect of 12 acres 17 gunthas, Rs. 700 per acre for Varkas land for 91 acres 1 guntha, Rs. 1,250 for a bore well and a token value of Rs. 100 each for the road, Nallah and tank. He awarded a sum of Rs. 13,249 as compensation for the loss of right to levy agricultural assessment by capitalising Rs. 622-7-0 being the total assessment per year at 20 years' purchase but he rejected the claim made in respect of the loss of non-agricultural assessment. As regards the rest of the lands he awarded Rs. 23,087 for 15 acres 19 gunthas (74,899 sq. yds.) at Rs. 0-6-0 per sq. yd., Rs. 4,356 for 36 gunthas (4,356 sq. yds.) at Rs. 1-0-0 per sq. yd. and Rs. 21,520 for 26 acres 36 gunthas at Rs. 800 per acre. The last three items were valued by him at rates higher than those allowed by him for the rest of the lands presumably on the footing that those lands had some building potentiality. In all, the award including the amount of solatium and interest was for Rs. 1,98,276.

The claimants, being dissatisfied with the award as regards the amount of compensation, applied for reference to the High Court. The matter was accordingly referred to the Court under s. 18 of the Act for determination of the amount of compensation.

The reference was heard.

M. P. Land, for the claimants.

H. M. Seervai, Advocate General, with J. M. Thakore, for the Special Land Acquisition Officer.

SHRIJAT J. [His Lordship after dealing with the facts of the case and points not material to this report, proceeded.] As regards development, admittedly upto January, 1950, there was no development in Parjapur itself except for a solitary one-room structure with a verandah in S. N. 34/2-A. As one comes down south towards Marol gaathan, the Acme Bobbin & Shuttles Co., Ltd. had, by January, 1950, constructed a factory in Instance No. 3. Except for that, there were no structures on Marol-Maroshi Road until one came to S. No. 168/6 where there were three structures. Marol gaathan had, of course, about 400 houses. Going eastwards there was some development in S. Nos. 44 and 45 of Paspoli and in S. No. 31 of Tungwa where M/s. Larsen & Toubro and Khandelwal & Co. had their factories. Near Saki Naka also there were some 3 or 4 structures. But the distance between these places and Marol-Maroshi Road is as much as five furlongs and, therefore, any development in that direction cannot be considered as a development in the vicinity of the acquired land. There is next the evidence that from the south of Marol gaathan upto Andheri-Kurla Road, a distance of about 1,200 feet, there were only 10 residential structures but not any industrial structure and all these 10 structures abutted on the main road. The position, therefore, was that there were considerable undeveloped areas, first, between Andheri-Kurla Road and Marol gao-than, and secondly between Marol gaathan and the land in Instance No. 3. Even to the south of Marol gaathan development was in a ribbon fashion. Thus, except for three structures in S. No. 168/6, the factory in the land in Instance No. 3, a bungalow on the top of a hillock in S. No. 10 and a one-room structure in S. No. 34/2-A there were no other structures in this entire locality. But Mr. Vaidya's anticipations were that all these areas, right from the north of Marol gaathan to S. No. 19/3, the northernmost part of the acquired land, would be filled up upto a depth of 900 feet on both sides of the road within a period of 25 years. These anticipations are not, in my view, justified by the evidence of the very scanty development that had taken place by January 19, 1950.

The learned Advocate General in view of Mr. Vaidya's statement that this entire area would be fully developed within 25 years asked him what development, if any, had in fact taken place since the date of the notification until to-day. Mr. Land objected to that question on the ground that any evidence as to the period after the date of notification was inadmissible. For this objection reliance was placed on ss. 23 and 24 of the Act. Now, s. 23 provides that in determining compensation the Court shall consider the market-value of the acquired property at the date of the publication of the notification. Whereas that section lays down the several things to be taken into consideration, s. 24 provides what are the things that the Court cannot consider. Thus cl. (4) of s. 24 provides that the Court shall not take into consideration any damage likely to be caused to the land acquired after the date of the declaration under s. 6 or in consequence of the use to which it would be put. Clause (5) of s. 24 provides likewise that the Court shall not take into consideration any increase in the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it would be put when acquired. As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Manmatha Nath Mitter v. The Secretary of State for India in Council,¹ the time of awarding compensation must be construed as meaning the time of compensation, the time at which the right to compensation attaches. In other words the valuation does not depend upon the result of acquisition. To that extent, evidence as to facts which arose after the acquisition is no doubt irrelevant. But the point to consider is, does s. 23 or s. 24 mean that the Court must shut its eyes on all facts which have occurred after the date of notification under s. 4. Suppose the Court is asked to determine compensation on the basis of building potentiality on the footing that the acquired land is likely to develop upto a certain distance within a certain period into either residential or industrial area and the Court is shown that between the date of the notification and the hearing of the Reference when the Court estimates the compensation payable on that footing no development has in fact taken place, does it mean that the Court must brush aside actuality and proceed to determine compensation on hypothetical considerations? The effect of ss. 23 and 24 is that compensation must be fixed looking to the condition of the property and the probable use to which a purchaser would most advantageously put it at the date of the notification. The date of notification fixes the time at which the value of the property, as it then is, is to be determined. Reliance was placed on *Bradberry, In re., National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Bradberry. Fry, In re. Tasker v. Calliford*² to show that facts, though occurring after the date at which valuation is to be determined, can be looked at for the purpose of arriving at a correct estimate. There the testatrix, one Ellen Bradberry, by her will dated August 19, 1931, gave legacies to certain legatees and life annuities beginning from the date of her death to three other persons. The annuities were payable out of a fund sufficient by its income to answer them. She, however, directed that if the income could not answer the annuities at the date when they became payable, no annuitant should have a claim against any other part of her estate. She gave her residue to four residuary legatees. The testatrix died on July 27, 1939. Her estate was not enough to pay the legacies and also to provide income to pay these annuities, but it was enough to pay the legacies and the capitalized values of the annuities. On July 13, 1940, Clara Jones, one of the three annuitants, died. The estate then became able to provide the fund to meet the remaining annuities. Before her death, however, the residuary legatees had consented to the annuitants' accepting the capitalized values of their annuities, but on learning of the death of Clara Jones they withdrew their consent. In May 1941, William Edwards, another annuitant, died. The executors and trustees, the National Provincial Bank, Ltd. were prepared to pay to the executors of Clara Jones and William Edwards the values of their annuities capitalized at the date of the testatrix's death. The residuary legatees contended that the executors of Clara Jones and William Edwards were entitled to receive only sums equal to the amount of the annuities payable for the periods between the death of the testatrix and the respective deaths of the two annuitants. In that event the Bank would have been able to pay those sums and the legacies and would also have been able to set aside a fund sufficient by its income to pay the third surviving annuitant her annuity in full. The residuary legatees contended that the surviving annuitant should be paid her annuity and not its capitalized value. On behalf of the executors of the two deceased annuitants it was claimed that their right to the value of annuities capitalized as at the date of the death of the testatrix cannot be said to have ended because the two annuitants died before it was paid. The two deceased annuitants had accepted the values so capitalized and that it should be paid to their executors. Negating this contention, Uthwatt J. said that it was the duty of the Court to take into consideration every relevant fact that is known at the date when the decision is to be made and work out the rights of the parties accordingly. The death of an annuitant before the Court's decision enabled the Court to measure what was in fact given to him.

"Why should the Court," he observed, "neglect known facts and put itself in the position of a prophet who, when he knows all the facts, projects himself to an earlier date and predicts as the span of life of a person known to be dead the length of life of the hypothetical person who lives his actuarial life?"

At p. 45 of the report the learned Judge sums as follows:

"A principle is to be drawn from these authorities, namely, that where facts are available they are to be preferred to prophecies."

Thus the principle laid down in this decision is that where the question at issue is the method of working out rights, regard can be had in estimating the value of those rights to events which have happened since those rights accrued.

Now, it is true that compensation payable to a claimant under the Land Acquisition Act is to be determined from the market value of the property at the date of the notification and not its value after that date. But while estimating that value at that date if a certain hypothetical basis is adopted, does s. 23 or s. 24 debar a Court from testing that basis by facts which are no longer speculative or in the region of estimates but are well-known and actual at the time when the Court is determining that value? There is a distinction between the value of the property at the date of notification and no other date and its determination by the Court at the time of hearing a Reference. There is nothing in either s. 23 or s. 24 of the Act which precludes the Court from considering facts, which, though occurring after the date when the right to compensation accrued, help the Court in estimating the value of the property at the relevant date. If, for instance, a claim for compensation is made on the footing that the acquired land had a certain potentiality, such as quarrying potentiality, and the Court is called upon to estimate the value of such land, does it mean that the Court should disregard facts available to it at the date when it determines such value and which show that the property had no such potentiality and yet estimate the value on theoretical and hypothetical considerations? I think not. It would, in my view, be improper to discard facts which have actually occurred, even though after the date of notification, which throw light on the question of the value of the land in question at the relevant date and which assist the Court to a correct ascertainment of such value. Though the case Bradberry In re was not one dealing with land acquisition, the principle there laid down applies with equal force to the case before me. I held, therefore, that the evidence as to facts occurring even after the date of notification if relevant for the determination of the value at the date of the notification would be relevant. Mr. Vaidya thereupon stated that since January 1950 only two new structures had been put up in S. No. 10 in the entire area from Instance No. 3 down to the north of Marol gaathan and that too within a depth of 300 feet from the road and that no structures at all have been built in the area beyond the depth of 300 feet from that road. These facts clearly show that the period of 25 years during which Mr. Vaidya thought that the entire area from the north of Marol gaathan to S. No. 19/3 upto a depth of 900 feet on both sides of the road would be filled up was a too optimistic estimate.

That takes me to the question of the loss of the right of assessment of the Khot, both agricultural and non-agricultural. Mr. Land has accepted the Acquisition Officer's award as to the agricultural assessment which has been capitalized at 20 years' purchase and, therefore, no question remains to be determined on that item of compensation. But there is considerable controversy as regards the question of compensation for the loss of the right to levy non-agricultural assessment. At one stage the learned Advocate General sought to support the attitude of Government that the Khot had no right to levy non-agricultural assessment. But when it was pointed out to him that that question was already a matter of some judicial pronouncements, he gave up that stand at once. Shortly stated, the question before me is, what would a purchaser have paid in January, 1950 for the right of the Khot to levy non-agricultural assessment in respect of lands to which I have given building potentiality? As I have stated, Mr. Vaidya has based his calculations on the footing that within a period of 25 years the entire area from the north of Marol gaathan upto the northernmost part of the acquired area would be fully developed. On that basis he has taken a mean period of $12\frac{1}{2}$ years and worked out compensation due to the claimants after providing for certain charges of collection and for roads. It was, however, argued that in calculating compensation Mr. Vaidya had not taken into consideration certain facts which would govern the value that a purchaser of this right of the Khot would offer in January, 1950. The first is that though the Khot has a right to levy non-agricultural assessment as and when user of the land is converted from agricultural to non-agricultural purpose, Government has the power to direct the Collector not to change the assessment. Rule 92 of the Rules framed under the Land Revenue Code provides:

"When land assessed for purposes of agriculture only is subsequently used for any purpose unconnected with agriculture, the assessment upon the land so used shall, unless otherwise directed by the State Government, be altered under sub-section (2) of section 48 by the Collector in accordance with rules 81 to 87 inclusive."

The learned Advocate General contended from this rule that this was one of the factors which rendered the right to levy assessment insecure, for Government at any time can direct the Collector not to change the assessment. Therefore, even though a piece of land might be put to non-agricultural use, Government, by directing that no non-agricultural assessment should be levied, could defeat the right of the Khot. In *The Special Land Acquisition Officer v. The Trustees of the Will of the late A. H. Wadia*³, a Division Bench of this Court, however, disregarded such a contention and held that such risk was fanciful for it must be assumed that Government would act honestly and reasonably. The next contention was that Government had always denied the right of the Khot to levy non-agricultural assessment and that, therefore, there was considerable doubt as to the Khot's right to compel Government to levy non-agricultural assessment. That question has also been finally decided by the Supreme Court in Fatma Haji Ali Mohammad v. State of Bombay.⁴ No doubt this decision was delivered on February 5, 1951, after the date of the notification but, as observed by the Appeal Court in The Special Land Acquisition Officer v. The Trustees of the Will of the late A. H. Wadia, although this decision came in February, 1951 the law always was what was finally decided by the Supreme Court and, therefore, although in 1950 the question was a matter of dispute, Government was bound in law to levy non-agricultural assessment even though the benefit of it would go to the Khot. But apart from these questions of law although under r. 92 Government could ask the Collector not to levy such assessment if some part of the assessment was shared by the Khot with Government, there would be no reason for Government to exercise its right to direct the Collector not to levy non-agricultural assessment. There was, therefore, no such risk or insecurity as to the right of the Khot to levy the non-agricultural assessment on these grounds.

But a point, which was not either before Mr. Justice Tendolkar in Land Acquisition Reference No. 10 of 1947 or before the Appeal Court in The Special Land Acquisition Officer v. The Trustees of the Will of the late A. H. Wadia which arose from the decision in that Reference has now been raised. That is that by January, 1950, a certain agrarian policy adopted by the Government of Bombay had been made manifest by certain legislative enactments. These enactments made clear that the intention of both the Government and the Legislature was to do away with the middleman, such as a Khot, standing between the State and the farmer. Thus on April 3, 1950, the Bombay Legislature passed the Bombay Khoti Abolition Act being Act VI of 1950. This Act abolished the Khoti tenure in Ratnagiri and Kolaba districts. Though the Act was passed in April 1950, the Bill was published in the Bombay Government Gazette as early as July 30, 1949. Mr. Land, however, argued that since the Bill proposed to do away with the Khoti tenure only in Ratnagiri and Kolaba districts, a purchaser might well think that the Legislature did not intend to touch the Khoti tenures in Bombay and the areas surrounding the City. That argument, however, is not very impressive. It is well-known that when such reforms are undertaken the Legislature often starts such reforms piecemeal, taking certain districts or areas where they are first set in motion. A prudent purchaser is bound to know that the Legislature had chalked out a certain line of policy, and that once it started abolition of Khoti rights in one area, that policy might well be extended to other areas. But apart from such theoretical aspect, the Legislature had disclosed its mind in the Bill which ultimately became Act VI of 1950 that it regarded the Khoti tenure as an anachronism and should, therefore, be abolished. Besides this Act, the Legislature had already passed four other enactments viz. the Bombay Bhagdari and Narwadari Tenures Abolition Act being Act XXXII of 1949, the Bombay Maleki Tenure Abolition Act of 1949 being Act LXI of 1949, the Bombay Taluqdari Tenure Abolition Act of 1949 being Act No. LXII of 1949 and the Panch Mahals Meh-wassi Tenure Abolition Act, 1949, being Act No. LXIII of 1949, which abundantly made clear the agrarian policy sought to be followed by it. It seems to me, therefore, that a purchaser in January 1950 was bound to feel that there was an element of risk and insecurity so far as this right to levy non-agricultural assessment was concerned. Mr. Justice Tendolkar no doubt in the Reference which I have already referred to capitalized the value of this right at 8 per cent. which was also confirmed by the Appeal Court. But, as I have said before, this aspect, which has now been presented, was not before him or the Appeal Court, probably because the acquisition before Mr. Justice

Tendolkar took place long before these Acts were passed. But looking to the tenor of these Acts it is clear that the Legislature had decided to do away with the several tenures which stood between the State and the peasant.

On January 14, 1952, the Bombay Legislature passed the Salsette Estates (Land Revenue Exemption Abolition) Act, 1951, being Act XLVII of 1951 which abolished amongst other things the Khoti tenure in Salsette District. The Act came into force on March 1, 1952. The Bill was published on August 14, 1951. This Act obviously was passed in furtherance of the Government's agrarian policy already disclosed in the Acts previously enacted. The learned Advocate General argued that the right of the Khot to levy assessment in any event came to an end as from March 1, 1952, and therefore, the only compensation that can be awarded to the claimants in respect of the loss of this right would be for the period between January 19, 1950, and March 1, 1952, that is to say, for 2 years and 1½ months only. Mr. Land has, on the other hand, contended strenuously that the Court is not entitled to take into consideration this Act which came into force after January 19, 1950, the date on which compensation has to be determined. I am told that the present claimants and certain other parties have filed several suits in this Court which are still pending in which two contentions have been raised, first, as to the validity of this Act, and secondly that even if the Act were to be held valid it would not apply to them. Normally I would have postponed this part of the Reference till these suits are finally disposed of but the questions involved in these suits are so important that it might take considerable time before they are finally set at rest. I was, therefore, requested by both the parties that in order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings I should decide this question on two alternative footings, first, what would be the compensation if the Act is held to be valid, and secondly what would be the compensation if the Act is held to be invalid or even if the Act is held valid that it did not apply to the present Khot.

Now, if the Act is held to be valid, it is obvious that the Khot would have the right to levy assessment only upto March 1, 1952. On the other hand, if the Act were to be held invalid or inapplicable to the present Khot, the Khot would have the right to levy assessment until another Act to the same effect was passed or an Act validating the Act was passed. But as to whether another such Act would be passed or not must remain a matter of considerable speculation. On the footing that the Act is valid and that it applies to the present Khot, the question is, can I take into account the fact that on January 14, 1952, this Act was passed although it was enacted after the relevant date? Mr. Land would have me not to consider this Act at all. In other words, his contention is that although the Legislature has in fact done away with this right from March 1, 1952, I am bound to award compensation to the claimants as if the abolition of the right of the claimants to levy assessment has not taken place. Prima facie such a contention does not appear to be either right or proper. As I have said earlier, Mr. Land loses sight of the distinction between (1) the right of compensation for the loss of the privilege of levying assessment accruing on the date of the notification and (2) the determination of the amount of that compensation. In the first case, the right to compensation accrues to the claimants as on the date of the notification. In the second case, the Court estimates that compensation when a Reference in regard to it is heard and disposed of. While arriving at that estimate, viz. the value of that right at the date of the notification, the Court, in my view, is entitled to and must look into facts which have actually occurred in preference to mere hypothetical considerations. Such a question arose in Boulfa and Mertyhr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypridd Waterworks Company.⁵ Owners of coal mines under and near certain waterworks gave the undertakers notice under s. 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, that they intended to work the coal. The undertakers replied by a counter-notice requiring the mine owners not to work and stating their willingness to make compensation. In an arbitration under that Act and the Land Clauses Acts to assess the compensation the mine owners gave evidence to prove that coal rose in value after the date of the counter-notice. It was held that there was no purchase of the coal or transfer of the property in the coal; that the inquiry was not what was the value of the coal at the date of the counter-notice, but what would the coal owners, if they had not been prohibited, have made out of the coal during the time it would have taken them to get it; and that the evidence was admissible. In this connection it is pertinent to cite certain observations made by the Earl of Halsbury L.C. after stating the questions of debate before him. He observed (p. 428):

"...If it were a purchase, the rights and liabilities and profits, if there were any, would pass to the purchaser, and its value, with all its possibilities, would pass at the time notice to treat was given; but, if the question is that which I think it was, then the person who had to make the calculation of what was the compensation ought to have arrived at the sum which experience has now shewn to be the correct amount.

It is true that he probably would not have been able to arrive at that sum accurately, but he ought to have contemplated upon such material as he had what would be the true sum. He ought to have considered the possible rise or fall of prices; but, as I have said, he probably would have made a mistake. We now know what would have been the true sum, and the proposition baldly stated appears to be that, because you could not arrive at the true sum when the notice was given, you should shut your eyes to the true sum now you do know it, because you could not have guessed it then.

It is, of course, only an accident that the true sum can now be ascertained with precision; but what does that matter? It seems to me that the whole fallacy of the contention that you may not look to the facts that have occurred rests upon the false analogy of a sale."

Although this was not an acquisition case, the principle enunciated there for estimating compensation has application. The distinction there made between the case of a sale and the case of estimating compensation is also relevant. I respectfully agree with that principle and hold that in view of the Act having been passed, if the Act is held valid and applicable to the claimants, compensation payable to the claimants would be for the period between January 19, 1950, and March 1, 1952, that is to say, for 2 years and 14 months. To hold otherwise would mean that the Court would be awarding compensation for the period after the Legislature has abolished the very right which alone entitles the aggrieved party to receive compensation. That cannot be for obvious reasons either sound or proper. If the Act, on the other hand, is held to be invalid or even if valid but not applicable to the present claimants then the fact that such an Act was passed becomes irrelevant and the question whether the Legislature would pass either another such Act or a validating Act being purely speculative, the value of the loss of right to levy non-agricultural assessment should be capitalized at 8 per cent. as was done by Mr. Justice Tendolkar in Reference No. 10 of 1947 and confirmed in The Special Land Acquisition Officer v. The Trustees of the Will of the late A. H. Wadia.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tamba and Mr. Justice Datar.

WAMAN GANESH JOSHI v. GANU GUNA KHAPRE.*

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (Bom. LXVII of 1948), Secs. 31-A(d), 3—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 109—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 65; O. XXI, r. 96—Landlord judgment-debtor's name standing in record of rights as occupant of lands since before January 1, 1952, till appointed day—Opponent in occupation as tenant of lands—Petitioner purchasing lands at court sale and his rights as landlord coming into existence after appointed day—Petitioner giving notice to opponent under s. 31(2) and applying for possession—Whether petitioner can terminate tenancy of opponent—Applicability of s. 31-A(d).

The term "landlord" occurring in s. 31-A(d) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, includes any person from whom or through whom a landlord derives his right as such landlord, and for the proper compliance with the conditions mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31-A of the Act, it is sufficient if either the name of the claimant or that of his predecessor-in-title stands in the record of rights or any public record or similar revenue record on the 1st day of January, 1952, and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day.

*Khattulla Hasmya v. Yesu,*¹ applied.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

S. S. Bangnekar, with A. V. Dalvi, for the petitioner.

S. J. Paradkar, for opponent No. 1.

DATAR J. Survey No. 60 and Hissa No. 1 of survey No. 31 situate at Mouje Rai, originally belonged to one person, whose name does not appear in the record, but, who, in some execution proceedings, was the judgment-debtor. It appears that the judgment-debtor had leased the two survey numbers to opponent No. 1. In execution of a decree obtained against the judgment-debtor the two survey numbers were put up for sale and were purchased by the present petitioner in court auction on November 28, 1955. As the opponent-tenant was on the lands at the time of court auction, symbolical possession was delivered to the auction purchaser on June 15, 1956, under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 96, Civil Procedure Code.

On December 13, 1956, the petitioner gave a notice to opponent No. 1 for terminating his tenancy under the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 31 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, on the ground that he required the lands for his own personal cultivation. On March 26, 1957, the petitioner applied for possession of the lands from opponent No. 1 under the provisions of s. 29 read with s. 31(1) of the Act. The Tenancy Awal Karkun, before whom the application came up for hearing on the preliminary issues, held that the said lands were not owned by the petitioner on the date mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A of the Act. The Tenancy Awal Karkun, when he referred to the date mentioned in cl. (d) referred to the 1st day of January 1952. Accordingly, he rejected the application on December 16, 1957. The petitioner thereafter preferred tenancy appeal No. 4 of 1958 in the Court of the District Deputy Collector, Ratnagiri. The District Deputy Collector agreed with the view of the Tenancy Awal Karkun and dismissed the appeal on February 24, 1958. Thereafter, the petitioner approached the Bombay Revenue Tribunal under s. 76 of the Act, in revision, against the order passed in appeal by the District Deputy Collector. The Tribunal agreed with the view taken by both the Tenancy Awal Karkun and the District Deputy Collector and summarily dismissed the revision application on June 16, 1958. It is against the summary dismissal of the revision application that the petitioner has come to this Court under the provisions of art. 227 of the Constitution.

Mr. Rangnekar, who appears for the petitioner, has contended that under the provisions of cl. (d) of s. 31A, it is not necessary that the name of the petitioner himself should stand in the record of rights on the 1st day of January 1952, and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day. It is enough if the petitioner is able to show that his predecessor-in-title, who, in this case, was the judgment-debtor as mentioned above, had got his name entered in the record of rights on the 1st day of January 1952 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day. The appointed day, it may be noted, is June 15, 1955. It is not disputed that since before the 1st day of January 1952 till the appointed day, June 15, 1955, the name of the judgment-debtor stood in the record of rights as the kabjedar or the occupant of the said lands. It is also not disputed that during this period and till the auction purchase, the judgment-debtor was the landlord of the present opponent No. 1. Now, s. 31A of the Act provides that the right of a landlord to terminate a tenancy for cultivating the land personally under s. 31 shall be subject to certain conditions of which we are concerned in the present case only with the one mentioned in cl. (d) thereof which states:

"The land leased stands in the record of rights or in any public record or similar revenue record on the 1st day of January, 1952, and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day in the name of the landlord himself, or of any of his ancestors, or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family."

The argument of the learned counsel on behalf of the petitioner is that by reason of s. 3 of the Act, the provisions of Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act, are made applicable to the tenancies and leases of lands to which the Tenancy Act applies in so far as those provisions are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and in view of s. 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, the petitioner himself became the landlord having possessed all the rights of the former landlord (the judgment-debtor) since the date of his auction purchase.

It is true that the petitioner purchased the lands in question in court auction. But at the court sale what passed to the auction purchaser was the right, title and interest of the original judgment-debtor. It is obvious that in the present case, the right, title and interest of the original judgment-debtor was that of a landlord in regard to the said lands and as against the rights of the protected tenant, viz., opponent No. 1. The provisions of s. 65 and of O. XXI, r. 96, Civil Procedure Code refer to the interest of the judgment-debtor as vested in and transferred to the auction purchaser from the time when the property is sold. It is, therefore, clear that the rights of the original judgment-debtor were transferred to the petitioner and the petitioner stepped into the shoes of the original landlord as against opponent No. 1. Now, if the petitioner's position was that of a landlord, then he would be regarded as such landlord from the time when the lands were sold in court auction.

Mr. Rangnekar says that if the petitioner was thus the landlord from November 28, 1955, and was entitled to apply for possession of the lands under s. 31 of the Act, the condition mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A would be fulfilled and he would have the right to terminate the tenancy merely on his showing that the lands stood in the record of rights on the 1st day of January 1952 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day in the name of his predecessor-in-title who alone was (and the petitioner was not) the landlord on the said date and during the said period. According to him it will not be necessary (and indeed in conceivable cases may not be possible, as in the present case when the petitioner's rights have validly come into existence after the appointed day) to show that the petitioner's own name stood in the record of rights on the date and during the period mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A. In support of his contention he has relied upon a decision of this Court in Khalilulla Hasmiya v. Yesu.¹ Mr. Justice Gajendragadkar (as he then was), who delivered the judgment of the Bench in that case, was considering the corresponding clause in s. 34 as it stood before the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1955, and Bombay Act XV of 1957. It was cl. (1) of sub-s. (2A) of s. 34 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948. Sub-section (2A) and cl. (1) read as follows:

"If the landlord bona fide requires the land..., then his right to terminate the tenancy shall be subject to the following conditions, namely,

(1) The land held by the protected tenant on lease stands in the record of rights in the name of the landlord on the 1st day of January, 1952 as the superior holder."

It was held that s. 34(2A)(1) of the said Act merely requires the claimant for possession of the land under s. 34 of the Act to show that the person who was the lessor of the tenant on January 1, 1952, had taken care to have his name entered in the record of rights as superior holder. This section does not necessarily require that it is the claimant whose name must appear in the record of rights on January 1, 1952, as superior holder. All that this section requires is that whosoever was the lessor or the landlord on January 1, 1952, must have his name entered as a superior holder in respect of his land. Where, therefore, a claimant whose name does not stand in the record of rights on January 1, 1952, as superior holder, seeks to evict the tenant, he must show that he claims through the lessor whose name stood in the record of rights on January 1, 1952. It is true that cl. (1) of sub-s. (2A) of s. 34 has now been amended and we have to deal with the amended cl. (d) of s. 31A of the present Act. But even in the amended clause, the words of the original cl. (1) of sub-s. (2A) of s. 34 are substantially retained and, with respect, we are of the view that the decision in the aforesaid case still holds good in so far as cl. (d) of s. 31A of the present Act deals with the condition that the name of the landlord must stand in the record of rights on the date and during the period specified in the clause. It is true that in the aforesaid case the learned Judges were considering the claim of persons who had inherited the (landlord's) interest from their father whose name had stood in the record of rights on the 1st day of January 1952 as superior holder. But the reasoning upon which their decision is founded applies, in our view, with equal force even to the case where the claimant, as in the present case, claims through the original landlord not by succession but by a transfer. The cases of an heir and of a member in a joint family are now expressly provided for by the introduction of the words "of any of his ancestors, or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family" in cl. (d) of s. 31A of the Act. In the case above-mentioned it was observed that January 1, 1952, was chosen arbitrarily as the appointed day and the provision in question seemed to require that it must clearly appear that either the claimant or his predecessor appeared in the record of rights as the superior holder, and this observation of the learned Judges applies as much to the case of a transferee from the original landlord whose name stood in the record of rights at the relevant time as it did to the case of succession which was before them. It seems to us that in view of the provisions of s. 109 of the Transfer of Property Act under which the transferee in the position of the present petitioner having possessed all the rights of the original landlord himself became the landlord, the Legislature thought it unnecessary to make an express provision in the amended cl. (d) in the case of the transferee, as in the cases of an heir and a joint family member.

Besides, we do not see why any distinction in principle should be made between the case of an heir and that of a transferee. In one case the property of the original landlord is taken by succession and in the other, by transfer. But the interest in either case is the same—that of the original landlord. If in the case of a claimant who has succeeded to the property of his ancestor after the appointed day, the condition mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A of the Act would be regarded as having been complied with by the claimant merely showing that the name of his ancestor stood in the record of rights on the date and during the period specified in the clause, we do not see why the same result should not follow in the case of a transferee similarly situated. We have looked to the relevant provisions of the Tenancy Act and we do not see any provision whereunder transfers have been absolutely prohibited. In fact, with the permission of proper revenue authorities transfers are allowed even under the provisions of the present Act. If, therefore, transfers are allowed and if an assignee or a transferee has come to possess all the rights of the original landlord after the 1st day of January 1952 or indeed after the relevant period mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A, we do not think why such assignee or transferee should not stand on the same footing as an heir who has succeeded to his ancestor or as a member in a joint family.

It may also be noted that cl. (d) of s. 31A clearly shows that it is the name only of that person who was the landlord on the date and during the period specified in that clause that should appear in the record of rights. If such landlord is himself the claimant, all that he has to show is an entry in his name in the record of rights only on the date and during the period specified in the clause. If, however, the claimant is his successor-in-title or his transferee all that he has still to show is only an entry in the name of his predecessor-in-title on the relevant date and during the relevant period. Indeed, the Act cannot expect such a claimant to do the impossible and call upon him to show an entry in his own name for a period during which he was not, but his predecessor-in-title was, the landlord.

We are, therefore, of the view that the term "landlord" occurring in cl. (d) of s. 31A of the Act includes any person from whom or through whom a landlord derives his right as such landlord and that for proper compliance with the conditions mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 31A, it is sufficient if either the name of the claimant or that of his predecessor-in-title stands in the record of rights or any public record or similar revenue record on the 1st day of January 1952 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day.

In the present case, it is admitted that the name of the petitioner's predecessor-in-title stood in the record of rights on the date and during the period specified in the clause. It must, therefore, be held that the condition mentioned in the clause has been complied with by the petitioner.

Accordingly, we set aside the orders of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal and the lower revenue authorities and remand the case to the Tenancy Awal Karkun for disposal of the application in accordance with law. Costs of this petition will abide the result before the Tenancy Awal Karkun.

Orders set aside: case remanded.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Patel.

LOKU BASAPPA PUJARI v. THE STATE.*

Evidence—Notes of post-mortem examination recorded by medical officer—Whether such notes admissible in evidence—Practice (Criminal)—Whether notes of post-mortem examination where evidence relating to such examination relevant should be taken on record—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Sec. 159.

Notes of post-mortem examination prepared by a medical officer are admissible in evidence where the same are duly proved by the testimony of the medical officer who has performed the examination and has recorded the same. As a matter of practice such notes of post-mortem examination, where the evidence relating to the post-mortem examination is relevant, should be taken on the record.

The notes of the post-mortem examination are not intended to be mechanically admitted on the record of the case. In every case when the medical officer is examined before the Court to establish the cause of death disclosed by a post-mortem examination, he must be called upon to give evidence about the matters which have a bearing on the questions to be decided by the Court and he must also be called upon to depose whether the record made by him in the notes of the post-mortem examination are true and if the medical officer deposes to the truth of the record made by him, the record itself may be treated as evidence.

Roghuni Singh v. The Empress; Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das and Rangappa Goundan, in re,* referred to.

LOKU and Shantappa (appellants) were tried before the Additional Sessions Judge of the City Court of Session for Greater Bombay sitting with a special jury, for the offence of murder of one Narayan punishable under s. 302 read with s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code and in the alternative for the offence punishable under s. 302 read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The jury brought in a unanimous verdict of guilty against both the appellants. The Additional Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury and sentenced each of the appellants to suffer imprisonment for life. Against the conviction and sentence the present appeal was preferred by the appellants.

R. A. Jahagirdar, (appointed) for the appellants.

V. T. Gambhirwala, Assistant Government Pleader, for the State.

SHAH J. [His Lordship after finding that the evidence in the case did not justify the conviction of the appellants and holding that they were entitled to be acquitted, proceeded:] Before parting with the case we think it necessary to deal with certain questions of practice. We find that the notes of the post-mortem examination of the dead body of Narayan have not been taken on the record, though the medical officer who performed the post-mortem examination was examined as a witness. We have noticed in appeals from orders passed by the Sessions Court for Greater Bombay that in very rare cases the notes of the post-mortem examination on the dead body of the victim are tendered and admitted in evidence, whereas in appeals from the Sessions Divisions in the mofussil, the notes of post-mortem examination, whenever post-mortem has been held on a dead body, are invariably tendered and admitted in evidence. That these notes constitute valuable material for checking up the correctness of the medical and other evidence is undisputed. It is somewhat surprising that on an important matter of practice there should be absence of uniformity prevailing in the Courts of Session subordinate to this Court. The learned Assistant Government Pleader, who appears before us, has fairly conceded that the notes of post-mortem examination constitute a valuable piece of evidence, which assists the Court in understanding the medical and other evidence led before the Court, but he submitted that presumably because some Courts in India have expressed the view that the notes of post-mortem examination are inadmissible in evidence that the practice prevails in the City Sessions Court to exclude them from evidence. We have invited the learned advocates to argue the question before us, and after carefully considering the rival arguments, we are of the view that notes of post-mortem examination cannot be regarded as inadmissible in evidence.

Examining the question apart from authority, we are of the view that the contention that notes of post-mortem examination are inadmissible in evidence cannot be sustained. If the medical officer who has performed the post-mortem examination on a dead body deposes before the Court orally about the matters which are observed by him in the course of the post-mortem examination, and entered by him in the notes, there can be no doubt that such evidence will be admissible. It is not contended by the Assistant Government Pleader that the medical officer who has made the post-mortem examination is prohibited from giving evidence about the observations made by him of the condition of the dead body, the external and internal injuries and the condition of the various organs as explanatory of the opinion formed by him. If oral evidence given by the medical officer who has examined the dead body and who has noticed its condition is admissible in law, we fail to appreciate how a written record of the observations made by the medical officer may be regarded as inadmissible in evidence. The notes of post-mortem examination are but a contemporaneous record made by the medical officer who performed the post-mortem examination on a dead body for forming his opinion as to the cause of death. If instead of orally deposing before the Court about the individual observations made by him, the medical officer states that the notes maintained correctly set out his observations and the notes are then tendered in evidence, no fault can be found with the admission of those notes on the record. We may hasten to observe that the notes of the post-mortem examination are of course not intended to be mechanically admitted on the record of the case. In every case when the medical officer is examined before the Court to establish the cause of death disclosed by a post-mortem examination, he must be called upon to give evidence about the matters which have a bearing on the questions to be decided by the Court and he must also be called upon to depose whether the record made by him in the notes of the post-mortem examination are true and if the medical officer deposes to the truth of the record made by him, the record itself may be treated as evidence. Admission of the notes in evidence is but a convenient method of maintaining the record of the observations made and the opinion formed by the medical officer, when he orally deposes in a comprehensive form to the correctness of all the statements recorded therein.

We may consider the authorities to which our attention was invited by the learned Assistant Government Pleader in support of the contention that the notes of post-mortem examination prepared by a medical officer from observations made by him are inadmissible. In Roghuni Singh v. The Empress,¹ it was observed that evidence of a medical man who has seen, and has made a post-mortem examination of the corpse of the person touching whose death the inquiry is made, is admissible, firstly, to prove the nature of the injuries which he observed; and, secondly, as evidence of the opinion of an expert as to the cause of death. That observation is not inconsistent with the view that the notes of post-mortem examination are admissible in evidence. But there is at page 461 of the Report the following observation, on which reliance is placed:—

“...The Assistant Surgeon might have used this report to refresh his memory when giving evidence; but the report itself was not admissible in evidence.”

In that case the Assistant Surgeon who performed the post-mortem examination was examined before the Committing Magistrate, but not before the Court of Session. One Dr. Shaw was examined in the Court of Session at the trial as an expert witness by the prosecution, and the opinion given by Dr. Shaw was diametrically opposed to the testimony of the Assistant Surgeon. Notes of the post-mortem examination were not tendered in evidence through the Assistant Surgeon, but Dr. Shaw in giving his evidence based his opinion partly upon the facts recorded in the report made by the Assistant Surgeon and upon facts different from the facts observed by the Assistant Surgeon. Evidently the opinion formed by Dr. Shaw on the basis of some but not all the observations made by the Assistant Surgeon could not make the report a part of the record. The report had to be proved, and not having been proved it could not be indirectly regarded as evidence because Dr. Shaw chose to base his conclusions upon some of the observations recorded therein. This case, in our judgment, is not an authority for the proposition that the notes made by a medical officer, who has performed the post-mortem examination of a dead body and has made notes in that behalf, are not admissible in evidence, even if the medical officer orally deposes to the correctness of the individual observations made and recorded by him, or comprehensively thereto. In Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das,² it appears that the medical officer who performed the post-mortem examination was not examined by the Court of Session even though the evidence as given in the Committing Magistrate's Court was not explicit as regards the actual cause of death. At the trial a Civil Surgeon was examined as an expert witness, but that officer was not examined on the points which were disclosed in the evidence of the medical officer who had conducted the post-mortem examination. The Sessions Judge took into consideration the statement of the medical officer on matters entered in the post-mortem report. In that context it was observed (p. 303):

"...Now that report is not admissible as evidence except to contradict the officer who made it. It may, however, be used by that officer when under examination for the purpose of refreshing his memory."

That again, in our judgment, is not an authority in support of the proposition that even when oral evidence is given by a medical officer about the truth of the notes made at the post-mortem examination the record of the notes is inadmissible. Our attention was also invited to Rangappa Goundan, In re.³ It was held in that case that the report of a post-mortem examination on a dead body is not evidence, and can only be used by the witness who conducted the post-mortem enquiry as an aid to memory. In that case, however, there is no discussion of the question whether the notes of post-mortem examination may be proved in the manner stated by us, and may then be admitted in evidence. The judgment contains merely an ipse dixit that a post-mortem report is not evidence, and can only be used by the witness who conducted the post-mortem enquiry as an aid to memory and in support of the observation reliance was placed upon Jadub Das's case.

We may observe that in the Courts of Session functioning in this State outside the Greater Bombay area, it has been the consistent practice to admit the notes of post-mortem examination where the evidence relating to such post-mortem examination is relevant.

The learned Assistant Government Pleader concedes that this practice conduces to a better appraisal of the medical and other evidence in trials for offences of murder and culpable homicide. We have carefully considered the arguments advanced at the Bar and we are not satisfied that the observations recorded in the notes of post-mortem examination which are relevant to the subject-matter of enquiry are inadmissible even if the same are duly proved by the testimony of the medical officer who has performed the examination and has recorded the same.

[The rest of the judgment is not material to this report].

NARAYAN YESHWANT NENE v. RAJARAM BALKRISHNA RAUT.*

Representation of the People Act (XLIII of 1951), Secs. 116B, 116A—Appeal against order of Tribunal filed in High Court—High Court permitting withdrawal of appeal and ordering disposal thereof—Whether such order a decision within s. 116B—Order whether open to review.

The expression "decision of the High Court" in s. 116B of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, means the final order of the High Court disposing of the appeal on merits or otherwise. Therefore, an order of the High Court permitting withdrawal of the appeal filed against the Tribunal under s. 116A of the Act and ordering disposal thereof, is a decision within the meaning of s. 116B of the Act, and such an order is final and conclusive and not open to review by the High Court.

SHAH J. An election was held in the Parliamentary Constituency for electing a representative from the Kolaba District. One Rajaram Balkrishna Raut was declared elected by the Election Commissioner. Thereafter, one Narayan Yeshwant Nene (whom we shall hereafter refer to as "Nene") applied to set aside the election on the ground that Rajaram Balkrishna Raut had been guilty of corrupt practices which had vitiated the election. That application was dismissed by the Tribunal constituted under the Representation of the People Act, 1951. Against the order passed by that Tribunal, an appeal was preferred to this Court under s. 116A of the Act. That appeal was placed for hearing before Mr. Justice S. T. Desai and Mr. Justice Miabhoy on June 17, 1958. It appears from the judgment recorded that after arguments were heard by the Court on the merits of the dispute, a suggestion was thrown out by the Court that the petition for setting aside the election be abandoned in the larger interest of the public. The learned advocates who appeared on behalf of Nene and Raut after considering the suggestion informed the Court that the appeal need not be proceeded with. Thereafter, Mr. R. B. Kotwal, who appeared on behalf of Nene, stated that his client desired to withdraw the petition and the appeal may be allowed to be withdrawn. Mr. Sule, who appeared on behalf of Raut, stated that his client had no objection to the petition and the appeal being permitted to be withdrawn. The Court then proceeded to pass the final order as follows:

"The result is that the appeal will be allowed to be withdrawn. Learned Counsel for the parties are agreed that there should be no order for costs of the hearing of this appeal and that the order for costs made by the Tribunal should be vacated. Order accordingly."

On August 4, 1958, one Jagannath Bhau Patil, who is the petitioner in this application, has applied for being substituted as an appellant and for prosecuting the appeal. He contended that the proceeding for setting aside an election on the ground of corrupt practices is not merely a proceeding in which the two parties before the Court are concerned, but it is a dispute in which the entire electorate is concerned, and, having regard to the provisions of s. 110 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, read with s. 116A of the Act, the appeal could not have been permitted to be withdrawn by the Court which heard the appeal. It is urged that the order allowing withdrawal of the appeal was without jurisdiction, when it was not followed by the publication of a notice of withdrawal of the appeal, and, therefore, the applicant be substituted for the original appellant and to prosecute the appeal. When rule was issued the Court requested the Advocate General to appear and assist the Court as amicus curie. This application is now before us for hearing and the learned Advocate General has appeared before us.

Section 110 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, provides by the first sub-section that if there are more petitioners than one, no application to withdraw an election petition shall be made except with the consent of all the petitioners. By sub-s. (2), it is provided that no application for withdrawal shall be granted if in the opinion of the Election Commission or of the Tribunal, as the case may be, such application has been induced by any bargain or consideration which ought not to be allowed. By sub-s. (3), it is provided that if the application is granted, an order as to costs shall be passed, and the notice of withdrawal shall be published in the Official Gazette by the Election Commission or by the Tribunal, as the case may be, and a person who might himself have been a petitioner may, within fourteen days of such publication, apply to be substituted as petitioner in place of the party withdrawing, and upon compliance with the conditions of s. 117 as to security, shall be entitled to be so substituted and to continue the proceeding upon such terms as the Tribunal may think fit. It is evident from s. 110 of the Representation of the People Act that an application for withdrawal which is not bona fide may not be allowed by the Tribunal or the Election Commission, and, even if the application is granted, any person who was entitled to present the petition, may upon such terms, as the Tribunal imposes, continue the proceeding. This provision sufficiently indicates that a proceeding for setting aside an election is one in which the entire electorate is interested, and may not be abandoned without due notice to the electorate. That is further made clear by ss. 112 to 115, whereby any person, who might himself have been a petitioner, is permitted to come on the record and to prosecute the petition of a person dying before its disposal. By s. 116, an election proceeding may be continued even after the death of the original respondent against a substituted respondent. There can be no doubt, therefore, that once a proceeding under the Representation of the People Act has reached the Election Commission or the Tribunal, those authorities must hear and dispose it of on its merits.

This Court was requested by the appellant Nene to be permitted to abandon the appeal. It may appear, in view of sub-s. (2) of s. 116A, that the provisions relating to the withdrawal of a petition or abatement, may also apply to an appeal filed against the order of the Tribunal. But, on that question we express no considered opinion. The petitioner, in this case is faced with a two-fold difficulty. There is an order passed by this Court, by which the appeal has been disposed of after permitting withdrawal, and the Legislature has not only not enacted any provision for review of orders passed by the High Court in appeal, but has expressly enacted that the orders are to be final and conclusive. Again, even if there was some irregularity in the passing of the order disposing of the appeal, this Court is incompetent on that account to set aside the order.

In support of the application, it is urged that an order of the Court permitting withdrawal of the appeal and ordering disposal thereof is not a decision within the meaning of s. 116B. It is contended that the decision contemplated by s. 116B is an adjudication on the merits of the dispute between the parties before the Tribunal, and an order of disposal without adjudication of the merits of the dispute by the High Court in appeal, is not a decision within the meaning of s. 116B. We are unable to accept that contention. The expression 'decision' is not defined in the Act, and there is nothing in the context in which that expression occurs, which justifies the submission that a final order disposing of the appeal though not on the merits is not a decision. Even a casual examination of the argument is likely to present numerous difficulties against its acceptance. If an appeal is permitted to be withdrawn and a notice of the intended withdrawal is published in the Official Gazette, and if, thereafter, no party comes before the Court, on the argument advanced by the learned Advocate General, the appeal may still not be regarded as disposed of by a decision, and may permanently remain on the file of the Court. Similarly, if the appellant dies and no one comes forward to prosecute the appeal, if the argument is accepted, the appeal will remain undisposed there being no decision of the Court. In our view, the expression "decision of the High Court" means the final order of the High Court disposing of the appeal on merits or otherwise. If that be the true effect of s. 116B, in our judgment, the order disposing of the appeal on withdrawal by the original appellant, must be regarded as a decision of the High Court, which is final and conclusive. The Act does not provide for review of judgment of this Court on any ground, and it is well settled that a Court is not invested with a power of review unless such power is expressly conferred. The Legislature has not only not conferred a power of review upon this Court to review decisions in appeal under the Representation of the People Act, but has declared the decision final and conclusive.

On that view of the case, in our judgment, the application filed by Jagannath Bhan Patil must be held not maintainable and must on that ground be rejected. There will be no order as to costs of the application. The same order in Application No. 2423 of 1958.

Section 84C of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, in so far as it refers to the forfeiture of the land to the State Government by reason of the sale being declared invalid is constitutional; but on such forfeiture it is not open to the State Government to recover the purchase price belonging to the purchaser either from him or from the seller as an arrear of land revenue.

Section 84C of the Act is not violative of art. 31(2) of the Constitution of India as it does not deal with acquisition of property for a public purpose.

MUDHOLKAR J. Two of these petitions are under art. 226 of the Constitution and two under art. 227 of the Constitution.

The petitioner in the first and second petition is the occupant of Survey No. 204 of the village Sahijpurbogha. It is common ground that he sold this field to one Punjiram Prajapati on April 1, 1957, for Rs. 9,176. This sale has been declared invalid by the Mamlatdar under s. 84C(2) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act. Pursuant to this declaration the land purported to have been sold by the petitioner to Punjiram Prajapati has been declared by the Mamlatdar to have been forfeited to the Government and the price received by the petitioner is also declared to have been forfeited to the Government. The Mamlatdar's order having been ultimately affirmed by the Prant Officer in appeal and by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal in revision, the petitioner seeks to have all those orders quashed under art. 227 of the Constitution. By way of precaution the petitioner is invoking the jurisdiction of this Court under art. 226 also and that is why he has made two applications. The petitioner in the other petitions is a purchaser of another field of the same village from the occupant thereof and the sale in his favour has been held by the Tenancy Aval Karkun to be invalid as being in contravention of s. 63 of the Act. This order having been affirmed by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal the petitioner wants it to be quashed under art. 227. By way of precaution he has also filed an application under art. 226.

The petitioner's contention is that the provisions of s. 84C of the Act are unconstitutional inasmuch as they contravene art. 31(2) of the Constitution. It is said on behalf of the petitioner that what s. 84C purports to do is to acquire property without payment of compensation and, therefore, this section is ultra vires the Constitution. We cannot accept the contention that s. 84C deals with acquisition of property for a public purpose and, therefore, hold that it is not violative of art. 31(2) of the Constitution.

Now, in so far as this section provides that on a declaration made by the Mamlatdar under sub-s. (2) of s. 84C to the effect that the sale effected by the occupant of an agricultural land is invalid and consequently the land shall be deemed to vest in the Government, the law can be sustained under art. 31(1) of the Constitution. Under this provision it is open to a Legislature to make a law whereunder a person may be deprived of his property. Such deprivation, of course, may be in the exercise of the police power or may be for the purpose of taxation or penalty. Here, so far as the sale by the occupant of the land is concerned the provisions of s. 64 lay down a number of restrictions on him. Sub-section (2) of s. 64 says that a sale held in contravention of the provisions of that section would be invalid. It would, therefore, follow that the Legislature has prohibited the owner of a land from alienating it except in compliance with certain provisions of law. Then by s. 84C it has been provided that where an occupant of a land has effected a sale of his land without complying with the provisions of law or in contravention of the provisions of law and the sale is declared invalid by the Mamlatdar, the land shall be forfeited to the Government. Where a sale has been rendered invalid by law, the immediate result would be that the land would revert to the occupant and all that the purchaser is entitled to is the refund of consideration from his vendor, the occupant of the land. No doubt s. 84C, as already stated, provides that after a sale is declared to be invalid by a Mamlatdar, the land, which is the subject-matter of the sale, shall be forfeited to the Government, but that must happen after its reversion to the occupant. Then, the land having reverted to the occupant because the sale had been declared invalid, the forfeiture would operate against the occupant of the land. It is competent to the Legislature to make a law of this type, and, therefore, s. 84C in so far as it refers to the forfeiture of the land to the Government by reason of the sale being declared invalid is constitutional. The same, however, cannot be said with regard to another provision of s. 84C, which is to the effect that the money or the purchase price received by the occupant of the land shall be forfeited to the Government and will be recoverable as an arrear of land revenue. No sooner the sale is declared invalid the purchaser becomes entitled to the refund of the purchase price on the ground of failure of consideration. The price which is in the hands of the occupant of the land must, thereafter, be said to belong to the purchaser. The Legislature cannot effectively enact a law concerning forfeiture of the purchase price of land which its owner or occupant is incompetent to sell unless it enacts a provision therein prohibiting the purchaser from purchasing such land. It is no doubt true that under art. 31(1) of the Constitution the Legislature can make a law imposing a penalty but the law in order to be complete and effective must also provide for the circumstances under which the penalty will be leviable against an individual. Now, a penalty is a form of punishment. A person will be liable to punishment only if he has contravened a provision of law. Therefore, the law must first enact a prohibition, then specify the person or persons who will be subject to that prohibition and thereafter provide for the penalty and specify the person or persons who will be liable to suffer it. Here, so far as the purchaser is concerned, the law is very much short of this. It does not prohibit him from purchasing any land. Nor indeed does it even render him liable to suffer any penalty for purchasing a land which the occupant is incompetent to sell. So far as the occupant of the land is concerned, it can no doubt be said that he has contravened the provisions of s. 64 if he has effected the sale without complying with the provisions of that section. There is nothing in the provisions of that section which prevents the purchaser from purchasing land from its occupant. It is true that in certain circumstances the sale in the purchaser's favour would be rendered invalid. But that by itself is not sufficient to show that he was prohibited from purchasing any land. In our opinion, the provisions of s. 84C-3(b), which run thus—

"(3). On the declaration made by the Mamlatdar under sub-section (2)—;

"(b) the amount which was received by the transferor as the price of the land shall be deemed to have been forfeited to the State Government and it shall be recoverable as an arrear of land revenue;"

cannot be regarded as a law relating to the deprivation of the property of a purchaser made under art. 31(1) of the Constitution. It is, if we may say so, an incomplete piece of legislation in the sense that though it prescribes a penalty, which would operate against a purchaser, it does not specify the act or the omission which will render him liable to this penalty. Therefore, it is not open to the State Government to recover the purchase price belonging to the purchaser either from him or from the seller.

Mr. Kotwal points out that in the first two petitions the State Government is trying to recover the purchase money in the hands of the seller as an arrear of land revenue. In view of our finding that the purchase money cannot be forfeited to the Government, it cannot be recovered as an arrear of land revenue.

These petitions must, accordingly, succeed partially. For this reason we make the rule absolute in so far as the prayers 10(d) and (e) as set out in Special Civil Application No. 2879 of 1958 are concerned and quash the orders of the Mamlatdar, the Prant Officer and the Bombay Revenue Tribunal as prayed for in Special Civil Application No. 2878 of 1958 to the extent of declaring the forfeiture of the amount and directing its recovery as an arrear of land revenue. There will, however, be no order as to costs.

In the other two applications the purchaser not being an agriculturist, the sale is invalid and, therefore, under s. 84C the Mamlatdar was entitled to declare that the land comprised in that sale stands forfeited to the Government.

As regards the purchase price, we hold, for the reasons already stated, that it belongs to the purchaser and in the absence of appropriate provisions of law it cannot be forfeited to Government. The order of the Mamlatdar in regard to this must, therefore, be quashed as also his order directing the recovery of the money as an arrear of land revenue. The order of the Prant Officer in appeal and of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal in revision must also be quashed. We accordingly make the rule absolute in both the applications to the extent of quashing the orders of the Mamlatdar, the Prant Officer and the Bombay Revenue Tribunal in so far as the forfeiture of the purchase money is concerned, as prayed for in Special Civil Application No. 2880 of 1958 and in terms of prayer 10(d) and (e) as set out in Special Civil Application No. 2881 of 1958. There will, however, be no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

RASHTRIYA MILL MAZDOOR SANGH, NAGPUR v. STATE INDUSTRIAL COURT, NAGPUR.*

Central Provinces and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act (XXIII of 1947), Secs. 14†, 7-A—C.P. and Berar General Clauses Act (I of 1914), Sec. 14—Person appointed to function as Registrar under s. 14—Whether such person can only be appointed by name.

There is no requirement under the Central Provinces and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947, or the rules framed thereunder for publishing the name of the person appointed to function as Registrar of recognised unions. Therefore, under s. 14 of the Act the appointment of the Registrar can be made by virtue of office also.

*U.C. Bank v. Their Workmen*¹ and *State of Bihar v. D. N. Ganguly*², referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

S. W. Dhabe, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for opponents Nos. 2, to 6.

V. P. Sathe, for opponent No. 7.

MUDHOLKAR J. In this application we have to consider mainly two questions. The first is the date on which s. 7-A which was inserted by Act XXI of 1955 (The Madhya Pradesh Industrial Disputes Settlement (Amendment) Act, 1955), which amended the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act of 1947, came into force. The second question is whether the Deputy Labour Commissioner, who was appointed as a Registrar under s. 14 of the Act, was entitled to entertain the application of opponent No. 7.

The circumstances which have given rise to this petition are briefly these:—The Rashtriya Mill Mazdoor Sangh, Nagpur, who is the petitioner before us, was recognised as a registered union under s. 3 of the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947, sometime during the year 1951-52. Taking advantage of the provisions of s. 7-A, opponent No. 7 made an application to the Assistant Registrar of Recognised Unions, Nagpur, on April 25, 1958, for its recognition in place of the petitioner Union. This application was opposed by the petitioner. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that s. 7-A came into

†The section is as under:—

"S. 14. Appointment of Registrar and Assistant Registrar.—(1) The Provincial Government shall by notification appoint the Labour Commissioner or any other person to be the Registrar of Recognised Union under this Act.

(2) The Provincial Government may by notification appoint a person to be an Assistant Registrar of Recognised Union for any local area and may, by general or special order, confer on such person all or any of the powers of the Registrar."

force on March 11, 1958, by virtue of a notification made by the Government of India, under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 of the Act of 1947, that this section had only a prospective operation and not a retrospective one, and that, therefore, it was not open to the Union to make an application under s. 7-A for its recognition, till after the lapse of one year from this date. It is not easy to follow the argument of Mr. Dhabe. It appears to be that a Union which seeks recognition by an application made by it earlier than one year after the date on which s. 7-A was notified to come into force cannot do so as the notification could not give retrospective operation to that section. In support of his contention Mr. Dhabe relied upon the Explanation to sub-s. (4) of s. 7-A, which is in the following terms:—

“Explanation.—In determining the membership for purposes of sub-section (2) any person who—

(i) has not been continuously on the roll of members of the union for a period of at least twelve months immediately before the date of application; and

(ii) is in arrears of subscription payable to the union for a period exceeding three months;

shall not be counted as a member of the Union.”

According to him the comparative membership of the unions is to be determined with reference to a date which is one year prior to the coming into force of s. 7-A, and that thereby the existing right of a union to continue to be a recognized union would be infringed if the application of another union were to be granted before the expiry of one year from the date of the notification. Now, all that this section contemplates is that the relative strength of the unions is to be considered only by taking into account those members who have been on the roll of the union continuously for a period of 12 months prior to the application and have not been in arrears in the matter of payment of subscription for a period exceeding three months. That is to say, the explanation requires the existence of a certain fact and the non-existence of another fact. It does not in any way tend to give retrospective operation to any of the provisions of the statute. A newly recognized union will be entitled to function as a recognized union and act on behalf of the workers engaged in an industry only from a date subsequent to its recognition. Till a new union is recognized, an existing union, and here the petitioner, will continue to function as recognized union and exercise all its rights as such union. It is, therefore, difficult to appreciate how the mere ascertainment of the existence of a certain fact during the course of one year prior to the application for recognition will amount to giving retrospective operation to a provision of the statute.

Then Mr. Dhabe argued that by virtue of the Explanation to sub-s. (4) of s. 7-A no action under s. 7-A can be taken unless the period of two years has elapsed from the commencement of the Madhya Pradesh Industrial Disputes Settlement (Amendment) Act of 1955. If the amending Act did not come into force till the notification of March 6, 1958, the present application, according to Mr. Dhabe, is clearly premature as it was made only a few days after the notification bringing s. 7-A into force was issued. What is to be borne in mind is that the Explanation refers to the commencement of the amending Act of 1955 and not to the making of any notification. Mr. Dhabe, however, contends that the amending Act of 1955 which introduced s. 7-A was not specifically brought into force by issue of any notification under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 of the Act of 1947. The scheme of this Act is that while it extends to the whole of the Central Province and Berar (which include the present territories of Vidarbha) sub-s. (3) requires the issue of a notification bringing the sections, other than s. 1, into force in such areas or of industries and on such date as may be specified in the notification.

Now, according to Mr. Dhabe the words “commencement of the Act of 1955” used in the Explanation must be deemed to refer only to the provisions of s. 7-A and as no notification extending the provisions of that section or bringing them into force anywhere was issued till March 11, 1958, the amending Act cannot be deemed to have come into force at all. He relied upon the decision of this Court in *The Textile Mills Association v. The Rashtriya Mill Mazdoor Sangh*¹, in which it was held that the provisions introduced into the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act of 1947 by the amending Act of 1955 did not come into force at once and that it was necessary for the State Government to issue a notification under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 to bring those provisions into force. In that case the Division Bench of this Court held that the provisions of the amending Act became a part and parcel of the parent Act after the Act passed into law, and that consequently none of them could come into force until a notification was made by the State Government under sub-s. (3) of s. 1. In taking this view the Division Bench did not, if we respectfully point out, take into consideration two facts. One is that the amending Act of 1955 does not specify the date on which it has to come into force, and the other is that the provisions enacting the amending Act could not become part of the parent Act till the amending Act came into force.

Now, s. 3, sub-s. (1)(b), of the Central Provinces and Berar General Clauses Act provides:—

“3. (1) Where any Madhya Pradesh Act is not expressed to come into force on a particular day, then,...

(b) in the case of a Madhya Pradesh Act made after the commencement of the Constitution, it shall come into operation on the day on which the assent thereto of the Governor or the President, as the case may require, is first published in the Official Gazette.”

In the instant case the amending Act of 1955 was submitted to the President for his assent. That assent was received on November 19, 1955, and was published in the Madhya Pradesh Gazette on November 25, 1955. Since the amending Act makes no provision regarding the date of its commencement, it must be held under sub-s. (1)(b) of s. 3 of the C.P. and Berar General Clauses Act that the amending Act came into force on November 25, 1955. Now, since it came into force on that date, there was no need whatsoever to issue a notification under sub-s. (3) of s. 1. The restraints imposed by this latter provision were intended to apply to the provisions of the main Act which was enacted in the year 1947. It was open to the Legislature to extend those restrictions even to the provisions of the amending Act. It has however not chosen to do so. Therefore, the absence of a notification under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 is of no consequence.

No doubt, where an Act is amended by another Act, the provisions of the amending Act become part of the parent Act, but it does not mean that the provisions of the amending Act never come into force except by following the procedure laid down in the parent Act for bringing them into force. The provisions of the amending Act could not become part of the parent Act without bringing into operation the amending Act. Once the amending Act came into operation, s. 7-A which was introduced into or superimposed on the original Act also came into operation. Thus, the coming into force of s. 7-A of the Act and its becoming part and parcel of the parent Act was a simultaneous process. Since s. 7-A has come into force, the issue of the notification under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 bringing it into force would be redundant. It is for these reasons that we cannot accept the view taken in the earlier case.

It may be mentioned that consequent on the decision in that case the Legislature has passed a validating Act. That Act is the Bombay Act No. LIX of 1958. Section 2 of that Act runs thus:—

“2. Amendments to Central Provinces and Berar Act No. XXIII of 1947 made by Madhya Pradesh Act No. XXI of 1955 to come into force on the date Madhya Pradesh Act XXI of 1955 commenced.—Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (3)

of section 1 of the Principal Act, or in any judgment, decree or order of a Court, the amendments incorporated in the Principal Act by the Amending Act (whether by way of amendment to, insertion in, or substitution of, the provisions of the Principal Act), which have not been brought into force by notification issued under sub-section (3) of section 1 of the Principal Act, shall be deemed to have come into force in the Vidarbha area of the State of Bombay on and with effect from the 25th day of November, 1955 in relation to the industries to which the Principal Act applied on that date."

Now, one of the results of these provisions is to render ineffective the decision of this Court in The Textile Mills Association v. The Rashtriya Mill Maadoor Sangh. That being the position, we do not think it necessary to refer this case to a larger Bench.

The other argument of Mr. Dhabe is regarding the jurisdiction of the Deputy Labour Commissioner to entertain the application. According to him, the Registrar of Unions has to be appointed by name, and that since here the appointment is made only by office, the appointment is bad and consequently the Deputy Labour Commissioner, who is purporting to act as Registrar, has no jurisdiction to entertain the application. In our opinion, there is no substance whatsoever in this contention. Sub-section (1) of s. 14 provides that the State Government shall, by notification, appoint the Labour Commissioner or any other person to be the Registrar of Recognised Unions under the Act. Now, Mr. Dhabe contends that apart from the Labour Commissioner, no other person can be appointed as a Registrar except by name. Mr. Dhabe, however, ignores the provisions of s. 14 of the C.P. and Berar General Clauses Act which runs thus:—

"Where, by any Madhya Pradesh Act, a power to appoint any person to fill any office or execute any function is conferred, then, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, any such appointment may be made either by name or by virtue of office."

Clearly, a power to appoint by office is granted by the section. Mr. Dhabe however says that the provisions of this section are not applicable to any matter arising under the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, and in this connection he relied on two decisions of the Supreme Court. The first of these is *U. C. Bank v. Their Workmen*². That, however, is not a case where it was held that the provisions of the General Clauses Act cannot be applied to a matter arising under the Industrial Disputes Act. What was held was that the persons appointed under s. 5(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act on the Board of Conciliation must be specified in the notification in order to invoke the jurisdiction to carry on the conciliation proceedings. The view of their Lordships was based on the fact that r. 5 of the rules framed under the Act required that the names of the persons constituting a Board, Court or Tribunal appointed under the Act should be notified in the Official Gazette. In the case before their Lordships there was a clear breach of the requirements of the rule and, therefore, they held that the Board, the appointment of whose members was not properly notified, had no jurisdiction to function under s. 5 of the Act. There is no requirement under the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act of 1947 or the rules framed thereunder for publishing the name of the person appointed to function as Registrar of Recognized Unions.

In the other case before their Lordships, *State of Bihar v. D. N. Ganguly*³, they have held that the rule of construction enunciated by s. 21 of the General Clauses Act in so far as it refers to the power of rescinding or cancelling the original order cannot be invoked in respect of the provisions of s. 10(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act. Now, under s. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act where the appropriate Government is of opinion that an industrial dispute exists or is apprehended, it has a power to refer, among other things, the dispute to a Board for settlement. The dispute so referred by the Government of Bihar was eventually withdrawn by the Government and the question which came up before their Lordships was whether the Government which had referred the dispute to the Board had power to withdraw it. One of the arguments advanced before their Lordships was that under s. 21 of the General Clauses Act the Government had the power to withdraw the dispute. This argument was negatived by Gajendragadkar J. who delivered the judgment of the Court. He observed (p. 1021):—

"It is well settled that this section embodies a rule of construction and the question whether or not it applies to the provisions of a particular statute would depend on the subject-matter, context, and the effect, of the relevant provisions of the said statute. In other words it would be necessary to examine carefully the scheme of the Act, its object and all its relevant and material provisions before deciding whether by the application of the rule of construction enunciated by sec. 21, the appellant's contention is justified that the power to cancel the reference made under sec. 10(1) can be said to vest in the appropriate government by necessary implication."

What is, therefore, to be considered in the present case is whether upon the considerations of all the relevant provisions of the Industrial Disputes Settlement Act it could be said that the provisions of s. 14 of the General Clauses Act are excluded. No doubt, the learned Judges also observed later on in the judgment that on general principles it is difficult to accept the argument that the appropriate Government should have an implied power to cancel its own order made under s. 10 of the Act because such an order must have been made by it on the representation made by the employer or his workmen and after the matter was fully considered by the Government. It would, therefore, be seen that the case before the Supreme Court was very much different from the present one and further the provisions of the General Clauses Act, which were held to be inapplicable to a matter arising under the Industrial Disputes Act, are also of a different character from those of s. 14 of the C.P. and Berar General Clauses Act which we have to consider. The Supreme Court has not laid down any general proposition to the effect that the provisions of the General Clauses Act have to be kept out of consideration in their entirety while interpreting industrial laws. Indeed, it would be extremely dangerous to say that the provisions of the General Clauses Act ought not to be applied to industrial legislation. One of the objects which the General Clauses Act serves is to fill in gaps or lacunae that may be found in different laws made by the Legislature. The provisions are, therefore, of a salutary character and we would not be prepared to hold that those provisions do not apply to industrial legislation at all. The argument therefore based on the mere fact that the appointment of the Registrar for the Vidarbha region was made not by name but by office has no substance.

Then Mr. Dhabe contended that the provisions of s. 14 are very ambiguous, and though they create the post of an Assistant Registrar and enables that person to exercise all the powers of the Registrar, they do not provide for the transfer of cases to him by the Registrar. It may be that the provisions are not very clear, but how that fact is of any assistance to Mr. Dhabe in this case is not easy to see. Apart from that, it may be pointed out that it was by virtue of the agreement between the parties that the dispute may be taken up for consideration by the Registrar that it was so taken up by him.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the Registrar is competent to entertain the application of respondent No. 7 for being recognized as a Union under s. 7-A of the Act. The Registrar was right in holding accordingly. The petition is dismissed. We are told that the matter is pending before the Registrar for over a year. In matters like this it is desirable to arrive at a decision as early as possible. We, therefore, direct the Registrar to deal with this matter expeditiously. But of course it is the duty of the parties also to see to it that unnecessary adjournments are not taken by them. Though we dismiss the petition and discharge the rule, we make no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Naik.

NARAYAN LAXMAN KOLTEWAR v. STATE OF BOMBAY.*

Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act (II of 1922), Secs. 15, 22(2), 45—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 108—Members of municipality taking leases of rooms belonging to municipality—Whether such members incur disqualification under s. 15(1)—Members whether so disqualified if not in possession of leased rooms.

Under s. 15(1) of the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, a member of a municipality incurs a disqualification by taking a lease of property from the municipality. Whether such a person is in possession of the property or not will not take the case out of s. 15(1) of the Act.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

P. N. Karekar, for the petitioners.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for the respondents.

MUDHOLKAR J. The petitioners were elected members of the Warora Municipality in the year 1955. After they were elected to the municipality they are alleged to have taken leases of certain rooms belonging to the municipality. It is because of this that the Commissioner exercising his powers under s. 22(2) of the C.P. and Berar Municipalities Act has declared that they have incurred a disqualification set out in s. 15 of the Act and have consequently ceased to be members of the municipality.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that by merely taking leases of the rooms belonging to the municipality a member does not incur a disqualification under s. 15. The relevant part of that section runs thus:

"No person shall be eligible for election, or nomination as a member of a committee, if such person—

(1) has directly or indirectly any share or interest in any contract with, by or on behalf of the committee, while owning such share or interest.

Provided that in cases (e), (f)... and (j) the disqualification may be removed by an order of the State Government in this behalf, and in case (1) the disqualification may be removed by an order of the Deputy Commissioner in this behalf."

According to Mr. Karekar what is objectionable is to have a share or interest in a contract and not in a transfer which has been effected by a municipality. He says that a lease is after all a transfer of property, and since that is so, it cannot be regarded as a contract. In our opinion, this is not quite correct. No doubt a lease is a transfer of property, but there are various clauses in the lease and various covenants which are imported into it by s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act which give rise to contractual rights and obligations. Therefore, though a lease is a transfer it cannot be said to have ceased to be a contract altogether. No doubt some of the clauses of the Contract Act will not apply as they would to a contract which is wholly executable. But that is a different matter. There is no doubt that where there is a subsisting lease there are outstanding obligations, those obligations being of a continuing nature, and it must follow that a lease of property from a municipality is a disqualification under s. 15(1) of the Act from being a member thereof.

Then it is said that this disqualification has been removed because the permission of the Collector was obtained by the petitioners under s. 45 of the Act. That section runs thus:

"(1) If any member, officer or servant of a committee is, without the written permission of the Deputy Commissioner, directly or indirectly interested in any contract made with such committee, he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 168 of the Indian Penal Code.

(2) A member, officer or servant of a committee shall not, by reason only of being a shareholder in or a member of, any incorporated or registered company, be deemed to be interested in any contract entered into between the company and the committee, but he shall not take part in any proceedings of the committee relating to any such contract."

It will be clear that this provision has nothing to do with incurring a disqualification or with the removal of a disqualification which has already been incurred under s. 15(1) of the Act. The only object of the section is to release a member who has entered into a contract with a municipality from the liability of being proceeded against under s. 168 of the Indian Penal Code, which is entirely a different matter.

Then it is said that two out of the four petitioners are not in possession of the leasehold premises and, therefore, they cannot be said to have incurred a disqualification. Now, what s. 15 speaks of is the existence of a share or interest in a contract and not the fact of being in possession of any property by virtue of a transaction entered into with a municipality. Here, as already stated, the outstanding obligations are under the leases and, therefore, whether any of the petitioners is in possession or not would not take the case out of cl. (1) of s. 15 of the Act.

Then it was contended that the petitioners were not given an opportunity by the Commissioner before they were removed. Now the Commissioner's order on the face of it says that the petitioners were called upon to show cause why action should not be taken against them under s. 22(2) of the C.P. and Berar Municipalities Act and that they pleaded that their action was covered by the permission granted to them by the Collector, Chanda. In the face of what the Commissioner has stated in the order we do not think that it is open to Mr. Karekar to advance the argument that the petitioners were not given an opportunity to be heard by the Commissioner. Indeed, there is no clear averment to this effect in the petition. Mr. Karekar, however, says that the only notices which the petitioners got were those issued by the Deputy Collector, Chanda, and that no notices were actually sent by the Commissioner. As already stated, in the absence of any clear averment on this point in the petition, we cannot take notice of it.

The petition is without substance and is dismissed with costs. We discharge the rule.

Petition dismissed.

VISHWANATH RUPCHAND PATIL v. THE BOMBAY REVENUE TRIBUNAL, NAGPUR.*

Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (XXIV of 1951), Secs. 14, 2(1), 11(1)—Word "lease-money" in s. 14 whether refers to cash only—Applicability of s. 14 where lease-money payable in kind—Commutation under s. 11(1) whether applies with respect to liability completely discharged before commutation made.

The word "lease-money" in s. 14 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, refers to cash only and, therefore, s. 14 of the Act applies only where the lease-money is payable in cash and not where it is payable in kind.

The commutation made by the Revenue Officer under s. 11(1) of the Act is regarding the prospective liability of the lessee or of the liability of a lessee which is yet to be discharged.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

C. P. Kalele, for the petitioner.

J. N. Chandurkar, for respondent No. 4.

MUDHOLKAR J. This petition raises some interesting questions arising under the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

The petitioner before us is a tenant of field survey No. 7 of mouza Rati, tahsil Khamgaon, district Buldana, and respondent No. 4 is the landlord thereof. Sometime in December 1956 this respondent gave a notice to the petitioner under s. 9(1) of the Act, terminating the tenancy on the ground that the respondent required the land for cultivating it personally. It may be mentioned that under the lease the petitioner was liable to pay to the respondent half share in the crops and was also liable to pay the land revenue of Rs. 51 assessed on the field. Early in January the petitioner delivered some grain to the respondent which according to the petitioner represented respondent No. 4's half share in the grain. According to the petitioner he subsequently delivered half share in the kadba, kutar etc., but according to the respondent he did not receive anything beyond his half share in the grain harvested from the field.

After the petitioner received a notice terminating the tenancy, he made an application to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Khamgaon, under sub-s. (3) of s. 9 for a declaration that the notice given by the respondent shall have no effect. He also made two applications before the Sub-Divisional Officer, one under s. 11 of the Act for commutation of the lease money into cash and the other under s. 14 for the recovery of the excess lease money, which according to him he had paid to the respondent during the years 1953-54 to 1956-57. The applications were opposed by the respondent. Those under s. 9(3) and s. 14 were dismissed but that under s. 11 was granted and the lease money was commuted to Rs. 255 which represented five times the land revenue payable on the land.

The petitioner preferred an appeal before the Revenue Tribunal which it dismissed. He has, therefore, come up to this Court.

Now, in dismissing the appeal the Revenue Tribunal has come to the conclusion that s. 14 of the Act does not apply to a case where the lease money is payable otherwise than in cash. Mr. Kalele who appears for the petitioner challenges the correctness of this view. He points out that the word "lease-money" has been defined in s. 2(1) of the Act to mean anything that is payable to a landholder in money or kind by a lessee for the right to use the land, and that, therefore, that is the meaning which should be accorded to the word as used in s. 14 of the Act. Section 14 runs thus:—

"If any landholder receives by way of lease-money any amount in excess of the lease-money payable under this Act he shall on the application of such protected lessee, be liable by an order of a Revenue Officer, to refund the excess amount recovered and to pay, as penalty, a sum not exceeding two hundred rupees, or, if double the amount of the total lease-money recovered exceeds two hundred rupees, not exceeding double such amount and such Revenue Officer may direct that the whole or part of such sum shall be paid as compensation to the protected lessee."

It has to be borne in mind that this section provides for the refund of excess lease-money paid to the landholder. It uses the expression "any amount in excess of the lease money" which, in our opinion, is indicative of a payment in cash rather than in kind. The word "amount" is used more commonly in connection with cash or specie, and in the particular context it does not appear to have been used in any other sense than cash. Then the section provides for the refund of the amount. The meanings of the word "refund" are given in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary as follows:—

- "1. trans. To pour back, pour in or out again. Now rare or Obs.
- b. To give back, restore. Also absol. late ME.
2. To make return or restitution of (a sum received or taken); to hand back, repay, restore 1553.

3. To reimburse, repay (a person) 1736.

4. absol. To make repayment 1635."

It would appear that the third and the fourth meanings are the current ones. This will be clear from the abbreviation "absol." which stands for "absolutely" used in the fourth meaning. No doubt a similar abbreviation is used in the meaning l.b., but that is further limited by the words "late ME" i.e. late Middle English. In other words, that was the meaning which was in absolute use during that period but not so now.

For these reasons we agree with the Revenue Tribunal and hold that s. 14 applied only where the lease money is payable in cash and not where it is payable in kind.

It is true that the definition contained in s. 2(i) is wide enough to include lease-money payable in kind, but that meaning i.e. the wide meaning, is not to be accorded to the word if there is something repugnant in the context. Here by the fact that the words "amount" and "refund", which, in our opinion, refer to cash only, are used in s. 14, a repugnancy would be created if a wider meaning was given to the word "lease-money".

Then Mr. Kalele points out that the lease-money in terms of half share has actually been commuted into cash by the Sub-Divisional Officer by his order dated April 6, 1957, and that, therefore, the petitioner is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 14. Now, the commutation made under s. 11(1) is necessarily regarding the prospective liability of the lessee, or at any rate, of the liability of a lessee which is yet to be discharged. In the instant case the liability has been completely discharged with respect to the years 1953-54, 1954-55 and 1955-56. As regards the year 1956-57, it is the petitioner's own case that that liability has been discharged in full though according to the respondent that liability is partially discharged. Now the petitioner himself accepts the position that the liability has been discharged. Thus the mere fact of commutation would not entitle him to the benefit of the provisions of s. 14. The reason for this is that the commutation made by the Revenue Officer will only apply with respect to the undischarged liability of the lessee. Mr. Kalele, however, said that he (the petitioner) had actually made the application for commutation of the rent before the end of the agricultural year 1956-57, and, therefore, he should be allowed to get the benefit of the commutation with respect to that year even though the commutation was made after the end of the year. As we have already said, the very idea of commutation was to convert one kind of liability into another, and, therefore, that conversion can be effective with respect to the undischarged liability only and not with respect to the liability which was completely discharged. The petitioner, having made an application under s. 11 to the Sub-Divisional Officer for commutation of rent, was not bound to give to the respondent his share of the crops for the year 1956-57 till the decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer. If he had not delivered the respondent's half share before the commutation was made, he would certainly have got the benefit of that order with respect to that year.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the Revenue Tribunal was right in rejecting the petitioner's appeal. Accordingly we dismiss this petition and discharge the rule. Costs of this petition will be borne by the petitioner.

Petition dismissed.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, KATOL.*

Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act (II of 1922), Secs. 25(1), 10(1), 27, 24-B†—Central Provinces and Berar General Clauses Act (I of 1914), Sec. 15††—Applicability of cl. (iii) of proviso to s. 25(1)—President's power to employ municipal servants—Limitations on such power.

Clause (iii) of the proviso to s. 25(1) of the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, will not apply to a post in which there is a time scale and the maximum salary in that scale exceeds Rs. 40.

Under the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, the power to employ servants is reserved with the municipal committee not only by the general provisions of s. 10(1) of the Act, but expressly by the provisions of s. 25(1) of the Act. This power cannot be exercised by the President of the municipality unless it is delegated to him by a bye law made under s. 25(1) or under s. 27 or unless it is exercised in a case covered by cl. (iii) of the proviso to s. 25(1).

THE facts appear in the judgment.

P. S. Badhiye, for the petitioner.

N. S. Nandedkar, for the respondents.

MUDHOLKAR J. The petitioner is an assistant teacher serving in the municipal Primary School of the Municipal Committee, Katol. According to him, he was appointed to the school about 24 or 25 years ago. On March 18, 1958, the head master of the school, Mr. Pawar, made a report to the Secretary of the Municipal Committee, Katol, to the effect that the petitioner, who used to hold the classes from 7 a.m. to 11 a.m. in the morning, had refused to attend office work from 2.30 p.m. onwards. He also stated that when he inspected the class of the petitioner on March 13, 1958, he did not find his work satisfactory. The general complaint against the petitioner was that the petitioner was not observing the discipline of the school and this had an adverse effect on other teachers also. Thereupon the following notice dated March 22, 1958, was served on the petitioner which runs thus:—

"You are hereby informed that you are not attending the office work in the noon

† The relevant sections are as under:—

S. 24. B(1) The president of the committee shall perform all the duties and exercise all the powers specifically imposed or conferred on the president by or under this Act, and subject, wherever it is hereinafter expressly so provided, to the sanction of the committee, and subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions imposed by or under this Act, exercise the executive power for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, and be responsible for the fulfilment of the purpose of this Act.

S. 25. (1) A committee may employ such officers and servants as may be necessary and proper for the efficient discharge of its duties, and may make byelaws providing for the delegation of powers, duties and functions to such officers and servants and regulating their procedure, appointment, pay, leave, leave allowances and other conditions of service: Provided that....

(iii) any appointment to a municipal post carrying a salary of not more than forty rupees a month shall be made by the president in accordance with rules made by the Provincial Government, and he shall report every such appointment to the committee when it meets next after such appointment.

S. 27. A committee may make byelaws providing for the delegation of powers, duties and functions to a president, vice president, or individual member and regulating their procedure.

S. 10. (1) There shall be established for each municipality a committee having authority over the municipality.

†† The section is as under:—

S. 15. Where, by any (Madhya Pradesh) Act, a power to make any appointment is conferred then unless a different intention appears, the authority having power to make the appointment shall also have power to suspend or dismiss any person appointed by it in exercise of that power.

in spite of the orders of the Head Master in this respect. So also you are not doing the morning school work satisfactorily and with discipline. Thus you are misbehaving and you are not executing the orders of your superiors properly. A report about all this has been received from the Head Master.

You are therefore informed to submit your explanation to this office, within three days of the receipt of this order by you."

In answer to the notice the petitioner submitted an explanation. It may be mentioned that due to paucity of accommodation the teaching work of the school is carried out in two shifts, the morning shift from 7.30 a.m. to 11 a.m. and the afternoon shift from 11 to 4.30 p.m. The petitioner was admittedly working in the morning shift. The head master of the school had issued a directive to the petitioner and the other teachers working in the morning shift to report themselves at the school at 2.30 p.m. every day for doing office work. It is not denied that the petitioner did go to the school in the afternoon, but it is said that he was not always punctual, and that the head master thereupon took him to task and enjoined on him the necessity of attending the school punctually at 2.30 p.m. The petitioner continued to be remiss, and, therefore, the aforesaid notice was issued against him.

An enquiry into the petitioner's conduct was held by S. S. Misra, the Secretary of the Municipal Committee, and eventually an order was passed against him by the President, Mr. K. K. Chandak, on May 23, 1958. That order reads thus:—

"From the enquiry report of the Secretary Shri S. S. Misra it is found that Shri R. V. Muthal disobeyed the order of the Head Master. This sort of behaviour on the part of the Assistant teacher is highly objectionable.

I therefore order suspension without pay of Shri R. V. Muthal for a period of 15 (fifteen) days with effect from 25-5-1958 as a penalty. During this period no pay or allowance will be paid to him."

It is clear from this order that the only charge which is held to have been established against the petitioner is that he disobeyed the order of the head master. We would like to point out in the first instance that it was not shown to us that the head master could issue a directive to the teachers to do work other than their legitimate work i.e. the work of teaching. As a teacher the petitioner was bound only to do that work and no other work. Of course, if the contract of employment provides that a teacher in the municipal primary school and doing the work of teaching would also be called upon to do office work, then that is another matter. Mr. Nandedkar, who appears for the Municipal Committee, had not been able to show to us anything from which it could be deduced that the petitioner had undertaken to do work other than the teaching work of the municipal school. It would follow from this that the petitioner could not be punished for his failure to attend the school punctually at 2.30 p.m. for doing office work which was not part of his normal duty.

Apart from that, Mr. Nandedkar was not able to point out to us any provision under the Municipalities Act, or the rules made under the Act, or the byelaws framed by the Katol Municipal Committee, conferring upon the President the power to inflict a punishment upon a teacher. Section 24-B of the Act deals with the "powers and duties of the president". It provides that the president shall perform all the duties and exercise all the powers specifically imposed or conferred on him by or under the Act and that he shall, subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions imposed by or under the Act, exercise the executive powers for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act. Sub-section (1) of s. 25 of the Act provides that the committee may employ such officers and servants as may be necessary and proper for the efficient discharge of its duties. This provision empowers the committee to make byelaws providing for the delegation of powers, duties and functions to such officers and servants and regulating their procedure, appointment, pay, leave, leave allowance and other conditions of service. It is possible for the Municipal Committee, therefore, to frame a byelaw under sub-s. (1) of s. 25 to confer upon the President the power to take disciplinary action against a municipal servant. Similarly, under s. 27 of the Act the committee has power to frame byelaws providing for the delegation of powers, duties and functions to a President, Vice-President etc. Where there has been such a delegation, under s. 25(1), the President would be entitled to exercise such a power. The scheme of the Act thus is that the President shall exercise only those powers which are conferred on him by the Act, or those which are conferred on him by the rules or those which are delegated to him by the committee under s. 25(1) or s. 27.

Now, cl. (iii) of the proviso to sub-s. (1) of s. 25 confers on the President the power to make appointment to a municipal post carrying a salary of not more than Rs. 40 a month. Thus, the power is conferred by the Act itself and the President can exercise it. Mr. Nandedkar said that the petitioner drew a salary of Rs. 25 only when he was appointed 24 years ago, and therefore, he belongs to the class of persons who could be appointed by the President under cl. (iii) of the proviso. If that is so, Mr. Nandedkar's argument proceeds, then under s. 15 of the General Clauses Act the President will also be deemed to have the power to suspend or dismiss the person so appointed in the exercise of the powers conferred by cl. (iii) of the proviso to sub-s. (1) of s. 25. We would like to point out that in the first place this proviso was added in the C.P. and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, in the year 1947, while the petitioner entered the municipal service long before this year. Therefore, it is not open to Mr. Nandedkar to contend on the basis of this proviso that the petitioner belonged to a class of persons whose appointment could be made by the President. Secondly, we would like to point out that the petitioner's present salary is Rs. 60 and that he is appointed in a post which carries a time scale of which the maximum exceeds Rs. 40. Clause (iii) of the proviso, in our opinion, would not apply to a post in which there is a time scale and the maximum salary in that time scale exceeds Rs. 40.

Then Mr. Nandedkar contended that the President is entitled under s. 24-B(1) to exercise the executive power for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act and that this power includes the power to take disciplinary action against a municipal servant. In our opinion, this contention is not correct. The executive power which the President is entitled to exercise is subject to the limitations and conditions imposed by or under the Act. Section 10(1) of the Act vests the municipal government in the committee itself. Section 25(1) recognises the power of the committee to employ such officers and servants as may be necessary and proper for the efficient discharge of its duties. It will thus be seen that the power to employ servants is reserved with the committee not only by the general provisions of s. 10(1), but expressly by the provisions of s. 25(1). Since the power is reserved with the committee, it cannot be exercised by the President unless it is delegated to him by a byelaw made under sub-s. (1) of s. 25 or under s. 27. No byelaws appear to have been made by the Katol Municipality under either of these provisions. No doubt a power is conferred by cl. (iii) of sub-s. (1) of s. 25, but it is confined, as already stated, to appointment to posts of which the salary does not exceed Rs. 40 per month. The power being thus expressly limited to posts which fall in the aforementioned category cannot be construed to be of a wider amplitude by resort to the general terms of s. 24-B.

Mr. Badhiye, who appears for the petitioner, pointed out that in the byelaw framed by the Katol Municipal Committee in the year 1950 the power has been conferred on the President to suspend an employee but that this power is made subject to the sanction by the Municipal Committee. Mr. Nandedkar, however, pointed out that the power of suspension to which the byelaw refers is with respect to suspension pending enquiry against a municipal servant and not a suspension by way of punishment. Mr. Nandedkar's contention is correct, but the result is that there is no provision whatsoever in the byelaw which empowers the President to suspend a municipal servant by way of punishment. Such being the position, it is clear that the President's order is without jurisdiction. Mr. Nandedkar says that the Municipal Committee has subsequent to the making of the petition ratified the order of the President. We cannot, however, take notice of such a ratification.

It is thus clear that the order made by the President cannot be sustained. Accordingly we quash it and direct that the petitioner be paid his salary for the period during which he was suspended by way of punishment. The petition is allowed and the rule is made absolute. Costs of this petition will be borne by the respondents.

Petition allowed.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Patel.

STATE v. DHANRAJ MILLS LTD.*

Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, Cls. 3(aa), 21(3)(c)—Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (XXIV of 1946), Secs. 7, 8, 9—Constitution of India, art. 19—Whether "yarn" in cl. 3(aa) includes yarn manufactured from cotton waste—Obligation to pack yarn under cl. 21(3)(c) whether restricted to type of yarn packed in basic period—Reasonableness of statute how to be adjudged—Whether serious inconvenience or hardship resulting to citizen by restriction imposed on his fundamental rights decisive of unreasonableness of statute.

The expression "yarn" used in cl. 3(aa) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, includes yarn manufactured from cotton waste.

Under cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, the obligation to pack yarn is not restricted to the particular type of yarn which was packed in the basic years 1949 and 1950.

In ascertaining whether the impugned statute is unreasonable, no abstract tests can be laid down. Reasonableness or otherwise of the statute has to be adjudged in the light of the nature of the right infringed, the object of imposing the restriction, the extent and the gravity of the evil to be remedied, the degree of harm or inconvenience to the aggrieved citizen in the context of the benefit intended to be achieved for the benefit of society and similar other considerations. Even serious inconvenience or hardship resulting to a citizen by the imposition of a restriction on the exercise of his fundamental rights cannot be decisive of unreasonableness of a statute. Nor can the restriction be called unreasonable because its degree or extent is delimited by reference to a point of time or some period in the past.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

SHAH J. These are four companion appeals which raise for determination common questions. We propose to deal with Appeal No. 1225 of 1958, and the reasons set out for the decision in this appeal will govern the other three appeals.

Before the Presidency Magistrate, 25th Court, Mazgaon, Bombay, the Dhanraj Mills Ltd., which will hereafter be referred to as the company, and its three officers were charged with contravention of cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, read with Government Notification No. SRO-acquittal passed by H. J. Chinoy, Presidency Magistrate; 25th Court, Mazgaon, Bombay, in Case No. 1724/P of 1956.

609, dated April 27, 1951, and thereby committing offences punishable under ss. 7 and 8 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (XXIV of 1946). During the pendency of the proceedings accused No. 4, Meherji M. Pastakia, who was the manager of the company, died on March 21, 1958, and his name was struck off. The learned Magistrate acquitted the remaining three accused, and against the order of acquittal, this appeal has been preferred.

Dhanraj Mills Limited is a public limited company, which has its textile factory in the town of Bombay. In the year 1949-50, in the factory of the company were installed a spinning and a weaving plant. There were 780 looms and approximately 36,000 spindles—including ring, mule and bump mule—installed in the factory. From the returns submitted by the company, it appears that in the factory there were on January 1, 1950, 35,476 spindles, mule, ring roving, doubling and other types. On January 1, 1950, there were 36,316 spindles, and on January 1, 1951, the total number of spindles also remained at 36,316. Some of the mule spindles were old, and it was represented by the company to the Textile Commissioner in the returns made from time to time that a certain number of mule and bump mule spindles had remained idle in the year 1951. These bump mule and mule spindles were permitted by the Textile Commissioner to be dismantled in the year 1953. The mule and bump mule spindles were primarily used for manufacturing yarn of low count and constituted about 5 per cent. of the total number of spindles installed in the factory. In the year 1949-50, all the yarn manufactured on the mule spindles was packed for disposal, and the yarn manufactured on the other spindles was utilised by the company for its own weaving plant. In the years 1949 and 1950, the company manufactured an aggregate of 653 bales of low count yarn and that yarn was packed and sold. For use in the factory, however, 93 bales of higher count yarn were purchased in the year 1949, and 8 bales of yarn were purchased in 1950. In and after the year 1951, the mule and the bump mule spindles were kept idle and there was no production of low count yarn. The yarn produced by the other spindles in the factory was utilised for weaving cotton fabrics. The higher count yarn produced by the spindles was insufficient for the requirement of the factory for weaving cloth, and from time to time applications were submitted requesting the Textile Commissioner to release yarn for consumption in the mill, but on account of the prevailing shortage, the applications were turned down.

After the Defence of India Act, 1939, lapsed, the Central Legislature enacted the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, to provide for the continuance of powers to control production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, certain commodities including cotton textiles. By s. 3 of that Act, power to issue orders to control production, supply, distribution etc. of essential commodities was conferred upon the Central Government, and by s. 7, contravention of orders made under s. 3 relating to cotton textiles was made punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years and also fine. By s. 8, attempts to contravene or abetment of the contravention of the orders made under s. 3 were deemed contravention of those orders. In exercise of the authority conferred by s. 3 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, the Central Government issued the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, which was brought into force on August 2, 1948. By cl. 3(aa), "yarn" was defined as meaning any type of yarn manufactured either wholly from cotton or partly from cotton and partly from any other material. The expression "manufacturer" was defined to include a producer or a processor, and the expressions "processor" and "producer" were defined as meaning a person engaged in the manufacture of cloth or yarn or both. By cl. 12, which was added by an amendment, it was provided that every producer who has a spinning plant, shall sell, in each quarter, at least one-eighth of the total quantity of yarn sold by him in the years 1949 and 1950 taken together. By cl. 21, provision was made for packing of cloth and yarn. By sub-cl. (3)(c) of cl. 21, it was provided that no producer having both a spinning and a weaving plant shall pack during any month a quantity of yarn less than 80 per cent. of the average quantity of yarn packed by him per month during the two years 1949 and 1950 taken together. In the years 1949 and 1950, the company packed 693 bales of yarn i.e. an average of 27.2 bales per month. By cl. 21(3)(c), the company was obliged to pack 21 bales of yarn, but it failed to carry out that obligation. The company also failed to carry out its obligation under cl. 12 of the Cotton Textile (Control) Order, 1948, to sell the prescribed quantity of yarn manufactured by it. The company and its officers were then prosecuted in three complaints which were filed in the year 1954, for contravention of cl. 12(1) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, but they were acquitted of the charge. Thereafter, four complaints were filed against the company and its three officers, for contravention of cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order. By these four complaints the four accused were charged with having committed default in the months of June 1951, and August, October and November, 1952, in packing yarn as required by cl. 21(3)(c). It was the case for the prosecution that the company was a producer having spinning and weaving plants, and was statutorily obliged to pack every month 21 bales of yarn, being 80 per cent. of the average quantity of yarn which was packed per month during the two years 1949 and 1950 taken together, and the company having failed to do so, the company had committed the offence punishable under s. 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. It was submitted that by reason of the provision of s. 9 of that Act, the directors, managers and the officers of the company were responsible for the default committed by the company.

Before the trial Court, it was contended that the order of acquittal passed in the prosecution for charges for contravention of cl. 12, i.e. failure to sell the yarn, was a bar to the maintainability of the complaints for contravention of cl. 21(3)(c); that yarn manufactured from cotton waste was not "yarn" within the meaning of cl. 3(aa) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order; that the Order did not apply to manufacture, packing for sale and distribution of yarn prepared exclusively from cotton waste, and that in any event the company having ceased to manufacture cotton waste yarn in the years 1951-1952, no obligation to pack yarn remained imposed upon the company by cl. 21(3)(c), and by failing to pack yarn manufactured from cotton waste, the company had not committed any offence punishable under ss. 7 and 8 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. It was also urged by accused Nos. 2 and 3 that they had appointed accused No. 4 as a manager, and he alone was attending to the day to day business of the company including production of yarn, and accordingly for failure to pack yarn accused No. 4 alone was responsible. The learned Presidency Magistrate held that the order of acquittal passed in cases filed against the company and its officers for contravention of cl. 12 did not bar the complaints against the accused for contravention of cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order. He also observed that the period for which the accused in the earlier cases were prosecuted, were different from the periods for which the accused are sought to be prosecuted in these four cases. But in the view of the learned Magistrate, the expression "yarn" used in cl. 3(aa) did not include "cotton waste yarn", and that, in any event, the company having ceased to manufacture cotton waste yarn since 1951, by failing to pack yarn, the accused did not violate cl. 21(3)(c). The learned Magistrate observed that the obligation imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order was to pack the same "type of yarn" which was being manufactured in the years 1949 and 1950, and if yarn of that type was no longer manufactured by the company in the succeeding years, there was no obligation upon the company to pack yarn of a different type. The learned Magistrate having acquitted the accused, the State of Bombay has appealed to this Court.

It has not been urged before us that the order of acquittal passed in the cases for contravention of cl. 12 of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order constituted a bar to the maintainability of the complaints against the accused. Evidently, in the previous cases the contravention was of a provision imposing a different obligation and in periods different from those to which the complaints in these four cases relate, and there can be no bar of autrefois acquit to the maintainability of these complaints. It is urged in support of the appeal, that the learned Magistrate was in error in holding that the expression "yarn" did not include "cotton waste yarn". It is also urged that the obligation to pack yarn imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) is not to pack yarn with the same count as was packed in the basic years 1949-50, but the obligation is to pack cotton yarn irrespective of the count, and if that obligation is not discharged, the producer thereby contravenes cl. 21(3)(c). The expression "yarn" by cl. 3 of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, is defined as meaning any type of yarn manufactured either wholly from cotton or partly from cotton and partly from any other material. The expression "yarn" in the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, undoubtedly refers to cotton yarn and no other yarn. The argument that yarn may be manufactured from different materials, has in construing the provisions of Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, in our judgment no importance. Cotton waste is that residue of cotton which is, in the process of carding or spinning, discarded because of its short or damaged staple. For preparing yarn of a specified count, cotton has to be of uniform staple. Cotton which is not of the requisite staple is separated in the process of carding. Where the staple of cotton is very short it is unfit for spinning into yarn which can be utilised for fabrics to be used for preparing clothes. Cotton waste or as it is sometimes called waste cotton is but cotton of short or damaged staple, unfit for being spun into yarn which may be used for fabrics for preparing clothes. It is conceded on behalf of the accused that yarn can be spun out of cotton waste; but from that yarn fabrics which may be used for clothes may not be manufactured. In 1949 and 1950, a considerable quantity of waste cotton was utilised by the company for spinning yarn, but the yarn was of very low count and was suitable only for preparing blankets, towels, furnishing fabrics, durries, carpets or ropes.

The trial Magistrate was persuaded to accept the view that the expression yarn used in cl. 21(3)(c) did not include yarn manufactured from cotton waste. But if cotton waste be regarded as cotton of short or damaged staple, we fail to see anything in cl. 3(aa) which supports the view of the learned Magistrate, that yarn prepared from cotton waste is not yarn within the meaning of the Control Order. Yarn is, by the definition, that type of yarn which is manufactured either wholly from cotton or partly from cotton and partly from any other material, and if cotton waste be cotton, yarn spun from cotton waste is, in our judgment, yarn within the meaning of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order. By cl. 21(3)(c), an obligation is imposed upon the producer having a spinning and a weaving plant, to pack during any month a quantity of yarn not less than 80 per cent. of the average quantity of yarn packed by him during the two years 1949 and 1950 taken together. That the company had packed, in the years 1949-50, 653 bales of yarn manufactured from cotton waste is not disputed, and by cl. 21(3)(c), the company was obliged to pack 21 bales of yarn per month. There is nothing in cl. 21(3)(c) which supports the view that the expression "yarn" used in that clause has a meaning different from the meaning which is ascribed thereto by the definition clause. It was urged by Mr. Choksi, who appears on behalf of the accused, that the Legislature itself has deliberately made a distinction between cotton and cotton waste. Our attention was invited to cl. 20C, which imposes a restriction against the producer having a spinning plant, undertaking to carry out the spinning of yarn out of cotton and cotton waste not owned by him. But the reference to cotton waste and cotton in cl. 20C(b) does not support the argument that yarn spun from cotton waste is not yarn within the meaning of the definition clause; nor does the circumstance that the marking regulations are expressly made inapplicable to yarn manufactured from cotton waste support that argument. By cl. 21(3)(d), an obligation is imposed upon the producer having a spinning plant to pack a certain quantity of yarn. In sub-cl. (vi) of cl. 21, a table is set out which refers to groups and counts of yarn. Under group I are set out 1 to 6 counts both inclusive, and it is followed by the expressions (waste) and (single). Similarly, Group II is also of 1 to 6 counts both inclusive and the range and description is set out as (waste) (folded). This table of classification of various counts indicates that the producer having a spinning plant is to carry out the obligation imposed by cl. 21(3)(d) both in respect of yarn manufactured from cotton as well as cotton waste. By the explanation to cl. (x), in item (v) it is prescribed that for the purpose of sub-cl. (d), the following varieties of cloth, namely, cotton waste blankets, durrries, towels and furnishing fabrics shall be excluded in determining any quantity of cloth referred to in para. (d). It is true that by the use of the expression "cotton waste blankets" is intended to limit the exclusion of blankets which are manufactured from cotton waste, but that is not enough to suggest that within the contemplation of the order cotton waste is a commodity which is different from cotton.

The learned Presidency Magistrate was of the view that waste yarn is produced from waste which again is produced from cotton in the process of carding and spinning, and as Vishnu Hule, Head Clerk of the company, has stated that "waste yarn" which was produced during the basic period was produced from 100 per cent. waste and no cotton was mixed in it, and Shiveshwerker, Assistant Textile Controller, was unable to say whether the waste yarn packed by the company during the period was 100 per cent. waste, the yarn produced from cotton waste was a commodity different from the yarn produced from cotton. In our opinion, the yarn produced "from 100 per cent. waste cotton" is still yarn produced from cotton. This type of yarn is undoubtedly of a very low count, unfit for use for weaving fabrics which may be used for wearing, but that is not a material distinction which justifies the view that within the definition in cl. 3(aa) yarn manufactured out of waste cotton is not included. There was it is true at the relevant time no control on sale or purchase of cotton waste though there was control on the price of waste yarn, but on that account also we are unable to hold that the provision which imposes an obligation to pack a prescribed quantity of yarn does not apply to a manufacturer who in the basic period was manufacturing yarn from cotton waste as well as ordinary cotton; nor are we able to agree with the view of the learned Magistrate that the obligation imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) is to pack the same type of yarn which was manufactured in the basic period. The definition of the expression "yarn" does undoubtedly refer to the "type of yarn"; but that is evidently enacted to make all yarn which has a cotton component subject, unless otherwise expressly provided, to the restrictive provisions of the Order. There is however nothing in cl. 21(3)(c), which suggests that the obligation to pack yarn is restricted to the particular type of yarn which was being packed in the basic period. The learned Magistrate followed a rather unusual process of reasoning in substituting for the expression "yarn" as used in cl. 21(3)(c), the expression "type of yarn" and then inferred that the Legislature intended that the same type of yarn should be packed by the producer as was packed by him in the basic period. He reinforced his conclusion by observing that, as cl. 21(3)(c) imposed an obligation, and failure to comply with the same was penalised, the Courts must be astute to hold that the producer, who did not manufacture yarn of the same type as was manufactured in the basic period, could not be penalised. In our view, the entire process of reasoning of the learned Magistrate proceeds upon assumptions which are not warranted. There is nothing in cl. 21(3)(c) which supports the view that the obligation is to pack the same type of yarn which was manufactured in the basic period; nor is there any warrant for the observation that the liability to pack is in respect of the same type of yarn which was being manufactured in the basic period. The obligation imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) is absolute in terms, and we do not see any reason to restrict the same in the manner suggested by the learned Magistrate. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the learned Magistrate that there was no infringement of the provision of cl. 21(3)(c) by the company.

But, Mr. Choksi contends that cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, is ultra vires the Legislature because it imposes an unreasonable restriction upon the right to hold and dispose of property, and upon the right to carry on trade or business. By cl. (f) of art. 19 of the Constitution, all citizens have the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property; and by cl. (g) they have, amongst other rights, the right to carry on any trade or business. But the fundamental rights guaranteed by art. 19(f) and (g) are made subject to any law imposing reasonable restrictions. During the Second World War, and thereafter, there was undoubtedly a severe shortage of cotton yarn and to secure an equitable distribution of this commodity in short supply, orders were issued under the Defence of India Rules, imposing control upon the manufacture, distribution and sale of yarn. After the Defence of India Act lapsed, by the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, power was conferred by the Legislature upon the Central Government to issue orders in respect of certain essential commodities. The Legislature has by s. 3 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, conferred authority on the Central Government to issue orders, and in pursuance of the authority, the Central Government has promulgated the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order. Mr. Choksi contends that the order in so far as it imposes an obligation to pack a prescribed quantity of yarn for sale is unreasonable. Counsel submits that by art. 19 of the Constitution, every citizen has a right to use his property for his own benefit and yarn being the property of the company, it could not be required to pack for disposal a certain quantity of yarn manufactured by it, when the production of yarn was insufficient for its own requirements in its Weaving Department. But the argument assumes that a law, which imposes a restriction upon the fundamental rights guaranteed by cl. (f) and (g) of art. 19, is unreasonable if the restriction results in inconvenience to a citizen. If in the larger interest of the society, it is found necessary for making an equitable distribution of an essential commodity, to require a citizen that he shall part with the same or a part thereof, the provision imposing the obligation is not per se unreasonable. In ascertaining whether the impugned statute is unreasonable, no abstract tests can be laid down. Reasonableness or otherwise of the statute has to be adjudged in the light of the nature of the right infringed, the object of imposing the restriction, the extent and the gravity of the evil to be remedied, the degree of harm or inconvenience to the aggrieved citizen in the context of the benefit intended to be achieved for the society and similar other considerations. Even serious inconvenience resulting to a citizen by the imposition of a restriction on the exercise of his fundamental rights cannot be decisive of unreasonableness of a statute. If in the larger interest of the public the individual rights of a citizen must be made subservient thereto, the consequences which Mr. Choksi says are likely to result if the company being required to pack for sale a part of their production which is necessary to keep the factory running, will not justify us in holding that the provision is unreasonable. The Constitution has not conferred upon the citizens an absolute fundamental right to hold and dispose of his property. The right is subject to the law imposing reasonable restrictions. The Constitution has sought to create a balance between the rights of the citizens individually and the rights of the citizens generally; and as, in our view, the restrictions imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) are enacted in the interest of the public in an emergency arising out of the conditions prevailing as an aftermath of the world war for the equitable distribution of an essential commodity, by itself the restriction cannot be regarded as unreasonable. The statute does not prescribe the imposition of restrictions based on ad hoc decisions of an executive authority in exercise of discretion vested in him by law to permit or not to permit user by a citizen of his property. Where such a provision is made, as for instance in licencing provisions, different considerations may arise. The Legislature having enacted a general provision applicable to all producers, provided they have a spinning and weaving plant, requiring them to pack a certain quantity of yarn, which was related to the quantity packed in the basic period, we do not think that the ground of individual hardship can be pressed into service in considering the question of reasonableness of the provision. Mr. Choksi also urged that the assumption made in enacting cl. 21(3)(c) that the number of spindles installed by the producer in the basic period and the periods subsequent thereto and the requirements for consumption by the producer continue to remain unaltered was unwarranted. He says that it is possible that a section of the spinning plant may go out of commission and the producer may not have the same extent of the plant as in the basic period, and it would entail great hardship upon the producer to be called upon to pack a quantity of yarn based upon the quantity packed in the basic period when it is not even sufficient for his own requirement. But, this, in our judgment, is the argument of inconvenience in another guise. A restriction imposed by a statute is not unreasonable because it entails some hardship or inconvenience to the citizen in the exercise of his fundamental rights. Nor can it be called unreasonable because the degree or extent of restriction is delimited by reference to a point of time or some period in the past. Mr. Choksi contended that where the entire spinning plant is destroyed or dismantled and no yarn is manufactured by the producer in the period after the basic period, though the producer had a substantial production in the basic period, the producer would, if literal effect be given to the obligation under cl. 21(3)(c), be called upon to pack something which he does not produce. But the answer to that contention is that the producer, by reason of the destruction of his spinning plant, ceases to be a producer governed by that provision, and there is in that eventuality no obligation imposed upon him to pack any yarn. It is true that cases may be imagined where a considerable part of the spinning plant is out of order since the basic period, and the total production may even be less than 80 per cent. of the average quantity of yarn produced during the basic period. But by contemplating such exceptional cases we will not be justified in regarding the provision of cl. 21(3)(c) as unreasonable and ultra vires.

Mr. Choksi stated that after the mule spindles became idle, the reeling department and the bundling department were also stopped, and in the year 1951-52, the mills had not even machinery for reeling and bundling of yarn in the process of packing. But if the company closed the reeling and the bundling departments, and it experienced difficulty in packing yarn, we are unable to hold that on that account the statutory obligation requiring the company to pack the prescribed quantity of yarn disappeared.

Mr. Choksi also urged that in any event accused Nos. 2 and 3 had not personally infringed the obligation imposed by cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, and they were not guilty of the offence under s. 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. Counsel invited our attention to a circular Ex. Z/15 issued from the office of the Textile Controller. The producers were by that circular advised to nominate by a special resolution officers who will be responsible for and look after the affairs of the mills, and accordingly answerable for the contravention of the provisions of the Textile Control Order that may be committed in future. They were also informed that the adoption of this suggestion may enable Government to take action against the particular officer or officers nominated by the Board of Directors, and in the absence of such an arrangement, it may become incumbent on the Government to prosecute every director, manager, secretary and other officers or agents thereof of the mills and any plea that may be put forward that the Board of Directors were not directly responsible for the day to-day running of the mills may not be accepted as the provision of the law was very clear and held every one connected with the mills responsible for the contravention in the absence of specific delegation of authority to an officer or officers. It is submitted, relying upon this circular, that accused No. 4 was, by a resolution of the company, appointed a manager, and all authority for the manufacture and packing of yarn was conferred upon him. But this circular which is issued on June 16, 1949, was cancelled by another circular, Ex. Z-16, issued on August 31, 1949. It was recited in that circular that it was never the intention of the Government that the entire responsibility for the proper observance of the Textile Control Order should be fixed on a minor functionary of the mills and that the directors, managers and other responsible officers should be completely relieved of their obligation to exercise due care in that behalf. Whatever may be the view of the Textile Controller, the liability upon the directors, managers, secretary and the staff attending to the business of the company is imposed by s. 9 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, and the interpretation which may have appeared to the Textile Control Office is entirely irrelevant. By that section it is expressly provided that if the person contravening an order under s. 3 is a company or other body corporate, every director, manager, secretary or other officer or agent thereof shall, unless he proves that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent such contravention, be deemed to be guilty of such contravention. In the present case, it is true that accused Nos. 2 and 3 had pleaded in the Court below that accused No. 4 alone was attending to the day to day production of the yarn. But our attention has not been invited even to a defence raised by accused Nos. 2 and 3 that the contravention took place without their knowledge or that they had exercised all due diligence to prevent such contravention; nor is there any evidence on the record which supports the contention that the contravention took place without their knowledge or that they had exercised all due diligence to prevent the contravention. A general resolution appointing accused No. 4 to attend to the day to day administration and the working of the mills and the production of yarn, does not justify the inference that the contravention took place without the knowledge of the accused or that they exercised diligence to prevent the contravention. The burden under s. 9 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act lies heavily upon accused Nos. 2 and 3 to prove that the contravention took place without their knowledge, or that they exercised diligence to prevent the contravention and no evidence has been led to discharge that burden. In that view of the case, accused Nos. 2 and 3 must also be held guilty of contravention of cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order by the mills.

Mr. Shellim Samuel, who appears on behalf of the company, has contended that the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, ceased to be in operation from January 26, 1955, and the Act being a temporary Act, no prosecution could after that date be commenced against the accused for infringement of the provision of orders framed in exercise of the authority under that Act. It is true that when a temporary Act lapses, the infringement of the provision of that temporary Act or orders passed thereunder will not in the absence of any express provision to the contrary made, on prosecution started after the Act has lapsed, be liable to be punished. But the Legislature has under s. 1(3) of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, which was amended by Act LXV of 1952, expressly provided that the Act shall cease to have effect on January 26, 1955, except as respects things done or omitted to be done before that date, and s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, shall apply upon the expiry of this Act as if it had then been repealed by a Central Act. Evidently, the Legislature has contemplated that in respect of things done or omitted to be done, s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, shall apply, and it is not disputed that if s. 6 applies, the prosecution of the accused could be commenced and continued notwithstanding the repeal of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. The learned Government Pleader invited our attention to the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, which repealed the Essential Commodities Ordinance, 1955 (I of 1955) and other laws in force immediately before the commencement of the Act, in so far as such laws controlled or authorised the control of the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, any essential commodity, and also to the provision of sub-s. (2) of s. 16 thereof which continued in force any appointments made, licence or permit granted or direction issued under any such order and in force immediately before the commencement of the Act. It is unnecessary for us to consider whether, by reason of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, the penal provision of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, may be deemed to remain in operation, because, in our view, the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act itself contained a provision which kept alive the penal provision even after the Act lapsed on January 26, 1955.

On the view taken by us, the order of acquittal passed by the trial Magistrate must be set aside. We, therefore, convict accused No. 1 for the offence under s. 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, read with cl. 21(3)(c) of the Cotton Textiles (Control) Order, 1948, read with Government Notification No. SRO-609, dated April 27, 1951. We convict accused Nos. 2 and 3 for the same offence read with s. 9 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, for contravention of the same provision. We sentence each of the accused to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000. Fine to be paid within a fortnight. Accused Nos. 2 and 3, in default of payment of fine, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months each.

In the companion appeals, for the reasons stated in the judgment in the principal appeal, the same orders are passed.

Order set aside.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Naik.

JOHN SERVAGE PHILIP v. THE CITY OF NAGPUR CORPORATION.*

City of Nagpur Corporation Act (II of 1950), Secs. 57, 58, 58-A, 84, 20A—C. P. and Berar Local Fund Audit Act—Corporation passing resolution to send at its expense delegates at Health Conference in England—Whether resolution beyond powers of Corporation and, therefore, ultra vires—Right of Corporation to incur expenditure—Court's power to issue writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ or order.

The City of Nagpur Corporation passed a resolution at a meeting of the Corporation accepting an invitation received from the Secretary of the Royal Society for the Promotion of Health, London, requesting it to send delegates at the Health Conference of representatives of Commonwealth countries to be held in England. In pursuance of an order of the Government of India allotting foreign exchange for meeting the expenses out of India for two delegates it was decided to send two delegates to the Conference at the expense of the Corporation. On the question whether the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948, conferred a power upon the Corporation to expend money on the object involved in the resolution passed by the Corporation:—

Held, that the resolution of the Corporation which permitted the incurring of expenditure for sending delegates to the Conference was beyond the powers of the Corporation and was, therefore, ultra vires.

Quære: Whether the Corporation was competent to pass a resolution at all selecting delegates for attending the Conference at their own costs.

Section 58(s) of the City of Nagpur Corporation Act contemplates that there must be a reasonable and legitimate connection between what is sought to be done and the promotion of public health, safety and convenience of the public.

Under s. 58(c) of the Act the further educational facilities are those intended for the people in general living within the limits of the Corporation. This section, therefore, cannot be interpreted as permitting expenditure by the Corporation for providing special educational facilities to its Councillors.

Mere sanctioning of an expenditure which is of a special nature by the Corporation is not enough. Either the amount proposed to be spent should be included in the budget [s. 84] or should be expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee [s. 84, proviso (a)]. If it is not included in the budget or if it is not expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee, the expenditure would be unauthorised.

Every Municipal Corporation is entitled to spend money only when the power to do so is expressly conferred upon it by the Act bringing the corporation into existence, or is necessarily implied from any power expressly granted by the Act or is essential to the object for which the corporation is created.

There must be a substantial compliance with the Constitutional or statutory provision as to the right of the municipal corporation to incur expenditure. Such power is to be exercised by the authority named in the Act and by no one else.

The statutory provision prohibiting the incurring of expenditure out of the municipal fund without prior appropriation cannot be transgressed.

Where money is sought to be expended outside the Corporation limit, a very strong case must be made by the Corporation to show that the incurring of this expenditure was essential to the due performance of its duties by the Corporation and that it was bound to result in benefit to the people living within the municipal limits of the Corporation.

The Queen v. Mayor & Town Council, Liverpool,¹ Att. Gen. v. Manchester Corporation,² *Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney General*³ and James v. Seattle,⁴ referred to.

Courts may not inquire into the unreasonableness or reasonableness of a municipal act or ordinance but reasonableness of municipal action is subject to review and inquiry by the Courts.

Under the C. P. and Berar Local Fund Audit Act it is only the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts who can take the initiative and report that an expenditure has been wrongly incurred or a payment has been wrongly made by members of the Municipal Corporation voting on a resolution for incurring such expenditure or making such payment. Under the Act no citizen is entitled to move the Government to take action against the members of the Corporation who had voted for the resolution, to refund the amount.

The requirement of a demand by a person who seeks the issue of a writ of mandamus is necessary where that person seeks to compel a public authority or a public body to perform its duties under the statute.

If the Court comes to the conclusion that the petitioner is entitled to have his grievance removed, then it has the power to issue an appropriate writ or order though it may not strictly be a writ of mandamus.

MUDHOLKAR J. The City of Nagpur Corporation passed a resolution at a meeting held on March 18, 1959, accepting an invitation received from the Secretary of the Royal Society for the Promotion of Health, London, requesting it to send delegates at the Health Conference to be held at Harrogate, Yorkshire, from April 27 till May 1, 1959. The Corporation decided to send the following four persons as delegates to that Conference:—

- (1) Shri Madan Gopal Agarwal, Councillor,
- (2) Shri O. V. Deshmukh, Councillor,
- (3) Dr. D. W. Duragkar, Councillor,
- (4) Shri D. J. Madan, Municipal Commissioner.

Apparently the Corporation was not quite sure whether it could send delegates to that Conference at its expense. It, therefore, addressed a letter to the State Government, requesting it to grant sanction for the expenditure which will have to be incurred for sending the aforesaid delegates to the Conference. On April 4, 1959, the Government sent a reply to the Corporation in which, amongst other things, it was stated that there does not appear to be any provision in the Act or the rules under which the sanction of the Government was necessary and that it presumed that only a formal approval of the Government was sought for by the Corporation. The Government then stated that it had no objection to one delegate being sent to attend the Health Congress and that it approved of an expenditure of Rs. 4,000 in respect of it from the municipal fund. Thereafter the Corporation again moved the Government for reconsidering the matter and it would appear that eventually the Government agreed to the original proposal of the Corporation to send four delegates. Accordingly the Government recommended to the Government of India to release sufficient foreign exchange for meeting the expenses of the delegates out of India. The Government of India, however, sanctioned only 200 pounds and said that this was to enable the Corporation to send two delegates. Now, in the original resolution which was passed by the Corporation the names of the four delegates were set out in the order in which they were to go in case it was decided that all the delegates should not go. In pursuance of the order of the Government of India allotting foreign exchange for meeting the expenses out of India for two delegates, only the first two delegates viz. Shri Agarwal and Shri Deshmukh were to be sent to the Congress.

The petitioner, who claims to be a citizen of Nagpur, came to know of this on April 19, 1959, from newspaper reports and on the next day, i.e. on the 20th, he preferred an application to this Court under art. 226 of the Constitution for the issue of an appropriate writ, order, or direction, restraining the Corporation from carrying out the resolution of March 18, 1959. After the petition was admitted by us we issued a temporary injunction restraining the Corporation from giving effect to the resolution pending decision of the petition before us. We also directed that the petition shall be heard on the 22nd.

The Corporation has filed its return and has raised several contentions. We will only refer to those contentions which were pressed in the argument before us by Mr. M. N. Phadke, who appears for the Corporation.

The first contention which Mr. Phadke raised was that the petition has been delayed, that money has actually been placed at the disposal of two delegates who are supposed to go, and probably the passages have also been booked for the two delegates. We realize that there is not much time left for the delegates to leave. Mr. Phadke says that they would have to leave Bombay today by air to enable them to attend the Congress. Even so, we do not think that this is a case where the petitioner has been guilty of any laches or inaction. It is no doubt true that soon after the resolution in regard to this matter was passed by the Corporation, the news was flashed in the local newspapers, but it was also known that the Corporation had sought the sanction of the Government. It was also known to the people that foreign exchange was to be made available by the Reserve Bank and for that purpose the Government of India's orders were necessary. It seems that the petitioner did not expect that the proposed move of the Corporation would be accepted by the Government of Bombay or the Union Government. In these circumstances we do not think that the delay is inexcusable. We, therefore, overrule Mr. Phadke's first contention.

The second contention of Mr. Phadke, which is also in the nature of a preliminary objection, is that another remedy is open to the petitioner. That remedy is said to be to move the Government to take action against the members of the Corporation who voted for the resolution to refund the amount under the C.P. and Berar Local Fund Audit Act. Now, under this Act the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts is empowered to report to the Commissioner that an expenditure has been wrongly incurred or a payment has been wrongly made. When such a report has been made the Commissioner has power to require those members of the Corporation or a local authority who voted for incurring such expenditure or making such payment to refund that amount to the Corporation or the local body. There does not appear to be any provision in the Act under which a citizen is entitled to move the Government. Under the Act the initiative can be taken only by the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts and no one else. In these circumstances it cannot be said that another remedy was open to the petitioner.

The arguments were closed yesterday, but today Mr. Phadke has made another point. It is this: The petitioner, according to him, is in fact seeking a writ of mandamus, and since there has been no prior demand by the petitioner from the Corporation, it is not open to him to ask for the issue of such a writ. Now, the requirement of a demand by a person who seeks the issue of a writ of mandamus is necessary where that person seeks to compel a public authority or a public body to perform its duties under the statute. In the instant case what the petitioner is seeking is not a demand for the performance of a duty but the issue of an appropriate writ, order or direction restraining a public body from doing an act which, according to him, is in contravention of the statute which has brought it into existence. Therefore, strictly speaking, what the petitioner is seeking is not a writ of mandamus. Now, in *Rashid Ahmed v. Municipal Board, Kairana*¹ a person was prohibited by an order of the Municipal Committee from carrying on a trade within the municipal limits. He made a petition to the Supreme Court under art. 32 of the Constitution for enforcing his fundamental right to carry on his business, which according to him was completely stopped by the municipal body. One of the contentions raised before the Supreme Court by the Advocate General of Uttar Pradesh was that the petitioner had an adequate remedy by way of appeal and that, therefore, the Supreme Court should not grant any writ in the nature of prohibition, mandamus or certiorari. Dealing with the argument their Lordships observed (p. 165):—

"...There can be no question that the existence of an adequate legal remedy is a thing to be taken into consideration in the matter of granting writs but the powers given to this Court under Art. 32 are much wider and are not confined to issuing prerogative writs only."

Then their Lordships proceeded to observe (p. 165):—

"We are satisfied that in this case the petitioner's fundamental rights have been infringed and he is entitled to have his grievance redressed. The proper order in such circumstances would be to direct the respondent Board not to prohibit the petitioner from carrying on the trade of whole-sale dealer and commission agent of vegetables and fruits within the limits of the Municipal Board of Kairana..."

It would thus be clear that if the Court comes to the conclusion that the petitioner is entitled to have his grievance removed, then it has the power to issue an appropriate writ or order though it may not strictly be a writ of mandamus. Apart from that, we would like to point out that on the same day on which the petitioner presented the petition, another petitioner, Govind Mahadeo Khode, also presented a similar petition in which he asked for an identical relief. On April 16, 1959, this person served a notice on the Corporation calling upon it to cancel its previous resolution and to desist from sending the delegates named in the resolution of March 18, 1959, to attend the Harrogate Congress. This petition was not admitted by us for the simple reason that whatever the petitioner wanted to be enquired into there could be enquired into in the present petition. Therefore, even if we uphold Mr. Phadke's contention, the most that can happen is that we would dismiss the petition but then we would be entitled to take into consideration the other petition and if we think that the contentions are right we can issue not only a writ of mandamus, if we can issue such a writ in that petition, but also any other writ, order or direction. For these reasons we overrule Mr. Phadke's third preliminary objection.

Coming to the most important question which is involved in this petition, we would like to state that it is settled law that every municipal corporation is entitled to spend money only when the power to do so is expressly conferred upon it by the Act bringing the Corporation into existence, or is necessarily implied from any power expressly granted by the Act or is essential to the object for which the Corporation is created. What we have, therefore, to see is whether the City of Nagpur Corporation Act confers a power upon the Corporation to expend money on an object such as the one which is involved in the resolution of March 18, 1959.

Chapter V of the City of Nagpur Corporation Act deals with "powers, duties and functions of the Municipal Authorities". These duties are divided into two categories, obligatory and discretionary. Section 57 sets out the obligatory duties, s. 58 sets out the discretionary duties. In addition to this classification, s. 58-A empowers the State Government to entrust either conditional or unconditional functions in relation to any matter specified in the Schedule or in relation to any other matter to which the executive authority of the State extends or in respect of the powers of the State Government or the Central Government. These are thus the only duties which the Act lays upon the Corporation. Of course, as already stated, for the performance of these duties the Corporation will also be bound to perform certain duties which were essential to secure the performance of the duties expressly cast upon it. The Corporation would likewise have the power to do all that is necessary to ensure the due performance of its duties. There is another principle which is also well settled and which must be borne in mind while dealing with the contentions raised before us. That principle is that there must be a substantial compliance with the Constitutional or statutory provision as to the right of the municipal corporation to incur expenditure. Such power is to be exercised by the authority named in the Act and by no one else. The third principle which is to be borne in mind is that the statutory provision prohibiting the incurring of expenditure out of the municipal fund without prior appropriation cannot be transgressed. Here we have got s. 84 of the Act which provides that no payment of any sum shall be made out of the municipal fund unless the expenditure of the same is covered by a current budget grant and a sufficient balance of such budget grant is still available. There is, no doubt, a proviso to this section which excepts certain expenditure from the prohibition enacted in the section. But then it has to be established that the expenditure falls within the exception.

It is not disputed that no duty is cast upon the Municipal Corporation either under s. 57 or under s. 58, or under s. 58-A, requiring it to send delegates to any conference. Mr. Phadke's contention, however, is that it is implicit in the powers of the Corporation to do all such things as are necessary for ensuring a satisfactory exercise of its duties under the Act and that sending delegates to conferences such as the one in question must be deemed to be in the exercise of that power. He says that the Corporators upon whom is laid the duty of providing various amenities to the people by making improvements of different kinds in the government of the city would require the necessary knowledge and information for securing this end. He says that the two corporators going as delegates will learn a good deal about various matters concerning public health and on their return they will enlighten the other corporators about the modern trends of thoughts and activities in the sphere of public health and would be able to suggest what improvements should be made and what new amenities should be supplied to the people of Nagpur. The Corporation will thus be in a much better position to judge as to what should be done in the City of Nagpur. We would, however, like to state that there must be some legitimate and reasonable connection between what is sought to be done and what is required or permitted by the statute to be done by the Corporation in order to justify the act.

Dealing with this aspect of the matter the law has been summarised thus in 64 Corpus Juris Secundum at Note 1835 (p. 334):—

"There is no universal test for distinguishing between a purpose which is public or municipal and, therefore, a proper object of municipal expenditure and one which is private and, therefore, an improper object to which to devote public money. Each case must be decided in the light of the existing conditions, with respect to the objects sought to be accomplished, the degree and manner in which that object affects the public welfare, and the nature and character of the thing to be done;..."

A question somewhat similar to the one which is before us has also been before the State Courts in the United States of America. That question was whether a municipality may lawfully provide for payment of expenditure of delegates attending conferences of municipal institutions. On this question there has been a divergence of judicial opinion in the Courts of that country. Some Courts have held that disbursement of money for such purpose is outside the powers of the Corporation because the connection between that purpose and the duties cast upon the Corporation is too remote. On the other hand, it has been held by some other Courts that disbursement of money for such purpose is within the competence of the corporation. In one of these cases it has been held that the expenditure incurred reasonably by municipal authorities to learn the manner in which complex municipal problems concerning government and other capacities of the municipality are solved is for public purpose. Here the delegates are not going to attend a conference of other municipal authorities, but to attend a public Health Congress of representatives of Commonwealth countries. The invitation, which has been extended to the Corporation, says that this Congress is presided over by a certain Peer and that delegates representing all aspects of public health are expected to meet there to discuss subjects of common interest. It also states that next year (i.e. 1959) a Radiation section dealing with radiation levels and nuclear power stations will be included for the first time, thus providing for a platform for the discussion of a rapidly developing subject of particular public health importance. The invitation says that there will be a Health Exhibition associated with these functions which will enable the delegates to see at first hand the latest equipment and products of many leading manufacturers as well as displays by Government Departments and trade and research organisations.

It will thus be seen from this invitation that the subjects which will be dealt with and discussed at the Congress are highly technical. It is questionable whether there is any ground at all for a Corporation situate in the heart of India to be concerned about radiation. Apart from that, the invitation makes it clear that the subjects to be discussed there will be of "public interest" to members of the medical profession, engineers, architects, health officers, public health nurses etc. Therefore, it is clear that local bodies in India can but play only an insignificant part at this function. The knowledge to be gained or information to be obtained at the Congress must be of a kind which is capable, or reasonably capable, of being useful to the local authority which sends its delegate. It cannot be said that there is any reasonable connection between the object which this Congress has in view and the duties which the Corporation has to perform in the city of Nagpur. No doubt, it appears from the invitation that delegates will be able to visit water supply undertakings, district heating schemes, sewage disposal works, housing schemes, homes for the aged, hospitals, health service centres, industrial rehabilitation units, etc. That however is only incidental to the main thing. Indeed, if it were to be granted that a Corporation will be able to do its duties better by sending delegates all over the world to see how similar problems are tackled elsewhere, the cost of it would be disproportionate to the benefit that is expected to be derived from such a tour. We may also point out that even the capacity of the Corporation to make use of the knowledge gained by its delegates to the aforesaid conference is extremely limited, and, therefore, that knowledge is not reasonably likely to result in any benefit to the Corporation. In the light of these circumstances no other conclusion but one can be reached and that is that there is no reasonable connection or no legitimate connection between sending delegates to a conference of this kind and the discharge of the duties cast upon the Corporation by the Act.

Mr. Phadke, however, contended that this is really a matter of opinion, and that as regards what is reasonable or what is not reasonable the Court cannot substitute its own judgment for that of the Corporation. For, certain duties are cast upon the Corporation by the Act, and it is for the Corporation to decide as to how to discharge their duties. It has been pointed out in Note 199 of 62, Corpus Juris Secundum, that discretionary action on the part of a municipality is subject to judicial review where the action is manifestly arbitrary or the discretion is clearly abused whether such action is within or without the limits of its discretionary power. No doubt, as a general rule Courts may not inquire into the unreasonableness or reasonableness of a municipal act or ordinance but it is accepted as a general rule that reasonableness of municipal action is subject to review and inquiry by the Courts. In Note 204 of the aforesaid volume it has been pointed out that in passing on the reasonableness of municipal ordinance and regulations, the Courts may consider the object to be accomplished, the means for its accomplishment and all the surrounding facts and circumstances. In determining the question the Courts are not bound by the form, but must look at the substance of things. Similarly, it has been pointed out in Note 205 that the Courts may review the acts of a municipality as to whether the act is within the power of the municipality and as to whether the power was legally exercised. The law is the same in England as would be apparent from the decisions in The Queen v. Mayor & Town Council, Liverpool,² *Att. Gen. v. Manchester Corporation*³ and Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney General.⁴ In all these cases the Courts have reviewed the action of the Corporation and held that the expenditure incurred or sought to be incurred by the Corporation has no reasonable connection with the duties cast upon it by its charter or by the statute constituting it. Mr. Kukday, who appears for the petitioner, has brought to our notice an American case, James v. Seattle,⁵ which is very similar to the present case. In that case it was held that the expenditure incurred by the members of the City Corporation and connected with the municipal matter was not necessary expenditure incurred in the performance of the official duties and the citizen is not liable, therefore, to such expenditure. It was contended before the Court that the subjects of water works, street lighting, terminal facilities and other municipal matters come within the control of the city council and that members of the council are bound to use their best endeavours in behalf of the taxpayers, by giving them the best results in the most economical manner, and that it is the duty of councilmen to inform themselves concerning all matters which come before them, that they may act intelligently for the benefit of the city. Dealing with this argument the learned Judge observed:—

"It is true the members of the city council owe the public duty to the city to exercise their best faculties in its interest. The compensation of a member for his official duties as councillor may be determined and fixed, and cannot be changed during his incumbency of office. If the members of the council, upon their tour of inspection, were in the discharge of their official duties, the restriction upon additional compensation applies.

Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation, page 209, observes:

"In the construction of any grant of the power to tax made by the state to one of its municipalities, the rule which is accepted by all the authorities is, that it should be with strictness. The reasonable presumption is held to be that the state has granted in clear and unmistakable terms all it has intended to grant at all; and whatsoever authority the municipal officers assume to exercise, they must be able to show the warrant for in the words of the grant."

And we think the rule thus announced is the established one, and in consonance with all sound authority. The members of the city council are trustees. The body holds a trust for the inhabitants of the city. The terms of the trust are fixed by legislation, and no expenditure of money belonging to the city can be made without express authority, or implied authority by reason of a necessary granted power. Where this authority did not exist, the council is without power to authorize the payment of the claim against the city; and, upon sound principle, it cannot be conceded that the council had the power to authorize the payment of the claim of appellant."

Prima facie, therefore, where money is sought to be expended outside the Corporation limit, as is the case here, a very strong case must be made by the Corporation to show that the incurring of this expenditure was essential to the due performance of its duties by the Corporation and that it was bound to result in benefit to the people living within the municipal limits of the Corporation.

These reasons, therefore, compel us to hold that the proposed expenditure is not in connection with the performance of any of the duties laid upon the Corporation. We are aware of the provisions of s. 58, cl. (s), which provides that the Corporation has a discretion to provide for any matter other than the matter specifically set out in the section which is likely to promote public health, safety and convenience of the public. But this provision also contemplates that there must be a reasonable and legitimate connection between what is sought to be done and the promotion of public health, safety and convenience of the public. Taking part in the deliberation of a conference of technical men and experts in a foreign country may perhaps enable those who attend to increase their knowledge of how the problems are tackled in different countries, which are far more advanced than India. But the gaining of this knowledge cannot be said to be reasonably capable of promoting public health, safety and convenience of the public in Nagpur. Numerous conferences are being held in this country and elsewhere where delegates meet, sit and discuss and disperse, but it is well known that usually nothing comes out of this. It would be far better to spend that money or even a smaller amount on matters of which direct benefit can be received by the public than on sending delegates to attend conferences the benefit of which to the public is at best problematical. Of course, Mr. Phadke would say that this is again a matter of opinion. It seems to us, however, that this is not a matter in which there could be more than one opinion. The connection as we have said already, must be direct, reasonable and legitimate, and not a probable and a possible one, between the object sought to be achieved and the thing in general.

We are also aware of the provisions of cl. (c) of s. 58 to which Mr. Phadke indirectly referred. Under that provision the Corporation has discretion to provide for further educational facilities other than the establishment and maintenance of private schools. He suggested that educating the corporators would fall within this category. In our opinion, that is not what the Legislature intended to provide for. We have to bear in mind that so far as maintenance of primary schools is concerned, that is an obligation cast upon the Corporation, by cl. (s) of s. 57(1) of the Act. Now, primary schools had to be established by the Corporation for the benefit of the people living within the limits of the Corporation. The Legislature thought that the Corporation would be able to discharge this duty within the limits of its financial capacity and, therefore, it has made the performance of this duty obligatory. But as regards the other educational objects it has left to the discretion of the Corporation to provide facilities or not. It would, therefore, be clear that the facilities contemplated by this clause were those intended for the people in general living within the limits of the Corporation. It was not the intention of the Legislature to give discretion to the Corporation to provide for special educational facilities to its Councillors. If such a contention were to be accepted, then if any corporator wanted to join a college or school, the Corporation would be required to defray all the expenses. We cannot, therefore, interpret this clause as permitting expenditure by the Corporation over the education of its Councillors. We cannot, therefore, accept Mr. Phadke's explanation that the proposed expenditure would fall directly within this clause.

Then we have to see whether there is any provision in the budget regarding this matter. We will concede that the Corporation has had no notice of this ground which is a point which we ourselves raised at the outset. Mr. Phadke, however, has been good enough to place before us the budget of the Corporation for the year 1959-60. We asked him to point out whether there has been any provision in the budget for the special expenditure of this kind. Mr. Phadke points out to item No. 53 which is described as "नागपूर महानगर पालिकेच्या माननीय सदस्यांना मत्ता" (allowance payable to the members of the City of Nagpur Corporation) and an amount of Rs. 34,770 has been allotted to this item. Mr. Phadke says that since the budget was passed subsequent to the resolution of March 18, 1959, the amount of expenses of the delegation must be deemed to have been included in this item. On the other hand, Mr. Kukday said that this item relates to an entirely different matter. He referred to the provisions of s. 20A of the Act which provides that the Corporation may with the previous sanction of the State Government pay each councillor such honoraria, fees or other allowances as may be prescribed by the Corporation under that section. He asserts that the Corporation has made a byelaw under which each member of the Corporation is entitled to get apart from the honoraria of Rs. 75 an allowance of Rs. 10 for every meeting of the Corporation which he attends. Mr. Phadke says that no such byelaw has been made. It may be that a byelaw is proposed to be made and, therefore, a provisional allotment for the expenditure has been made. However, we cannot say for certain, on the material before us, that this item relates to the payment of any allowances as suggested by Mr. Kukday. But, apart from that, it is necessary for us to be satisfied about the allotment or appropriation of money towards such expenses by the Corporation. The expenditure involved in this case is of a special nature and the Corporation should have been able to show affirmatively that it has been sanctioned either under s. 84 by its inclusion in the budget or under the proviso (a) to s. 84 by the Standing Committee. We asked Mr. Phadke whether there was any resolution of the Committee expressly sanctioning the expenditure, but he says that there is no such resolution. Mr. Kukday then pointed out that even the Corporation has not passed a formal resolution authorising the incurring of the expenditure involved in sending the delegates to the Congress. It will be necessary to set out the minutes of the meeting held on March 18, 1959, for the purpose of deciding this objection. The minutes are in Marathi and have been translated by both the petitioner and the Corporation. We would prefer to rely on the translation made by the Corporation. The Minutes as translated are as follows:—

"The General Meeting consider a letter dated 10-11-58 No. M/21-C-L of the Secretary of the Royal Society of the Health requesting the Nagpur Corporation to send delegates for the conference which is going to be held from 27-4-1959 to 1-5-1959 at Harrogate, Yorkshire.

Shri Mishra suggested the following names in Serial No.

1. Shri Madan Gopal Agarwal.
2. " O. V. Deshmukh.
3. " D. W. Duragkar.
4. " D. J. Madan.

Shri Rajaram Singh Bhonsale, seconded the suggestion.

Shri Mishra then explained his suggestion. 'I suggested four names but if the Government sanction is necessary the names should be sent to the Government in S. No. in which I have suggested for the sanction of the Government if the Government gives permission to one delegate then Serial No. 1 should be sent first and if the Government gives permission to two then first two should be sent if three delegates be permitted to be sent then the first three and if all the four delegates be permitted to be sent then all the delegates be sent'...

After the above discussion the Mayor put the suggestion of Shri Mishra to vote. The Mayor declared that the suggestion of Shri Mishra was passed by a majority of votes of 30 voting for and 12 against the suggestion.

In this manner the Corporation decided that according to the serial order, Sarvasbhi Madan Gopal Agarwal, O. V. Deshmukh, Dr. Duragkar and Shri D. J. Madan, I.A.S., Municipal Commissioner, be sent as delegates from the City of Nagpur Corporation. If the proposal requires government sanction it be obtained early.

If the Government gives sanction to send four delegates then the four delegates be sent. If Government gives sanction to send delegates less than four then according to the serial order, 1, 2 or three, in this order, the sending of the delegates and meeting their travel expenses and the payment of the necessary fees to the conference etc. was passed by a majority of votes."

Now Mr. Kukday points out that the only resolution which was specifically put to vote was regarding the sending of four persons as delegates to the Congress and nothing else. This was the resolution which was proposed by one Shri Mishra and seconded by one Shri Bhonsale and was passed by a majority of 30 voting for and 12 against. There is no reference in the aforesaid resolution to the expenditure of money. Mr. Kukday concedes that the minutes do show that the Corporation has sanctioned by majority the expenses of the delegates, but he says that no such resolution was moved by anyone, seconded by anyone or put to vote. The minutes do not on their face show that such a resolution was moved, at any rate, put to vote, but the minutes do show that a resolution of this kind was passed at the meeting. In our opinion, the object of the meeting was to sanction the expenditure for the delegation and we think that it can be said that the Corporation has sanctioned it. However, mere sanction of the expenditure by the Corporation is not enough. Either the amount proposed to be spent should be included in the budget or should be expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee. If it is not included in the budget or if it is not expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee, it will have to be said that the expenditure is unauthorized.

Mr. Kukday urged very vehemently that the Corporation has acted mala fide in passing the resolution and in particular in selecting the four delegates. In our opinion, the circumstances which have been established in this case do not warrant the inference that the action of the Corporation was mala fide. It is no doubt true that the delegates who have been selected have no special qualifications, but it was within the competence of the Corporation to decide what persons should go. We, therefore, overrule the contention of Mr. Kukday as to the mala fide nature of the purpose.

No other contention now remains to be examined. Upon the view which we have taken, the resolution of the Corporation dated March 18, 1959, which permits the incurring of expenditure for sending delegates to the Congress is beyond the powers of the Corporation and is, therefore, ultra vires. We need not express any opinion in this case as to whether the Corporation was competent to pass a resolution at all selecting delegates for attending the congress at their own costs because no arguments were specifically advanced before us with regard to this point. We accordingly make the rule absolute in terms of the prayer in the petition. In the particular circumstances we think that costs of the petition should be borne as incurred.

Rule made absolute.

STATE v. CHINUBHAI HARIDAS SHETH.*

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Sec. 304A—Rash and negligent act of accused causing death—Whether such act or illegal omission could be a remote cause of death under section 304A.

Under s. 304A of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, the rash or negligent act of the accused which causes the death of the victim must be the immediate or proximate cause of death and not any act or illegal omission which can be said to be a remote cause of death.

SHAH J. This is an appeal against an order passed by the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Broach, acquitting the accused who were tried before him in Criminal Case No. 3148 of 1955 for offences under s. 304A and under s. 304A read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

In the town of Broach there is a factory known as the Gopal Mills which manufactures cotton textiles. Accused No. 1 is the occupier of that mill, accused No. 2 is the manager of that mill, accused No. 3 was in charge as manager on July 4, 1955—the date of the offence—and accused No. 4 is an engineer of the mill. In the factory a purification plant is installed. On July 4, 1955, a valve pit in the purification plant stopped functioning, and one Fakirji who was attending to the plant asked one Melia Dadla, a labourer, to enter the pit for opening the valve. Melia Dadla who entered the pit with a crow-bar was overpowered by poisonous fumes and became unconscious. Fakirji, finding that Melia Dadla had become unconscious, himself entered the pit and he was also overpowered by the poisonous fumes. Three other persons also entered the pit and they also lost consciousness. The Municipal Fire Brigade at Broach was then contacted, and one Mr. Tanna, Superintendent of the Fire Brigade, arrived on the scene. Mr. Tanna entered the pit where the five workmen were lying unconscious on the floor of the pit. He brought out two of them, but in the process he himself was overpowered by the fumes and became unconscious. The other three labourers were also brought out, and all the five labourers and Mr. Tanna were rushed to the Civil Hospital. All the five labourers died, but Mr. Tanna survived. Thereafter a charge-sheet was lodged against Chinubhai Haridas

*Decided, April 27, 1959. Criminal Appeal No. 438 of 1957, against the order of acquittal passed by M. A. Baqui, Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division and Judicial Magistrate

First Class, Broach, in Criminal Case No. 3148 of 1955.

1 (1902) 4 Bom. L.R. 679.

Sheth, the occupier of the Factory, who will hereafter be referred to as accused No. 1 for offences under sub-ss. (3) and (4) of s. 36 of the Factories Act, 1948. Accused No. 1 was tried in Criminal Case No. 2890 of 1955 by the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Broach, for those offences. The learned Magistrate acquitted accused No. 1 of those offences. Against the order of acquittal the State of Bombay preferred Criminal Appeal No. 365 of 1957. That appeal was heard by Mr. Justice Vyas and Mr. Justice Palnitkar on August 1, 1957,[†] and the learned Judges set aside the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court and remanded the proceeding for investigation of a complaint under s. 101 of the Factories Act by accused No. 1 against S. D. Vashistha and Haribhai Tripathi—respectively the manager and engineer of the mill. We are informed at the Bar that special leave to appeal against the order of remand has been granted by their Lordships of the Supreme Court and the appeal is pending for decision.

In the meanwhile, a complaint under s. 304A of the Indian Penal Code was filed against the four accused charging them with having neglected to take all practicable measures to remove the fumes of dangerous gases from the pit of the purification plant in the mill premises and with having also neglected to provide the workers with suitable breathing apparatus and belts, and with failing to take the necessary precautions and thereby causing the death of Melia Dadla, Fakirji Dhanjishaw, Manilal Bechar, Chhotubhai Nathubhai and Maganlal Gordhandas. In the alternative, accused Nos. 3 and 4 were charged with having neglected to take all practicable measures to remove the fumes of the dangerous gases from the pit of the purification plant in the mill premises and with having neglected to provide the workers with suitable breathing apparatus and belts and with failing to take the necessary precautions and by doing these negligent acts causing the death of the aforesaid five persons and thereby committing an offence punishable under s. 304A of the Indian Penal Code; and accused Nos. 1 and 2 were charged with abetting accused Nos. 3 and 4 in the commission of the offence under s. 304A of the Indian Penal Code.

The learned trial Magistrate on the evidence held that it was not established that the four accused or any of them had neglected to take measures to remove the fumes of dangerous gases in the pit of the purification plant or had neglected to provide the workers with suitable breathing apparatus and belts. He held that merely because accused No. 1 did not maintain the breathing and reviving apparatus and belts and ropes he was not on that account exposed to the penalty prescribed for breach of the provisions contained in s. 36(4) of the Factories Act. In his view, the obligation to provide suitable breathing apparatus and reviving apparatus was not absolute but arose only when permission was granted by the management to any worker to enter the pit or when a person actually entered the pit after permission and not till then, and it was not obligatory upon the occupier of the mill or the management to maintain the apparatus near the valve pit at all times. On that view he declared that the accused were not liable to provide the apparatus near the pit before any permission to enter the pit was granted, and for the consequences which arose out of the failure to maintain the apparatus near the pit the accused could not be held liable.

The view taken by the learned trial Magistrate that there is no absolute obligation on the part of an occupier or manager of a factory to maintain the breathing and reviving apparatus near the pit has not been accepted by this Court in State v. Chinubhai Haridas.¹ It was held in that case that s. 36(4) of the Factories Act, 1948, imposes an obligation upon the manager or occupier of a factory to keep ready at all times, beside a confined space, suitable breathing apparatus, reviving apparatus, belts and ropes for instant use whether any person had entered the said space or not, whether the entry had been made with permission or not and whether any need for the use of these appliances arose in fact or not. The view taken by the learned trial Magistrate as to the nature of the obligation imposed upon the management of the factory cannot, therefore, on the view taken by this Court, be sustained.

But we are unable on the facts proved to hold the accused guilty of the offence under s. 304A of the Indian Penal Code. It is undisputed that none of the four accused was present at the scene when the workmen entered the pit. Melia Dadla was the first workman to enter the pit, and he was so directed by Fakirji. Fakirji then entered the pit and three other workmen followed him. It is not the case for the prosecution that any of the four accused had directed these five workmen to enter the valve pit, nor does there appear to be any reliable evidence on the record to show that it was even to the knowledge of any of the four accused that these workmen had entered the pit. Section 304A of the Indian Penal Code provides the penalty for causing death by negligence. Under that section whoever causes the death of any person by doing any rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide shall be punished as provided therein. The evidence in this case does not justify the view that the accused had caused the death of the five persons who died on account of the poisonous fumes which had accumulated in the valve pit. In our view, the rash or negligent act which causes the death of the victim must be the immediate or proximate cause of death and not any act or omission which can be said to be a remote cause of death. The expression "act" does undoubtedly include unless the context otherwise warrants an illegal omission (vide s. 32 of the Indian Penal Code). But not only must the act or illegal omission result in death, but the death must have been the direct result of the act or illegal omission of the accused. It was held by this Court in *Emperor v. Omkar*² (p. 682):

"...to impose criminal liability on the accused [under section 304-A, Indian Penal Code] it is necessary that the death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused and that act must have been the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. It must be the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non."

In the present case, the death of the five workmen of the factory was not the causa causans of any act or illegal omission on the part of the four accused or any of them.

In our view, therefore, the order of acquittal passed by the trial Magistrate, must be upheld. We may, however, observe that in this case we are not concerned to deal with the question whether the four accused or any of them are guilty of an offence under s. 92 read with s. 36, sub-ss. (3) and (4), of the Factories Act, 1948. That question is pending for determination before their Lordships of the Supreme Court, and we are not called upon to decide that question, nor is any observation made herein intended to deal with the liability alleged to have been incurred by any of the accused for infringement of the provision of s. 36 of the Factories Act.

The order of acquittal passed by the trial Magistrate is confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Naik.

RAMKRISHNA RAMNATH BIDI MANUFACTURERS v. THE STATE INDUSTRIAL COURT, NAGPUR.*

Central Provinces and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act (XXIII of 1947), Sec. 2(10)—Relaiwala whose name is entered in attendance register of bidi factory and who works in factory under supervision and control of management—Whether such relaiwala, whose work in factory consists of rebundling and wrapping bidis, an employee within s. 2(10).

A relaiwala, whose name is entered in the attendance register of a bidi manufacturing factory and who works in the factory under the supervision and control of the management, can be regarded as an "employee" within the meaning of that word as used in s. 2(10) of the Central Provinces and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947.

Dharangadhara Chemical Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra,¹ Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P.,² and Westall Richardson, Ltd. v. Rouleau,³ referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. N. Phadke, with V. M. Golwalkar, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for respondent No. 2.

S. P. Oke, for respondent No. 3.

NAIK J. This is a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India for a writ of certiorari to quash the orders passed by the Additional District Magistrate and the State Industrial Court on April 29, 1958, and October 8, 1958, respectively.

The circumstances leading to this petition briefly stated are as follows: Respondent No. 3 Shamrao Kawdoo made an application to the Additional District Magistrate who was empowered to act as Labour Commissioner, complaining that he was wrongfully dismissed from service by the petitioner. According to him, he was dismissed from service with effect from July 19, 1956. The application was made under s. 16 of the C.P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act. The petitioner contended that respondent No. 3 was not an employee in the factory, that he was working under one Shamrao Mahadeo and that there was no privity of contract between the petitioner and respondent No. 3. He further stated that he was prepared to re-employ respondent No. 3 provided the latter renounced his claim for backwages and also if he was agreeable to work under Shamrao Mahadeo. The Labour Commissioner came to the conclusion that respondent No. 3 was an employee of the petitioner and consequently directed him to reinstate respondent No. 3 and also to pay him backwages. The petitioner went up in revision to the State Industrial Court. The State Industrial Court upheld the decision of the Labour Commissioner. That is why the petitioner has now come to this Court under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution for quashing the orders of the two industrial Courts.

In the petition it was contended that the appointment of the Additional District Magistrate under s. 16(2) of the C.P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act as Labour Commissioner was not valid inasmuch as the name of the person was not mentioned in this order. Mr. Phadke for the petitioner however did not press this objection before us. It was also contended in the petition that, as a matter of fact, respondent No. 3 was not dismissed from service, that he himself deliberately remained absent from July 19, 1956, to July 31, 1956, and that is why his name was removed from the attendance register. The Labour Commissioner, however, recorded a finding that respondent No. 3 was discharged from service and this finding was upheld by the State Industrial Court. Mr. Phadke conceded that it will not be open to him to challenge this finding before this Court in its jurisdiction under art. 226 of the Constitution. Mr. Phadke, therefore, confined his attention to two points as follows. The Labour Commissioner has not recorded any finding as to whether respondent No. 3 was actually in the employment of the petitioner. This was a question of fact, and it was the duty of the Labour Commissioner as a fact finding Court to record a clear finding on that question. Secondly, he complained that the Labour Commissioner and the State Industrial Court have misunderstood the meaning and scope of the definition of "employee" as contained in s. 2(10) of the Act.

It is not in dispute that the name of respondent No. 3 was entered in the attendance register of the factory. It was the specific case for the petitioner that his name was taken off the register because of his continuous absence from duty for more than two weeks. Presumably, the attendance register was maintained under the provisions of the Factories Act. No explanation has been offered on behalf of the petitioner as to why respondent No. 3's name was entered in the register. It is contended for the petitioner that respondent No. 3 was working under one Shamrao Mahadeo who was a Belaiswala and that there was no privity of contract between respondent No. 3 and the petitioner. It was further suggested that respondent No. 3 was receiving his wages through Shamrao Mahadeo. If that be the correct position, then it is difficult to understand why the petitioner should think of enrolling the name of respondent No. 3 in the attendance register.

In this background let us turn to consider the arguments addressed by Mr. Phadke on behalf of the petitioner. He complained that the Labour Commissioner has attached a sort of presumptive value to the entry in the attendance register and not considered other evidence led in the case with a view to find out whether, as a matter of fact, respondent No. 3 was in service of the petitioner or not. It is mainly on this ground that Mr. Phadke suggested that, as a matter of fact, there was no finding on the essential question of fact recorded by the Labour Commissioner. There is no substance in this line of reasoning. It is true that the Labour Commissioner has attached considerable importance to the entry of respondent No. 3's name in the attendance register. As suggested above, the register must have been maintained under the provisions of the Factories Act. Section 62 of the Act makes it obligatory on the part of the manager of a factory to maintain a register of adult workers to be available to the Inspector for inspection. It also contains particulars which are required to be entered in regard to each of the workers. It is impossible to believe that the petitioner would enter the name of a person who was not really an employee or a worker, in this register. Mr. Phadke suggested that the name of respondent No. 3 may have been entered in the register with a view to avoid criminal liability that fastens on the factory manager for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 62. In the first place, such an explanation was not offered by the manager who was examined for the petitioner. Secondly, the explanation is neither logical nor satisfactory. The Labour Commissioner, in our opinion, was justified in raising a presumption in favour of respondent No. 3 to the effect that the latter was employed and, therefore, his name came to be entered in the attendance register.

The first two issues framed by the Labour Commissioner were as follows:—

- (i) Whether the applicant is an employee of the non-applicant's bidi works.
- (ii) Whether the applicant was working under Shamrao Mahadeo.

The Labour Commissioner recorded a finding in the affirmative on the first issue mainly on the basis of the entry in the attendance register. There is nothing in the evidence led for the petitioner which goes to vitiate this finding.

As regards the second issue, the Labour Commissioner has said that in view of the finding on the first issue it was not necessary to record any finding on the second issue. It is because of the sentence to the above effect that Mr. Phadke complained that the Labour Commissioner has failed to record a finding on the second issue. There is no substance in this grievance.

The Labour Commissioner has proceeded to examine the second issue in some details and has arrived at his own finding, although at the initial stage he said that no finding was necessary. It is true that he has not written a well-reasoned judgment in support of his finding. It would, however, be highly improper on our part to send back the case to the Labour Commissioner either for re-writing the judgment or for dotting the 'i's and crossing the 't's. The petitioner has not led satisfactory evidence to show that respondent No. 3 was really working under Shamrao Mahadeo. Shamrao Mahadeo was cited as a witness but was not examined for the petitioner. We cannot, therefore, accept the solitary statement of Venkatrao, the manager of the petitioner's factory, to the effect that respondent No. 3 was really working under Shamrao Mahadeo, particularly because no satisfactory explanation has been offered as to why the name of respondent No. 3 came to be entered in the attendance register. It is also significant that the petitioner had given an offer to respondent No. 3 for taking him back in service although that offer was made on certain stipulations and conditions. The very fact that such an offer was made suggests that respondent No. 3 was in the service of the petitioner.

That takes us to the question of law, viz. whether respondent No. 3 can be regarded as an 'employee' within the meaning of that word as used in the C.P. & Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act. Section 2(10) defines 'employee' to mean any person employed by an employer to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work for contract or hire or reward in any industry. There are thus three ingredients in this definition: (i) there is an employer; (ii) he employs a person in the industry to do certain kind of work and (iii) the person has to work for contract or hire or reward. Mr. Phadke argued that the nature of work entrusted to the Relaiwalas is such that it does not involve any relationship of master and servant, that the work is in the nature of an independent contract and that the payments are made on piece-rate basis. He, therefore, argued that even assuming that respondent No. 3 was working in his own right still he would not be covered by the definition of 'employee' contained in s. 2(10) of the Act. In this connection he relied upon two decisions of the Supreme Court viz. *Dharangadhara Chemical Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra*¹ and *Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P.*² In the first case their Lordships were dealing with the definition of 'workman' in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. The question in that case was whether a class of professional labourers known as agarias who carried on the work in certain seasons of manufacturing salt in certain pieces of land and who are paid on the basis of volume of salt manufactured by them were workmen. Their Lordships held that such persons must be considered as workmen within the meaning of s. 2(s) of the Industrial Disputes Act. Mr. Justice Bhagwati, who delivered the judgment of the Court, emphasised that the real test to find out whether a particular person is a workman or not, is to see whether the relationship was that of master and servant. His Lordship also pointed out that the main distinction between a workman and an independent contractor would largely turn on consideration of the question as to whether the work was controlled by the manufacturer. In the other case (Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P.) their Lordships were considering the definition of 'worker' as contained in s. 2(1) of the Factories Act. It was held by their Lordships in that case that a contractor is a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work for other persons without submitting himself to their control in respect to the details of the work. They further pointed out that the identifying mark of a workman is that he should be under the control and supervision of the employer in respect of the details of the work. The facts of that case were as follows. The contractor was to receive tobacco from the management and he was to supply them rolled in bidis for a certain fixed price. He was not under the control of the factory management and he could manufacture bidis wherever he pleased. The management could not regulate the manner of discharge of his work. His liability was discharged by his supplying bidis and delivering them in the factory. The terms of the contract between the management and the contractor did not enjoin on the latter to work in the factory. On these facts it was held that the contractor was not employed by the management as worker but was only independent contractor who performed his part of the contract by making bidis and delivering them at the factory. Mr. Justice K. Subba Rao, who delivered the judgment of the Court, referred to the earlier decision of the Supreme Court and relied on the observations cited above. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Subba Rao has referred to another part of work which is carried on in a bidi factory. That process was described by him in the following terms: After the bidis are brought by Sattedars to the factory they are to be rebundled and wrapped after attaching labels. This process is generally carried out in the factory by the coolies or workmen employed by the management and these coolies work directly under the control and supervision of the factory management. It appears to us that respondent No. 3 was engaged in a process similar to the one which fell within the second part described by Mr. Justice Subba Rao in his judgment.

2. [1958] A.I.R. S.C. 388.

Mr. Phadke also referred to a decision in *Westall Richardson, Ltd. v. Roulson*³. In that case the definition of the word 'worker' as contained in s. 23(1) of the Wages Councils Act, 1945, came up for construction. Vaisey J. in the course of his judgment pointed out that the word 'employee' has always a relation to the word 'employer'. On the facts before him he came to the conclusion that the person who was claiming the benefit of all holidays and holiday pay under the Wages Councils Act, could not be regarded as a worker within the meaning of that expression because the work which he was doing was an independent type of work over which the employer had no kind of control and that the element of independence and freedom was far greater than the element of servitude. We are unable to understand as to how this decision assists Mr. Phadke in his argument. On the facts as disclosed in the record of this case, as stated above, the process of work in which respondent No. 3 was engaged was the process carried out in the factory and further was carried out under the supervision and control of the management. On this point we would simply refer to the admission of Venkatrao who stated

"There is a supervision and control over the Relai workers. Even though the Relai workers do work on a contract basis yet they have to do work according to our supervision and under our control."

Respondent No. 3 stated that he used to receive payment either through Shamrao Mahadeo or himself. The admission of the manager coupled with the circumstances that the name of respondent No. 3 was entered in the attendance register clearly establishes that there was relationship of master and servant between the petitioner and respondent No. 3.

The result is that the petition fails and is dismissed with costs. Rule discharged.

YAMUNABAI HARIHAR PANDIT v. RAM MAHARAJ SHREEDHAR MAHARAJ PANDIT.*

Hindu Succession Act (XXX of 1956), Secs. 4, 14, 5—Widow of last male holder of Inam property recognised as Navawali of property by former Kolhapur State—Defendant adopted by widow in 1949 without obtaining sanction to adoption from Kolhapur authorities—Plaintiff, another widow of deceased holder, inheriting property—Defendant granted ex post facto sanction to his adoption in 1958—Whether defendant could divest plaintiff's title to property acquired under s. 14—What is possession contemplated by s. 14.

The last male holder of certain Inam property died leaving him surviving his two widows, A and the plaintiff, but no lineal descendants. A was recognised as the Navawali of the property by the former Kolhapur State. On March 14, 1949, defendant No. 1 was adopted by A as a son to her deceased husband. A died on March 18, 1949, and the plaintiff became entitled by inheritance to the property as the sanction of the Kolhapur State authorities to the adoption of defendant No. 1 was not obtained. On June 6, 1958, defendant No. 1 was informed by the Government of Bombay that orders granting sanction ex post facto to his adoption by A on March 14, 1949, were issued. Defendant No. 1 relying on this sanction claimed the property as the adopted son. The plaintiff contended that on A's death the property had devolved upon her by inheritance and as she had acquired rights of full ownership in the property on the coming into force of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, on December 21, 1956, defendant No. 1 could not divest her of her title which was by law made absolute and indefeasible:—

Held, that the estate possessed by the plaintiff, which had become absolute by virtue of s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, was not liable to be divested on the grant of the sanction ex post facto to the adoption of defendant No. 1.

Balgonda Appanna v. Bhimgonda,¹ referred to.

A sanction ex post facto to an adoption may have the effect of divesting property vested in another person by inheritance from the sole surviving coparcener, or a limited owner, but that rule in so far as it is inconsistent with s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is superseded by cl. (b) of s. 4 of the Act.

Full ownership contemplated by s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is not subject to any incident of divestation by adoption.

The possession contemplated by s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is legal possession and property in the wrongful occupation of a trespasser either directly or through his tenants is nonetheless possessed by a Hindu female within the meaning of s. 14 of the Act.

SHAH J. By interlocutory judgment dated February 11, 1958, further hearing in these two appeals was adjourned to enable defendant No. 1 to apply to the State of Bombay for and obtain sanction ex post facto to his adoption. Defendant No. 1 then submitted an application to the State of Bombay for sanctioning his adoption ex post facto. Defendant No. 1 was informed by the Under Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political and Services Department, by letter dated June 6, 1958, that orders granting sanction ex post facto to his adoption by Shri Annapurnabai, widow of late Bala Maharaj, on March 14, 1949, have been issued, and that defendant No. 1 may "approach the Collector of Kolhapur in that behalf". Defendant No. 1, then, applied for a certified copy of the order, but none was supplied to him. We are informed by Mr. Gokhale, who appears on behalf of the plaintiff, that his client—the plaintiff—also applied for a certified copy of the order, but a copy of the order has not been furnished to her. But on the intimation which has been received by defendant No. 1, we hold that an order sanctioning ex post facto the adoption of defendant No. 1 made on March 14, 1949, by Annapurnabai, widow of Bala Maharaj, was issued by the State of Bombay.

*Decided, March 24, 1959. Cross First Appeals Nos. 386 and 480 of 1955 (with Civil Application No. 1748 of 1958), against the decision of

Mr. Gokhale contends that under the Vat Hukums issued by the Kolhapur State, no sanction ex post facto could be granted in respect of an adoption which took place after the year 1930. But in our judgment, it is now too late to entertain that contention having regard to the decisions of this Court. In a recent judgment, *Balgonda Appanna v. Bhimgonda*¹, it was observed by Mr. Justice Gokhale sitting with my learned brother (p. 185):

"...Under Political Agent Judi Niyam of Faal 1281, published in Volume 2 of the Kolhapur Vat Hukums, at p. 817, there was a provision under which the Kolhapur Darbar could accord sanction to adoptions which affected Inam properties. It appears from this Vat Hukum that the Kolhapur Government had power to accord ex post facto sanction to adoptions which were made without getting such a sanction."

In several decisions of this Court e.g. First Appeal No. 424 of 1952, Letters Patent Appeal No. 60 of 1955 and First Appeal No. 115 of 1958,[†] the privilege of the Kolhapur Government to accord sanction ex post facto to adoptions made initially without sanction, so as to invest title in respect of Inam properties, has been affirmed.

Mr. Gokhale submitted that even if the sanction was accorded by the State of Bombay upon which devolved the authority of the Kolhapur State, such a sanction will not divest the absolute title vested in the plaintiff by the Hindu Succession Act, 1956. To appreciate this contention, we may review the undisputed facts. Bala Maharaj, the last male holder of the property, died on January 6, 1937, leaving him surviving his two widows Annapurnabai and Yamunabai and no lineal descendants, and the revenue authorities of the Kolhapur State recognized Annapurnabai as the "Navawali" of the Inam properties. On March 14, 1949, defendant No. 1 was adopted by Annapurnabai as a son to her deceased husband. On March 18, 1949, Annapurnabai died, and to the estate of Annapurnabai, which included Inami lands, her co-widow Yamunabai became entitled by inheritance, because the sanction of the Kolhapur State authorities to the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Annapurnabai was not obtained. Proceedings were commenced before the revenue authorities for recognizing the claim of defendant No. 1 as the adopted son of Bala Maharaj, but the plaintiff resisted the claim, and the Collector of Kolhapur passed an order that the name of neither of the parties may be entered in the Revenue Record and that status quo be maintained till the decision of a civil suit adjudicating upon the claims of the parties. The plaintiff then filed on January 17, 1952, a suit in the Court of the Civil Judge (Senior Division), Kolhapur, for a declaration that she was the owner of the properties described in Schedules A, B, C and D annexed to the plaint and for an injunction restraining defendant No. 1 from collecting the rents and profits from his tenants, and also for a declaration that defendant No. 1 was not in fact adopted as a son to her husband by Annapurnabai. The suit was partially decreed by the trial Court. The trial Court held that defendant No. 1 was proved to be the duly adopted son of Bala Maharaj and that view was upheld by this Court by the interlocutory judgment dated February 11, 1958. It is after the decision of this Court that the Government of Bombay have sanctioned the adoption ex post facto of defendant No. 1 made by Annapurnabai on March 14, 1949.

Defendant No. 1 as adopted son claims the Inami Lands of Bala Maharaj relying on the sanction to his adoption accorded by the State of Bombay, and in support of his claim he relies upon the decision of this Court in Balgonda Appanna v. Bhimgonda. In that case, the contention that since the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, was brought into force on December 21, 1956, a sanction ex post facto granted to the plaintiff's adoption by an order of the Government of Bombay dated June 26, 1957, was invalid and could not divest the estate which was vested in the defendant was negatived. It was held that as the adoption of the plaintiff took place long before the Act, s. 30 excluded the operation of the Act in its application to the adoption of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff contends that on the death of Annapurnabai, her estate which consisted of Inami lands has devolved upon her by inheritance, and since then the Hindu Succession Act having been brought into force on December 21, 1956, she has acquired rights of full ownership in the property, and relying upon an adoption made prior to December 21, 1956, defendant No. 1 cannot divest her of her title which is by law made absolute and indefeasible. Evidently in Balgonda Appanna v. Bhimgonda relied upon by defendant No. 1, the Court was not called upon to consider whether an estate, possessed by a Hindu widow which became absolute by virtue of s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, was liable to be divested on the grant of a sanction ex post facto to an adoption in the family to which the widow belonged.

There is no doubt that Inam property in the former Kolhapur State was inheritable as impartible property. That was so decided by a Full Bench of this Court, Ramappa Vanappa v. Lazman.² It was held in that case:—

"Under the vat-hukums issued in Kolhapur State (now merged in the State of Bombay), Sanadi inam land, which is impartible, does not revert to the State on the death of the holder but passes by rule of primogeniture to his heir."

In the present case, the nearest heir to Annapurnabai's estate which consisted of Inami lands, was the plaintiff Yamunabai, and upon her devolved the right by inheritance to that property. The plaintiff when she inherited that property became a limited owner according to the rules enacted by the Digest of Hindu Law of the Kolhapur State, but by the combined operation of ss. 4 and 14 of the Hindu Succession Act of 1956, she acquired full ownership even in the Inam property. Sub-section (1) of s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act provides that:—

"Any property possessed by a female Hindu, whether acquired before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be held by her as full owner thereof and not as a limited owner."

And by s. 4(i) it is provided that:—

"Save as expressly provided in this Act

(a) Any text, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law, or any custom or usage to the contrary, or any other law applicable to the Hindus shall be deemed to be superseded by the provisions of this Act.

(b) Any text, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law or any custom or usage as part of that law in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall cease to have effect with respect to any matter for which provision is made in this Act."

Notwithstanding the interpretation of the text of the Hindu Shastras whereby the estate inherited by a Hindu widow is regarded as a limited estate, by the operation of s. 14, a Hindu female possessed of any property becomes invested with an absolute title, and the texts which made the estate a limited estate are by s. 4 expressly superseded. A sanction ex post facto to an adoption may in certain cases have the effect of divesting property vested in another person by inheritance from the sole surviving coparcener, or a limited owner, but that rule in so far as it is inconsistent with s. 14 is superseded by cl. (b) of s. 4.

Mr. Paranjpe, who appears on behalf of defendant No. 1, contends that full ownership of property is not inconsistent with liability to divestation by adoption, and he invites our attention to certain cases decided by the High Courts in India and also by the Privy Council which have taken the view that an adoption made by a Hindu widow in a joint family may divest the estate which has, by operation of the rules of inheritance, vested in another person even if the holder who acquired the estate on the death of the last absolute owner may himself be holding an absolute estate. Mr. Paranjpe submits that if an absolute estate, which is acquired under the relevant rules of inheritance or succession applicable to Hindus, is liable to be divested, then this Court may not be justified in investing the estate which is conferred upon a Hindu widow as the estate of a full owner by s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, an incident inconsistent with the normal rules of Hindu law. In the hands of Bala Maharaj, the estate was undoubtedly subject to the incident that by the birth of a legitimate son to him, or by adoption by him or by a widow of a deceased coparcener who died in union, his estate was liable to be restricted, and the plaintiff inherited that estate subject to the same restrictions. That incident, contends Mr. Paranjpe, was inherent in the estate of the plaintiff, and there is nothing in the Hindu Succession Act which abrogates that incident. The estate held by a Hindu, who is a sole surviving coparcener in a joint Hindu family is, it is true, liable to be restricted by the introduction of a coparcener by birth or adoption, and such new coparcener acquires an interest in the entire estate equal to the interest in the estate held by the existing coparcener. But that incident of the estate, does not in our judgment, justify the imposition of a limitation restricting the connotation of the expression "full owner" used in s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act. Full ownership contemplated by s. 14 of the Succession Act is not made by the Legislature subject to any incident of divestation by adoption. If liability to divestation be implied, it will cut across the estate and the estate will not be regarded as of a full owner within the meaning of s. 14 of the Act. We are, therefore, unable to hold that the estate of the plaintiff was liable to be divested by the recognition ex post facto of the adoption of defendant No. 1 by the State.

Mr. Paranjpe concedes that the rights of defendant No. 1 as an adopted son could arise for the first time on the grant of sanction by the State and not before, and that concession is properly made having regard to the judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 424 of 1952. Evidently before the date on which the sanction ex post facto was given by the State to the adoption of defendant No. 1, the plaintiff Yamunabai had acquired full ownership in the property, which she had inherited on the death of her co-widow Annapurnabai as a limited owner, but that right is sought to be defeated by defendant No. 1 who acquired by the sanction ex post facto the rights of an adopted son in the property of Bala Maharaj. In resolving the conflict between these two rights, cl. (b) of s. 4 of the Hindu Succession Act is, in our judgment, decisive. By that clause any other law in force immediately before the commencement of the Hindu Succession Act ceases to apply to Hindus in so far as it is inconsistent with any provision contained in the Act. The claim of defendant No. 1 to the Inam properties of his father, which had devolved upon his adoptive mother Annapurnabai and thereafter by succession upon the plaintiff Yamunabai, must, in our judgment, be subject to the title which by statute became absolute.

But Mr. Paranjpe submitted that to Inam properties, the Hindu Succession Act has no application, and in support of his contention, Mr. Paranjpe invites our attention to Vat Hukum No. 44 of 1913 issued by the Government of Kolhapur. By that Vat Hukum it was declared that all lands held in Inam were impartible and were to devolve only upon the eldest son and that private partition of Inam lands will not be recognised by the State Government. By this Vat Hukum all lands held in Inam, whatever may be the nature of the Inam, were regarded as impartible and devolved upon the eldest son. By an earlier Vat Hukum No. 12 of July 13, 1878, it was declared by cl. 7 that in the absence of male descendants, the government may, so long as the widow of a male member of the family is alive, allow the estate to continue in her possession after taking service. Pursuant to this Vat Hukum Annapurnabai was recognised as the Inamdar by the Kolhapur State, on the death of Bala Maharaj leaving no male lineal descendant; and the plaintiff was also entitled to recognition as Inamdar on Annapurnabai's death.

Indisputably by s. 5 of the Hindu Succession Act, any estate which descends to a single heir by the terms of any enactment passed before the commencement of this Act, is excluded from its operation. By the Vat Hukums of the former Kolhapur State, Inam property devolves upon a single heir; and the Vat Hukums issued by that State whatever informality may appear in the promulgation thereof, are enactments within the meaning of s. 5 of the Hindu Succession Act. But we do not think it necessary to enter upon a detailed examination of Mr. Paranjpe's argument because the property in dispute which was originally held in inam by the operation of Bombay Act XXII of 1955, acquired the character of Rayatawa property before the date on which the Hindu Succession Act was enacted and had accordingly ceased to be an estate which devolved upon a single heir.

Mr. Paranjpe then contended that on the day on which defendant No. 1 was adopted, there was in operation no law under which sanction of the authorities of the Kolhapur State was required to confer title upon him to the Inam properties. On March 1, 1949, the State of Kolhapur was merged with the Province of Bombay as it then was, and all the laws in operation in the Kolhapur State were repealed. This, it appears, was a drastic provision made in a hurry and the rule making authority under the Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act intervened and amended the Application of Kolhapur Laws and Order on March 23, 1949, whereby the operation of several statutes and the Vat Hukums was restored retrospectively as from March 1, 1949. This Court has held in *Narhar Sakharam Pradhan v. The Collector of Kolhapur*³ that the effect of the amendment made on March 23, 1949, was not merely to revive the Kolhapur enactments with retrospective effect, but by legal fiction to keep them alive in the interregnum. Chagla C.J. in considering the effect of the amendment dated March 23, 1949, in that case observed:—

"...In other words, in the eye of the law the Order of the 1st March 1949 always was as amended by the order of the 23rd March 1949. In other words, on the 1st March 1949 there was no repeal of the Kolhapur enactments except those to which we have referred as falling within the amended para. 5. Therefore this is not a case of repeal and a revival. It is a case where the Legislature by a legal fiction retrospectively amends an earlier enactment and provides that the earlier enactment shall always be deemed to have been enacted as amended subsequently."

That observation, in our judgment, is sufficient to repel the argument advanced by Mr. Paranjpe that on the date on which defendant No. 1 was adopted by Annapurnabai, he acquired title to the Inam property of Bala Maharaj. There is no dispute that before defendant No. 1 was adopted, sanction of the Kolhapur State was not obtained. Even after the adoption and before the suit was filed, no application requesting sanction to the adoption of defendant No. 1 was made. In view of the amendment which by legal fiction kept alive the Vat Hukums since March 1, 1949, we are unable to agree with Mr. Paranjpe that on the date on which the adoption was made, there was no authority competent to sanction the adoption of defendant No. 1, and consequently the condition requiring the adoption of defendant No. 1 was invalid.

Mr. Paranjpe also contended that under the Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Inams Abolition Act XXII of 1955, defendant No. 1 became on June 8, 1955, because of the extinction of the inam, entitled to the lands in dispute. Under Bombay Act XXII of 1955 by s. 4 it was provided that:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any usage, settlement, grant, agreement, Sanad, order, rule, notification, or Vat-Hukum or any decree or order of a court, or any law for the time being applicable to any alienation in the merged territories with effect from and on the appointed date (i) all alienations shall be deemed to have been abolished; and (ii) expressly by or under this Act all rights legally subsisting on the said date in respect of such alienations and all other incidents of such alienations shall be deemed to have been extinguished."

Evidently, the Inam i.e. the alienation in favour of the family of the plaintiff was abolished on the application of Act XXII of 1955, and the property became subject to the provisions thereof, such as payment of the assessment and other incidental obligations of Rayatawa property. But because the property which was, till the date on which the Act was applied, Inam property became Rayatawa property by the extinction of the Inam, defendant No. 1 was not invested with title to the property which he, till the date on which the Act was applied, did not possess. The right of defendant No. 1 to the Inam property could only be recognised if his adoption was sanctioned by the competent authority, but at the date of his adoption, defendant No. 1 did not acquire title to the Inam property, because his adoption was not sanctioned by the State authorities and he could not acquire title to the estate which was substituted in place of the Inam property by alteration of the tenure. The title of defendant No. 1 to that estate must if at all depend upon the sanction of the State and not upon the alteration of the tenure. In our judgment, by the operation of the Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Alienation Abolition Act, 1955, the plaintiff became the owner of the property held by her. It is a question of some nicety whether since the abolition of the Inams, it was possible for the State Government to accord sanction ex post facto to the adoption of defendant No. 1. In terms the Act provides that on the date on which the Act comes into operation in respect of the alienation and all other incidents of such alienations of rights legally subsisting shall be deemed to have been extinguished; and if the right of a person to be recognized ex post facto as an adopted son in respect of the property is regarded as one of the rights contemplated by s. 4 of the Act, prima facie such a right may be deemed to be extinguished. But on this part of the case we have not heard full arguments and we do not propose to express any considered opinion thereon.

Mr. Paranjpe also contended that at the date when the Act No. XXX of 1956 was brought into operation, the plaintiff did not possess the lands in dispute and she could not have acquired title as full owner thereof by virtue of s. 14 of the Act. The property in dispute in this case had devolved upon the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 had acquired by his adoption no title thereto. In that premise we fail to appreciate how defendant No. 1 can resist the claim of the plaintiff for a declaration of her title and the injunction claimed by her. We may also observe that the possession contemplated by s. 14 is legal possession, and property in the wrongful occupation of a trespasser either directly or through his tenants is none the less possessed by a Hindu female within the meaning of s. 14.

Finally, Mr. Paranjpe contended that the suit as filed by the plaintiff for declaratory relief and for injunction was not maintainable. It is true that in this case the plaintiff has claimed a declaration of her title to the Inam properties and has claimed a declaration that defendant No. 1 be restrained by an injunction from collecting the rents and profits thereof. Such a suit, contends Mr. Paranjpe, is one purely for a declaratory relief and the Court is debarred from granting that relief on a claim made by the plaintiff in circumstances existing in the present case. But in *Parasram v. Bhimbhai*⁴ it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that:—

"Where defendants are in constructive possession through tenants, and plaintiff desires to have constructive possession only, the utmost that the plaintiff can ask for, or obtain, against the defendants is a declaration of rights, binding the defendants, coupled with an injunction preventing them from interfering with such rights."

It was further held that:—

"...the plaintiff is not bound to ask for actual physical possession from the tenants, and that there is no rule of law to compel a man to seek for all the relief that he is entitled to or might obtain if he desired it."

In our view, the suit was properly framed. On the view taken by us, the decree passed by the trial Court will be confirmed and both the appeals will be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

THE COLLECTOR OF KOLHAPUR.*

Kolhapur State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949, Cls. 3, 5, Sch. Part I—Land Revenue Rules, 1921; rr. 87(a), 81(2) and (3)—Whether Vat Hukum No. 14 of former Kolhapur State good law after March 1, 1949, in areas which formed part of that State—Revision of assessment whether absolutely banned by r. 87(a) before expiry of period mentioned therein—Whether obligatory on Collector under r. 81(2) & (3) to give reasons where land assessed by him at maximum rate.

By virtue of the Kolhapur State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949, Vat Hukum No. 14 of July 4, 1891, issued by the Maharaja of Kolhapur is not a law in force in the areas forming part of the former Kolhapur State after March 1, 1949.

Under r. 87(a) of the Land Revenue Rules, 1921, there is no absolute ban on revising the assessment once made before the expiry of the period of thirty years. All that the rule provides is that assessment shall ordinarily be not revised.

Sub-rules (2) and (3) of r. 81 of the Land Revenue Rules, 1921, require the Collector to give reasons only if he assessed the land revenue higher than the maximum rate fixed. So long as the assessment is upto the limit of the highest rate fixed, it is not obligatory on the Collector to give his reasons thereof.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. V. Paranjape, for the petitioners.

C. C. Vaidya, Assistant Government Pleader, for respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

TAMBE J. The dispute relates to the validity of the assessment of land revenue of Rs. 504-2-0 annually on 10 acres of the land in question, situate within the municipal limits of Jayasingpore, District Kolhapur. These ten acres form part of survey No. 439, admeasuring about 37 acres and 19 gunthas. In or about the year 1942, 15 acres out of this area was, by the order of the then Kolhapur State, included in the Town Planning scheme and on this 15 acres of land, Rs. 6-12-0 was assessed as non-agricultural assessment. Out of these 15 acres sometime in the year 1945, the then Kolhapur State granted ten acres of land to the petitioner for the purposes of its business of oil mill. The land revenue was proportionately apportioned and these ten acres were assessed to Rs. 4-7-5. It is not in dispute that the petitioner from 1945 had been paying this amount as land revenue. It is a matter of history that on March 1, 1949, the Kolhapur State merged with the State of Bombay and the area constituting the former Kolhapur State came under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner, Southern Division. On or about August 13, 1950, the Commissioner, Southern Division, issued a notification under sub-r. (1) of r. 81 of the Bombay Land Revenue Rules, whereunder Jayasingpore was classified as a first class village for the purpose of assessment of land revenue and for non-agricultural assessment, the maximum fixed was two pies per square yard. On or about July 17, 1951, the Collector then made an order whereunder he assessed the land revenue on the said ten acres of land of the petitioner at Rs. 504-2-0 annually, and further directed that the land revenue at this rate be recovered from the petitioner from the year 1945. Against this order, the petitioner took an appeal to the Bombay Revenue Tribunal. The appeal succeeded and the Revenue Tribunal held that the assessment was made without giving an opportunity to the petitioner to be heard. It further held that the order directing recovery of land revenue retrospectively from the year 1945 was bad. With these directions it remanded the case to the Collector for a fresh decision. After notice to the petitioner and giving him an opportunity to place his case before him, the Collector decided the matter afresh and by his order of May 11, 1957, re-affirmed the assessment made by him in his previous order. He, however, modified the order as regards the recovery of land revenue and directed that the same be recovered only from August 1, 1953. The petitioner again took an appeal against this order to the Revenue Tribunal, respondent No. 3 hereto, and the Tribunal dismissed it by its order dated June 26, 1958. Against this order the petitioner has approached this Court.

Mr. Paranjape, learned counsel for the petitioner, in the first instance contends that the petitioner has been paying the house tax and, therefore, this land is exempted from payment of land revenue, under the Vat Hukum No. 14 of July 4, 1891, issued by the Maharaja of Kolhapur. The decision of this contention raised turns on the construction of the said Vat Hukum read together with certain provisions of the Notification issued on March 1, 1949, by the State of Bombay,† in pursuance of the powers conferred on it by the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act of 1947. It would at this stage be convenient to refer to these provisions. It is not in dispute that the Vat Hukum (No. 14 of July 4, 1891, Mulki Vat Hukum, Vol. II, p. 671) was issued by the Maharaja of Kolhapur. That being the position, it was a prevailing law at the time of the merger. On the language of the said Vat Hukum, it is clear that where the house tax was paid in respect of a particular land situated within the area of the municipality, recovery of land revenue in addition to the house tax was prohibited. If this Vat Hukum be still a good law governing the rights of the parties residing at Jayasingpore, then certainly the petitioner would be entitled to claim that he has been exempted from payment of land revenue, if he proves that he has been paying the house tax in respect of this land. The petitioner, however, has not placed any material before the authorities below as regards the extent of land relating to which the petitioner had been paying the house tax. Apart from it, in our opinion, this Vat Hukum is no more a law in force, on account of certain provisions of law to which we will presently advert. Section 4 of the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947, provides that the Central Government may by notification in the official gazette, make such orders as may seem to it expedient for the effective exercise of any extra-provincial jurisdiction of the Central Government. It is not in dispute that this power vested in the Central Government has been delegated to the State of Bombay. In exercise of that power, the Government of Bombay issued a notification on March 1, 1949. That notification was amended by another notification issued on March 23, 1949, giving retrospective effect to the amendments effected. We are here concerned with cls. 3 and 5 of the said Notification. Paragraph (1) of cl. 5 provides that save as expressly provided in this Order,†† all enactments in force in the Kolhapur State or part thereof and corresponding to the enactments in force in the Province of Bombay and extended to the Kolhapur State under para. 3 and all notifications, schemes, rules, by-laws, vat-hukums and all orders by whatever name or description called under such enactment or having the force of law immediately before the appointed day shall stand repealed (appointed day being March 1, 1949). The effect of this provision, in our opinion, is that where any law in force in the State of Bombay is made applicable to the area formerly constituting the State of Kolhapur, then the corresponding provisions of law in force in the Kolhapur State covering the same subject stood repealed as and from March 1, 1949. Turning to the provisions of cl. (3) (1) of the said Notification, we find that all enactments specified in Parts I and II of the schedule and all notifications, orders, schemes, rules and by-laws issued, made or prescribed under such enactments and in force in the Province of Bombay immediately before the coming into force of this Order shall extend to and be in force in the Kolhapur State subject to any amendments to which the said enactments are for the time being generally subject in the Province of Bombay. It is then clear that if we find that any law, which was in force in the State of Bombay on March 1, 1949, was brought in force in the Kolhapur State under this Notification from the said date corresponding to the aforesaid Vat Hukums, the necessary consequence of these provisions would be that the Vat Hukum would stand repealed as and from March 1, 1949. It is the contention of Mr. Paranjape that there was no corresponding provision of law in force in the State of Bombay and, therefore, the Vat Hukum has not been repealed and is still a good law in force in the areas forming part of the former Kolhapur State. It is not possible for us to accept this contention of Mr. Paranjape. Referring again to the provisions of Vat Hukum, it is clear that it deals with the subject of exemption of liability of payment of land revenue on certain lands, which are made liable to pay the house tax. The subject, in short, is exemption from the liability of payment of land revenue. Now, when we turn to the first part of the Schedule of the Notification, we find that the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, was made applicable to the areas forming part of the former Kolhapur State. It cannot be disputed, and, indeed, it is not disputed that certain provisions of the Land Revenue Code deal with assessment of the land to land revenue as well as exempting the land from payment of land revenue. That being the position, there cannot be any doubt that law corresponding to the provisions contained in the Vat Hukum No. 14 and which was in force in the Bombay State has been made applicable to the areas of the former Kolhapur State under the said notification. The Vat Hukum (No. 14) cannot, therefore, be held to be a good law in force in the Kolhapur State.

†See Notification No. 4384/46-F-III. The Bombay Government Gazette Extraordinary, Part IV-A, p. 175.

††The Kolhapur State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949.

It is next contended by Mr. Paranjape that even assuming that the Vat Hukum is not the law in force in the Kolhapur State after March 1, 1949, it was in force when the aforesaid notification was brought into effect and, therefore, under the proviso to the first para. of cl. (5), all rights acquired under the law in force on the eve of March 1, 1949, are saved. The said proviso reads as follows:

"Provided that the repeal by this Order of any such enactments, notifications, schemes, rules, bye-laws, or vat Hukums or orders shall not affect the validity, invalidity, effect, or consequence of anything already done or suffered or any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred or any remedy or proceeding in respect thereof, or any release or discharge of or from any debt, penalty, obligation liability, claim or demand, or any indemnity already granted or the proof of any past act or thing."

It is the contention of Mr. Paranjape that the petitioner was entitled from exemption from assessment of ten acres of land to the land revenue under the Vat Hukum. This right he had acquired prior to the coming into force of the said notification. Under the aforesaid proviso, this right is saved to him. No doubt, if the petitioner had acquired that right the said provisions save it to him. The question is, whether it has been shown to us that the petitioner had acquired any such right under the said Vat Hukum. As already stated, the right conferred by the Vat Hukum is that, when the house tax is paid in respect of any land, that land is exempted from payment of land revenue. The notification was brought into force on March 1, 1949. It is not in dispute that at the time these ten acres of land was granted to the petitioner, it was an open land and the petitioner was paying Rs. 4-7-5 as land revenue in respect of that land. It has not been shown by the petitioner that on the eve of March 1, 1949, there has been any construction on that land or that the petitioner had been paying any house tax in respect of that land. In other words, no foundation, in fact, has been laid by the petitioner to hold that any right had been acquired by the petitioner under the Vat Hukum No. 14, on which reliance is placed by Mr. Paranjape. The contention of Mr. Paranjape must, therefore, fail.

It is next contended by Mr. Paranjape that the Collector was in error in acquired another right and that right was to pay the land revenue at Rs. 4-7-5 for a period of thirty years and before the expiry of that period that assessment cannot be enhanced. Reliance is placed by Mr. Paranjape in this respect on r. 87 of the rules framed under the Bombay Revenue Code. Clause (a) of r. 87 of the Bombay Revenue Rules provides that the period for which the non-agricultural assessment is to be fixed shall ordinarily be 30 years except in the Bombay Suburban District where on account of its special conditions the period shall ordinarily be 50 years. It is the contention of Mr. Paranjape that the provisions of the Land Revenue Code had been adopted by the Kolhapur State and the law in force in the Kolhapur State was in identical terms, only substituting State of Kolhapur for State of Bombay. Even assuming it to be so, again there is no foundation, in fact, laid by the petitioner. It has not been shown when the land in question had been first assessed on non-agricultural basis. It has also not been shown that the assessment made by the Collector by his order of May 11, 1957, was prior to the expiry of 30 years. It is, therefore, not possible for us to decide the contention of Mr. Paranjape as raised by him. Apart from it, suffice it to say that on the language of this rule, there is no absolute ban on revising the assessment once made before the expiry of the period of 30 years. All that it provides is that assessment shall ordinarily be not revised. In our opinion, there is no absolute right as such acquired by the petitioner under this rule. This contention of Mr. Paranjape, therefore, must fail.

It is next contended by Mr. Paranjape that even assuming that it was open to the Collector to assess the lands to payment of land revenue, the Collector was in error in assessing the entire land for non-agricultural purpose. The entire land was not put to non-agricultural use. Indeed, this is a question of fact and the fact found by the fact finding authority is that the entire land was being used for non-agricultural purpose. This contention, therefore, in our opinion, has very little substance.

It is next contended by Mr. Paranjape that the Collector was in error in directing that the land revenue be recovered from August 1, 1953. This contention again has very little merit. It is to be noted that the assessment was made as early as on July 17, 1951. Proceedings naturally had been started prior to that date. The second order has been made only on remand after reconsideration of facts as directed by the Tribunal. In these circumstances, there is no assessment of land revenue retrospectively. It is contended by Mr. Paranjape that the Collector had levied the land revenue at the maximum rate without assigning any reasons. The Collector was bound to assign reasons showing that the case was made out for assessing the said land revenue on the particular land. Reliance is placed in this respect on sub-r. (2) of r. 81 of the Rules. This contention also, in our opinion, has no force. If sub-rr. (2) and (3) of r. 81 are read together, it would be seen that they require the Collector to give reasons only if he assessed the land revenue higher than the maximum rate fixed. So long as the assessment is upto the limit of the highest rate fixed, it is not obligatory on the Collector to give his reasons thereof. Apart from it, even assuming that there is any lacuna in the order of the Collector, inasmuch as he has not given reasons for assessing the land to the land revenue at the maximum rate, in our opinion, no injustice has been caused to the petitioner on that account. The Revenue Tribunal had given him an opportunity to say his say as to why the land revenue should not be levied at the maximum rate and the petitioner has not been able to make out any case before the Tribunal in this respect. That being the position, in our opinion, no interference at the hands of this Court on this ground is called for. In the result, for the reasons stated above, the petition must fail. The rule is, therefore, discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

DESAIBHAI KASHIBHAI DESAI v. S. M. DUDANI.*

Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (Bom. XVIII of 1925), Secs. 58(a) & (b), 46—Nadiad Borough Municipality Rules, rr. 43, 2(5)—Whether word "officer" in r. 43 includes president of municipality—Procedure for electing president where no statutory provision thereto made or in absence of precedent of local body.

The word "officer" occurring in r. 43 of the Rules framed by the Nadiad Borough Municipality under s. 58(a) and (b) read with s. 46 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, must be understood in a wider sense, and not in the narrower sense as defined in r. 2(5) of the Rules. Therefore, the president would be included in the word "officer" as used in r. 43 and the procedure prescribed in that rule for the purpose of voting would apply for electing a president.

In the absence of any statutory provision or precedent of a Local Government body, the person presiding over that body should adopt some well recognised procedure relating to the business which the meeting is convened to transact. For electing a president any one of the three well-established rules of procedure could be adopted, viz. (1) the procedure for election of mayor of the Bombay Municipal Corporation as set out in r. 10 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Rules and Regulations, (2) the procedure relating to the election of the Speaker set out in r. 6, cl. 5 of the Bombay Legislative Assembly Rules and (3) the procedure relating to the election of the Speaker of the House set out in r. 6, cl. 4, of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the House of the People. It is a basic principle of the above rules of procedure that a person declared elected as the president of a body has the vote of the majority of its members in his favour.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

R. B. Kotwal, with B. K. Amin, for the petitioner.

Y. V. Chandrachud, Government Pleader, for opponents Nos. 1 and 2.

J. C. Bhat, with A. D. Desai, for opponents Nos. 3 and 4.

TAMBE J. By this petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India, one Desai Bhai Kashibhai Desai, an elected councillor of the Nadiad Borough Municipality, challenges the election of Chimanbhai Kashibhai Patel, opponent No. 3 hereto, to the office of the President of the Municipality held on March 23, 1959.

The facts giving rise to this petition in brief are, Chimanbhai was a duly elected President during the year 1958-59. His term of office expired on March 9, 1959. Section 19A read together with s. 23(2) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, (hereinafter called the Act) cast a duty on the Collector to call a meeting for the election of the President. The Collector, Kaira District, (opponent No. 1), accordingly called a meeting of the councillors of the Municipality for March 23, 1959, for electing a President of the Nadiad Borough Municipality, and he further directed the District Deputy Collector, opponent No. 2 hereto, to preside over the meeting. From among the 34 councillors 32 councillors attended the meeting. The meeting first unanimously passed a resolution that a new President should be elected for a period of one year. Thereafter, for the office of the President three nominations were made. Chimanbhai Kashibhai Patel's name was proposed by Babubhai Bhikhabhai Desai and seconded by Haribhai Govindbhai Patel. Manmohandas Bhagwandas Desai was proposed by Balubhai Harishanker Bhatt and seconded by Desaibhai Kashibhai Desai. Balubhai Harishanker Bhatt's name was proposed by Kanubhai Kashibhai Patel and seconded by Mangubhai. It appears that opponent No. 2 decided to take the poll in two rounds. He first asked the house to elect one out of the two nominees, Manmohandas Bhagwandas Desai and Balubhai Harishanker Bhatt. At this stage, Balubhai declared in the meeting that he wanted to withdraw from the election. His proposer Kanubhai, however, did not agree to the withdrawal of Balubhai. The presiding officer, therefore, did not allow Balubhai to withdraw from the contest. Poll was thereafter taken, and each of the candidates, namely, Manmohandas and Balubhai, secured 16 votes each. Lots were drawn, with the result that Balubhai was declared elected. According to the procedure initially laid down by the presiding officer, there should have been a voting as between the remaining two candidates, namely, Chimanbhai and Balubhai, the successful candidate in the first round. But before poll for the second round was taken, the proposer of Balubhai, namely, Kanubhai, with the consent of the seconder, informed the presiding officer that he withdrew the name of Balubhai from the contest. It appears that there was opposition by some of the members to the proposed withdrawal of the name of Balubhai. The presiding officer, however, ruled that the proposer having withdrawn the name of Balubhai, only one proposal remained before the House, namely, the proposal of the name of Chimanbhai for the election of presidentship, and in this view of the matter he declared that Chimanbhai Kashibhai Patel was duly elected President of the Nadiad Municipal Committee. This election is challenged before us. The petitioner has claimed the following reliefs:—

"(a) That the Hon'ble Court be pleased to issue a Writ of quo warranto or a writ, order or direction of like nature against the 3rd respondent herein and call for the record and proceedings of the said election and quash the same and set aside the said election;

(b) That the Hon'ble Court be pleased to issue a writ of prohibition or a writ, order or direction of like nature and restrain the 3rd respondent herein from acting as the President until such time that he may be validly elected if at all as a President in another valid election;

(c) That the Hon'ble Court be pleased to command or direct by a writ of Mandamus or a writ, order or direction of like nature, the 1st respondent to hold with the utmost expedition possible another election for electing the President of the 4th respondent in accordance with law and procedure and in accordance with the provisions of Rule 43 of the Rules of the Nadiad Borough Municipality."

Mr. Kotwal, who appears for the petitioner, contends that the procedure adopted by the District Deputy Collector in holding the election of the President is contrary to law; he ought to have conducted the election in accordance with the provisions contained in r. 43 of the Rules framed by the Municipality under s. 58(a) and (b) read with s. 46 of the Act. In the second instance, Mr. Kotwal contends that even assuming that the provisions of r. 43 were not applicable, the District Deputy Collector should have held the election according to the parliamentary procedure. At any rate, according to Mr. Kotwal, the District Deputy Collector was in error in not allowing Balubhai to withdraw from the election before poll was taken for the first time. It is his further contention that after having refused to allow Balubhai to withdraw his candidature, the District Deputy Collector ought not to have permitted Kanubhai, the proposer of Balubhai, to withdraw the proposal at the commencement of the second round. Lastly, it is contended by Mr. Kotwal that in any event it was the bounden duty of the District Deputy Collector to have put to the vote of the House as to whether they approved the election of Chimanbhai as the President of the Municipality. On the other hand, it is contended by the learned Government Pleader, who appears for the District Deputy Collector, and Mr. Desai, the learned counsel for Chimanbhai, that the provisions of r. 43 have no application to the election of a President. It was open to the Prant Officer to adopt any procedure he thought best suited. In the instant case, the Prant Officer adopted the aforesaid procedure with the consent of the members of the Municipality and, therefore, it is not open to any of the members of the Municipality to challenge the procedure now in this Court by a petition under art. 226 or 227 of the Constitution of India.

The first question to be considered is, whether r. 43 would govern the case. It reads as follows:—

"43. Voting for appointment of Committees or officers—Voting for appointment of committees and for officers by ballot shall be conducted as follows:—

(1) Printed or typewritten slips of papers bearing the names of the candidates shall be circulated among the Councillors present at the meeting fixed for the selection and the voting shall be by putting a cross against the name of the candidate for whom they want to vote without signing the slips. The first ballot shall be kept open for 15 minutes from the commencement thereof, the votes for all the candidates shall be counted by the presiding authority with the assistance of the Chief Officer or the Secretary.

(2) On the announcement of the result of the first ballot, the name of the nominee who obtains the lowest number of votes shall be struck off and a fresh ballot shall be taken from the rest of the original nominees. The nominee with the lowest number of votes shall then be struck off, and this process shall be repeated until there remain only as many nominees as places, when the nominees thus remaining shall be declared duly elected."

According to the learned Government Pleader and Mr. Desai, the procedure prescribed in r. 43 has application only when the question of appointment of committees and of officers arises. According to them, the word "officers" has to be understood and given the meaning as is given to it in the interpretation clause, r. 2(5) of the rules, which defines that "officer" means any Municipal employee, whose salary, or in the case of time scale of pay, the maximum salary, exceeds Rs. 50 per mensem. On the other hand, it is the contention of Mr. Kotwal that the word "officer" has to be understood in its wider sense. It includes not only the servants of the Municipality, but also other persons occupying the various posts and offices in the Municipality. We find it difficult to accept the contention raised on behalf of opponents Nos. 2 and 3 and give the word "officer" a very restricted meaning as is contended for by them. It is true that in the definition in r. 2(5) such a restricted meaning is given to the word "officer". But then it has to be kept in mind that that meaning cannot be given when there is something repugnant in the subject or the context. It would be seen that even in the rules themselves the word "officer" is used in a sense other than the servant of the Municipality. If we turn to r. 2(3) (i) we find that the President is a Controlling officer of the auditors. It cannot be disputed that the President is not a servant of the Municipality drawing any pay from the Municipal funds. If we refer to the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, we find that there are various shades of meaning of the word "officer". In one sense, it means "one who holds a public, civil or ecclesiastical office; a servant or minister of the king; a functionary authoritatively appointed or elected to exercise some public, municipal or corporate function." In another sense, it means "a person holding the office of president, treasurer, secretary etc. of a society or institution;" or, in other words "an office-bearer". Turning to the provisions of the Act, we find that s. 18 provides that a person is elected to the office of the president. Section 19 provides for the term of office of President. Section 20 provides for the resignation from the office of the President. Section 21 provides for the removal of a person from the office of the President. Section 23-A provides for handing over of the charge by the person holding the office of the President. It is, therefore, clear that the President holds office, or, in other words, is an office-bearer of a municipality. The President, therefore, can be termed as an officer within the wider meaning of the word "officer" as defined in the Oxford Dictionary. Turning now to the provisions of r. 43 itself, we find a certain procedure prescribed for the purpose of voting, and a person successful therein is termed as a duly elected person, and persons contesting are termed as nominees. These expressions used in the rule indicate that the procedure prescribed in the rule relates to holding an election. It is not in dispute that a person appointed in the post of the President has to be elected by the members of the municipality. It is also worth noting that this rule provides for the appointment of committees, and turning to the provisions of the statute, namely, ss. 37 and 38, it is clear that the various committees are to be elected by the members of the municipality. On the other hand, it cannot be said that the servants of the municipality are appointed by holding an election. It also cannot be said that persons, who apply for service, are the nominees of any of the members of the municipality. For reasons stated above, in our opinion, the word "officer" occurring in r. 43 of the rules has to be understood in a wider sense, and not in the narrower sense as defined in r. 2(5). To hold otherwise, we would have to assume that no provision exists either in the Act or in the rules regarding the procedure to be followed for electing a president. We find it difficult to make such an assumption.

Even assuming for a moment that r. 43 has no application to the election of the President, then the course open to the District Deputy Collector was to adopt such a procedure as would enable him to perform his duties and adequately ensure to the councillors of the Nadiad Municipality the exercise of their statutory right of electing their President. Section 19-A read with s. 23(2) of the Act casts a duty on the Collector to call a meeting of the municipality for the purpose of electing a President and preside over that meeting, or appoint some other person to preside over it. Thus, whoever be the person that presides over the meeting has a duty to perform, namely, to hold an election. The right to elect consists in free and honest expression of the will by the electoral council. It, therefore, follows that the duty that fell on the District Deputy Collector was to adopt such a procedure as would ensure to the members of the Nadiad Municipality a free and honest expression of their will.

In the absence of any specific provision, the procedure which a person presiding over the meeting should adopt, in the words of the learned author in his book "The Conduct of and Procedure at Public, Company and Local Government Meetings (Crew)" at p. 32, is,

"where there are no standing orders or where standing orders are inadequate, then either the practice of the House of Commons or the usual practice of the previous meetings may be followed. In a simple case, however, the difficulty may be overcome by the chairman exercising his common sense and bearing in mind that it is his duty to ascertain the views of the meeting."

In our opinion, the aforesaid observations contain a salutary rule and can in its substance be followed with advantage. The substance of the rule appears to be that in the absence of any statutory provision or a precedent of the body, the person presiding over that body should adopt some well-recognised procedure relating to the business which the meeting is convened to transact.

Now, in the instant case, the District Deputy Collector could have well adopted any one of the following three well-established rules of procedure. In the first instance, there is the procedure for election of Mayor of the Bombay Municipal Corporation. The relevant rules are at p. 25 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Rules and Regulations. The important rule is r. 10. It reads as follows:—

"If there are more than two candidates, the candidate who gets the least number of votes shall be eliminated and votes taken again for the remaining candidates. This process shall be continued until there are two candidates left and then the one who gets more votes shall be declared elected."

It is pertinent to note that the provisions of this rule are in substance similar to those of cl. (2) of r. 48 of the Rules of the Nadiad Borough Municipality. Next, we have the Rules made by the Bombay Legislative Department for regulating the procedure and conduct of the business of the Assembly. Rule 6 of the Bombay Legislative Assembly Rules relates to the election of the Speaker. Clause (5) of the said rule contains the material provisions. It reads:

"Where more than two candidates have been nominated and at the first ballot no candidate obtains more votes than the aggregate votes obtained by the other candidates, the candidate who has obtained the smallest number of votes shall be excluded from the election and balloting shall proceed; the candidate obtaining the smallest number of votes at each ballot being excluded from the election, until one candidate obtains more votes than the remaining candidate or than the aggregate votes of the remaining candidates, as the case may be. The candidate who obtains more votes than those obtained by the remaining candidate or than the aggregate votes obtained by the remaining candidates, as the case may be, shall be declared to have been elected as the Speaker." It is again pertinent to note that the provisions of this clause are in substance similar to r. 43 of the Nadiad Municipality Rules.

Next, we may refer to the relevant provisions of Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the House of the People. Clause (4) of r. 6 thereof reads:

"The motions which have been moved and duly seconded shall be put one by one in the order in which they have been moved and decided if necessary by division. If any motion is carried, the person presiding shall, without putting later motions, declare that the member proposed in the motion which has been carried, has been chosen as the Speaker of the House."

These provisions, to a certain extent, differ from the other provisions referred to above. It would, however, be seen that there is a common characteristic in all these provisions and that is that, a person declared elected as the President of a body has the vote of the majority of its members in his favour. In the procedure adopted by the District Deputy Collector this basic principle has been lost sight of.

It is, however, contended by Mr. Desai that it was open to the President to adopt the procedure agreed to by the members of the House. He relies in that connection on the following observations occurring at p. 32 of "Law of Meetings" by James Muirhead, 2nd edn. :—

"The ultimate power and right of decision on any question rests with the body itself when duly assembled to be exercised by the vote of the majority. The board, in the absence of special provision by statute or standing order, is entitled to take its business in such order as it may think proper, and is not bound by any agenda paper that may have been previously prepared."

Now, in our opinion, the aforesaid observations have no relevance to the procedure to be adopted in the matter of election. On the other hand, it appears that the question that was being considered related to the right of the body to decide the order in which it would consider the items in the agenda before it. We feel doubtful about the advisability of leaving it to the members of the body to devise a procedure for holding an election, inasmuch as the possibility of the right of the minority suffering at the hands of the party in power cannot be excluded.

Even assuming for a moment that in the instant case it was open to the members of the municipality themselves to devise a procedure for the conduct of the election of the president, there is nothing in the minutes of the meeting of March 23, 1959, to show that the members of the municipality themselves had devised any such procedure. We, however, find in the affidavit of the District Deputy Collector an averment to the effect that the members of the municipality had decided to adopt a certain procedure. The relevant portion thereof reads as follows :—

"It was found that there were three proposals, viz. proposing (1) Shri Chimanbhai Kashibhai Patel (2) Shri Manmohandas Bhagwandas Desai and (3) Shri Balubhai Hari-shanker Bhatt. After scrutiny it was found that all the three proposals were duly proposed and seconded. It was, therefore, then put before the house that, as there were three proposals two proposals at a time in each round should be taken like this proposal No. 3 and proposal No. 2 should be taken for contest in the first round, and whosoever wins in the first round shall contest with the proposal No. 1."

Assuming that this was the procedure to which the councillors had agreed, on the facts of the case it is clear that that procedure was not adhered to, but was very materially departed from in not holding an election in the second round. It is not the case of the District Deputy Collector nor of opponent No. 3 that it had been agreed to by the members of the Municipal Committee to allow the proposer of Balubhai to withdraw the candidature of Balubhai and declare Chimanbhai as duly elected President. The District Deputy Collector has done so. On his own admission then, it is clear that what he had done was contrary to the procedure alleged to have been agreed to by the House itself. In his return, justification is also sought on the ground that what he did was in accordance with the provisions of r. 21. It reads as follows:—

"21. Withdrawal of motion—Any motion which has been proposed and seconded may be withdrawn by the proposer with the consent of the councillor who seconded the motion."

Even assuming for a moment that this rule has any relevance to the facts of this case, it is clear that the District Deputy Collector had lost sight of the provisions of r. 25, which provides that after a motion has been made and seconded, it shall not be withdrawn or altered in substance except with the permission of the presiding authority. Reading the return of the District Deputy Collector, there does not appear to be any averment which goes to show that he himself had applied his mind and considered the advisability of allowing Kanubhai to withdraw the candidature of Balubhai. On the other hand, it appears that he thought that under r. 21 he was bound to allow Kanubhai to withdraw the proposal when the seconder had agreed to such a course. That clearly is an error of law. Thus, looking at the case from any angle, it is clear that the procedure adopted by the District Deputy Collector in holding this election is contrary to the provisions of law; at any rate, contrary to the well-recognised practice usually followed in holding an election. What has happened is that opponent No. 3 Chimanbhai has been declared elected without a single vote being cast in his favour by any councillor. It is not in dispute that there was opposition to the course adopted by the District Deputy Collector in allowing Kanubhai to withdraw the candidature of Balubhai. About seventeen people lodged their protest in writing before the District Deputy Collector just after the declaration of the result. It indicates that the person declared elected has not the approval of the House behind him. The procedure adopted by the District Deputy Collector has resulted in negating the exercise of the right of electing a President conferred by the statute on the councillors of the Municipal Committee, Nadiad. It is, therefore, not possible to uphold the election of opponent No. 3.

In the result, we set aside the election of opponent No. 3 to the office of the elected President of Nadiad Municipality held on March 23, 1959. An injunction, therefore, will be issued against him restraining him from discharging any of the functions, exercising any rights and performing any duties of the office of the President of the Nadiad Borough Municipality as a duly elected President in the election held on March 23, 1959. We, however, wish to make it clear that it will be open to him to exercise such rights as are available to him under the Act as an out-going President till fresh election is held. We further direct the Collector of Kaira, opponent No. 1 hereto, to take steps, as expeditiously as possible, to hold an election for the office of the President of Nadiad Municipality in accordance with law.

Costs of this petition shall be borne by opponent No. 3.

Order accordingly.

INCOME-TAX REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

POPATLAL BHIKAMCHAND v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY I, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 16(3)(a)(iv)—Assessee making gift of his shares in company to his minor son—Company issuing bonus shares and assessee's minor son allotted bonus shares on his original holding—Dividend income from bonus shares whether taxable in hands of assessee—Whether income from accretions to assets transferred by assessee to his minor children taxable in his hands.

Income arising from accretions to the assets transferred by the assessee to his minor children cannot be taxed in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3)(a)(iv) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The assessee, who was the holder of certain shares in a company, gifted these shares to his minor son. The company, thereafter, issued bonus shares by increasing its capital and the assessee's minor son was allotted certain bonus shares in respect of his original holding of shares. On the question whether the dividend income from the bonus shares held by the assessee's minor son was taxable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:—

Held, that the source of the dividend income from the bonus shares was not the assets transferred but the accretion thereto and that income could not be regarded as arising even indirectly from the assets transferred by the assessee, and,

that, therefore, the dividend income from the bonus shares held by the assessee's minor son was not taxable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Act.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

R. J. Kolah, with N. A. Palkhiwala, for the assessee.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee was the holder of 350 shares of the Shree Ram Mills, Ltd. On December 28, 1946, the assessee gifted these shares to his minor son Virendra. Under s. 16(3)(a)(iv) of the Income-tax Act, the dividend income from these shares was liable to be included in computing the total income of the assessee for the purpose of assessment. On August 9, 1947, the directors of the Shree Ram Mills, Ltd., resolved to recommend the issue of bonus shares by increasing the capital of the company and a certain number of bonus shares were issued in the name of the assessee's minor son Virendra. There was a further increase in the capital of the company on December 30, 1947, and certain additional bonus shares were issued in his name. Virendra, the minor son of the assessee, was thus allotted 744 bonus shares for his original holding of 350 shares. The Income-tax Officer held that the 350 shares originally transferred by the assessee and the 744 bonus shares were "assets transferred" by the assessee, and computed his total income under s. 16(3) of the Income-tax Act by including the dividend income from all these shares. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal confirmed the order of the Income-tax Officer. At the request of the assessee the Tribunal has referred for decision the question whether "the dividend income from the 744 bonus shares held by the assessee's minor son is taxable in the hands of the assessee under section 16(3) of the Income-tax Act."

Section 16(3) of the Income-tax Act, in so far as it is material, provides:

"In computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment, there shall be included—

(a) so much of the income of a wife or minor child of such individual as arises directly or indirectly...

*Decided, June 15, 1959. Income-tax Reference No. 38 of 1958.

(iv) from assets transferred directly or indirectly to the minor child, not being a married daughter, by such individual otherwise than for adequate consideration;..."

The assessee concedes that the dividend income from the 350 shares transferred by him to his minor son is liable to be included in computing his total income. He contends, however, that the dividend received from the 744 bonus shares is not liable to be so included. In our judgment, the contention of the assessee must be accepted. The assets transferred by the assessee were the original 350 shares. The bonus shares were in the hands of the assessee's minor son undoubtedly an accretion to the assets transferred, but they could not be regarded as assets transferred by the assessee. Mr. Joshi, who appears on behalf of the Department, contends that the dividend income from the bonus shares in the hands of the minor child is income which arose indirectly from assets transferred by the assessee and is liable to be included in computing the total income of the assessee for the purpose of assessment. But, in our judgment, the source of the dividend income from the bonus shares is not the assets transferred but the accretion thereto; and that income cannot be regarded as arising even indirectly from the assets transferred by the assessee. The Legislature has not by enacting s. 16(3)(a)(iv) sought to tax in the hands of assessee income arising from accretions to the assets transferred by him to his minor children.

We, therefore, answer the question referred to us in the negative. The Commissioner of Income-tax to pay the costs of the reference.

THE MADHYA PRADESH INDUSTRIES, LIMITED, NAGPUR

v.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, NAGPUR.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 10(2)(xy)—Lessees granted by Government, under leases, right to enter upon lands and win manganese ore—Lessees transferring such right to assessee for consideration—Whether consideration paid by assessee a capital or revenue expenditure.

By certain leases the Government granted to a mining syndicate the beds, veins and seams of manganese ore lying in or under the lands described in the leases with certain rights and subject to certain restrictions. All these rights of the mining syndicate under the leases were transferred to the assessee company under an agreement. On the question whether the consideration paid by the assessee for purchasing the rights of the mining syndicate under the mining leases was capital expenditure and as such not an allowable deduction, it was contended by the assessee that the manganese ore lying underground though unascertained—but nonetheless ascertainable—was sold to the mining syndicate and by transfer of the rights the assessee had in substance acquired a stock of manganese ore for the purposes of its business and, therefore, the expenditure incurred by the assessee for acquiring the stock-in-trade of a business was revenue expenditure:—

Held, that the consideration paid for acquiring the means to obtain the stock-in-trade could not be regarded as consideration paid for acquiring the stock-in-trade itself, and that, therefore, the consideration paid by the assessee for purchasing the benefits and the rights under the leases to win the manganese ore from the lands described in the leases must be regarded as capital expenditure.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. A. Palkhivala, for the applicants-assessees.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal has referred the following three questions to this Court:

(i) Whether the sum of Rs. 15,27,000 paid by the assessee-company for the leasehold interest in several manganese mines was capital expenditure and as such not an allowable deduction?

(ii) Whether even a proportionate amount of the total sum paid for the leasehold manganese mines, i.e., Rs. 98,280 per annum was not deductible in determining the profits of the business?

(iii) Whether the legal and other expenses incurred for the leases of the manganese mines were not admissible deductions under s. 10(2)(xv) of the Income-tax Act?

The facts which give rise to the reference may be briefly stated. The assessee-company was originally a private limited company having its registered office at Nagpur. It was converted into a public limited company on March 17, 1952. R. B. Bansilal Abirchand Mining Syndicate, hereinafter referred to as the Mining Syndicate, were lessees from the Government of Central Provinces and Berar of mining rights under certain leases executed before and after the year 1949. Under the mining leases the Mining Syndicate were entitled to enter upon the lands described in the leases and to search for and win manganese ore and to raise and carry away and dispose of the same. The rights of the Mining Syndicate under the leases were sold by the Court Receiver appointed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts of that Syndicate and were purchased on December 13, 1951, by the assessee-company for a lump sum of Rs. 17,00,000. Out of the sum of Rs. 17,00,000, Rs. 15,27,000 were allocated for the price of the rights in the mines, Rs. 21,320 for buildings and other immoveable properties, Rs. 14,900 for machinery, furniture and other moveable properties and Rs. 1,36,780 for stock of raw and ready manganese ore. The Income-tax Officer held that the amount of Rs. 15,27,000 paid by the assessee-company for the interest it purchased from the Mining Syndicate in the manganese mines was capital expenditure. In appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the order passed by the Income-tax Officer was confirmed. That order was further confirmed by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. The assessee-company then applied to the Tribunal for a reference to this Court under s. 66(1) of the Income-tax Act, and a reference was accordingly made and the three questions, hereinbefore set out, have been referred for decision.

This reference raises the rather familiar question as to what may, having regard to the facts and circumstances, be regarded as capital expenditure as distinguished from revenue expenditure. In the leases obtained by the Mining Syndicate before the year 1949 it was recited that in consideration of the rents and royalties, covenants and agreements the lessor, i.e., the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar, granted and demised unto the lessees the mines, beds, veins and seams of manganese ore situate, lying and being in or under the lands referred to in Part I of the Schedule together with the liberties, powers and privileges to be exercised or enjoyed in connection therewith set out in Part II of the Schedule subject to the restrictions and conditions as to the exercise and enjoyment of such liberties, powers and privileges set out in Part III of the Schedule except and reserving out of the demise unto the lessor the liberties, powers and privileges set out in Part IV of the Schedule. The lease included a schedule consisting of nine parts. In Part II were set out the liberties, powers and privileges to be exercised or enjoyed by the lessees subject to the restrictions and conditions in Part III. Under this part the lessees were entitled to work mines, to sink pits, to erect or construct machinery, to make roads, to get building and road materials, to use water, to use the land adjacent to the land granted on lease for stacking, to prepare manganese ore and to take timber from reserved forests. These liberties were made subject to the restrictions set out in Part III. Certain liberties were also set out in Part IV which were exercisable by the lessor. We are not concerned in this reference with the restrictions and liberties set out in Parts III and IV of the Schedule. In the leases executed after the year 1949 it was recited that in consideration of the rents and royalties, covenants and agreements by and in the presents and the schedule thereunder the State Government granted and demised to the lessees all the mines, beds, veins and seams situate, lying and being in or under the lands referred to in Part I of the Schedule together with the liberties, powers and privileges to be exercised or enjoyed in connection therewith set out in Part II of the Schedule subject to the restrictions and conditions as to the exercise and enjoyment of such liberties, powers and privileges set out in Part III of the Schedule except and reserving out of the demise unto the State Government the liberties, powers and privileges set out in Part IV of the Schedule. These leases also included a schedule the first four parts of which set out respectively the area of the lease, the liberties, powers and privileges to be exercised and enjoyed by the lessees, the restrictions and conditions as to such exercise or enjoyment and the liberties, powers and privileges reserved to the State Government.

Though different phraseology has been used in these two sets of leases, it is evident that in substance by the leases the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar granted to the Mining Syndicate the beds, veins and seams of manganese ore lying in or under the lands described in the schedule with certain rights and subject to certain restrictions. All those rights of the Mining Syndicate under the leases were transferred to the assessee-company under the agreement, dated December 13, 1951. The principal question which falls to be determined is whether the consideration paid by the assessee for purchasing the rights of the lessees under the mining leases was capital expenditure.

Mr. Palkhivala for the assessee company contends that by the leases no right or interest in land was created but manganese ore lying underground though unascertained—but nonetheless ascertainable—was sold to the Mining Syndicate; and by the transfer of all those rights the assessee company in substance acquired a stock of manganese ore for the purpose of its business. Evidently expenditure incurred for acquiring the stock-in-trade of a business is revenue expenditure. But we are unable to agree with the contention raised by Mr. Palkhivala that by the leases the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar sold any definite or identifiable quantity of manganese ore to the Mining Syndicate: in our opinion, they only authorised the Mining Syndicate to win manganese ore from the area defined by the leases and subject to the restrictions and conditions set out therein. The right conferred by the leases was not a proprietary right to any stock of manganese ore readily identifiable, but merely a right during the period specified in the leases to get at the ore, and to remove and dispose of the same. By exercising the right and obtaining ore, the lessees may obtain a stock-in-trade; but the consideration paid for acquiring the means to obtain the stock-in-trade may not be regarded as consideration paid for acquiring the stock-in-trade itself. Therefore, the consideration paid by the assessee-company for purchasing the benefits and the rights under the leases to win manganese ore from the lands described in the leases must, in our judgment, be regarded as capital expenditure.

In our judgment, this question has been conclusively decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Kamakshya Narain Singh v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*¹ where the material facts were closely similar to the facts of the present case. In that case, the assessee had received large payments by way of royalty under various mining leases. By the leases the lessees were granted and demised for a period of 999 years the underground coal mining rights specified in the schedule to the leases and all the estate, right, title and interest of the lessor into and upon the same and every part thereof with full liberty and power to the lessees to search for, work, make merchantable and carry away the coal there found and with power to dig and sink pits, to erect engines, machinery, buildings, workshops, cottages and to make such railways, tramways and roads as were required. In consideration of these rights the lessees agreed to pay a sum by way of salami or premium and an annual sum as royalty computed at a certain rate per ton on the amount of coal raised and coke manufactured, subject to a minimum annual sum. It was contended before the taxing authorities by the lessees that the sums received as salami and royalty did not constitute income but was a capital receipt representing the price of the minerals removed, and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the salami was paid for the acquisition of the right of the lessees to enjoy the benefits granted to them by the lease, and that right being a capital asset, the money paid to purchase it was a payment on capital account. In the present case, the transferee from the lessees is contending that the payment made by it for acquiring the rights of the lessees was revenue expenditure and treated as allowable deduction in assessing its taxable income. In Kamakshya Narain Singh's case, in dealing with the argument that the salami received by the lessees for transferring their rights was received on capital account, their Lordships observed (p. 519):

"...It is a single payment made for the acquisition of the right of the lessees to enjoy the benefits granted to them by the lease. That general right may properly be regarded as a capital asset, and the money paid to purchase it may properly be held to be a payment on capital account."

In the present case, the assessee-company has purchased all the rights which the transferors had obtained from the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar. There was no stock-in-trade in the hands of the transferors and for purchasing merely the rights or benefits granted under the leases and not the stock-in-trade the assessee-company must, in our judgment, be regarded as having incurred a capital expenditure. By the leases merely a source from which the raw materials required for the business of the assessee-company were to be obtained was indicated, with rights to tap the source, and it was not a sale of the raw materials in situ.

A similar view was taken by their Lordships of the House of Lords in Hood Barrs v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.² In that case, a timber merchant, soon after commencing business, entered into two agreements with a company undertaking to pay certain sums of money in respect of a large number of trees growing on the company's land. The merchant acquired the right to "mark, fell and carry away all the said trees and complete all the operations authorized at such times as he...shall consider convenient", no time limit being fixed. The trees had not been selected or identified. The House of Lords held (Lord Oaksey dissenting) that in computing the timber merchant's income-tax liability the sums payable to the company should be treated as capital expenditure and not as the price for stock-in-trade and accordingly could not be debited in calculating his trading profits.

In *Stow Bardolph Gravel Co. Ltd. v. Poole*³ a company of sand and gravel merchants, in consideration of a payment of £2,000, acquired the benefit of a contract to take a deposit of sand and gravel. They later exercised an option contained in the contract under which they acquired for £2,250 a right to take a further deposit. It was held that the amounts paid were not expended on the purchase of stock-in-trade and were not, therefore, admissible as deductions in the computation of the company's profits under the relevant Income-tax provisions—the reason for that conclusion being that by the contract and option the company did not acquire any proprietary right in the deposits in situ but merely had the right to work them and to take away what was won, and the company had not, on the facts, purchased stock-in-trade readily identifiable as such from the moment of purchase but merely a means of getting gravel and sand which when excavated and taken into possession may be part of their stock-in-trade. The same reasoning will, in our judgment, apply to the facts of the present case for holding that the rights purchased by the assessee-company are not rights to stock-in-trade readily identifiable as such from the moment of purchase but merely the rights to the means of getting manganese ore which if excavated and taken into possession may form part of its stock-in-trade.

But Mr. Palkhivala relies upon a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Mohanlal Hargovind v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*⁴ in which it was held that the consideration paid for purchasing a right to tendu leaves required for manufacturing bidis was revenue expenditure and not capital expenditure. In that case, the Privy Council held that the contracts made by the assesseees were wholly and exclusively for the purpose of supplying themselves with one of the raw materials for their business, that under the contracts no interest in land or in the trees or plants was conveyed to the assesseees, that under the contracts it was the tendu leaves and nothing but the tendu leaves that were acquired, that the right to pick the leaves or to go on to the land for the purpose was merely ancillary to the real purpose of the contracts, that under such a contract, even if not expressed, by the clearest implication of law there was a transfer of a growing crop and that, therefore, the expenditure incurred in acquiring the raw material was in a business sense on revenue account and not on capital account. In our view, this case is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case and the cases to which we have already referred. By the contracts which the assesseees had made in Mohanlal Hargovind's case no interest in land was conveyed to the assesseees and the assesseees merely acquired a right to the tendu leaves, i.e., a right to the growing crops, and having regard to the nature of the business and the purpose for which the commodity was acquired, their Lordships of the Privy Council regarded the expenditure as expenditure incurred for obtaining raw materials for the business of the assesseees. In the present case, the expenditure having been incurred by the assessee-company for acquiring a right to the manganese ore, which was not identifiable in situ, the expenditure must be regarded as capital expenditure.

We, accordingly, answer the three questions referred for decision as under:

(i) The sum of Rs. 15,27,000 paid by the assessee-company for the leasehold interest in the manganese mines was capital expenditure and not revenue expenditure and as such it was not an allowable deduction.

(ii) Even a proportionate amount of the total sum paid for the leasehold manganese mines, i.e., Rs. 98,280 per annum, was not deductible in determining the profits of the business.

(iii) The legal and other expenses incurred for the leases of the manganese mines were not admissible deductions under s. 10(2)(xv) of the Income-tax Act.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 10(2)(vi-b), 10(5)—Word “plant” in s. 10(2)(vi-b) whether includes motor cars and bicycles.

The word “plant” in s. 10(2)(vi-b) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, includes vehicles such as motor cars and bicycles.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

G. N. Joshi, for the Income-tax Department.

N. A. Pakhivala, with D. H. Dvarkadas, for the assessee.

SHAH J. The assessee is a limited company carrying on the business of manufacturing cloth. In the year of account 1954-55 the assessee purchased certain motor cars and bicycles for use in their business and claimed in the year of assessment 1955-56 development rebate under s. 10(2)(vi-b) of the Income-tax Act. The income-tax authorities allowed the assessee the normal depreciation on the motor cars and the bicycles under s. 10(2)(vi). The Tribunal also allowed to the assessee development rebate in respect of the motor cars and bicycles, holding that the motor cars and bicycles were “plant” within the meaning of s. 10(2)(vi-b) of the Income-tax Act and that the same had been “installed” after March 31, 1954, and had been wholly used for the purpose of the business carried on by the assessee.

In this reference, Mr. Joshi for the Department contends that even though within the definition of the expression “plant” in s. 10(5) of the Income-tax Act vehicles may be included, for the purpose of sub-s. (2)(vi-b) of s. 10 of the Act vehicles are not included in that expression. Mr. Joshi contends that the Legislature has advisedly used the expressions “installed” and “installation” in sub-s. (2)(vi-b) of s. 10 and that those expressions postulate that the “plant” must be fixed in position when it is being worked or used, and if a plant is from its nature or otherwise incapable of being fixed in position when it is worked, it cannot be regarded as included within the expression “plant” as used in cl. (vi-b) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10. We are unable to accept that contention. The Legislature has given a special definition of the expression “plant” in sub-s. (5) of s. 10 of the Act, and by that definition vehicles, books, scientific apparatus and surgical equipment purchased for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation are expressly included within the definition; and in the absence of very strong indications to the contrary in sub-s. (2)(vi) of s. 10 we will not be justified in holding that notwithstanding the definition which is specially devised for sub-s. (2), the expression “plant” will not include vehicles, books, scientific apparatus and surgical equipment some of which by their very nature are incapable of being fixed in position at the time when they are worked or used. The assumption made by Mr. Joshi that the expression “installed” must necessarily mean “fixed in position” at the time when the plant is worked or used does not, in our judgment, seem to be warranted. The expression “installed” is also used in the sense of “inducted or introduced”, and if that be the sense in which that expression is used, there is nothing inconsistent in the context in which that word is used which will justify us in holding that the word “plant” in s. 10, sub-s. (2), cl. (vi-b), of the Income-tax Act was not intended to include vehicles.

We, therefore, proceed to answer the question† referred to us for decision in the affirmative. The Commissioner to pay the costs of the assessee.

BOMBAY NORTH, AHMEDABAD.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—Assessee receiving earnest money in 1946 for sale of his land—Conveyance executed by assessee in 1950 in favour of purchaser—Profit made by assessee whether liable to be apportioned as income for assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52—Applicability of s. 4 of Act.

The assessee purchased leasehold interest in certain land and the right to purchase it from a person who had obtained these from the owner of the land. The assessee then purchased a half share in the reversion from the owner and on May 5, 1946, he entered into an agreement with a housing society for sale of his right in the land and obtained Rs. 60,000 as earnest money. The assessee then purchased from the owner his right of reversion in the remaining half share. In 1950 the assessee executed a conveyance in favour of the society conveying the land to the society for Rs. 1,23,677 odd. The assessee made a profit of Rs. 96,796 in this transaction. On the question whether the amount of Rs. 96,796 was liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52, it was contended by the assessee that tax appropriate to the amount of Rs. 60,000 received by the assessee as part of the price in the year 1946 was payable in the assessment year 1946-47 and the tax on the balance was payable by the assessee in the year of assessment 1951-52, and that even if the amount of Rs. 60,000 was earnest money, when the sale deed was executed, and the assessee received the full price of Rs. 1,23,677 odd, in the amount of Rs. 60,000 which was appropriated towards the price at the date of the sale-deed must be regarded as embedded the characteristic of income received in the year 1946 and that amount was liable to be taxed in the year in which it was initially received and not in the year in which the sale-deed was executed and the amount was appropriated towards the price:—

Held, that on the facts of the case the amount of Rs. 60,000 was earnest money and not part payment of the price, that the principle of s. 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, did not apply to the present case where the amount of Rs. 60,000 was left in deposit with the assessee for due performance of a contract which amount was subsequently appropriated towards the price on the execution of the sale-deed, and that the amount of Rs. 96,796, which was the profit made by the assessee in the transaction, was taxable in the year of assessment 1951-52 and was not liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. A. Palkhivala, with F. N. Kaka, for the assessee.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee derived income from house property and a share in a partnership and from interest and dividends. On October 8, 1938, the assessee purchased the leasehold interest in Survey No. 45 of village Paladi from one Bhudarbhai who had obtained a lease from the original owner of the land on September 26, 1938. Under the lease Bhudarbhai had a right to purchase the land, and that right was also assigned to the assessee. On September 14, 1945, the assessee purchased a half share in the reversion from the original owner, and on May 5, 1946, he entered into an agreement with a housing society for sale of his rights in the land and obtained Rs. 60,000 as earnest money. Under another conveyance, dated September 24, 1947, the assessee purchased from the original owner of the land his right of reversion in the remaining half share. On October 1, 1947, the society executed in favour of the assessee a lease in respect of the entire land, and in 1950 the assessee executed a conveyance in favour of the society in pursuance of the covenant under the deed of lease conveying the land S. No. 45 to the society for Rs. 1,23,677-2-0. In the year of assessment 1951-52 the Income-tax Officer did not include in computing the total income of the assessee the profit of Rs. 96,796 made by the assessee in this transaction. But the Commissioner of Income-tax took action under s. 38B of the Income-tax Act and brought the amount to tax. The matter was then taken to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, and the Tribunal was of the view that in acquiring the right of Bhudarbhai the assessee was indulging in a trading venture and that the profit made by the assessee accrued in the year 1950. The Tribunal negatived the contention that the amount of Rs. 60,000 received by the assessee on May 5, 1946, was part of the sale price under the agreement dated May 5, 1946. In this reference under s. 66(2) of the Income-tax Act, the question which falls to be determined is whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the amount of Rs. 96,000 odd, which is the profit made by the assessee, is taxable in the assessment year 1951-52 or is liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52.

Mr. Palkhiyala for the assessee contends that as the assessee received a part of the price on May 5, 1946, and the balance of the price in the year 1950, even if the assessee was liable to pay tax on the profit accruing under the transaction on the footing that it was a trading venture, the profit therein had to be apportioned between the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52 for assessing tax liability. Counsel submits that tax appropriate to the amount of Rs. 60,000 received by the assessee in the year 1946 was payable in the assessment year 1946-47 and the tax on the balance was payable by the assessee in the year of assessment 1951-52. That the venture of the assessee was a trading venture has been found by the Tribunal and that question is not open to be canvassed and has not been canvassed before us. It is evident that the assessee had purchased the leasehold rights in the land, which were purchased by Bhudarbhai, only ten days after the latter had obtained the same. Thereafter the assessee purchased the rights of the owner in two instalments, and in the venture he has undoubtedly made a profit. In the agreement, dated May 5, 1946, it was recited that the assessee had agreed to sell to the housing society absolutely the land held by him for Rs. 1,23,677-2-0 and that if the housing society desired to take on lease the rights of the assessee in all the land with a covenant to purchase, the assessee undertook to give the society a lease for three years with a covenant to purchase on the society paying him Rs. 60,000 at the time of executing the lease deed "out of the sale price" of Rs. 1,23,677-2-0. It was then recited that the assessee will, at the time of executing the sale-deed, account and give a set off of Rs. 60,000 "paid as earnest money out of the sale price" and if the housing society failed to get the sale deed executed of the rights of the assessee during the period of the lease on payment of the remaining consideration, then the amount paid by the society as "earnest money" will stand forfeited. It is undisputed that the amount of Rs. 60,000 was paid by the housing society to the assessee; and this amount is expressly designated at two places in the agreement as "earnest money". In the opening sentence of para. 4 of the agreement the amount is, it is true, referred to as "out of the sale price of Rs. 1,23,677-2-0"; but the assessee has in this agreement expressly designated the amount of Rs. 60,000 as "earnest money", and has also reserved a right to forfeit the amount in the event of failure on the part of the society to complete the contract. This agreement, as is evident from the recital contained therein, was drawn up by an advocate. If in a document drawn up by a lawyer the expression "earnest money" was used in referring to the amount of Rs. 60,000 received by the assessee, we would require much stronger evidence than is to be found in this case to justify us in holding that the expression "earnest money" in the agreement was not intended to have the meaning which it normally has, and it was used in the sense of "part payment of the price": and the circumstance that this amount of Rs. 60,000 was liable to be forfeited in the event of the housing society failing to carry out its part of the contract makes the conclusion inevitable that the amount was intended to be earnest money and not part payment of the price. The Tribunal has taken the view that the amount of Rs. 60,000 paid in 1946 by the housing society to the assessee was earnest money, and we agree with that view.

Mr. Palkhivala has contended that even if the amount of Rs. 60,000 was earnest money, when the sale-deed was executed, and the assessee received the full price of Rs. 1,23,677-2-0, in the amount of Rs. 60,000 which was appropriated towards the price at the date of the sale-deed must be regarded as embedded the characteristic of income received in the year 1946 and that amount was liable to be taxed in the year in which it was initially received and not in the year in which the sale-deed was executed and the amount was appropriated towards the price. In support of that contention our attention was invited to a judgment of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Turner Morrison & Co. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal.¹ That was a case in which a non-resident association had effected sale of salt in India through brokers. The sale proceeds of the salt were collected by the assessee and credited to the account kept in their own name with a bank, and after deducting the expenses including their commission the balance was remitted to the association in Egypt. The income-tax authorities treated the assessee as the agents of the non-resident association under s. 43 of the Indian Income-tax Act and assessed them to income-tax under s. 4(1)(a) or, in the alternative, under s. 4(1)(c). It was held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that the income, profits and gains derived from the sale of salt in British India were assessable to income-tax under s. 4(1)(a) as income, profits and gains received by the company in British India on behalf of the association. In dealing with the question as to when the income may be deemed to be received, their Lordships observed (p. 160) :

"There can, therefore, be no question that when the gross sale proceeds were received by the Agents in India they necessarily received whatever income, profits and gains were lying dormant or hidden or otherwise embedded in them. Of course, if on the taking of accounts it be found that there was no profit during the year then the question of receipt of income, profits and gains would not arise but if there were income, profits and gains, then the proportionate part thereof attributable to the sale proceeds received by the Agents in India were income, profits and gains received by them at the moment the gross sale proceeds were received by them in India and that being the position the provisions of section 4(1)(a) were immediately attracted and the income, profits and gains so received became chargeable to tax under section 3 of the Act."

But in the case before us, the assessee did not in the year 1946 receive any part of the gross profit; and we are unable to appreciate how the principle in Turner Morrison & Co's case will apply to the facts of this case. When sale proceeds, gross or net, are received by the assessee, evidently s. 4 is immediately attracted, and the income, profits and gains embedded therein become chargeable to tax: but in our judgment that principle will not apply to an amount left in deposit with the assessee for due performance of a contract which amount is subsequently appropriated towards the price on the execution of a sale-deed.

On the view taken by us, the answer to the question† referred is that the amount of Rs. 96,000 odd, which is the profit made by the assessee in the transaction, is taxable in the year of assessment 1951-52 and is not liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52. The assessee's wives held shares in a private limited company which were purchased with funds provided by the assessee. For the assessment years 1949-50 and 1950-51 an order under s. 23A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was passed in making the assessment of the company, and the income deemed to have been distributed as dividend under s. 23A of the Act in the hands of the wives of the assessee was sought to be included in the income of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Act. On the question whether such dividend income was so assessable in the hands of the assessee:—

Held, that where by a mere fiction the income is deemed to have been received but which has not in fact been received, s. 16(3) of the Act can have no application, and that, therefore, the dividend income in the present case which was deemed to have been distributed to the assessee's wives under s. 23A was not assessable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Act.

R. J. Kolah, with Dilip Dwarkadas, for the respondents.

SHAH J. The assessment years in this reference are 1949-50 and 1950-51. Phirozshaw Pallonji Mistry and Shapurji Pallonji Mistry are the two assessee. Their respective wives held shares in a private limited company styled Shapurji Pallonji & Co. Ltd. An order under s. 23A of the Income-tax Act was passed by the Income-tax Officer in making the assessment of Shapurji Pallonji & Co. Ltd., and the income deemed to have been distributed as dividend under s. 23A in the hands of the respective wives of the two assessee was sought to be included in the income of the two assessee relying upon s. 16(3) of the Income-tax Act on the ground that the shares in the company held by the respective wives were purchased with the funds provided by the two assessee. It was contended by the assessee that where an order under s. 23A is passed the dividend income is only deemed to have been distributed amongst the shareholders and such income cannot be included in the income of the assessee under s. 16(3). The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal accepted that contention of the assessee purporting to follow the judgment of this Court in Cambatta v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay.¹ At the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax, the following question has been referred by the Tribunal:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case the dividend income deemed to have been distributed to the assessee's wives under section 23A is assessable in the hands of the assessee under section 16(3) of the Income-tax Act?"

Under s. 23A of the Income-tax Act, before it was amended by the Finance Act, 1955, in certain eventualities it was open to the Income-tax Officer to make an order that the undistributed portion of the assessable income of a company, as computed for income-tax purposes and reduced by the amount of incometax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof, shall be deemed to have been distributed as dividends amongst the shareholders. On the footing that the undistributed profits are deemed to have been distributed, the income will be taxable in the hands of the shareholders. But this liability is the consequence of a fictional distribution of income which in reality has not reached the hands of the shareholders. Section 16(3) provides for another fiction. In so far as it is material, that section provides:

"In computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment, there shall be included—

(a) so much of the income of a wife...as arises directly or indirectly...

(iii) from assets transferred directly or indirectly to the wife by the husband otherwise than for adequate consideration or in connection with an agreement to live apart..."

There is no dispute that in this case certain assets were transferred by the two assesses to their respective wives and the shares were purchased out of those assets. But s. 16(3) permits inclusion of the income of a wife in the income of her husband for purposes of assessment only if such income arises directly or indirectly from assets transferred to the wife by the husband otherwise than for adequate consideration. Where by a mere fiction the income is deemed to have been received but which has not in fact been received, in our judgment, s. 16(3) can have no application. There is no warrant for the submission that the expression "as arises directly or indirectly" in cl. (a) of sub-s. (3) of s. 16 is to be equated with the expression "deemed to have been distributed" in s. 23A(1).

Mr. Joshi for the Department invited our attention to sub-s. (4) of s. 23A as it stood before that section was amended by the Finance Act, 1955. By that sub-section it was provided:

"Where tax has been paid in respect of any undistributed profits and gains of a company under this section, and such profits and gains are subsequently distributed in any year, the proportionate share therein of any member of the company shall be excluded in computing his total income of that year."

Mr. Joshi says that in the year in which the undistributed profits are deemed by virtue of the order under s. 23A to be distributed they will not, on the view we are taking, be included in the income of the husband, and even when the profits are distributed as dividends, by the operation of sub-s. (4) they will not be liable to be included in the husband's income. But the Legislature has provided for inclusion in the taxable income of the husband the income of the wife arising from assets transferred by him without consideration. Whether in the event of actual distribution of the undistributed profits by the company as dividend hereafter, the income received by the wife will be liable to be included in computing the total assessable income of the husband is a question which does not, in our judgment, fall to be decided at this stage, and we express no opinion on that question.

On the view taken by us, the answer to the question will be in the negative. The Commissioner of Income-tax to pay the costs of the assesses.

Bombay Land Requisition Act (Bom. XXXIII of 1948), Secs. 5, 4—Part of flat in building in which landlord or tenant has not actually resided for continuous period of six months preceding date of requisition order—Whether such part of flat can be requisitioned under s. 5(1).

Under s. 5(1) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, no limitation is placed as to the parts of land or parts of buildings which may be requisitioned by the Government under the section. Therefore, under this section, the Government can requisition a part of a flat in a building in which the landlord or the tenant has not actually resided for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of the order of requisition.

Kulrumbai v. State of Bombay,¹ agreed with.

ON May 22, 1958, two petitions for writs of mandamus and for directions forbearing the respondent from enforcing an order of requisition dated March 27, 1958, made in respect of property, viz. 3 rooms and a kitchen situate at Tulsi Mahal, Raghavji Road, Bombay, were filed in the High Court. The first petition was by an alleged tenant and was placed for hearing and final disposal immediately before the present petition. At the hearing of that petition it was found that the alleged tenant was not a tenant at all and could have no interest in the property, and his petition was allowed to be withdrawn. This petition was by the owners of the building wherein the requisitioned property are situate.

The relevant facts were as follows: One Alimahomed Kassum was a tenant of the petitioners in respect of flat No. 4 on the 1st floor of Tulsi Mahal which, apart from three rooms and kitchen which were requisitioned, consisted of one more room and a passage and two bath rooms and a water closet. The tenant Alimahomed Kassum died several years ago. On and after the death of Alimahomed Kassum, his son Hussein as heir of Alimahomed was accepted as tenant by the petitioners. Hussein left India for Pakistan some time in the end of 1955. Before he left India Hussein was residing in the flat with all the members of his family. After Hussein left for Pakistan his son Nazim Hussein continued to reside in the flat. Nazim Hussein sub-let the rooms under requisition first to one Sanjiv B. Desai and thereafter to one C. M. Mathai, who was mentioned in the requisition order.

Between February, 1956 and January, 1957, the petitioners as owners addressed correspondence to the Controller of Accommodation informing of a possible vacancy of the flat. They requested the Controller to allow the flat to be used by the petitioners in the event of a vacancy.

On January 21, 1958, the petitioners by their advocate served a notice to quit on Shri Alimahomed who was according to the petitioners a dead man. By a reply dated February 2, 1958, Nazim Hussein, the grandson of Alimahomed, denied through his advocate having sub-let any portion of the flat and denied his liability to vacate the flat. The petitioners through their advocate served another notice to quit dated February 18, 1958. This notice also was addressed to deceased Alimahomed Kassum. According to the petitioners the tenancy of the flat became terminated at the end of February, 1958.

After due enquiries were made as provided under, and in compliance with, the provisions of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, the requisition order dated March 27, 1958, was made. The portion which was requisitioned was described in the order as follows:

"Three rooms and kitchen in occupation of Shri C. M. Mathai (as shown in the

K. K. DESAI J. [His Lordship after stating the facts as above, proceeded.] The sole contention on which the petitioners based their case regarding the invalidity of the requisition order appears in para. 8A of the petition. The petitioners have not pressed before me other grounds as appearing in the petition. Paragraph 8(a) runs as follows:

"The portion of Flat No. 4 sought to be requisitioned is not 'land' within the meaning of Section 4(1) and Section 5 of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948. Section 5 of the said Act does not empower the Government of Bombay to requisition only a part of flat which is neither let nor intended to be let."

In connection with this contention of the petitioners the relevant provisions of the Bombay Land Requisition Act are as follows:

Section 4(1): "land" includes...buildings...

Section 4(2): "landlord" means any person who is, for the time being, receiving, or entitled to receive, rent in respect of any premises...and further includes in respect of his sub-tenant a tenant who has sublet any premises;...

Section 4(3): "premises" means any building or part of a building let or intended to be let separately...

Section 5(1): "If in the opinion of the State Government it is necessary or expedient so to do, the State Government may by order in writing requisition any land for purpose of the State or any other public purpose:

Provided that no building or part thereof wherein the owner, the landlord or the tenant, as the case may be, has actually resided for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of the order shall be requisitioned under this section."

Section 5(2): "Where any building or part thereof is to be requisitioned under sub-section (1), the State Government shall make such enquiry as it deems fit and make a declaration in the order of requisition that the owner, the landlord or the tenant, as the case may be, has not actually resided therein for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of the order and such declaration shall be conclusive evidence that the owner, landlord or tenant has not so resided."

On a reading of these relevant provisions, it is obvious that the jurisdiction to make requisition order is to be found in the first part of s. 5(1) of the Act. The jurisdiction conferred under this section is patently of the widest character. Land which includes buildings can be subject-matter of a requisition order without any limitation. There is in the substantive part of this section conferring jurisdiction on the Government no limitation placed as to the parts of land or parts of buildings which may be requisitioned. Limitation, if any, is to be found in the proviso to sub-cl. (1) of s. 5 and the conditions precedent mentioned in sub-cl. (2) of s. 5. It is worthy of note that the only conditions precedent are that there is to be an inquiry and that there is to be a declaration. The declaration is in respect of those very facts which are mentioned in the proviso, viz., the facts relating to actual non-residence in the requisitioned premises of the owner, landlord or tenant as the case may be. The declaration to be made is to be accepted as conclusive evidence of the facts declared. The facts declared must relate to the actual non-residence of the tenant, owner or landlord in the requisitioned premises. In the circumstances what is left to be justiciable by Court is not the fact of non-residence in the premises of any of the aforesaid three parties. In the event of the Court finding that there had been no inquiry or no inquiry in fact as required under the provisions of sub-cl. (2) or the declaration not being as required under cl. (2) of s. 5, the Court might consider the contentions raised in that behalf. But if these conditions precedent are satisfied, the jurisdiction of the executive authority to make requisition order would be clearly established, and could not be questioned.

Mr. Dalal, however, contends that if proper emphasis is laid on the word "wherein" in the proviso to sub-cl. (1) of s. 5 and the word "therein" in sub-cl. (2) of s. 5, it would be found that in the case of premises let out to a tenant for exercising jurisdiction to make a requisition order, the declaration that the tenant has not actually resided must be in respect of the whole of the premises. He contends that the provisions in s. 5 of the Act do not contemplate such a declaration in respect of a part of a building. Mr. Dalal goes further and says that as regards the owner or the landlord these orders indicate the whole of the building or the total area of the "land" in question, and the declaration that the owner or the landlord has not actually resided must be with regard to the whole of the building and/or the total area of the "land". Mr. Dalal develops his argument by pointing out the difficulties which would arise in the case of an owner of a bungalow consisting of large number of rooms. Such an owner may not be using all the rooms in his bungalow for considerable length of time and may be for his usual residential purposes using a few of the rooms in such a bungalow. He says that it cannot be that in such a case the rooms which are not in every day use but are used only some times could be subject-matter of a requisition order.

I am of the opinion that the contention of Mr. Dalal is untenable. The definition of the word "land" read with the first part of s. 5(1) which confers jurisdiction on the Government to make requisition order is extremely wide and without any limitations. The language of the proviso as also sub-cl. (2) of s. 5 in my view only prescribes conditions precedent to be satisfied before exercising jurisdiction. The condition precedent is "actually not resided" which in my view is used as synonymous with "factually not used". The owner or a tenant may be using a building or a part of a building or a part of a tenement and may not be at all using the building or a part of a building or a part of a tenement. If such non-user actually (i.e. in fact) exists for a continuous period of six months, I do not see how limitations mentioned in the proviso could affect the jurisdiction of the Government. In my view the language of the section is clear and leaves no doubt that the jurisdiction is conferred with intent that it may be exercised for all purposes except in connection with the premises which may be actually used for a continuous period of six months preceding the date of the order. If the premises are in fact being used the jurisdiction to make the requisition order cannot be exercised.

In this connection it is permissible to consider the object of the Act as also the scheme of the whole Act. The object of the Act is obviously for providing for accommodation in difficult times for public purpose. The Legislature does not think fit that any land or building or a part of a building which is in fact not used should not be available for providing accommodation for public purpose. The definition of the word "premises" in cl. (3) of s. 4 of the Act is different from the definition of the word "land" in cl. (1) of s. 4. In the definition of "premises" the words used are "let or intended to be let separately" whilst in connection with the jurisdiction for making requisition orders in respect of buildings under s. 5 the definition of word "land" does not contain such words. Section 6 of the Act provides for requisitioning of the premises originally in occupation of tenants and/or premises which fall vacant. Clause (4) of s. 6 uses the words "notwithstanding anything contained in section 5" which means that vacant premises could be requisitioned in the case of a vacancy irrespective of provisions of s. 5 of the Act. Section 5 is still wider and the only limitation in exercising jurisdiction conferred under the section is to be found in the words "has not actually resided therein". It is interesting also to note that the fact regarding actual non-residence is left to the subjective satisfaction of the executive authority and is not left to be decided by a judicial inquiry or by a Court of law. This question of fact which is left to be decided by executive authority indicates that the widest power was intended to be conferred on executive authority in respect of requisition orders to be made under s. 5.

Mr. Baptista has drawn my attention to the decision of K. T. Desai J. in *Kulsumbai v. State of Bombay*¹. In that petition also the requisition order was in respect of a part of a tenement and it was contended that a portion of a tenement sought to be requisitioned was not "land" within the meaning of s. 4(1) and s. 5 of the Act, and that the Government had no power under the Act to requisition only a part of a flat which was neither let nor intended to be let. The contention was negatived and it was held as follows:—

"The proviso itself indicates that a part of the building in which the landlord or the tenant has not actually resided for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of the order can be requisitioned under the provisions of that section. In my view the Government has a right in law to requisition a portion of a building provided the other conditions laid down in that section have been satisfied."

I am in respectful agreement with the decision in that case.

Under all the aforesaid circumstances, I negative the contention of the petitioners as raised in para. 8(a) of the petition.

[His Lordship after dealing with matters not material to this report, concluded.]

In the result the rule is discharged and the petition is dismissed with costs.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), Sec. 10—Reference of dispute by Government under s. 10(1)(d)—Dispute contained in demand made by employees whether must be wholly referred to Court or tribunal—Whether Government can make reference in respect of modified demand or dispute.

Under s. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the question of the subject-matter of reference is left to the subjective decision and opinion of the Government. There is no obligation on the Government under this section while making a reference to a Court of inquiry or a tribunal to make a reference of the whole of the dispute and/or of the whole demand made.

Brundaban Chandra v. State of Orissa,¹ referred to.

The facts appear in the judgment.

N. V. Phadke, for the petitioners.

R. J. Joshi, for the respondents.

K. K. DESAI J. This is a petition under art. 226 of the Constitution whereby the petitioners have prayed for a writ of mandamus ordering modification of an order of reference dated January 29, 1958, made under s. 10(1)(d) of the Industrial Disputes Act, so as to substitute the words "1st January 1954" and "1st February 1956" at appropriate positions in place of the words "1st February 1957" contained in that order of reference. The relief claimed as in prayer (b) is not pressed before me.

1 (1937) O. C. J. Miscellaneous Petition No. 415 of 1936, decided by K. T. Desai J. on February 20, 1937 (Unrep.).

*Decided, November 26, 1958. O.C.J. Miscellaneous Petition No. 181 of 1958.

1 [1933] A.I.R. Orissa 121.

The short relevant facts as appearing in the petition are that in the 1st week of February 1957, petitioners No. 1 (who are a registered Union) as representing the employees of respondent No. 2 put forward a demand for increase of dearness allowance with retrospective effect as from January 1, 1954. As there was no settlement between the parties, the matter was taken before the Conciliation Officer in conciliation proceedings. The Conciliation Officer made a report under s. 12(4) of the Industrial Disputes Act and petitioner No. 1 thereafter requested the Government to make a reference of the dispute for adjudication by "Industrial Tribunal".

The Government made the reference order in question before me dated January 29, 1958, under the provisions of s. 10 of the Act. The Government by its letter dated January 29, 1958, informed petitioner No. 1 inter alia as follows:

"That Government does not propose to refer it (dispute) to a Tribunal for adjudication under sub-section (5) of the said section 12 as the same has been referred to the Tribunal under Government Order, ... dated 29th January, 1958.

I am to add that as the dispute was raised on 4th February 1957, the retrospective effect has been changed to 1st February 1957."

The whole of the contention in the petition and the arguments before me related to the change in the date regarding the retrospective operation of the demand in connection with dearness allowance. The petitioners' case is that their demand was for increase retrospectively from January 1, 1954, and the reference has been made for such increase only as from February 1, 1957, and the reference is by reason of that alteration in dates for the reasons mentioned in the petition liable to be modified by Court. Having regard to that contention it is first necessary to quote in detail the industrial dispute in question or the demand made by the petitioners and also the dispute mentioned in the order of reference in question and thereafter to summarise the contentions mentioned in the petition.

The demand put forward and/or industrial dispute was as follows:—

"DEARNESS ALLOWANCE: The existing dearness allowance payable to the monthly rated employees of the company at its Wadala establishment should be revised and increased retrospectively from 1st January 1954 as under:

Pay slab.	D. A. at cost of living indices 311 to 320.	Variation in % per 10 points movement in index number.
1 to 100	80 % of basic pay or revised textile scale for 31 days whichever is higher.	8 %
101 to 200	40 %	4 %
201 to 300	20 %	2 %
Over 300	20 %	2 %

(b) Increase in dearness allowance, if and when granted to the monthly rated staff of the Company at its Wadala establishment should also be granted to Shri P. S. Pandit, retrospectively from 1st January, 1956."

The relevant part of the order of reference as appearing in the Bombay Government Gazette, dated February 13, 1958, Part I-L, p. 938 runs as under:

"Whereas the Government of Bombay is of opinion that an industrial dispute connected with the matter specified in the Schedule appended hereto exists between the Indian Hume Pipe Co. Ltd. Bombay, and workmen (monthly rated staff) employed under it at its Wadala factory;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by clause (d) sub-section (1) of section 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (XIV of 1947), the Government of Bombay is pleased to refer the said dispute for adjudication to the Tribunal consisting of Shri Meher constituted under Government Notification, Labour and Social Welfare Department, No. 1DA.1157(b) dated the 12th March 1957.

SCHEDULE

Dearness Allowance: The existing dearness allowance payable to the monthly rated employees of the company at its Wadala establishment should be revised and increased retrospectively from 1st February 1957 as under:—

Pay slab.	Dearness allowance at cost of living indices 311 to 320.	Variation in per cent per 10 points movement in index number.
1 to 100	80 per cent of basic pay or revised textile scale for 81 days which ever is higher.	8 per cent
101 to 200	40 per cent -do-	4 -do-
201 to 300	20 -do-	2 -do-
Over 300	20 -do-	2 -do-

(b) Increase in dearness allowance, if and when granted to the monthly rated staff of the company at its Wadala establishment should also be granted to Shri P. S. Pandit, retrospectively from 1st February 1957."

It is contended in the petition that (i) the demand as made in respect of retrospective effect has not been referred to adjudication, (ii) the reason given by the Government for not making a reference under s. 12(5) of the Act is non-existent and it is simply not true, (iii) simply by having recourse to the provisions of s. 10(1)(d) of the Industrial Disputes Act the Government cannot alter the character of the dispute in any manner, (iv) having regard to the provisions and the scheme of the Act once a dispute had been subject-matter of conciliation proceedings it was not proper for the Government to make a reference under s. 10(1)(d) of the Act, (v) if the Government was satisfied that there was a case for the same, reference must be made under s. 12(5) of the Act, (vi) a reference under s. 10(1)(d) of the Act was only a colourable device for the purpose of avoiding to make a reference of the dispute as raised by the petitioners, and (vii) that the modification of the demand relating to dearness allowance made by the Government amounted to an adjudication of the dispute with regard to its aspect of retrospective effect and it was not competent or open to the Government to pronounce its judgment on the propriety or justifiability of the workmen's demand, that being the function of an Industrial Tribunal only.

Those are the contentions raised in the petition. I have recited those contentions to clarify that the same are based on the provisions of s. 12 of the Act and that not one of them had been pressed before me by Mr. Phadke, presumably because by reason of the recent decisions of this Court it is impossible to sustain the same. He has, however, relying upon the provisions of s. 10(1)(d) of the Act, made certain contentions, and I have allowed him to do that inasmuch as it was desirable that there should be no grievance that the whole of the case of the petitioners was not allowed to be argued before me.

Mr. Phadke contends that in the matter of a reference of dispute by the Government under s. 10(1)(d) of the Act the dispute as contained in the demand made on behalf of the employees must be wholly referred to the Tribunal. He says that Government cannot modify the demand made and make a reference in respect of the modified demand or dispute. He says that the Government has no right to impose its own opinion on the Tribunal as the Government has done in the present case. If the Government wants to act under s. 10(1)(d) of the Act, the Government is bound to make a reference in respect of the whole of the demand and/or dispute raised between the employer and the employee. He has in developing those contentions laid emphasis on the fact that it was patent on the record before the Conciliation Officer and in the report of the Conciliation Officer and otherwise also that the demand of the petitioners was for revision of dearness allowance retrospectively from January 1, 1954. He says that no rational person could have formulated an opinion that that demand was for increase retrospectively from February 1, 1957, only. The opinion which the Government should have formed and must have formed regarding the dispute raised could be that the increase was demanded retrospectively from January 1, 1954. The opinion now formed by the Government was entirely unreasonable and irrational, and that the Court is entitled to examine that opinion and make a finding that it was arbitrary and capricious and that the dispute forming the subject-matter of reference should have been for increase retrospectively from January 1, 1954. He further contends that having regard to the arbitrary and capricious opinion as formed by the Government as patent on the order of reference I should come to the conclusion that Government has not applied its mind at all or has for its own reasons misconceived its jurisdiction under s. 10(1)(d) and has for collateral purposes attempted to impose its own opinion in respect of a matter which under the scheme of the Act must be decided by a Tribunal and was within the exclusive jurisdiction of a Tribunal. These contentions I will examine with reference to the provisions of s. 10 of the Act, relevant parts whereof run as under:

"10. (1) Where the appropriate Government is of opinion that any industrial dispute exists or is apprehended, it may at any time, by order in writing—

- (a) refer the dispute to a Board...; or
- (b) refer any matter appearing to be connected with or relevant to the dispute to a Court of inquiry; or
- (c) refer the dispute or any matter appearing to be connected with, or relevant to the dispute,...to a Tribunal for adjudication; or
- (d) refer the dispute or any matter appearing to be connected with, or relevant to, the dispute, whether it relates to any matter specified in the Second or Third Schedule, to a Tribunal for adjudication."

There are provisos to this section which are for the purpose of this case unnecessary to quote.

Now, it is clear on the language of the section that the decision and the opinion for a reference is to be formed by the Government. That decision and opinion is administrative and is entirely left to the subjective decision and opinion of the Government. The Court cannot impose its opinion on the Government. It is also clear having regard to the use of the following words in sub-ss. (b), (c) and (d) that the Government is not bound to refer the whole of the dispute or the dispute in all its aspects as raised to a Tribunal or a Court. The words to which reference may be made are "matter appearing to be connected with or relevant to the dispute", "the dispute or any matter appearing to be connected with, or relevant to the dispute", and "the dispute or any matter appearing to be connected with or relevant to the dispute". Admittedly the order in question is made under the provisions of s. 10(1)(d) of the Act. The aforesaid words give and/or confer jurisdiction and power on the Government to make a reference in respect of any matter connected with or any relevant part of a dispute and/or the whole of the dispute. If it was intended that the Government was bound whilst making a reference under s. 10 to refer the whole of the dispute and/or the whole of the demand to a Court or a Tribunal the aforesaid words would not have been used in the section and would have been inappropriate altogether. These words are in my view indicative of the clear intention of the Legislature to leave the question of the subject-matter of reference under s. 10 to the subjective decision and opinion of the Government. There is no obligation on the Government under the provisions of this section while making a reference to a Court of inquiry or a Tribunal to make a reference of the whole of the dispute and/or of the whole demand made. On the contrary the matter is left at large.

That being the true construction of this section the whole of the argument raised on behalf of the petitioners appears to be entirely misconceived and not sustainable. The Government was whilst deciding the reference in this case making a reference in respect of the dispute raised but with reference to a smaller and shorter period as regards the retrospective effect in respect of the demand made for increased dearness allowance. The Government was in its discretion entitled to restrict the reference in the aforesaid manner. There was no obligation on the Government to make a reference of the whole of the demand made by the petitioners as is contended by Mr. Phadke. I negative the contention of Mr. Phadke that the Government had not applied its mind and had misconceived its jurisdiction while making a reference only for a smaller period.

Mr. Phadke has cited before me art. 119 from Vol. XI of Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd edn.) relating to the jurisdiction of the Court to examine administrative decisions of executive authority. Mr. Phadke has also cited in the same connection the decision in the case of *Brundaban Chandra v. State of Orissa*¹. The propositions made in these authorities are unquestionably well established. The question of my going into details and examining the administrative decision of the Government in this case has in my view not arisen at all. I have, therefore, not dealt with these authorities in detail in this case.

Having regard to my aforesaid findings the petition must fail. The petition is dismissed with costs. Rule discharged.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Kotval.

SMT. VATSALABAI RAMCHANDRA PATIL v. TOGYA MEGHA.*

Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (XXIV of 1951), Sec. 9B(a)†—Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, Secs. 88, 91, 220—Berar Waste Land Rules, 1865—Applicability of s. 9B(a) of Act XXIV of 1951—Bare declaration of liability to pay land-revenue, whether equivalent to announcing it at settlement.

In order to obtain the benefit of the provisions of s. 9B(a) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, it is necessary to prove that land-revenue could be legally fixed and was in fact fixed. The burden to do so rests on the tenant and that burden cannot be discharged by saying merely that by virtue of some law the landlord has now become liable to pay to the Government a sum of money by way of land-revenue. A bare declaration of liability to pay land-revenue is not equivalent to fixing of land revenue and announcing it at a settlement.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. L. Abhyankar, for the petitioners.

MUDHOLKAR J. This judgment will also govern Special Civil Applications Nos. 95 to 107 of 1958.

The petitioners in all these petitions claim to be the owners of certain lands which are in possession of the tenants who are respondents in these petitions. These lands are situate in the village Umri which was leased out to the predecessors-in-title of the petitioners under the Berar Waste Land Rules,

*Decided, April 27, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 108 of 1958 (with Special Civil Applications Nos. 95 to 107 of 1958).

†Section 9B runs as under:—

"Notwithstanding any agreement, usage, decree, order of a court or any law, the maximum lease money payable by protected lessee for the lease of any land shall not exceed—

(a) five times the land revenue on the land in respect of which announcement of the settlement has been made at any time within the 30 years immediately preceding the commencement of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases (Amendment) Act, 1953, or is made at any time after such commencement and

(b) ten times the fair assessment, in other cases."

1865. The petitioners have alleged in their petitions that they were proprietors of Umri till the abolition of their proprietary rights by virtue of the provisions of the M. P. Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act, 1950. This fact is not denied by the respondents tenants.

A lessee under the Waste Land Rules was deemed to be an 'alienee' of the Government and the village to be 'alienated' to him by the Government. Under r. 1 of these Rules such an alienee is liable to pay annual rent to the Government at a rate to be fixed by the Deputy Commissioner. Under r. 5, a lessee is entitled, either on taking the lease or during its currency or after its expiry, to select either proprietary title constituting the village his property in permanent hereditary and transferable right or to select the Patelship of the village without proprietary right on the land. The petitioners' contention is that their predecessors-in-title chose the proprietary right to the aforesaid village and that consequently their liability to the Government was only to pay rent. It is not the case of the tenants that the petitioners enjoyed only the Patelship of the village and not the proprietary right prior to the date of vesting specified in s. 3 of the Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act. In some of the cases the petitioners had made applications for eviction of the tenants under s. 8(1), cl. (a) (i) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951; in other cases, the tenants had made applications under s. 9B of the aforesaid Act for fixation of lease-money. In all these cases the question which arose was whether the maximum lease-money to which the petitioners were entitled was five times the land-revenue or ten times the fair assessment. Section 9B of the Act provides that the maximum lease-money payable by a protected lessee of any land shall not exceed five times the land-revenue on the land in respect of which announcement of the settlement has been made at any time within the thirty years immediately preceding the commencement of the aforesaid Act, or is made at any time after such commencement, and in other cases ten times the fair assessment. It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether the tenants' cases fall under the first or the second category.

It is contended on behalf of the tenants that the land-revenue on the lands in their possession as protected tenants had been announced at the settlement made in the year 1928 and that, therefore, the maximum amount of lease-money which they can be called upon to pay will be five times the amount of land-revenue fixed at the settlement. Mr. Abhyankar, who appears for the petitioners, contends that no such settlement was announced in the year 1928 or at any subsequent time and he further contends that in respect of lands in Izara villages there can be no question of announcing a settlement of land-revenue in respect of lands held by the lessees from the Izardars.

In order to appreciate the argument it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code of 1896, which was in force when the alleged announcement of settlement was made.

Chapter V of that Code deals with the question of Land and Land-revenue. Section 49 is one of the sections in that Chapter which provides that all lands shall be liable to the payment of land-revenue to the Government unless any land is specially exempted under the provisions of any special contract with the Government or of any law, rule or order for the time being in force. Under the lease granted by the Government to the petitioners' predecessors-in-title under the Waste Land Rules, 1865, the only liability which is cast upon the lessee, that is the Izardar, is that of payment of rent to the Government and not the payment of land-revenue. It is true, however, that under cl. (23) of s. 4 of the Code, 'land-revenue' includes payment to the Government by way of rent. Section 53 provides that on all lands not wholly exempt from payment of land-revenue, the assessment of the amount to be paid as land-revenue shall be fixed at the discretion of the Deputy Commissioner and the amounts due according to such assessment shall be levied on all such lands.

Chapter VIII of the Code deals with Survey-settlements. Section 83 of that Chapter deals with the power of the Chief Commissioner to introduce the survey of any land in any part of Berar with a view to the settlement of the land revenue. Section 88 provides as follows:

"88. (1) Subject to the control of the (Chief Commissioner) the Deputy Commissioner or other officer in charge of a survey shall have authority to fix the assessment of land-revenue at his discretion on all lands within the local operation of an order made under section 83, which are not wholly exempt from land-revenue, and the amounts due according to such assessment shall, subject to the provisions of section 90, be levied on all such lands.

(2) In fixing such assessment regard shall be had to the requirements of the proviso to section 53.

(3) But nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent the officer aforesaid from determining and registering on lands wholly or partially exempt from payment of land-revenue or on lands specially excepted under section 83, from the survey settlement, the proper full assessment which would be payable but for such exemption or exception, or from dividing all such lands to which the survey extends, into survey-numbers."

Section 90 provides that assessments made under s. 88 shall not be leviable without the sanction of the Chief Commissioner and also empowers the Chief Commissioner to declare with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, the assessment made by the Deputy Commissioner with any modifications that he may think necessary, fixed for a term of years not exceeding thirty. Then comes s. 91 which is as follows:

"91. (1) When the (Chief Commissioner) or other officer aforesaid shall have sanctioned the levy of the assessments fixed by the officer in charge of the survey, the Deputy Commissioner, or other officer in charge of the survey, or such other officer not below the rank of an Extra-Assistant Commissioner as may be specially appointed for the purpose by the Deputy Commissioner, shall publicly announce or cause to be announced the assessment fixed on each survey-number.

(2) The Deputy Commissioner, or other officer in charge of the survey, or the specially appointed officer, shall, at a reasonable time beforehand, cause public notice to be given, in such manner as he shall deem fit, of the time at or about which the assessments will be announced as aforesaid.

(3) If the holder or other interested in any holding does not appear in person or by agent, he shall be subject, nevertheless, to the same liabilities as if he had attended.

(4) When the assessments have been announced in the manner provided in sub-section (1), the survey-settlement shall be held to have been introduced."

Then there is s. 220 of the Code, sub-ss. (1) and (2) of which run as follows:

"(1) Save as is otherwise provided in section 95 and hereinafter in this section, the provisions of Chapters VIII to X shall not be applied to any alienated village, except for the purpose of fixing the boundaries of any such village, of deciding any disputes relating thereto and of determining and registering the proper full assessment on all lands included therein, as provided in section 38, sub-section (3).

(2) But the provisions of the said chapters shall be applicable to—

(a) all unalienated land situated within the limits of an alienated village;

(b) villages of which a definite share is alienated, but of which the remaining share is unalienated;

(c) alienated villages, in which the holders are entitled to a certain amount of the revenue and the Government to the rest."

The word 'alienated' is also defined in cl. (17) of s. 4 of the Code as follows:

"'alienated' means transferred, so far as the rights of the Government to receive the rent or land-revenue are concerned, wholly or partially, to the ownership of any person;

Explanation.—Lands leased under the Waste Land Rules of 1865, 1876, 1879 or 1880 are 'alienated' within the meaning of this definition."

Now, land-revenue can be deemed to have been announced at the settlement held prior to the coming into force of the Berar Land Revenue Code of 1928, if the provisions of ss. 83, 88, 90 and 91 are applicable and have been complied with. There is no doubt that s. 83 applies to this case and we are prepared to accept the position that it has been complied with. The whole of

s. 88 however does not, in view of the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 220, apply but only so much of it as is indicated in the aforesaid sub-section. Now, sub-s. (1) of s. 220 provides that the provisions of Chapter VIII shall not be applied to any alienated village, except for the purpose of determining and registering the proper full assessment on all lands included therein, as provided in s. 88, sub-s. (3). Under s. 88(1) the Deputy Commissioner is empowered to fix the assessment of land-revenue at his discretion on all lands with respect to which revenue survey has been introduced by the Chief Commissioner (or Governor). Sub-section (3) of s. 88 provides that the Deputy Commissioner can determine and register the proper full assessment which would be payable in respect of lands wholly or partially exempt from payment of land-revenue, but for such exemption or exception. Therefore, where land is held by a person in proprietary rights and under the contract between him and the Government he is exempt from payment of land-revenue, all that the Deputy Commissioner can do is to determine and register the full assessment of that land. The Code does not provide for doing anything further with respect to land exempt from payment of land-revenue as it does with respect to land which is not exempt from payment of land-revenue. In the latter case the Chief Commissioner is empowered to levy the assessment under s. 90 and fix a period during which it will continue to be levied. Then sub-s. (1) of s. 91 provides that when the levy of the assessment is sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner shall publicly announce or cause to be announced the assessment fixed on each survey-number. Sub-section (4) of that section provides that where the assessment has been announced, the survey-settlement shall be held to have been introduced. It is, therefore, where land-revenue has been assessed and levied and the Survey-settlement introduced by following the procedure laid down in ss. 90 and 91 that it can be said that land-revenue has been announced at the settlement. It will be clear from what we have said above that where land is exempt from payment of land-revenue because of a contract between the holder thereof and the Government, no question arises of announcing the settlement. Therefore, if the predecessor-in-title of the petitioners was the proprietor of the village as contended for by the petitioners, there was no question of fixing land-revenue with respect to any land situate in the village Umri and announcing the assessment or land-revenue of the land.

The Bombay Revenue Tribunal has however held that land-revenue was in fact announced in respect of the lands in the possession of the tenants in the village Umri and that, therefore, the provisions of ss. 90 and 91 have been complied with. The Tribunal has further observed that the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 220 are not attracted to this case which, according to it, falls under sub-s. (2) of s. 220. It seems to us that the Revenue Tribunal has ignored the fact that the petitioners' predecessor-in-title was not merely a Patel of the village but was a proprietor thereof. If he was a proprietor of the village then the case would not fall to be governed by sub-s. (2) of s. 220. If the case does not fall under sub-s. (2) of s. 220, then the provisions of ss. 90 and 91 of the Code are wholly inapplicable. We would also like to point out that there is no material on record to show that in respect of each individual survey-number situate in the village Umri, there was any announcement of settlement.

When this matter came up before us last, we had made certain enquiries from the revenue authorities on this point. The Deputy Commissioner, Yeotmal, who dealt with this matter has reported to the effect that the revision of assessment did actually take place in respect of Izara villages in the Darwha taluq (in which taluq village Umri is situate) in the year 1927-28 and that announcement of land-revenue in respect of the fields in the Izara villages was made. The only basis upon which this statement is based is the report of the aforesaid settlement. A copy of that report has also been sent to us. Though it does appear from the last page of the aforesaid report that on June 19, 1928, the Governor in Council issued an order under sub-s. (1) of s. 90 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, sanctioning the levy of the assessments fixed by the Settlement Officer in charge of the revenue surveys conducted by him in the taluqs and towns in Berar specified in the first column of the schedule to the aforesaid order, there is nothing to indicate that an announcement was made by the Deputy Commissioner under sub-s. (1) of s. 91 of the Code.

Apart from that, we are of opinion, that the aforesaid order of the Governor in Council is illegal in so far as it purports to apply to the Izara villages in the Darwaha taluq in which proprietary rights had been conferred on the Izardars, the provisions of s. 90(1) of the Code.

The Revenue Tribunal has observed in para. 7 of its order that from the provisions of s. 68(1) of the M.P. Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act, 1950, an inference can be drawn that the assessments fixed on individual survey numbers in the Izara settlements had, subsequent to the enactment of the aforesaid Act, acquired the full character of land-revenue. Section 68(1) runs thus:

"The home-farm land held by a superior holder or the land held by a plot-holder on the first day of October 1949 shall on and from the date of vesting be held by him as an occupant and he shall subject to any orders which may be passed under section 7 of the Central Provinces and Berar Revocation of Land Revenue Exemptions Act, 1948, be liable to the payment of land revenue equal to the fair assessment thereon."

Now, this provision certainly makes an ex-Izardar liable for the payment of land-revenue to the Government with respect to his home-farm land. But what we are concerned with here is not whether the land which is his home-farm is liable to pay land-revenue but whether land-revenue with respect to that land has been announced at a settlement effected prior to the enactment of this provision.

Further, in order to obtain the benefit of the provisions of cl. (a) of s. 9B of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act it is necessary to prove that land-revenue could be legally fixed and was in fact fixed. The burden to do so rests on the tenant and that burden cannot be discharged by saying merely that by virtue of some law the landlord has now become liable to pay to the Government a sum of money by way of land-revenue. A bare declaration of liability to pay land-revenue is not equivalent to fixing of land revenue and announcing it at a settlement.

In this view we hold that the Revenue Tribunal was in error in holding that the case of the tenants was governed by cl. (a) of s. 9B and not by cl. (b) of that section.

Upon this view, we allow the petitions, make the rule absolute and remit all these matters to the Sub-Divisional Officer with a direction that he should deal with the applications filed before him by the petitioners and their tenants according to law and with advertence to the above remarks.

We, therefore, make no order as to costs.

Petitions allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 60(1)(b)—Protection given by s. 60(1)(b) whether extends to a firm.

The protection given by s. 60(1)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is to individuals and not to a body of individuals, that is, to a firm.

Nihal Singh v. Sri Ram,¹ *Karam Chand Sood v. Official Receiver, Simla*² and Ramchandra Ayyar v. K. Sessa Ayyangar,³ referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

Imdad Ali, for the applicant.

N. L. Belekar, for the opponent.

MUDHOLKAR J. This is an application for revision of the order of Mr. H. K. Karmarkar, Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, in civil suit No. 1673 of 1959 releasing from attachment two embroidery machines which were attached by the applicant before judgment under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The relevant facts are as follows: The applicant instituted a suit against the opponents for the recovery of Rs. 1,200 alleged to be due on foot of accounts. The applicant alleges that opponent No. 1 is a partnership firm and opponents Nos. 2 to 5 are members of that firm. On February 28, 1959, the applicant made an application under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, of the Code for attachment before judgment of two embroidery machines which according to him are the property of the firm. The ground on which the application was made was that these machines, though they belonged to the firm, were removed by opponent No. 4 from the premises of the firm to his own house and that the other property of the firm had been concealed by the partners. On March 2, 1959, the Court passed an order to the effect that the two machines be attached before judgment unless any of the opponents furnished security for the claim in suit. Apparently, no security was furnished and, therefore, on March 4, 1959, the machines were attached. On March 6, 1959, Manubhai, opponent No. 4, made an application under s. 60(1)(b) of the Code read with O. XXXVIII, r. 6 thereof for releasing the property from attachment. In that application he also offered to furnish security to the extent of Rs. 1,400. An ex parte order was passed on this application by the learned Judge of the Court below to the following effect:—

"Machines to be returned to applicant. Attachment to continue. Security to be taken before machines are returned."

No security was furnished by Manubhai. On March 16, 1959, the matter came up before the Court again. On that date, Manubhai filed his reply to the application of the applicant for attachment before judgment. In that reply he sought releasing of the attachment. He denied that opponents Nos. 2-5 are partners of the firm, opponent No. 1. He also specifically denied that he is a partner of the alleged firm. He also denied that he had in any way concealed, disposed of or removed any goods belonging to the firm. As regards the two embroidery machines he contended that they belonged to him exclusively, and that after the severance of his connection with the business of opponent No. 2, who is a brother of the applicant, he removed them to his own house and that he was entitled to do so under law because they belonged to him alone and not to the alleged firm. He further contended that he is an artisan, that those machines are tools of an artisan and that, therefore, they are not liable to be attached under s. 60(1)(b) of the Code. No enquiry was held by the learned Judge on any of the points in dispute between the parties but he passed an order on March 24, 1959, releasing the machines from attachment. In his order he has framed the following points for determination:

- (i) Does applicant prove that he has a prima facie case?
- (ii) Does he prove that N.A.s are attempting to remove the property out of the jurisdiction of this Court?
- (iii) Does he prove that the property is being disposed of or removed out of the jurisdiction of this Court with a view to obstruct or delay the execution of the decree that may be passed against them? and
- (iv) Is the attached property liable to attachment?

He decided the first three points in the affirmative but the fourth in the negative.

Mr. Imdad Ali, for the applicant, contends that the learned Judge has not framed all the necessary points for determination because some important matters on which the parties were at issue were not included in them. He also says that it was not open to the learned Judge to decide the application without giving an opportunity to the parties to adduce evidence in support of their respective contentions. I agree with Mr. Imdad Ali. The Court must realise that even interlocutory matters have to be decided after giving an opportunity to the parties to adduce the necessary evidence. It is also necessary for the Court to bear in mind all the contentions of the parties before deciding an interlocutory application. Now, here we find that the parties are at issue on the question as to whether there was at all a partnership and whether one Manubhai was one of the members of the partnership firm. They are also at issue on the point whether the machines belong to the firm or to Manubhai exclusively. These points are relevant because before making an order releasing the property on the ground that they are tools of an artisan the Court has to come to the conclusion that they belong to the person who is asking for their release. A firm is not an artisan, though individual members of a firm may be artisans. The protection given by s. 60(1)(b) is to individuals and not to firms because the whole idea is that persons who carry on their livelihood as artisans or as agriculturists should not be prevented from eking out their existence. The same cannot, however, be said about firms. A firm does not individually work as an artisan or as an agriculturist.

In this connection I may refer to some decisions of the High Courts in India. In Nihal Singh v. Siri Ram,¹ the question was as to what was meant by the word 'agriculturist' and in this connection they also considered what is the meaning of the word 'artisan'. Dalip Singh J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, observed (p. 392):

"...Reading clause (b) of the Section it appears to me clear that the juxtaposition of the word 'agriculturist' along with the word 'artisan' implies a person who occupies himself in tilling the soil and whose livelihood depends on this tilling of the soil. It could hardly be said that the term 'artisan' meant merely a person who engaged himself in the practice of some handicraft without reference to the fact that the person maintained himself by the practice of that handicraft. Otherwise, a man who made a hobby of some handicraft might say that for the purposes of this Section his tools were exempt from attachment because he was an artisan. But the meaning of 'artisan' is not in this Section clearly a person who merely engages in some particular handicraft for pleasure or as a hobby or even as an additional source of income, but it means a person who employs himself in a handicraft personally and who depends for his living essentially on the proceeds derived from that handicraft."

If that is the meaning of the word 'agriculturist' then it follows that it is limited to an individual and cannot be extended to a body of individuals, that.

is, to a firm. In *Karam Chand Sood v. Official Receiver, Simla*² the same learned Judge pointed out that the word 'artisan' occurring in s. 60(1)(b) implies a handicraftsman, viz. one who makes certain things as part of his trade or calling. If this view is correct then it would follow that it applies only to an individual and not to a firm. Then we have a decision of the Madras High Court in *Ramachandra Ayyar v. K. Sesha Ayyangar*³ where Horwill J. held that if a person employs a number of artisans to work for him and gives tools for that purpose, he is not himself an artisan but an employer of labour who would not be entitled to the benefit of the section. Such being the law, it is essential to ascertain here whether these two machines belong exclusively to Manubhai as claimed by him or to the partnership firm. Now, Mr. Belekar says that from the accounts, extracts of which have been filed in this case, it would appear that some amounts alleged to have been advanced by the applicant have been debited to Manubhai only and, therefore, the liability which is sought to be enforced in this suit must be regarded as being that of Manubhai only. For one thing, this aspect of the matter has not been considered by the Court below. Apart from that, what is pertinent to note is that Manubhai is not entitled to have the machines released unless he shows that they are his exclusive property. The applicant's assertion in this suit is that Manubhai is one of the partners and he used to hand over or advance money to him in that capacity. Therefore, if the applicant establishes his contention he will be able to hold Manubhai liable as a partner for the amounts so advanced by him. But that again has little bearing on the question whether the property should be released from attachment on the ground claimed by Manubhai.

Since the matter has not been enquired into properly by the Court below, I set aside its order releasing the two machines from attachment and direct the Court to enquire into the matter afresh in the light of the aforesaid observations.

Before parting with the case I would like to mention the offers which were made by Mr. Imdad Ali on behalf of the applicant. He said that if Manubhai is willing to deposit in Court Rs. 1,000 he is prepared not only to return the machines to him but also to undertake not to withdraw the amount but also to pay interest on that amount at six per cent. per annum till the decision of the suit in case the suit is dismissed against Manubhai. He further offered to release one machine if Manubhai instead of depositing Rs. 1,000 deposits Rs. 500 in the Court below and agrees to abide by similar conditions. He made a third offer to the effect that if Manubhai furnished security either for Rs. 500 or Rs. 1,000 he was prepared to release one or two machines as the case may be. It will be open to Manubhai to take advantage of these offers if he likes.

I allow the application, make the rule absolute but direct that the costs in this Court shall be borne as incurred.

Application allowed.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

MANILAL DAHYABHAI v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 24(2)—Assessee carrying on business in cloth and also business in speculation in gold, silver, cotton etc.—Assessee in its return setting off against profits, in year of account, from cloth business, losses in speculation brought forward from preceding years of account—Assessee maintaining one set of books of account for both businesses—Both businesses carried on at same place with same staff—Capital employed for both businesses same—Receipts of one business utilised for the other business and overhead and other expenses common to both businesses—Whether cloth business and business in speculation constitute “the same business” within s. 24(2).

The assessee carried on business as a wholesale dealer in cloth and it also carried on business in speculation in gold, silver, cotton, etc. For the assessment year 1949-50 the assessee made a return of its total income from business and in arriving at the figure of the total income, it deducted from the gross income a certain amount brought forward as loss suffered in the speculation business in the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49. It was claimed by the assessee that the cloth business and the business in speculation constituted the same business within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. It was found that only one set of accounts was maintained i.e. in the set of books maintained for the assessee's cloth business, the dealings in speculation were also entered. There was one cash book and the bank accounts were also the same, both for the dealings in cloth as well as in speculation. Receipts either from the assessee's dealings in cloth or from speculation were deposited in these books and similarly withdrawals for purposes of payment either in regard to dealings in cloth or dealings in speculation were made from these books and accounts. The capital employed for both the businesses was the same and the receipts of one business were utilised for purposes of the other business indiscriminately and vice versa and the items of overhead and other expenses were common. Both the businesses were carried on from the assessee's shop and the businesses were carried on with the help of the same staff:—

Held, that on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the business in speculation and the cloth business conducted by the assessee did not constitute one and the same business, and that, therefore, the assessee was not entitled to set off against the profits from the cloth business in the year of account the losses in the speculation business brought forward from the preceding years of account.

Though not a conclusive test, an important test which may properly be applied in a case like this, is, whether one of the two businesses conducted by the assessee could be stopped without affecting the texture or framework of the other.

Normally where the assessee carries on two different lines of business, it is a question of fact whether they constitute two separate and distinct businesses or whether they are in truth branches or departments of one and the same business. The conclusion of the Tribunal, which is founded on no evidence or which is unreasonable or perverse, may not be regarded as binding even if it is apparently on a question of fact. If the question is one of legal inference to be drawn from the facts proved, it may be regarded as a question of law.

Per S. T. Desai J. In determining the question whether two businesses can be called the same business or not, consideration must be directed to the concordant activities, if any, and to the basic singleness, if any, of the two businesses. If the activities are diverse and distinct and there is no basic oneness in the nature of the two businesses, then it cannot be said that they are the same business for the purpose of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act.

The facts appear in the judgment.

R. J. Kolah, for the applicant.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee is a Hindu undivided family. It carries on business as a wholesale dealer in cloth in two names: (i) Manilal Dayabhai, Vithalwadi, Bombay, and (ii) Dayabhai Sobharam, Champa Galli, Bombay. The business with the up-country merchants is carried on in the name of Manilal Dayabhai, and the local business is carried on in the name of Dayabhai Sobharam. The assessee also carries on business in speculation in gold, silver, cotton, etc. Two separate sets of books of account are maintained by the assessee in respect of the businesses carried on in the two names. We are in this reference concerned with the business which is carried on by the assessee in the name of Dayabhai Sobharam. For the assessment year 1949-50 the assessee returned a total income of Rs. 1,38,946 from the business done in the name of Dayabhai Sobharam. In arriving at that figure the assessee deducted from the gross income an amount of Rs. 1,04,042 as loss suffered in the speculation business in shares, cotton, gold, silver and other commodities. In the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 the assessee had suffered losses in speculation in gold, silver, cotton and shares as also in seeds, hessian and linseed. The assessee claimed that against the profit made by it in the cloth business in the year of assessment 1949-50 should be set off the losses suffered in the speculation business which were brought forward from the preceding year. It was claimed by the assessee that the cloth business and the business in speculation in gold, silver, cotton, shares, hessian and linseed constituted the same business. The income-tax authorities negatived the contention raised by the assessee. The assessment proceedings were brought before the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, and Mr. Aggarwal the Judicial Member and Mr. Malhotra the Accountant Member, constituting the Tribunal, disagreed in their conclusion on the question raised before them. Mr. Aggarwal was of the view that the speculation business and the cloth business constituted the same business within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act. He observed:

"Taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration I am firmly of the opinion that the speculation business carried on by the assessee is 'the same business' within the meaning of section 24(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act and the loss carried forward must be adjusted against the assessee's profit under the head 'profits and gains of business, profession or vocation.'"

In Mr. Malhotra's view, the speculation business carried on by the assessee had no concern with the normal cloth business conducted by it. In view of the difference of opinion between the two members, the matter was referred to the President of the Tribunal who agreed with the conclusion of Mr. Malhotra. He held that the assessee had failed to prove that the speculation business carried on by it was the same business as the business in cloth, and observed that, if a finding was necessary, the cloth business and the speculation business were "not one and the same business in spite of the trivial connection pointed out by the assessee". We may point out that whereas the two members of the Tribunal expressed their respective opinions on the question whether the cloth business and the business in speculation carried on by the assessee could be regarded as one and the same business, the President decided the appeal primarily on the view that the burden lay upon the assessee to establish that the speculation business was the same business as the cloth business carried on by it and that burden was not discharged by the assessee, and observed that if it was necessary for him to express an opinion he would agree with the view taken by Mr. Malhotra.

In this reference Mr. Kolah for the assessee has strenuously contended that all the usual indicia which are regarded as determinative of "same business" within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act are found present in this case by all the three members of the Tribunal, and that Mr. Malhotra and the President were in error in coming to the conclusion that on those indicia the cloth business and the business in speculation carried on by the assessee did not constitute one and the same business.

Normally where the assessee carries on two different lines of business, it is a question of fact whether they constitute two separate and distinct businesses or whether they are in truth branches or departments of one and the same business. It is true that the conclusion of the Tribunal, which is founded on no evidence or which is unreasonable or perverse, may not be regarded as binding even if it is apparently on a question of fact. Again, if the question is one of legal inference to be drawn from facts proved, it may be regarded as a question of law.

The test for ascertaining whether two lines of business conducted by the same assessee constitute the same business or distinct businesses was happily expressed by Mr. Justice Rowlatt in *Scales v. George Thompson & Co., Ltd.*¹ The learned Judge observed (p. 89):

"...the real question is, was there any inter-connection, any interlacing, any inter-dependence, any unity at all embracing those two businesses;..."

In considering a similar question in Scales' case, Mr. Justice Rowlatt observed that he could not conceive of two businesses that could be more easily separated than the two which were conducted by the assessee in that case. He pointed out that both the businesses had something to do with ships and that was all that could be said about them. He then observed (p. 89):

"...One does not depend upon the other; they are not interlaced; they do not dovetail into each other, except that the people who are in them know about ships; but the actual conduct of the business shows no dovetailing of the one into the other at all. They might stop the underwriting; it does not affect the ships. They might stop the ships and it does not affect the underwriting. They might carry on underwriting in a country where there were no ships, except that it would not be commercially convenient; but the two things have nothing whatever to do with one another."

The learned Judge also pointed out that the method of book-keeping did not seem to him to throw any light upon the matter at all.

Mr. Aggarwal in the reasons in support of his order observed that the cloth business and the speculation business conducted by the assessee constituted the same business and that was clear from the following six factors:

(i) That only one set of accounts was maintained; i.e., in the set of books maintained for the assessee's cloth business the dealings in speculation were also entered. There was one Cash Book and the bank accounts were also the same both for the dealings in cloth as well as in speculation. Receipts either from the assessee's dealings in cloth or from speculation were deposited in these books and similarly withdrawals for purposes of payment either in regard to dealings in cloth or dealings in speculation were made from these books and accounts:

(ii) That the speculation business as well as the dealings in cloth were carried on from the assessee's shop in Champa Galli in the name of Shah Dayabhai Sobharam:

(iii) That the business was carried on with the help of the same staff:

(iv) That the capital employed for both the businesses was the same:

(v) That the receipts in respect of one business were utilised for purposes of the other business indiscriminately and vice versa: and

(v) That the items of overheads and other expenses were common.

In the view of Mr. Aggarwal, all these factors led to the inevitable inference that the two lines of business conducted by the assessee constituted the same business. In this view, it could not be said that merely because the nature of the speculation business was different from that of dealing in cloth that the two lines of business constituted separate businesses. Mr. Malhotra was of the view that the principal business of the assessee was the cloth business and that the speculation business was carried on by the assessee by debiting the funds to the cloth business, and merely because withdrawals were made from the cloth business for the purpose of the business in speculation it could not be said that there was identity between the two lines of business carried on by the assessee. He analysed the reasons given for drawing the inference from the six factors set out by Mr. Aggarwal and came to the conclusion that between the two lines of business conducted by the assessee there was no inter-connection, interlacing, inter-dependence or dovetailing or unity embracing the two lines. With this view, as we have already observed, the President appeared to agree. Prima facie it may appear that when the two members of the Tribunal agreed that there was no inter-connection, interlacing, inter-dependence or dovetailing of the two lines of business nor any unity in the conduct thereof, the finding recorded by the Tribunal is binding upon this Court: but we do not propose to rest our judgment merely on this view.

It is true that one set of books of account was maintained in respect of the two lines of business conducted in the name of Dayabhai Sobharam, and in that set of books of account entries were indiscriminately posted in respect of the cloth and the speculation transactions. Again, it appears that withdrawals of funds were made from the banking accounts and were allocated to the two lines of business. But the maintenance of one set of books of account will not necessarily lead to the inference that the two lines of business in respect of which entries are made in the books of account are the same business. It may be possible for an assessee to conduct two independent businesses having no connection with each other and post entries in respect thereof in one set of books of account. The posting of entries in the same set of books of account does not justify the inference that the two lines of business constitute the same business, nor does the circumstance that the source from which the monies were obtained for conducting the two lines of business was common lead to the inference that the two lines of business must be regarded as one and the same business.

By s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act, as it stood before its amendment by the Finance Act, 1955, it was in so far as it is material provided:

"Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year, being a previous year not earlier than the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, in any business, profession or vocation, and the loss cannot be wholly set off under sub-section (1), so much of the loss as is not so set off... shall be carried forward to the following year and set off against the profits and gains, if any, of the assessee from the same business, profession or vocation for that year..."

It is evident that under this section the losses incurred by the assessee in his business in any year may, if unabsorbed, be carried forward to the following year and be set off against the profits and gains of the assessee from the "same business" for that year, but not of any distinct business. It is true that the circumstance that accounts were maintained in the same set of books in respect of two different lines of business may have to be considered in the context of the other circumstances, but, in our judgment, that is not decisive. The speculation business and the cloth business were, it is true, primarily conducted from the assessee's shop at Champa Galli in the name of Shah Dayabhai Sobharam, but, here again, that circumstance does not establish any inter-connection between the two businesses conducted from the same shop. It also appears that in carrying on the speculation business some assistance of the staff employed in the cloth business may have been obtained; but in the view of the President of the Tribunal this assistance must have been "trivial". In our view, even if some assistance was obtained from the staff maintained for the cloth business, that is not a circumstance which establishes an inter-connection or inter-dependence between the two lines of business. The source of the capital which was employed for the two lines of business was undoubtedly the same; and the receipts in respect of the business in cloth and the speculation business went into that source and from that source monies were withdrawn indiscriminately, and even the overhead charges and the other expenses in the two lines of business were regarded by the members of the Tribunal as common. It is true that these circumstances may, in a proper case, together with other circumstances, justify an inference that the two lines of business constituted one and the same business. But we are unable to hold that because these circumstances are found present it must follow that the two lines of business conducted by the assessee were parts of the same business. The Court must in each case ascertain whether, in view of the existence of these circumstances, unity between the two lines of business is established: and we fail to find from the circumstances referred to in the present case any such unity. Though not a conclusive test, an important test, viz., whether one of the two businesses conducted by the assessee could be stopped without affecting the texture or framework of the other, may properly be applied in this case. It was possible for the assessee to close the cloth business and to conduct exclusively the speculation business and the texture or framework of the speculation business would not have been affected thereby: and by the closure of the speculation business the texture or framework of the cloth business could not have been affected. Again, the nature of the two lines of business conducted by the assessee are not the same. The only similarity—if it can be called similarity—between the two lines of business is that one of the items of the speculation business was cotton whereas the other business conducted by the assessee was of cloth. The cloth business was, it appears, a business of purchase and sale of ready commodity, and the other business which the assessee was conducting was of forward dealings in gold, silver, linseed, hessian, shares and seeds. The nature of the two lines of business was entirely independent of each other, and there was no unity between the two lines of business conducted by the assessee. The financing of the two lines of business from the same source, conducting of the business from the same shop and attendance to the business by the same owner or with the aid of the same staff do not by themselves establish the necessary unity which would constitute the same business.

Mr. Kolah for the assessee cited a large number of decisions in support of his contention that the circumstances which are found in this case were present in the cases cited by him and that in those cases it was held that the two lines of business conducted by the assessee in those cases were the same business. It would be fruitless, however, to enter upon a detailed analysis and comparison of the facts on which the various cases cited before us at the Bar were decided. The decisions in those cases evidently proceeded upon inferences drawn from facts found proved by the Income-tax Tribunals. It may be sufficient to observe that in none of the cases cited any particular circumstance or set of circumstances was held decisive of the question whether two or more lines of business conducted by an assessee constituted the same business within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act. We may make a brief reference to the cases cited at the Bar which have, it is evident, been decided on a collective appreciation of the facts and circumstances of the cases and not on the application of any general principle.

The first case, which was referred to by Mr. Kolah, was *Okidambaram Chettiar v. Commr. of Inc.-tax, Madras*². In that case, a money-lending business carried on by the assessee at Karaikudi in British India and another similar business carried on by him in the Federated Malay States at Penang were regarded as the same business because the business operations abroad were conducted in the same manner as they were conducted in India. It was found that even though a separate set of books of account were maintained for the business conducted abroad, copies of the day-book were periodically despatched to the headquarters, there was frequent correspondence between the agents abroad and the assessee who asked for particulars and explanations and issued instructions regarding the conduct of the business, and there was a flow of remittance both ways according to the needs of the business and the final trading result was brought into the accounts at the headquarters at the end of the year. This, according to the Court, presented a picture of a trading organization inter-connected as head office and branch office with financial inter-dependence and unity of control. If, on the facts found proved in that case, the Court came to the conclusion that there was a trading organization which was inter-connected and there was a financial inter-dependence and unity of control between the businesses conducted by the assessee at home and abroad, evidently the business, on the test which we have set out earlier, must be regarded as the same business.

In *Rekhabchand Sarogi v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*³, Mr. Justice Manohar Lall, who delivered the principal judgment of the Court, observed that the capital employed in the business of the assessee was the same, that the accounts of the business were mixed up, that the items of expenditure were interwoven, that the overhead expenses were common, that the registered firm was carrying on business as merchants and that, therefore, he was free to conclude that the registered firm by engaging in speculation in different commodities such as hardware, cement, rice, wheat, yarn, salt, grain and hessian was not entering into different businesses. Here again, the conclusion of the Court is founded upon the existence of interweaving in many respects between the different lines of business conducted by a firm of merchants.

In Govindram Bros. v. Comr. of Income-tax,⁴ the assessee-company was carrying on since its incorporation speculation in various commodities in several markets, and the business was conducted in the same premises, by the same staff, and with the aid of the same accounts, and when the assessee-company sought to set off the loss under s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act, it was held by this Court that speculation in cotton was the same business as speculation in silver and that the assessee-company was entitled to set off the loss in speculation in silver carried forward from the assessment year 1940-41 against the profits from speculation in cotton in the assessment year 1941-42 under s. 24(2). Delivering the supplementary judgment of the Court, Mr. Justice Chagla, as he then was, observed that speculation by itself was not a nexus that connected the silver business with the cotton business conducted by the assessee and that what would make those businesses into one business was not the factor of speculation or the fact that the assessee did not take delivery of those commodities and did forward business, but some other inter-connection or a nexus which had to be found independently of the speculative character of those businesses. It appears that the learned Judge, though with some reluctance, agreed on the facts with the view taken by Sir Leonard Stone, Chief Justice, that the business in speculation in cotton and speculation in silver conducted by the assessee was the same business. This case is evidently no authority for the proposition that certain facts found proved must inevitably lead to the inference that two sets of business conducted by an assessee are or are not the same business.

In *Hiralal Kalyanmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay*⁵, the assessee was conducting the business of a selling agent of a textile mill and also the business of banking and speculation in cotton and cotton jatha business. For these businesses the assessee maintained separate books of account. It was held by the income-tax authorities that the two businesses conducted by the assessee were separate and disallowed certain expenses incurred by the assessee in collecting the outstandings of the cotton jatha business in computing the profits of the other business: and it was held by the Court that the question whether the two businesses conducted by the assessee were separate businesses or were in reality two branches of the same business was a question of fact and that there was no evidence in that case on which the income-tax authorities could come to the conclusion recorded by them. We may observe that this case did not arise under s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act, nor did the Court come to the conclusion that any particular facts or circumstances proved in the case must necessitate the inference of existence of the same business or of separate businesses.

In *K. S. S. Soundrapandia Nadar v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*⁶, the assessee was conducting business in grain and rice at Tuticorin in British India and was purchasing certain goods at Rangoon through his agents. He also entered into forward contracts in respect of those goods through his agents at Rangoon. The agents sent to the assessee from time to time statements of account in respect of these transactions in a separate folio in the same account books at Tuticorin. The financing of all the transactions was from Tuticorin and the control of all the transactions was under a single management. The Court on these facts held that the transactions in forward contracts carried on by the assessee in the Rangoon grain market were a part of the general business of the assessee as a dealer in rice and grain and that the assessee was, therefore, entitled to set off the loss against the profits under s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act. We may point out that Mr. Justice Viswanatha Sastri, who delivered the supplementary judgment of the Court, on a review of the evidence came to the conclusion that the business was conducted by the same person, through the same agency, with the same funds, both with reference to the dealings in futures and forward contracts as well as ready goods, that the speculations in futures were entered into with a view to increase the profits of the business and also perhaps to impress the commercial public in Rangoon and command credit facilities and that the speculations were merely ancillary to the ready goods business and they converged to the same point, namely, the earning of profits as a result of the rice and grains business. It was evident from the finding of the Court that the speculation business was ancillary to the principal business in rice and grains and, therefore, the two lines were regarded as the same business. This case also does not seem to lay down any principle of general application.

The two members of the Tribunal have, in the present case, negatived the existence of inter-connection, interlacing or inter-dependence between the two businesses conducted by the assessee. They have also negatived the existence of a unity of control and that finding is based on evidence. As we have already pointed out, the closure of one of the two businesses would not have affected the texture or framework of the other business. Having regard to these facts, we do not think that any case is made out which would justify us in holding that the majority view taken by the Tribunal was erroneous. On the view taken by us, the answers to the questions† referred will be:

† (1) "Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the business carried on in speculation and in cloth constitute one and the same business?"

(2) Whether there was any evidence to justify the Tribunal's finding that speculation business and the cloth business were separate businesses and/or whether the Tribunal misdirected itself in law in coming to that conclusion?

(3) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the assessee was entitled to set off against the profits from the cloth business in the year of account the losses of Rs. 3,57,403 (Rupees three lacs fifty seven thousand four hundred and three) and Rs. 68,719 (Rupees Sixty six thousand seven hundred and nineteen) in the speculation business brought forward from the preceding years of account?"

(1) That the business in speculation and the cloth business conducted by the assessee did not constitute one and the same business:

(2) that there was evidence to justify the Tribunal's finding that the speculation business and the business in cloth were two separate businesses, and the Tribunal has not misdirected itself in law in coming to that conclusion: and

(3) On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessee was not entitled to set off against the profits from the cloth business in the year of account the losses of Rs. 8,57,403 and Rs. 66,719 in the speculation business brought forward from the preceding years of account.

The assessee to pay the costs of the reference to the Commissioner of Income-tax.

S. T. DESAI J. This reference raises the rather vexed question of the connotation and meaning of the expression "the same business" in s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act in the context of set-off of losses in computing the aggregate income of an assessee. No specific criterion, no infallible rule—inclusive or exclusive, no test of universal application is to be expected in respect of a question which is largely one of fact. It has been said that we have to look at the nexus in determining whether two sets of business operations conducted by a person can or cannot be said to be the same business. Emphasis has sometimes been laid on the place where the business is carried on, or the mode or method of carrying on the business, or the source from which the capital employed in the business has flown and other similar facts which indubitably have relevance in their own setting, and at times are of considerable importance. But, as I have already stated, it is impossible to expect any general test which can be applied in all circumstances and to all facts. Therefore, what we have to do in this case is to find out whether looking at the facts already found by the Tribunal it can broadly be said that the business of the assessee was or was not the same business as found by the Tribunal. I may repeat that the question is largely one of fact, though, of course, a Reference to Court is permissible, and indeed allowed, when it appears to the Court that the finding of the Tribunal was without any evidence to support it or that no proper legal inference had been drawn from proved facts or if the Court is satisfied that the Tribunal had misdirected itself in law. The facts leading up to this Reference and the somewhat chequered history of the case have been succinctly set out by my brother and it is not necessary for me to reiterate the same: nor is it necessary for me to set out in this judgment the six factors which found favour with the Judicial Member of the Tribunal and led him to the conclusion that in this case the business conducted by the assessee was "the same business" within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act. I shall very briefly refer to those six factors, which Mr. Kolah, learned counsel for the assessee, has very strongly relied upon and indeed urged as decisive of the case. The argument has been that these six factors were not properly appreciated by the majority of the members of the Tribunal as was done by the Judicial Member when the matter first came up before the Tribunal.

The first factor relied on by Mr. Kolah is that the assessee maintained only one set of books of account. A person may indulge in numerous distinct, separate and wholly unconnected businesses and may choose to keep his accounts in one set of books, even if he follows the mercantile system of accounts. There is no obligation on him to maintain separate sets of books of account in respect of his separate business activities or operations. This factor no doubt may be of cogency and even of particular importance in a given case. But that does not mean that it has to be looked upon as of such importance that it can lead the Court to the conclusion which it is asked to reach.

The second factor very strongly and strenuously pressed for our acceptance by Mr. Kolah is that the assessee carried on his speculation business as well as his business in cloth at the same place, viz., at his shop in Champa Galli. A cloth merchant may from his office or shop give instructions for purchase or sale of commodities or shares or securities on a very large scale: but that does not mean that he is carrying on that business from that very shop. At the time of giving instructions he merely happens to be there. In a case of this nature, viz., where speculation is carried on in several commodities, the place from which instructions are given, or the place where instructions are received, or the place where the statements of accounts and ankadas are received, or even the place where the merchant keeps the record of his speculation transactions is not of any particular importance. In a loose sense, it may be said to be the place where he carries on his business, but that certainly is not a factor to which any importance can be attached.

Then there is the factor of the same staff being employed in respect of the speculation business and the business in cloth carried on by the assessee. It is not possible to attach any particular importance to this factor also in view of the nature of the two businesses. Very little work, if any, had to be done by the staff employed for the cloth business which, it is said, also helped in the speculation business.

Then there is the factor of the capital employed for both the businesses being the same. There can be cases in which the employment of capital in the businesses may have some bearing on the determination of the question. But in the present case I do not see how the assessee can rely on the factor that it was the same capital which was employed in both the businesses. In the speculative business, which consisted of forward transactions, he received profits and paid-off losses in respect of that business with his own monies, and it was with his own monies that he carried on the cloth business. Therefore, the source of the capital employed in the two businesses cannot have any particular importance in the present case.

Then there are the last two elements relied on by Mr. Kolah. They relate to receipt of monies and over-head expenses. The factor of receipt of money has little bearing on the question before us; and the payment of overhead charges also has hardly any bearing on the point when we are dealing with a speculation business of the nature carried on by the assessee.

It has been argued by the learned counsel for the assessee that these six are all tests which have been applied by Courts in numerous cases in determining the question of the nature involved in this case and should be considered not separately but together. I agree that these are all relevant factors to be taken into consideration, though I do not regard them as tests: it is their cumulative effect that should weigh in the ultimate determination of the question. Of course, it would not be a correct approach to put them in a series of separate compartments and see whether each of them by itself cannot pass the test of inter-connection and unity of business. This test of inter-connection and unity of business was emphasised by Rowlatt, J. in Scales v. George Thompson & Co. Ltd.,¹ and his observations in that case have now become locus classicus (p. 89):

“...I think the real question is, was there any inter-connection, any interlacing, any inter-dependence, any unity at all embracing those two businesses;...”

In that case, a similar question arose in respect of business activities of a limited company which engaged in ship-owning and underwriting, and the view was taken that the operations of ship-owning and underwriting did not constitute one business but were two separate businesses. The celebrated dictum of Rowlatt J. has been referred to practically in every case decided by Courts in India under s. 24, and affords guidance to the Court in determining the question. The emphasis, as I read this passage, is on the element of unity embracing the two businesses. The inter-connection, the interlacing or the inter-dependence must be real—one of substance—and such as would go to establish the unity of the business. An examination of the short judgment of the learned Judge in that case and the facts of that case go to show that it was the nature of the two business activities which weighed with the Court in deciding the question. In the same judgment, the learned Judge also observed (p. 89):

"...I cannot conceive two businesses that could be more easily separated than those two. They both have something to do with ships; that is all that can be said about them. One does not depend upon the other; they are not interlaced; they do not dovetail into each other, except that the people who are in them know about ships; but the actual conduct of the business shows no dovetailing of the one into the other at all. They might stop the ships and it does not affect the underwriting."

Having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, I would prefer to lay stress on the nature of the two businesses. In determining the question whether two businesses can be called the same business or not, consideration must be directed to the concordant activities, if any, and to the basic singleness, if any, of the two businesses. If the activities are diverse and distinct and there is no basic oneness in the nature of the two businesses, then it cannot be said that they are the same business for the purpose of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act.

Our attention was drawn by the learned counsel for the assessee to a number of decisions which have already been examined by my brother. I do not see anything in those cases which lends support to the argument pressed for our acceptance by Mr. Kolah. I shall make only one observation on those cases. From an examination of those cases it does emerge that the nature of the two businesses must in some way be shown to be connected: and in the case before us it is extremely difficult to see how the nature of the cloth business was connected with the nature of the business in speculation carried on by the assessee.

Here are two businesses conducted by the assessee with his own capital, and I shall assume that they were conducted from the same place, viz., his cloth shop in Champa Galli, which is one of the centres of cloth trade in Bombay. He is maintaining one set of books of account. In substance and reality, that is all there is to it. The other so-called factors are hardly of any importance. On the other hand, it is clear that in no sense one business depended on the other, unless the financial capacity of the assessee was to be taken into consideration. That certainly is not a relevant factor. There is no element of unity save the object of making profit. That, again, is not a factor which is relevant to the question before us. There was no interlacing and no blending of the two businesses which were totally diverse and distinct commercial operations. The nature of the two businesses, I may repeat, was wholly different. On these facts, it is extremely difficult to say that the majority of the members of the Tribunal were in error when they held against the assessee. Moreover, in this reference we are not making an enquiry as to whether the Tribunal was right or was in error in the conclusion reached by it. We have only to satisfy ourselves whether there was any evidence on which the Tribunal could have reached the conclusion drawn by it. It is not possible to say that the Tribunal has failed to draw any proper legal inference from the proved facts of this case, nor is it possible to say that it has misdirected itself in law on any point. I agree that the answers to the three questions should be as stated by my learned brother.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY I, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 23A—Proper order under s. 23A when may be passed—Net commercial profits how to be ascertained—Tax to be deducted from commercial profits whether to be computed on commercial profits.

Under s. 23A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, (as it stood before its amendment by the Finance Act, 1955), it is for the Income-tax Officer to ascertain, having regard to the profits, the anticipated amount of tax which would have to be deducted to find out the net commercial profits, in the light of all the circumstances then present to his mind, and thereafter to relate the same to the amount of dividend declared. If, having regard to the net commercial profits so ascertained, it appeared to the Income-tax Officer that it would not be unreasonable to distribute sixty per cent. of such income as dividend amongst the shareholders, an order under s. 23A of the Act may properly be passed.

Commr. of Inc.-tax v. F. L. Smidth & Co., referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. A. Palkhivala, for the applicants-assesseees.

G. N. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee is a private limited company. For the year of account 1949-50 according to the balance-sheet a net profit of Rs. 3,367 resulted in the business of the assessee. The assessee distributed Rs. 12,800 as dividend to the shareholders. In the assessment proceedings the Income-tax Officer assessed the assessable income of the assessee at Rs. 1,37,693. The Income-tax Officer disallowed to the assessee Rs. 55,459 included for excess provision for bonus for the year under reference, Rs. 33,000 for under-valuation of stock and Rs. 20,433 for excess provision for bonus for 1947-48 and 1948-49. He also disallowed Rs. 45,020 on charity account and Rs. 1,053 on Diwali account and made a slight adjustment in respect of the claim for depreciation. Finding that the assessee had not distributed as dividend sixty per cent. of the assessable income less the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the assessee, the Income-tax Officer passed an order under s. 23A of the Income-tax Act. Against that order an appeal was preferred to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, and the matter was ultimately brought before the Tribunal. The Tribunal observed that in considering whether an order under s. 23A may be passed against the assessee the Income-tax Officer ought to have regard to the commercial profits and not the assessable profits. The Tribunal assessed the commercial profits of the assessee, as at the date on which the amount of dividend was resolved to be distributed, at Rs. 56,800. Computing on that amount a tax liability of Rs. 19,325, the Tribunal held that Rs. 37,475 were the net commercial profits of the assessee for the year under reference and sixty per cent. of that amount being Rs. 22,485 and as the assessee had distributed as dividend only Rs. 12,800, an order under s. 23A of the Income-tax Act was properly passed by the income-tax authorities.

In this reference, Mr. Palkhivala for the assessee has contended firstly that the Tribunal was in error in estimating the tax liability of the assessee, while assessing the net commercial profits, at Rs. 19,325, and, secondly, that the Tribunal was in error in adding the amount of Rs. 20,433 standing to the credit of the bonus provision account to the net profit of Rs. 3,367 in ascertaining the profit available for declaration of dividend.

Section 23A of the Income-tax Act, as it stood before its amendment by the Finance Act, 1955, in so far as it is material, provided by the first sub-section:

ference No. 44 of 1958.

"Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that in respect of any previous year the profits and gains distributed as dividends by any company up to the end of the sixth month after its accounts for that previous year are laid before the company in general meeting are less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company of that previous year, as reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof, he shall, unless he is satisfied that having regard to losses incurred by the company in earlier years or to the smallness of the profit made, the payment of a dividend or a larger dividend than that declared would be unreasonable, make...an order in writing that the undistributed portion of the assessable income of the company of that previous year as computed for income-tax purposes and reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof shall be deemed to have been distributed as dividends amongst the shareholders as at the date of the general meeting aforesaid..."

The object of the section is to prevent the avoidance of liability to pay super-tax by the shareholders of companies in which the public are not substantially interested. Income-tax paid by the company on its profits is by s. 49B of the Act deemed to be paid on behalf of the shareholders, but the shareholders have to pay super-tax on dividends received by them even if the company has paid super-tax out of its profits. The rates of super-tax applicable to companies are substantially lower than the rates applicable to other assesseees. Lest by the expedient of not distributing the dividends and converting the accumulated profits into capital and distributing the same as bonus shares, the higher rate of super-tax may be avoided, the Legislature enacted this section. The provisions of the section are in terms (subject to an exception to be presently noticed) mandatory, if the condition that the profits and gains distributed as dividends are less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income reduced by the income-tax and super-tax payable by the company is fulfilled. The Income-tax Officer has, however, a discretion not to make an order if he is satisfied, having regard to the losses incurred by the company in the earlier years, or to the smallness of the profits made, that the payment of a larger dividend would be unreasonable.

It is undisputed that the Income-tax Officer assessed the total profits of the assessee at Rs. 1,37,693, and the tax payable in respect thereof was Rs. 49,689. Sixty per cent. of the balance considerably exceeded the total dividend declared by the assessee, and Mr. Palkhivala for the assessee has not contended that the case is one in which the primary condition about the inadequate distribution of profits or income as dividends was not satisfied. But he contends that even if the primary condition is fulfilled, the Income-tax Officer had to consider whether, having regard to the smallness of the profits made, payment of a larger dividend than the one declared would be unreasonable. Mr. Palkhivala says that having regard to the smallness of the profits made by the assessee it would, in the circumstances of the present case, be unreasonable to declare a larger dividend.

It is now well settled that the expression "profit made" in s. 23A, sub-s. (1), means commercial profits and not assessable profits. In *Commr. of Inc.-tax v. F. L. Smidth & Co.*¹, a Division Bench of this Court (to which my learned brother was a party) held that in considering the smallness of the profits made by a company the profits that the Income-tax Officer had to consider were not the total income referred to in s. 23A(1) but the actual profits from a commercial point of view. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal has (as it was bound to) followed that view and has, in para. 6 of its judgment, proceeded to assess the commercial profit of the assessee at Rs. 56,800. But that was evidently the gross commercial profit of the assessee as at the date on which the general meeting for resolving upon the distribution of dividend was held. Out of this amount the Tribunal purported to deduct Rs. 19,325, being the appropriate tax payable in respect of an income of Rs. 56,800. In our view, in making a deduction of Rs. 19,325 only for tax liability the Tribunal was in error. The income-tax payable by an assessee does not bear any definite relation to his commercial profits. Even if the assessee has made payments which he is not entitled to deduct in ascertaining the assessable income, the commercial profits are to that extent depleted. It would, therefore, in our judgment, be an error to deduct merely the amount of tax computed on the commercial profits to ascertain the profits made. Before the Tribunal it was contended that out of the commercial profits the total amount of tax payable by the assessee should be deducted. The Tribunal was of the view that the assessee must adopt one of two methods, viz., (i) to deduct from the assessable income the amount of tax paid and thereafter to ask the Income-tax Officer to ascertain whether the profits were so small that an order under s. 23A (1) need not be passed, or (ii) to confine itself to the circumstances existing at the date on which the general meeting was held and to take the commercial profits as the basis and to deduct therefrom the appropriate tax payable on the profits so ascertained. But the question is, in our judgment, not of any option vested in the assessee. The Income-tax Officer has to exercise his powers subject to the limitations prescribed by s. 23A. The first condition of which he must be satisfied is that the profits and gains distributed by the assessee as dividend amongst the shareholders is less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable in respect thereof. Even if this condition is satisfied, if, having regard to the losses sustained in the previous years or to the smallness of the profits made, it would be unreasonable to distribute a dividend larger than the one declared, the Income-tax Officer will not pass the order that the undistributed portion of the assessable income shall be deemed to be distributed as dividends. It was, therefore, for the Income-tax Officer to ascertain, having regard to the profits, the anticipated amount of tax which would have to be deducted to find out the net commercial profits, in the light of all the circumstances then present to his mind, and then to relate the same to the amount of dividend declared. If, having regard to the net commercial profits so ascertained, it appeared to the Income-tax Officer that it would not be unreasonable to distribute sixty per cent. of such income as dividend amongst the shareholders, an order under s. 23A of the Income-tax Act may properly be made. In the present case, the Tribunal having proceeded to deduct only Rs. 19,325, which was the amount of tax payable on the income of Rs. 56,800, in our view, an error has been committed in confirming the order passed by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23A of the Act.

Mr. Palkhivala contends that even the commercial profits ascertained by the Tribunal were erroneously ascertained. According to him, the commercial profits of the assessee amounted to Rs. 86,367 and no more, and the amount of Rs. 20,433 under the head "bonus excess provision credited to the profit and loss account" was wrongly included in the commercial profits. This argument of Mr. Palkhivala we are unable to accept. The assessee had year after year been setting apart certain amounts towards liability likely to arise for payment of bonus to the labourers employed in its factory. Normally the assessee used to set apart every year an amount approximately equivalent to three months' salary payable to the employees. It appears, however, that in 1947-48 the provision made on this account exceeded the amount actually paid as bonus by Rs. 218-5-6; in the year 1948-49 it exceeded by Rs. 3,972-12-6 and in the year 1949-50 the provision made on this account exceeded the actual liability by Rs. 16,241-12-3. At the commencement of the year 1950-51 the assessee had an accumulated balance of Rs. 20,432-14-3 in the bonus provision account and it set apart an amount of Rs. 1,00,000 towards the contingent liability for payment of bonus to its employees in that year. The employees had claimed an amount equivalent to four months' salary as bonus. The dispute was taken to the Industrial Court and ultimately by order, dated February 28, 1951, an award was made whereby the liability of the assessee to pay bonus to its employees for that year was restricted approximately to half the amount set apart. But in assessing its commercial profits the assessee sought to deduct the entire amount of Rs. 1,00,000. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal held, having regard to the claim made by the employees, that the assessee did not act unreasonably in setting apart Rs. 1,00,000 towards the contingent liability for bonus, but it was of the view that the assessee should have taken into consideration the accumulated amount of Rs. 20,432 odd before setting aside an additional amount to meet that contingent liability. The Tribunal, therefore, added the amount of Rs. 20,432-14-3 to the profits for the year under account and computed the commercial profits on that footing. In our view, the Tribunal was right in so doing. If there was an undisbursed residue of Rs. 20,432-14-3 in the bonus provision account, and the assessee was faced with a claim for bonus which was not defined but the extent whereof was estimated at Rs. 1,00,000, the assessee was bound to take into account the amount lying accumulated and to make a provision during the year of account only for the balance. Mr. Palkhivala contends that the amount of Rs. 20,432-14-3 did not represent the accumulated amounts of excess in the bonus provision account out of the sums set apart during the previous years, but it represented amounts which were due and payable as bonus to the employees but which were for certain reasons not received by them. No such argument, however, appears to have been raised before the Tribunal, and we do not think we will be justified in allowing Mr. Palkhivala to raise this new plea for the first time before us.

Mr. Joshi for the Department contends in the first instance that the expression "profit made" occurring in s. 23A(1) of the Income-tax Act means the gross profits realised by the assessee without deducting the amount of tax payable. But evidently s. 23A is enacted with a view to prevent accumulation of large amounts of profits without distribution of adequate dividends: and dividends can only be distributed after deducting the amount of tax payable from the assessable income. It is only after the tax payable by the assessee is deducted from the assessable income that there will be a net profit remaining with the assessee distributable as dividend amongst the shareholders. If the view contended for by Mr. Joshi were to be accepted, the assessee may have to pay dividend out of its reserve. We are, therefore, unable to accept the argument that the expression "profit made" occurring in s. 23A(1) is the gross commercial profit without deducting the amount of tax payable.

Mr. Joshi has then contended that the amount of tax deductible out of the commercial profits must be appropriate to its quantum. That argument also we are unable to accept. As we have already observed, the commercial profits bear no real relation to the assessable profits, and the tax is payable on the assessable profits and not on the commercial profits.

Mr. Joshi has finally contended that in any event the assessee may be entitled to deduct from the gross commercial profits only such amount as tax as he could, having regard to its transactions, have anticipated as likely to be imposed by the income-tax authorities and not the total amount of tax which may ultimately be assessed. That argument, in our judgment, has substance. If, with a view to provide for contingent liabilities, the assessee has appropriated a certain amount, evidently the tax which he must have anticipated as likely to be imposed on him will have to be computed after excluding from its gross profits the amount so set apart. The assessee cannot contend that in assessing the net commercial profits the whole of the amount so set apart for meeting contingent liabilities should be deducted whereas in assessing the tax which he must have reasonably expected as payable by him the total amount of tax assessed by the income-tax authorities should be deducted.

The Tribunal has held that the net commercial profits made by the assessee during the year under account amounted to Rs. 37,475. That, for reasons set out earlier, is erroneous. We are unable, on the materials before us, to ascertain the amount of tax which may have been reasonably anticipated by the assessee as likely to be assessed having regard to its transactions at the date on which the dividend was declared at the general meeting, viz., July 25, 1950. In that view of the case, we are unable to answer the question which has been framed by the Tribunal. We, therefore, remand the case to the Tribunal with a direction that the Tribunal do submit a supplementary statement of the case setting out the appropriate amount of income-tax deductible out of the amount of Rs. 56,800 and which the assessee may have reasonably anticipated as likely to be assessed after taking into consideration the profit made by it and the contingent liability for payment of bonus to the employees of its factory. The supplementary statement to be submitted before December 31, 1959.

ONKARMAL MEGHRAJ v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY I, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act (I of 1959), Secs. 2, 4—Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 34—Notice issued under s. 34 after April 1, 1956, whether can be challenged on ground that notice not issued within period prescribed by un-amended s. 34(1)(a)—Such notice issued before April 1, 1956, whether affected by bar of limitation prescribed under unamended s. 34(1)(a)—Interpretation of statute—Whether Statement of Objects and Reasons can be pressed into service in interpreting words in statute.

Under s. 4 of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1959, a notice issued under s. 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, after April 1, 1956, for reopening assessment cannot be called in question on the ground that the notice was not issued within the period prescribed by s. 34(1)(a) of the Indian Income-tax Act before its amendment by the Finance Act, 1956, but all other pleas which circumscribe the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer can be entertained. To a notice for assessment or re-assessment under s. 34(1)(a) issued before April 1, 1956, and to an assessment or reassessment pursuant to such notice, by s. 4 of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1959, the plea of a bar of limitation under s. 34 before it was amended by the Finance Act, 1956, cannot be entertained.

In interpreting the words used in a statute, especially when the words used are plain, the Statement of Objects and Reasons cannot be pressed into service. In construing a statute the Court may consider the legislative history, may also consider what was the understanding of the law prior to the amendment and may even ascertain what the defect sought to be remedied by enacting the amending Act was. But the Courts are not entitled to interpret the Act by assuming that the Legislature has effectuated the purpose which it had in mind as set out in the Objects and Reasons and has only effectuated that purpose and no other purpose.

The facts appear in the judgment.

SHAH J. This Reference substantially concerns two distinct assessments. One part of the reference relates to the assessment year 1944-45 in which eleven assesseees are interested and the other part relates to the assessment year 1943-44 in which the assessee Onkarmal Meghraj is interested. We are at this stage primarily concerned with the assessment of the following eleven assesseees:

*Decided, June 25, 1959. Income-tax Reference No. 54 of 1958.

1. Narayandas Pokermal
2. Govindram (s/o No. 1)
3. Bhagwandas -do-
4. Vasudeo -do-
5. Meghraj Pokermal
6. Onkarmal Meghraj (s/o No. 5)
7. Banarasilal -do-
8. Beniprasad -do-
9. Hanumandas Sewakram
10. Kedarnath (s/o No. 9)
11. Durgaprasad -do-.

Sixteen persons entered on May 19, 1930, into an agreement to conduct a business in partnership in the name of Messrs. Narayandas Kedarnath. Amongst these sixteen partners there were three sets of persons who constituted Hindu united families. Narayandas Pokermal and his three sons—Govindram, Bhagwandas and Vasudeo—constituted one Hindu united family; Meghraj Pokermal and his three sons—Onkarmal, Banarasilal and Beniprasad—constituted another Hindu united family and Hanumandas Sewakram and his four sons—Kedarnath, Banarasidas, Durgaprasad and Harkisondas—constituted the third Hindu united family. Beside these thirteen persons there were three strangers who were partners in the firm. For the assessment year 1944-45, the members of the original three Hindu united families made returns for income-tax in their status as individuals returning their respective shares in the income of the firm. The Income-tax Officer following his view in the previous year of assessment ordered that the firm of Narayandas Kedarnath be registered under s. 26A of the Income-tax Act and the total income be assessed in the hands of only six assesseees, viz. the three outsiders and the three Hindu united families of Narayandas Pokermal, Meghraj Pokermal and Hanumandas Sewakram and he closed the assessment of the remaining assesseees by declaring their cases as of "no assessment". Against the order passed by the Income-tax Officer, the three Hindu united families preferred appeals to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and claimed that the income of the sons of the respective Managers in the three Hindu united families be excluded from the family income as it belonged to those sons exclusively and was not the income of the Hindu united families to which they belonged. In support of their contention, they relied upon an agreement reached with the Income-tax Department for the assessment years 1939-40 to 1941-42 by which it was admitted that a partition had taken place in the three families on July 19, 1940. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner, following the decision of the Tribunal in respect of the profits from the firm for the assessment year 1943-44, directed the Income-tax Officer to quash the assessment of the three Hindu united families and to tax the income assessed in the hands of the Hindu united family in the hands of the separated members of the family entitled to receive the income. The Income-tax Officer purporting to exercise powers under s. 34 then issued notices to all the thirteen members of the original three Hindu united families for re-opening the assessment of the year 1944-45. These notices were issued in April 1954, after obtaining the Commissioner's approval for taking action under s. 34(1) read with s. 34(3) as amended by Act XVIII of 1953. For the purpose of these assessments, the assesseees Narayandas, Meghraj, Hanumandas and Beniprasad, respectively assesseees Nos. 1, 5, 9 and 8 in the table set out hereinbefore made their fresh returns in the status of individuals and the other assesseees made their returns in the status of Hindu united family. It may be observed that all the thirteen assesseees had submitted their original returns as individuals and the Income-tax Officer had assessed them in the status of Hindu united family. Against the order passed by the Income-tax Officer assessing the thirteen assesseees as separated members of the families entitled to receive their share of income from the firm in separate shares, appeals were preferred to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and that officer confirmed the order passed by the Income-tax Officer. In appeal to the Tribunal, the order passed by the Income-tax Officer was substantially confirmed. The Tribunal held that the notices issued by the Income-tax Officer in April 1954 were issued under s. 34(1)(a) read with s. 34(3) as amended by s. 18 of the Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953, and that the Act having retrospective operation as from April 1, 1952, the notices issued on the assesseees were within the period of eight years prescribed by s. 34(1)(a). They also held that the case of the other seven members who were appellants before them fell within s. 34(1) read with s. 34(3) of the Income-tax Act as amended. Accordingly, the Tribunal confirmed the order passed by the Revenue Authorities.

On applications made by these eleven assesseees, the Tribunal has referred the following question:

"Whether, having regard to the direction given by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in his order dated March 9, 1954, in the case of the appropriate Hindu undivided families and having regard to the second proviso to section 34(3) as amended by section 18 of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953, the reassessment made by the Income-tax Officer on January 31, 1955, in the case of any one or more of the assesseees, is governed by any limitation period such as mentioned in the substantive part of section 34(3)?"

In respect of the four assesseees, Narayandas, Meghraj, Beniprasad and Hanu-mandas, the Tribunal has referred the following question:

"Whether in the case of the assessee, the remedy available to the Income-tax Officer has already become time-barred under section 34 before that section was amended in 1953 with retrospective effect from April 1, 1952?"

Section 34(1) by the first sub-section, in so far as it is material, before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956 provided:

"If—

(a) the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that by reason of the omission or failure on the part of an assessee to make a return of his income under section 22 for any year or to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for that year, income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax have escaped assessment for that year, or have been underassessed, or assessed at too low a rate, or have been made the subject of excessive relief under the Act, or excessive loss or depreciation allowance has been computed, or

(b) notwithstanding that there has been no omission or failure as mentioned in clause (a) on the part of the assessee, the Income-tax Officer has in consequence of information in his possession reason to believe that income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax have escaped assessment for any year..."

he may in cases falling under cl. (a) at any time within eight years and in cases falling under cl. (b) at any time within four years of the end of that year, serve on the assessee or assesseees a notice under sub-s. (2) of s. 22 and may proceed to assess or re-assess all such income, profits or gains. By the Finance Act of 1956, the time limit of 8 years was omitted from sub-s. (1) in its application to cl. (a). It is evident that whereas before April 1, 1956, notice of assessment or reassessment could be issued under s. 34(1)(a) within eight years from the last day of the year of assessment to which the notice related, under the amendment made by the Finance Act, 1956, that notice could be issued at any time subject to certain conditions prescribed by the proviso incorporated in s. 34(1)—one of the important conditions being that the income which had escaped assessment was rupees one lakh or more.

Counsel for the assesseees contends that having regard to the circumstances of the case the conditions prescribed for the issue of a notice under s. 34(1)(a) are absent and the notices issued against the assesseees for reassessment are invalid. It is submitted that all the assesseees had made their returns containing full and true disclosure of all the material facts necessary for assessment of the income in the year 1944-45 and, therefore, notices under s. 34(1)(a) could not be issued for reopening the assessment and that the Tribunal was in error in holding that, because in the year 1954 some of the assesses had submitted fresh returns in their status as individuals, i.e. as separated members of the erstwhile Hindu united families, whereas in the earlier return they had made their returns as individuals, the assesses had omitted or failed to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for the assessment. It is not disputed that the assesses have in the fresh returns made by them made claims which were inconsistent with the claims made by them in the earlier returns. In the original returns made by the eleven assesses they had claimed that they were separated members and were partners of the firm in their individual rights. After the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner four out of the eleven assesses made their returns in the status of individuals, and the remaining in the status of Hindu united families. Even the four members made their returns claiming that they were sole coparceners in their families. In the view we take in this case we do not propose to express at this stage any opinion on the correctness of the view of the Tribunal in its order dated July 31, 1958, that the facts represented by all the eleven assesses were "diametrically opposed to the real state of affairs".

Counsel for the assesses contends that in any event the right to reopen the assessment was barred by limitation before the date on which fresh assessment was made, and that right cannot be revived by the subsequent amendment of the Act. The period of eight years from the last day of the year of assessment expired on March 31, 1958, and the notice for reopening the assessment was admittedly not issued before that date, and, therefore, the amendment of s. 34 by the Finance Act of 1956 may not authorise the Income-tax Officer to reassess the assesses, because the period during which the order of re-assessment may be made has expired. But Mr. Joshi contends that even if the period prescribed by s. 34(1) for issuing a notice of reassessment under cl. (a) had expired, the reassessment proceedings are validated by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1959 (Act I of 1959) which provides that in certain cases the issue of a notice under s. 34(1)(a) and the assessment or reassessment in consequence thereof shall not be called in question on the ground that the period prescribed in that behalf had expired. By s. 2 of Act I of 1959 sub-s. (4) has been added to s. 34 of the Income-tax Act. That sub-section reads as follows:

"A notice under clause (a) of sub-section (1) may be issued at any time notwithstanding that at the time of the issue of the notice the period of eight years specified in that sub-section before its amendment by clause (a) of section 18 of the Finance Act, 1956, (18 of 1956), had expired in respect of the year to which the notice relates."

Evidently, this provision is prospective in terms and a notice under s. 34(1)(a) may, since the enactment of Act I of 1959, be issued at any time notwithstanding that the period of eight years prescribed by sub-s. (1), cl. (a), before it was amended by Act of 1956 had expired. Presumably this provision was enacted with a view to supersede a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in which it was held that to a notice of assessment or reassessment issued under s. 34(1)(a) as amended by the Finance Act of 1956, when the period of eight years after the last day of the year of assessment to which the notice relates, had expired before the Finance Act of 1956 was enacted the plea of a bar of limitation could effectively be set up. By s. 4 of Act I of 1959 it was provided:

"No notice issued under clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 34 of the principal Act at any time before the commencement of this Act and no assessment, re-assessment or settlement made or other proceeding taken in consequence of such notice shall be called in question in any Court, tribunal or other authority merely on the ground that at the time the notice was issued or at the time the assessment or re-assessment was made, the time within which such notice should have been issued or the assessment or re-assessment should have been made under that section as in force before its amendment by clause (a) of section 18 of the Finance Act, 1956 (18 of 1956), had expired."

Whereas by s. 2 the Income-tax Officer was authorised to issue notice of assessment or re-assessment even if the period prescribed in that behalf by s. 34(1) before that section was amended by the Finance Act of 1956 had expired, by s. 4 it was inter alia enacted that a notice issued under s. 34(1)(a) at any time before the commencement of the Act I of 1959 could not be called in question on the ground that when the notice was issued, the time for issuing the notice before the clause was amended had expired. Counsel for the assesses contends that s. 4 was enacted with a view only to validate notices which had, even though the period of eight years from the last day of the assessment year had expired, been issued under sub-s. (1) of s. 34 as amended by the Finance Act of 1956. It is submitted that the expression "at any time" used in s. 4 means "at any time after the 1st of April 1956" and the words "clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 34" occurring in the first clause mean "clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 34 as amended by the Finance Act of 1956". Counsel stated that any other interpretation of the section is likely to give to s. 4 a wider retrospective operation than was intended by the Legislature and in effect to supersede certain other provisions of the Act which are not either expressly or by necessary implication amended by s. 4. Our attention was invited to the statement of objects and reasons for enacting this Act. Counsel says that in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, it was stated:

"It has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that in the absence of an express provision to that effect, the amended section cannot be applied to assessments which had become more than eight years old by April 1, 1956. The present Bill seeks to place this matter beyond doubt by an amendment to section 34 of the Act."

Mr. Palkhivala says that if that was the object of the Legislature, no wider effect should be given to the expression "at any time" and it will be only legitimate to restrict the connotation of that expression as submitted by him. The cardinal rule of interpretation of a statute is to read the words used by the Legislature in their ordinary natural and grammatical meaning; and it is only when context of the words used or the scheme of the statute justifies that course, the Court may be justified in cutting down the meaning of the words of the statute. In interpreting the words used in a statute, especially when the words are plain, the Statement of Objects and Reasons cannot be pressed into service. In construing a statute the Court may consider the legislative history, may also consider what was the understanding of the law prior to the amendment and may even ascertain what the defect sought to be remedied by enacting the amending Act was. But the Court is not entitled to interpret the Act by assuming that the Legislature has effectuated the purpose which it had in mind as set out in the Statement of Objects and Reasons and has only effectuated that purpose and no other purpose. The meaning of s. 2 of Act I of 1959 which incorporated sub-s. (4) in s. 34 of the Income-tax Act is fairly plain. A notice for assessment or re-assessment under sub-s. (1), cl. (a), of s. 34 after the amendment by Act I of 1959 may be issued at any time—even after the period of eight years prescribed by that sub-section before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956 has expired. By s. 4 notices issued before Act I of 1959 and assessment, reassessment, settlement and proceeding consequent upon such notices are saved from the bar of limitation prescribed by s. 34 before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956. The section in terms saves a notice under cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) issued "at any time" before the commencement of the Act, notwithstanding that at the time of issue of the notice the period prescribed by s. 34(1) before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956 had expired, and there is nothing in s. 4 or in s. 2 of Act I of 1959 nor has our attention been invited to any other provision of the Act which may support the contention that the words "at any time" used in s. 4 are used in a restricted sense as meaning "at any time after the 1st of April 1956"; nor is there any warrant for holding that the reference to cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 34 in the opening part of

s. 4 was only to the clause as amended by the Finance Act of 1956. Undoubtedly by the scheme of the Act or the context in which a provision occurs a statute in terms retrospective may be given only a limited retrospective operation. But we are unable to hold that there is anything in the amending Act which limits its retrospective operation. On the plain words used by the Legislature, a notice issued at any time under s. 34(1)(a) before the commencement of the Act and assessment or re-assessment made in consequence of such notice shall not be called in question on the ground that the notice was not issued or the assessment or re-assessment was not made within the prescribed period. Before s. 34 was amended by the Finance Act of 1956, assessment or re-assessment under s. 34(1)(a) could be made if a notice was issued within eight years from the last day of the year of assessment to which the notice related and under s. 34(3) an order for assessment could not be made after the expiry of eight years from the end of the year in which the income was first assessable, unless a notice for assessment or reassessment was issued within the time limited by s. 34(1)(a). If such a notice was issued the assessment could be made within one year from the date of service. By the amendment made by the Finance Act of 1956, these periods of limitation prescribed by s. 34 are abrogated, and s. 4 of Act I of 1959 seeks to protect from challenge notices of assessment or reassessment which have been issued and assessments and reassessments made in pursuance of such notices after the periods prescribed by s. 34 before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956. The notice which is protected must accordingly be a notice which when issued was barred under s. 34 before it was amended. Therefore, there is the clearest indication in the framework of s. 4 which supports the view that the notices of assessment or reassessment to which the bar of limitation prescribed by the unamended s. 34 cannot be set up may be notices issued before April 1, 1956.

But counsel for the assessee contends that this interpretation of s. 4 is likely to render certain important provisions contained in s. 34 ineffective, and our attention is invited to the proviso incorporated in sub-s. (1) to that section by the Finance Act, 1956. Undoubtedly even after the amendment of the substantive provision which deletes the requirement that a notice of assessment or reassessment shall be issued within eight years, the proviso imposes a restriction prohibiting the Income-tax Officer, from issuing a notice where the escaped income is not one lakh of rupees or more, after the expiry of eight years from the year of assessment. The condition relating to the issue of a notice within eight years from the year of assessment to which the notice relates remains in case of certain assessments imbedded in s. 34. Counsel for the assessee submits that if the expression any time used in s. 4 of Act I of 1959 be interpreted without any restriction, a clear inconsistency will result. In order to appreciate this contention, the material parts of the proviso incorporated by the Finance Act of 1956 may be set out:

"Provided that the Income-tax Officer shall not issue a notice under clause (a) of sub-section (1) [of section 34]—

(i) for any year prior to the year ending on 31st day of March, 1941;

(ii) for any year, if eight years have elapsed after the expiry of that year, unless the income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax which have escaped assessment... are likely to amount to, one lakh of rupees or more in the aggregate, either for that year, or for that year and any other year or years after which or after each of which eight years have elapsed,...

(iii) for any year, unless he has recorded his reasons for doing so, and, in any case falling under clause (ii), unless the Central Board of Revenue, and, in any other case, the Commissioner, is satisfied on such reasons recorded that it is a fit case for the issue of such notice."

By this proviso, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice at any time under the operative part of sub-s. (1), cl. (a), of s. 34 to assess or reassess income, profits or gains is restricted by the three conditions set out in the proviso. The Legislature by enacting this proviso put a restriction upon the authority of the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice after the expiry of eight years from the last day of the assessment year when the escaped income did not amount to one lakh rupees or more. Evidently by enacting the proviso to s. 34(1) the Legislature has classified the notices for assessment or reassessment into two broad divisions—notice where the escaped income is rupees one lakh or more and other notices. If the escaped income is rupees one lakh or more the notice under the amended provision may be issued at any time, but in other cases the notice may be issued only within eight years from the year of assessment to which the notice relates. But the restrictions imposed by the proviso have no retrospective operation. A notice of assessment or reassessment issued after April 1, 1956, will of necessity be subject to the restrictions contained in the proviso to cl. (1). Such a notice may not by virtue of s. 4 of Act I of 1959 be called in question merely on the plea that it was not issued within the time prescribed by s. 34 before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1956; but the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer being conditioned by the proviso, the plea of nonfulfilment of the conditions may certainly be set up in defence. The proviso not being retrospective, a notice of assessment or reassessment issued before April 1, 1956, but not within eight years from the assessment year to which it relates, could successfully be challenged on the ground of limitation before Act I of 1959 was enacted. Act I of 1959 expressly protects such a notice against that challenge whatever may be the amount of escaped income. The Legislature has by enacting s. 4 protected notices issued before the enactment of Act I of 1959 merely against the plea of the bar of limitation, and no other bar is sought to be abrogated thereby. Therefore, in giving full retrospective operation to s. 4 we are not faced with any inconsistency with any other provision contained in s. 34.

In that view we hold that since the enactment of Act I of 1959 a notice issued after April 1, 1956, for reopening assessment by virtue of s. 4 will not be permitted to be called in question on the ground that the notice was not issued within the period prescribed by the unamended s. 34(1)(a) but all other pleas which circumscribe the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer will certainly be entertainable. To a notice for assessment or reassessment under s. 34(1)(a) issued before April 1, 1956, and to an assessment or reassessment pursuant to such notice, by s. 4, the plea of a bar of limitation under s. 34 before it was amended by the Finance Act, 1956, will not be entertained. There is, therefore, no warrant for the submission that by s. 4 of Act I of 1959 proviso to s. 34(1) is in any manner abrogated.

But this view, which we have expressed, is not sufficient to dispose of this Reference. Evidently, s. 4 of Act I of 1959 prevents a plea of the bar of limitation being set up against a notice under cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 34 and not to any other notice. In the present case, it is not clear on the record whether the notice issued was under cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 34 or under cl. (b) of sub-s. (1). Even the copies of the notices served upon the assesses are not before the Court. The reasons recorded by the Income-tax Officer for issuing the notices under the relevant proviso as it stood when the notices were issued are also not before the Court and there is no evidence of the Commissioner's satisfaction on the reasons recorded by the Income-tax Officer. Even the order of the Income-tax Officer and the manner in which the reassessment proceedings were dealt with are not before the Court. The reasons given by the Income-tax Tribunal for coming to the conclusion that the notices fell within the terms of s. 34(1)(a) were made in a different context and we do not think that they can be regarded as conclusive or binding in considering whether the case is governed by the proviso to s. 4 of Act I of 1959. In the circumstances, before this Reference can be decided, we think that we must have a supplementary Statement of facts as to the character of the notices issued by the Income-tax Officer in April 1954 upon the assesses. After the supplementary Statement of facts is received from the Tribunal, we will proceed to reframe the questions in the light of the provisions of Act I of 1959 and will proceed to answer the same.

v.

THE NATIONAL ELECTRICAL INDUSTRIES LTD.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 15C, 24(2), 10(2)(vi) proviso (5)—Assessee, newly established industrial undertaking, making profit in year of account—Income-tax Officer in making assessment for relevant year deducting, out of profit, losses carried forward from previous years—Benefit of s. 15C not given to assessee as total income of assessment year exhausted—Priority between benefit of exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C and set off in respect of loss of previous year under s. 24(2).

In the year of account the assessee, which was a newly established industrial undertaking, made a profit. The Income-tax Officer in assessing the total income of the assessee for the relevant assessment year, deducted out of the net profits the losses carried forward from the previous years and the unabsorbed depreciation of the previous years and when it was found that the total income of the assessment year was exhausted, he did not give to the assessee the benefit of s. 15C of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. On the question whether the losses brought forward from the preceding years should be set off against the profits of the year of account before allowing the assessee the benefit of s. 15C of the Act:—

Held, that s. 15C of the Act merely provides a partial exemption from payment of tax by newly established undertakings, and, therefore, in the computation of tax, the amount of losses carried forward is liable to be deducted out of the income of the year of account and it is only after the quantum of tax is ascertained that exemption from payment under s. 15C could be given by the taxing authorities, and that, therefore, in the instant case the losses brought forward from the preceding years could be set off against the profits of the year of account before allowing the assessee the benefit of s. 15C.

The facts appear in the judgment.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the petitioner.

R. J. Kolah, with N. A. Palkhivala, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessment years in this reference are 1952-53 and 1953-54. The assessee company had suffered a loss of Rs. 1,15,220, in the assessment year 1950-51 and this loss was carried forward to the next assessment year. The company was also unable fully to avail of the depreciation allowance in 1950-51 and 1951-52. The assessee was a newly established industrial undertaking and was entitled to exemption from payment of tax to the extent prescribed by s. 15C of the Income-tax Act. In the year of account 1951-52 the assessee made a profit of Rs. 3,65,000 odd, but after making allowance for the unabsorbed depreciation of the previous years and also the losses carried forward from the previous years, there remained no taxable income and accordingly no demand for tax was made for the assessment year of 1952-53. In assessing the total income, the Income-tax Officer did not give the benefit of exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C of the Income-tax Act to the assessee. The Income-tax Officer deducted out of the net profit the loss of the previous years and the unabsorbed depreciation, and when it was found that the total income of the assessment year 1952-53 was exhausted, the benefit of s. 15C by providing exemption to the extent of six per cent. of the capital employed was not given. It is evident that if the benefit of exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C was given to the assessee initially before the loss carried forward from the previous year and the unabsorbed depreciation of the previous year were allowed out of the profits, full provision could not be made for the latter allowances in the year of assessment. But the assessee would have been permitted to carry forward the loss to the next assessment year and the unabsorbed depreciation could be treated as depreciation for the subsequent year. When, however, the assessee was not given the benefit of exemption under s. 15C in the assessment year, the shortfall could not under the law be carried forward to the next assessment year.

The order passed by the Income-tax Officer was confirmed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. In the view of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, in assessing the taxable income certain deductions under s. 24(2) were allowable under the law because the assessee had suffered a loss in the previous year but the Income-tax Officer was bound in the first instance to allow to the assessee the benefit of exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C before setting off the loss carried forward from the previous year. The Tribunal accordingly set aside the order of the taxing authorities and directed the Income-tax Officer to give the benefit of exemption from payment of tax to the assessee under s. 15C before setting off the loss brought forward from the preceding year.

The Tribunal has at the instance of the Commissioner referred the following question:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case, the loss brought forward from the preceding year amounting to Rs. 1,15,220 should be set off against the profits of the year of account without allowing the assessee the benefit of section 15C of the Income-tax Act?"

The question debated before us is as to the priority between the benefit of exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C and the set off in respect of loss of previous year under s. 24(2), when the set off does not leave adequate taxable income to make the exemption under s. 15C from payment of tax real. Evidently, under the scheme of the Income-tax Act, assessable income of the assessee has to be computed by aggregating the various heads of taxable income subject to permissible deductions and thereafter by s. 24 the losses suffered either in the year of account or carried forward from the previous year to the permissible extent have to be deducted in assessing the total income, and it is only after the total income is ascertained and tax is computed thereon that the benefit is to be allowed to the assessee exempting him from payment of tax on such profits or gains derived from the industrial undertaking not exceeding six per cent. on the capital employed in the undertaking. In other words, according to the scheme envisaged by the Act, the total income can be ascertained after allowing from the income of the year of account the unabsorbed depreciation of the previous years as well as the permitted set off of losses of the current and previous years and it is only after the total income is computed and the liability to tax ascertained that the benefit of s. 15C can be provided to the assessee. The forms of return of income prescribed under r. 19 framed under the Act, clearly indicate that the income accrued from various sources such as salaries, interest on securities, business, property and other sources has to be aggregated and on the income so aggregated, the tax has to be ascertained and against the tax so ascertained credit has to be given for the amount exempted to the extent of the items permissible under s. 15C as well as under ss. 15A and 15B. Apparently by enacting s. 15C the Legislature has not prescribed for exclusion of a percentage from the head of profits of a new industrial undertaking in the computation of total income but has merely provided a partial exemption from payment of tax by newly established undertakings and, therefore, in the natural sequence of computation of tax, the amount of losses carried forward is liable to be deducted out of the income of the year of account and it is only after the quantum of tax is ascertained, exemption from payment to the prescribed extent will be given by the taxing authorities.

The contention of the assessee that by s. 15C so much of the profits derived from the newly established undertaking to which the section applies as do not exceed 6 per cent. per annum on the capital employed in the undertaking are to be excluded in the computation of total income and this exclusion is to be made irrespective of any set off which is permissible under s. 24(2), has, in our judgment, no force. It is true that in order to give a fillip to new industrial undertakings and to secure speedy industrialisation, the Legislature has provided for exemption from payment of tax on a percentage of the capital employed in the undertaking, but thereby the true nature of the exemption is not altered. The exemption is in terms from payment of tax and it is not an exclusion of income in the computation of total income. It is true that under proviso (b) to s. 24(2) it is expressly enacted that where depreciation allowance under cl. (vi) of the proviso to cl. (vi) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10 is to be carried forward, effect shall first be given to the provisions of s. 24(2). If the profits or gains in respect of any business, profession or vocation are insufficient in the assessment year to permit full allowance for unabsorbed depreciation of the previous year under s. 10(2)(vi), proviso (b), the set off of losses for previous years permitted under s. 24(2) is to be given in the first instance and the unabsorbed depreciation is to be treated as depreciation in the subsequent years. No similar provision is made giving priority to set off in respect of losses of the previous years over the exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C. But proviso (b) to s. 10(2)(vi) was enacted to cover cases of competing rival claims for deduction from income in computing the taxable income. The exemption from payment of tax under s. 15C and the privilege of carrying forward losses, are however not benefits of the same category and become allowable to the assessee at different stages of assessment. It is difficult then to visualise a competition between these two benefits. The absence of an express provision postponing the exemption from tax under s. 15C to a set off for losses of previous years carried forward does not therefore justify the view that the scheme of computation of total income for purposes of assessment was intended to be reversed.

By sub-s. (3) of s. 15C profits or gains of an industrial undertaking to which that section applies have to be computed in accordance with the provisions of s. 10. Every industrial undertaking may, however, be regarded as a business and the computation of profits and gains has to be made even apart from sub-s. (3) of s. 15C in accordance with the provisions of s. 10, and the necessity of incorporating that provision in s. 15C may not be easily appreciated; but we are on that account unable to hold that it was intended by enacting that provision by implication to relegate the set off of loss to the exemption of tax under s. 15C. There is no such express provision made, and we do not think that any implication of that nature is permissible. Nor does cl. (5) of s. 15C which provides that nothing in the section shall affect the application of s. 23A in relation to profits or gains of an industrial undertaking to which the section applies affect the interpretation of the operative part of s. 15C.

In our view, whereas s. 24(2) deals with a permissible deduction from the totality of assessable income, s. 15C provides only for an exemption from payment of tax; and if in computing the total income liable to tax and the rates at which the tax is payable, set off of losses of the previous years is to be allowed, it would be difficult to hold that the set off will be postponed to the benefit of s. 15C. The Legislature undoubtedly intended to confer certain benefits upon industrial undertakings to which s. 15C applies, but we will not on that account be justified in holding that, when the Legislature has not provided that the benefit of s. 15C is to be allowed as a deduction from income, deduction substantially of that nature should still be made on the assumption that an absence of an express provision dealing with priority implied that intention.

We reframe the question by substituting the word "before" for the word "without" and answer the question in the affirmative.

SALES TAX REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

M/S. NILGIRI CEYLON TEA SUPPLYING CO. v. THE STATE OF BOMBAY.*

Bombay Sales Tax Act (Bom. III of 1953), Sec. 8(a)—Assessee, dealers in tea, purchasing different brands of tea from registered dealers and after mixing these, selling the mixture—Whether assessee entitled to deduct from their turnover value of tea purchased from registered dealers—Tea purchased whether processed or altered after purchase.

The assessee who carried on business as dealers in tea, purchased diverse brands of tea from registered dealers and without the application of any mechanical or chemical process mixed up the brands of tea purchased in bulk by them and sold the tea as tea mixture. The mixing was according to the formulae evolved by the assessee. In the assessment of sales-tax the assessee claimed that the value of the tea purchased by them should be deducted from the turnover under s. 8 of the Bombay Sales-tax Act, 1953. The Sales-tax authorities having regard to the proviso to s. 8(a) of the Act did not allow the deduction. On the question whether the assessee were entitled to deduct from their turnover the value of the tea purchased from the registered dealers:—

Held, that as there was neither processing nor alteration in any manner of the tea purchased by the assessee within the meaning of the proviso to s. 8(a) of the Act, the assessee were entitled to a deduction from their turnover of sales, the value of the tea purchased, under s. 8(a) of the Act.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. A. Palkhivala, for the assessee.

D. P. Madon, for the respondent.

SHAH J. Messrs. Nilgiri Ceylon Tea Supplying Co. carry on business as dealers in tea in Bombay. They are registered dealers under the Bombay Sales-tax Act, 1953. M/s. Nilgiri Ceylon Tea Supplying Co., who will be hereafter referred to as "the assessee", purchased diverse brands of tea and without the application of any mechanical or chemical processes mixed the tea purchased in bulk by them and sold it as tea mixture. The mixing, however, is not haphazard but according to the formulae evolved by the assessee. In the assessment of sales-tax the assessee claimed that the value of the tea purchased by them should be deducted from the turnover under s. 8 of the Bombay Sales-tax Act, 1953. The Sales-tax authorities did not accept the contention of the assessee having regard to the proviso to cl. (a) of s. 8 and did not allow deduction for the value of the tea purchased. The Sales-tax Tribunal also affirmed the view of the Sales-tax authorities. The Sales-tax Tribunal has at the instance of the assessee, referred the following questions:

"(1) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of this case, the petitioners (assessee) are entitled to a deduction from their turnover of sales under clause (a) of section 8 of the Bombay Sales-tax Act, 1953, of the amount of Rs. 1,17,052-8-0, being sales of goods purchased from registered dealers on or after the appointed day? and

(2) Whether the Tribunal was justified in not allowing the applicants (assesseees) to show that a part of the goods sold by them had not been processed or altered, as the goods in question had been sold as orange pekoe, the original teas purchased also having been called by the same name and only teas of the same variety grown on different plantations had been mixed together?"

Section 8 of the Bombay Sales-tax Act, 1953, so far as it is material, provides:

"Subject to the provisions of section 7, there shall be levied a sales-tax on the turnover of sales of goods specified in column 1 of Schedule B at the rate, if any, specified against them in column 2 of the said Schedule, after deducting from such turnover—

(a) sales of goods—

(i) which have been purchased from a registered dealer on or after the appointed day, or

(ii) on the purchase of which the dealer has paid or is liable to pay the purchase tax:

Provided that the goods have not been processed or altered in any manner after such purchase;"

In the present case, there is no dispute that the assesseees have purchased from registered dealers tea leaves in bulk after the appointed day and the sole question which falls to be determined is whether the assesseees are entitled to deduct from their turnover the value of the goods purchased from registered dealers. The assesseees contend that they are entitled to do so. The Sales-tax Department contends that the goods which have been purchased by the assesseees have been processed or altered after the purchase and, therefore, deduction cannot be permitted. We are, therefore, called upon to decide whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case there has been a processing or alteration in any manner of the different brands or varieties of tea purchased by the assesseees. The expression "process" has not been defined in the Act. According to Webster's Dictionary "process" means "to subject to some special process or treatment, to subject (especially raw material) to a process of manufacture, development or preparation for the market etc.; to convert into marketable form, as livestock by slaughtering, grain by milling, cotton by spinning, milk by pasteurizing, fruits and vegetables by sorting and repacking."

In the present case, there has been nothing but a manual application of energy to the different quantities of tea purchased by the assesseees in certain proportions so as to evolve a mixture of tea which was sold as tea mixture of the assesseees. In our view, the quantities of tea purchased by the assesseees cannot since the date of the purchase be regarded as processed within the meaning of the proviso to cl. (a) of s. 8 of the Act. There is not even application of mechanical force so as to subject the commodity to a process, manufacture, development or preparation. The commodity has remained in the same condition. It is true that in the preparation of the tea mixture which is marketed, there may be some skill involved. But that, in our judgment, cannot be regarded as processing within the meaning of the proviso.

It is urged on behalf of the Sales-tax Department that in any event there is alteration in the goods, and if there be alteration in the goods since the purchase, the value of the goods paid to the registered dealer cannot be deducted from the turnover. It cannot however be said that in the preparation of the tea mixture there is any alteration in the goods. Undoubtedly by mixing the different varieties of tea purchased by the assessee there resulted a mixture in which the individuality of the components was obscured, but that, in our judgment, is not alteration within the meaning of the Act. The alteration contemplated by the Legislature is some alteration in the nature or character of the goods. In the present case, in our view, there is neither processing nor alteration in any manner of the goods purchased by the assessee.

On that view of the case, question No. 1 will be answered as follows: "The assesseees are entitled to a deduction from their turnover of sales under clause (a) of Section 8 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, of the amount of Rs. 1,17,052-6-0.”

On that view of the case, question No. 2 need not be answered.

Assessees will be entitled to their costs from the State of Bombay.

THE INDIA UNITED MILLS LTD. v. THE REGIONAL PROVIDENT FUND COMMISSIONER.*

Employees' Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1952), Secs. 6, 2(b)—Employees' Provident Funds Scheme, Rr. 29, 30, 33—Standing Orders providing for termination of employment of operatives and clerks by payment of thirteen days' wages and one month's pay respectively, in lieu of notice—Employer terminating services of operatives and clerks by payment of thirteen days' wages and one month's pay—Whether such amounts paid “basic wages” or dearness allowance under Act and Scheme—Provident fund contribution whether payable in respect of such amounts.

Amounts paid by the employer under Standing Orders settled under the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, for securing the due termination of the employment of the employees without notice, are not amounts drawn by the employees as “basic wages” or dearness allowance and the provisions of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, and the Employees' Provident Funds Scheme are not applicable thereto. No amount is, therefore, payable in connection therewith by way of provident fund contribution under the Act or the Scheme.

The expression “emoluments which are earned by an employee while on duty” in s. 2(b) of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, represents the amounts actually earned by an employee during the period of his employment while he is actually on duty.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

R. J. Kolah, with P. Ramaswamy, for the petitioners.

M. J. Mistree, for respondent No. 1.

R. J. Joshi, for respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

K. T. DESAI J. The petitioner company is a public joint stock company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. The petitioner company carries on business of manufacturing and selling textile piecegoods. The petitioner company in the course of its business employs a large number of workers. Between October 30, 1955, and February 15, 1957, the petitioner company terminated the services of 41 employees. Some of the persons whose services were terminated were operatives and some were clerks. The Standing Orders as finally settled by the Industrial Court under s. 36(3) of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, applicable to the petitioner company, provide by Order No. 19(a) that the employment of any permanent operative may be terminated by fourteen days' notice or by payment of thirteen days' wages in lieu of notice. The Standing Orders applicable to clerks provide by Order No. 10 that the employment of any permanent employee may be terminated by one month's notice or one month's pay in lieu of notice unless provided otherwise in any specific agreement. The petitioner company had terminated the services of the operatives on payment of thirteen days wages in lieu of notice and of the clerks on payment of one month's pay in lieu of notice. The Central Provident Fund Commissioner considered that the petitioner company was liable to pay provident fund contribution in respect of the amounts paid as aforesaid on the termination of the services of the aforesaid operatives and clerks. The Regional Provident Fund Commissioner issued notices requiring payment of the amounts representing the petitioner company's share as well as the employees' share of the provident fund contribution from the petitioner company in connection with the amounts paid as aforesaid. The petitioner company denied its liability to pay the same and declined to pay the same. The amounts claimed were sought to be recovered from the petitioner company by the coercive machinery available under s. 8 of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952. The petitioner company has challenged the action of the authorities in requiring payment of the said amounts and in seeking to recover the same.

The petitioner company has filed the petition for the issue of a writ of certiorari or other appropriate writ or direction or order under art. 226 of the Constitution against the Regional Provident Fund Commissioner, the State of Bombay and the Collector of Bombay, calling for the records of the case and for quashing and setting aside respondent No. 1's order relating to the demand of these amounts and the second and third respondents' demand for recovery of the said alleged dues. The petitioner company has also prayed for the issue of a writ of mandamus or other writ or direction or order under art. 226 or an order under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act against respondents Nos. 1 and 3 requiring them and their successors in office to withdraw and/or cancel the said orders and the said notices. The petitioner company has also prayed for the issue of a writ of prohibition or any other appropriate writ or direction under art. 226 of the Constitution restraining respondents Nos. 2 and 3 "from enforcing or taking any proceedings in enforcement of the recovery of the amounts" mentioned in the said notices.

It is not disputed that the services of the operatives stood determined on payment of thirteen days wages in lieu of notice and that the contract of employment did not subsist during the period of thirteen days after payment. It is also not disputed that the services of the clerks stood determined on payment of one month's pay in lieu of notice and that the contract of employment did not subsist during the period of one month after such payment. In my view, the words "thirteen days wages" and "one month's pay" appearing in the Standing Orders refer merely to the quantum of payment to be made for the immediate termination of the services of the employees without notice.

It is urged on behalf of the respondents that the Standing Orders constitute the terms of the contract of employment between the employer and the employees, that what is payable by the company for terminating the services of an employee under the Standing Orders constitutes "wages" in the case of an operative and "pay" in the case of a clerk, and that the amounts so paid are amounts in respect whereof provident fund contribution is payable under the provisions of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952.

On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the petitioners that wages or pay represent the consideration which is payable during the subsistence of the contract of employment, and that any sum which is payable for securing the due termination of the contract of employment is in reality in the nature of compensation. It is urged that the nature or character of such payment is not altered merely because the parties agree in advance about the amount thereof in terms of wages or pay for a particular period. It is further contended that no amount is payable under the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, and the Scheme framed thereunder by way of provident fund contribution in respect of such payment.

In order to decide when contribution is payable under the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, it is necessary to consider the provisions of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952. Section 6 of the Act provides as under:—

"The contribution which shall be paid by the employer to the Fund shall be six and a quarter per cent of the basic wages and the dearness allowance for the time being payable to each of the employees, and the employees' contribution shall be equal to the contribution payable by the employer in respect of him and may if any employee so desires and if the Scheme makes provision therefor, be an amount not exceeding eight and one third per cent of his basic wages and dearness allowance."

The expression "basic wages" has been defined for the purposes of the Act by s. 2(b) as under:—

"Basic wages" means all emoluments which are earned by an employee while on duty or on leave with wages in accordance with the terms of the contract of employment and which are paid or payable in cash to him, but does not include—

(i) the cash value of any food concession;

(ii) any dearness allowance (that is to say, all cash payments by whatever name called paid to an employee on account of a rise in the cost of living), house-rent allowance, over time allowance, bonus, commission or any other similar allowance payable to the employee in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment;

(iii) any presents made by the employer."

It has been strongly urged on behalf of the respondents that the expression "basic wages" as used in the Act is wide enough to cover the payments which have been made to the employees for securing due termination of their employment. It is urged that the expression "basic wages" means all emoluments which are earned by an employee while on duty, and that the amounts that have been paid to the employees for securing the due termination of their services represent the amounts which had been earned by them while they were on duty. It is urged that because the employees were on duty, they became entitled to receive such payment under the contractual obligation incurred by the company as embodied in the Standing Orders. In my view, this reading of the section is untenable. The expression "emoluments which are earned by an employee while on duty" represents the amounts actually earned by an employee during the period of his employment while he is actually on duty. The payment in question is not a payment earned for duty done. It is not a payment earned while on duty. It is a payment by way of consideration for terminating the contract of employment of a permanent employee without notice. The payments made cannot in any sense be regarded as representing "emoluments earned while on duty" and are not and do not constitute "basic wages" within the meaning of the definition given in the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, and no percentage thereof is payable by way of provident fund contribution.

Under the provisions of the said Act a Scheme has been framed known as the Employees' Provident Funds Scheme. Under r. 29 of that Scheme contributions are payable by the employer at the rate therein mentioned. Sub-rules (1), (2) and (3) of r. 29 provide as under:—

"29. (1) The contributions payable by the employer under the Scheme shall be at the rate of one anna in the rupee of the basic wages and the dearness allowance payable to each employee to whom the Scheme applies.

(2) The contributions payable by the employee under the Scheme shall be equal to the contribution payable by the employer in respect of such employee.

(3) The contributions shall be calculated on the basis of wages and dearness allowance actually drawn during the whole month whether paid daily, weekly, fortnightly or monthly basis."

The expression "wages" in sub-r. (3) in the context in which it is used can only refer to "basic wages".

Rule 30 provides as follows:—

"The employer shall, in the first instance pay both the contribution payable by himself (in this Scheme referred to as the employer's contribution) and also, on behalf of the member employed by him, the contribution payable by the member (in this Scheme referred to as the member's contribution)."

Rule 32 runs as under:—

"The amount of a member's contribution paid by the employer shall, notwithstanding—ing the provision in this Scheme or any law for the time being in force or any contract to the contrary be recoverable by means of deduction from the wages of the member and not otherwise..."

The provident fund contribution under the Act and the Scheme has to be made on the basis of a percentage of the basic wages and dearness allowance actually drawn. The amounts paid under the Standing Orders for securing the due termination of the employment of the employees without notice cannot be treated as amounts drawn by the employees as "basic wages" or dearness allowance and the provisions of the Act and the Scheme are not applicable thereto. No amount is payable in connection therewith by way of provident fund contribution and the demands made upon the petitioner company are not warranted by law and are not justified.

In the result, the petitioners are entitled to a writ of mandamus against the Regional Provident Fund Commissioner and the Collector of Bombay, requiring them and their successors in office to forbear from claiming the amounts referred to in the notices, copies whereof are annexed as exh. B to the petition, and from seeking to recover the same under s. 8 of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, and I order accordingly. Respondents to pay to the petitioners the costs of the petition. Costs fixed at Rs. 325.

Petitioners' attorneys to be at liberty to withdraw the amount deposited in Court on behalf of the petitioners.

Application granted.

MANAHEM S. YESHOOVA v. THE UNION OF INDIA.⁴

Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), Secs. 182, 188—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 11—Constitution of India, Art. 226—When can civil Court consider validity of decisions or orders made under s. 182 or 188—High Court deciding on merits contentions raised in writ petition under art. 226—Whether same contention can be re-agitated in suit filed in High Court—Whether suit against Collector of Customs in his official name maintainable.

A civil Court would have jurisdiction to consider the validity of decisions and orders made under the provisions of ss. 182 and 188 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, on the grounds that the provisions of the Act had not been complied with or that the Tribunal had not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure.

Secretary of State v. Mask & Co.,¹ followed.

The principles of s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, are applicable to a matter which is initially decided in a writ petition under art. 226 of the Constitution of India.

K. K. DESAI J. This is a suit filed for challenging the validity of certain orders passed under the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and the Sea Customs Act and for recovering back 310 tolas of gold confiscated in accordance with these orders. The plaintiff also seeks to recover in the alternative the value of gold viz., Rs. 30,790 and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The plaintiff's case is as follows:—

The plaintiff was proceeding from Aden to Colombo and "S. S. City of Durham" by which the plaintiff was travelling arrived at Bombay on November 30, 1950. On that date the plaintiff for the purpose of visiting the city of Bombay was passing through the Blue Gate of the Alexandra Docks and was questioned by an officer of the Customs. The plaintiff informed the officer that he was carrying gold which was in his cabin. The plaintiff was asked to take the officer to the plaintiff's cabin. The plaintiff produced gold weighing 310 tolas in his cabin and the same was seized. Ultimately by the impugned order dated December 29, 1950, one M. B. Rahman, the then Collector of Customs, found that the condition of the Reserve Bank of India Notification No. 62/48-R.B. of August 25, 1948, had not been fulfilled in the case of the plaintiff and that the gold must be held to have been brought into India in contravention of the provisions of the aforesaid Notification. He also found that the gold was not shown in the ship's manifest as for through transit nor was it kept with the purser or captain of the ship. The Collector of Customs ordered confiscation of the gold under s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act and further ordered that the gold should be allowed to be redeemed on payment of Rs. 30,790 subject to production of permit from the Reserve Bank of India.

The aforesaid order dated December 29, 1950, was duly served on the plaintiff. A copy of that order is annexed as exh. B to the plaint. The plaintiff was informed that an appeal against the order lay to the Central Board of Revenue, New Delhi. The plaintiff went in appeal against the order dated December 29, 1950, to the Central Board of Revenue. That appeal was Customs Appeal No. 976 of 1951. By its order dated October 22, 1951, the Central Board of Revenue held that it saw "no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Collector of Customs, Bombay." In the result in my view the order of confiscation with the right of redemption as made by the Collector of Customs stood confirmed and became the order of the Central Board of Revenue.

As against those orders the plaintiff filed a Revision Application under the Sea Customs Act before the Government of India and by an order in Revision made on June 24, 1953, it was held that "The Government of India sees no reason to interfere with the order in appeal passed by the Central Board of Revenue."

The plaintiff, declared on December 4, 1953, and filed on December 18, 1953, in this Court Misc. Petition No. 342 of 1953 under art. 226 of the Constitution challenging all the aforesaid three orders as being invalid on the ground that the plaintiff had not imported and was not importing these 310 tolas of gold into India and that the finding against the plaintiff by the Customs Collector and the Central Board of Revenue and the Government of India that he had contravened the notification of the Reserve Bank of India as already mentioned in the order of the Customs Collector was contrary to law and untenable. The plaintiff also contended that "show cause" notice was not served on him and he had not been given a proper hearing and the orders were vitiated by violation of rules of natural justice. On December 10, 1953, Tendolkar J. dismissed that petition after considering all the contentions raised by the plaintiff in that petition.

By his advocate's letter dated December 14, 1953, the plaintiff served a notice under s. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure in connection with this suit on the Union of India and the Collector of Customs and ultimately on February 24, 1954, the plaintiff filed this suit once again to challenge the afore-said orders.

By their written-statement the defendants have raised contentions technical as well as on merits. The defendants contend that the order of the Collector of Customs was not contrary to the provisions of law or against the principles of natural justice or without giving any opportunity to the plaintiff to be heard or without obtaining any explanation from the plaintiff or without taking into consideration the rules of natural justice. Customs authorities had information that the plaintiff who was travelling by "S. S. City of Durham" intended to smuggle gold into India and as a result of watch kept had found the gold under circumstances proving that it was illegally imported into India.

After issues were raised at the request of the counsel for the plaintiff and the defendants issues Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 were directed to be tried as preliminary issues. These issues run as follows:—

3. Whether this Hon'ble Court has jurisdiction to entertain and try this suit?

4. Whether the suit is barred by the rule of res judicata as stated in para. 7 of the written-statement?

5. Whether the suit against the second defendant (Collector of Customs) in his official name is maintainable?

6. Whether the plaint discloses any cause of action against the defendants or any of them?

In support of his contentions on issues Nos. 3 and 6 Mr. Joshi for the defendants relied upon the provisions of ss. 188 and 182 of the Sea Customs Act and the decision of the Privy Council in *Secretary of State v. Mask & Co.*¹ wherein the true effect of the provisions of these sections has been considered. Section 188 of the Sea Customs Act provides;

"Any person deeming himself aggrieved by any decision or order passed by an officer of Customs under this Act may, within three months from the date of such decision or order, appeal therefrom to the Chief Customs authority..."

"Such authority or officer may thereupon make such further enquiry and pass such order as he thinks fit, confirming, altering or annulling the decision or order appealed against..."

"Every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the power of revision conferred by section 181, be final."

Mr. Joshi has contended that having regard to the provisions in s. 188 of the Act, the order of the Central Board of Revenue must be held to be final except when it is found to be patently arbitrary or perverse or where it is found that fundamental principles of natural justice have been violated in the proceedings wherein the orders were made. In that connection he has relied upon the observations of the Privy Council that:

"The exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is not to be readily inferred but such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. Even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure.

An order passed in appeal under s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act excludes the jurisdiction of the civil Courts to entertain a challenge of the merits of that decision."

Now, therefore, the question which this Court can consider with reference to the validity of the orders passed by the Customs Collector and the Central Board of Revenue must relate to non-compliance with the provisions of the Act and/or non-conformity with or violation of the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. In that connection I have carefully scanned through all the averments in the plaint. In my view there is no allegation made in the plaint that either the Collector of Customs or the Central Board of Revenue had no power to make the order which they made. The plaint contains recitals of certain facts. The plaintiff has mentioned that the gold represented the plaintiff's life savings and that the plaintiff was a passenger from Aden to Colombo and in transit to Colombo was entitled to carry gold with him under the notification of the Reserve Bank of India No. F.E.R.A. 62/48, dated August 25, 1948. The reasons why the orders passed by the Customs Collector or the Central Board of Revenue are contended to be invalid are that a "show cause notice" was not served on the plaintiff and that a hearing was not given to the plaintiff. A civil Court would have jurisdiction to consider the validity of decisions and orders made under the provisions of s. 182 and s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act on the grounds which have been summarised in the Privy Council decision, viz., that the provisions of the Act had not been complied with or that the Tribunal had not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. The aforesaid contentions of the plaintiff regarding conduct of the proceedings would require to be examined by Court as the same involve violation of fundamental principles of judicial procedure. I cannot accept the contention of Mr. Joshi that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action of any kind against the defendants, or that in this case the Court has no jurisdiction by reason of the provisions of s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act.

As regards the question of jurisdiction, Mr. Joshi has relied upon the provisions of cl. XII of the Letters Patent. He has pointed out that the Union of India which is defendant No. 1 does not carry on business nor reside in Bombay. He has also pointed out that it is absolutely essential for the plaintiff to challenge the order made in appeal by the Central Board of Revenue and that admittedly that order was made by the Central Board of Revenue at Delhi. The Central Board of Revenue functions also at Delhi. The cause of action of the plaintiff must arise if not wholly in part in any event at Delhi. Mr. Joshi has further pointed out that the order in revision was made by the Government of India at Delhi. The plaintiff has admittedly not obtained any leave under cl. XII of the Letters Patent.

Mr. Joshi says that since a material part of the cause of action arose outside Bombay, this Court could not have jurisdiction without plaintiff having obtained leave under Cl. XII of the Letters Patent in the first instance.

Mr. Solomon has in that connection contended that the confiscated gold must be held to have remained with the Collector of Customs in Bombay. As the order of the Central Board of Revenue was that it saw "no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Collector of Customs, Bombay" and the order in revision was also that "the Government of India saw no reason to interfere with the order in appeal passed by the Central Board of Revenue", it was not necessary for the plaintiff to challenge the order in appeal and the order in revision and that the effective and subsisting order was the order of the Collector of Customs which was made in Bombay. Mr. Solomon, therefore, contends that the whole of the cause of action has arisen in Bombay. Mr. Solomon also contends that defendant No. 2 resides and works his office at Bombay. He says that I accordingly should hold that this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit irrespective of the plaintiff having not obtained leave under Cl. XII of the Letters Patent. His contention is that it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to obtain leave under cl. XII of the Letters Patent.

It is well settled that where a statute provides for an appeal and an appeal is filed, the subsisting and effective order must be held to be the order and/or decision of the appellate Court and not of the first Court or the trial Court. In this connection the language of s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act is very material. It provides that "such authority or officer (which refers to the appellate authority) may thereupon make such further enquiry and pass such order as he thinks fit, confirming, altering or annulling the decision or order appealed against." It cannot be denied that substantive right of appeal was available to the plaintiff and was exercised by the plaintiff. The plaintiff desired and wanted to challenge the decision of the Collector of Customs; and the ultimate decision which governed the rights of the plaintiff is the decision of the Central Board of Revenue. In fact as soon as the plaintiff filed his appeal all the contentions of the plaintiff were before the Central Board of Revenue to be decided by the Central Board of Revenue. The wording of the order made by the Central Board of Revenue, viz., that it saw "no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Collector of Customs, Bombay", does not in any manner detract from the position that the order which governs the right of the parties is the order of the Central Board of Revenue and not of the Collector of Customs. It is true that having regard to the language of s. 188, the Central Board of Revenue should have used the words that "it confirms the order of the Collector of Customs". In my view, therefore, the true construction of the order of the Central Board of Revenue is that it confirmed the order of the Collector of Customs, and did not make any variation or change in that order. The order that must be challenged by the plaintiff and would require to be set aside if the plaintiff has to succeed must be the order of the Central Board of Revenue. I, therefore, cannot accept the contention of Mr. Solomon that the whole of the cause of action arose in Bombay. Mr. Solomon admits that the Central Board of Revenue made its order in Delhi. He, however, says that the order was communicated to the plaintiff in Bombay. In my view the communication of the order to the plaintiff in Bombay cannot form part of any cause of action at all. The making of the order must be challenged. A material part of the cause of action arose outside Bombay and as the Union of India does not carry on business or reside in Bombay, I hold that it was necessary for the plaintiff to apply for and obtain leave under cl. XII of the Letters Patent before this Court could have jurisdiction to try and entertain this suit. The plaintiff having failed to obtain such leave I also hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit.

Mr. Joshi contended that on the principles which are to be found in s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code having regard to the decision of Tendolkar J. in the matter of Misc. Petition No. 342 of 1953 filed by the plaintiff, I should hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to reagitate the same contentions once again before this Court. Mr. Joshi has drawn my attention to the whole of the judgment of Tendolkar J. It is unnecessary to quote the whole judgment here. It is clear that Tendolkar J. was of the opinion that the petitioner (plaintiff) was guilty of delay in filing that petition by which he had challenged the orders as mentioned in the plaint in this suit. However he did not dismiss the petition on the ground of delay. He stated "However as the petition disclosed no cause on merits, I do not propose to dismiss it on that preliminary point". Tendolkar J. discussed in detail the contention of the petitioner that the orders made by the Collector of Customs dated December 29, 1950, and the Central Board of Revenue dated October 22, 1951, and the Government of India dated June 24, 1953, were contrary to law and against principles of natural justice. In connection with the aforesaid contention of the petitioner (plaintiff) Tendolkar J. examined in detail the provisions of s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act as also s. 182 of the Sea Customs Act and s. 8 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act. He held that under explanation (i) to s. 8 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act it was quite clear that it is not necessary for the purpose of constituting an import that the article should actually be imported. It is sufficient if it is brought into any port and if the intention is to take it out without being removed from the ship. He further held that the final authority to determine whether in a given case there was import was vested in the Customs Collector and that this Court was not entitled to set aside a finding made by the Customs Collector in that connection. Against that decision on merits by Tendolkar J. the petitioner (plaintiff) did not file any appeal.

On the merits of the plaintiff's case and/or the contentions available to the plaintiff that was a decision made by a Court of competent jurisdiction entitled to give required relief.

Moreover, public policy requires that there should be an end of litigation. The question whether the decision is correct or erroneous has no bearing on the question whether it operates or does not operate as res judicata; otherwise, every decision would be impugned as erroneous and there would be no finality. The rule of res judicata may thus be put upon two grounds—the one, the hardship to the individual that he should be vexed twice for the same cause, and the other, public policy, that it is in the interest of the State that there should be an end of litigation. Putting it in another form, it may be said that every suit must be sustained by a cause of action, and there is no cause of action to sustain the second suit of the same party, it being merged in the judgment in the first.

Whatever be the nature of the proceeding by way of petition under art. 226 of the Constitution, in my view it would be contrary to well-established principles of procedure that parties to a litigation should be entitled to re-agitate the same questions of facts or law once again in spite of a decision having been given on merits of the case by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It was not open to the plaintiff to bring to me an appeal against the decision of Tendolkar J. If this suit is heard on merits and the contentions of the plaintiff are accepted, I would have to reverse the decision of Tendolkar J. in Misc. 342 of 1953. Such a position cannot be allowed to be maintained. If Tendolkar J. had not gone into the merits of the contentions for the plaintiff there might have been some scope for argument that there is no question of final findings having been made and that in spite of a writ petition having been dismissed the plaintiff was entitled to file this suit. But as I have already indicated the contentions which could be raised on merits were before the Court in Miscellaneous Petition No. 342 of 1953 and have been decided by Tendolkar J.

Mr. Solomon, however, contends that jurisdiction exercised by this Court under art. 226 of the Constitution is not of a civil nature. He says that it is a supervisory jurisdiction. In that connection he has relied upon the decision of the Patna High Court in Collector of Monghyr v. Pratap Singh.² In that case on behalf of the opposite parties it was contended that the proceeding in the High Court for grant of a writ under art. 226 of the Constitution is not a civil proceeding within the meaning of art. 133 of the Constitution and that the petitioner had no right of appeal to the Supreme Court under that article. Ramaswami C.J. accepted that contention as correct and held that the petitioners were not entitled to a certificate for going in appeal to the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court in the matter of petitions under art. 226 of the Constitution. It is unnecessary for me to make any comment on the decision of the Patna High Court in that case. The issue before me is not whether a certificate should be granted for going in appeal to the Supreme Court in the matter of the petition under art. 226 of the Constitution. The issue before me is of general character and is this, viz., whether in the event of one of the Judges of this Court having finally decided on merits the contentions raised in a writ petition under art. 226, this Court would allow the same contentions to be reagitated in a suit. In my view the answer must be that such a position cannot be allowed to exist. Once a Judge of this Court and/or a Court of competent jurisdiction decides on merits the validity or invalidity of an impugned order in a petition filed under art. 226 of the Constitution the only remedy which can be open to the aggrieved party must be the usual remedy of appeal. In the words of Chagla C.J. in the decision of *In re Prahlad Krishna*³ (p. 64):

“...Although the decision of the High Court refusing a writ or an order under art. 226 may become final quæ the High Court, it is not as if the Constitution does not provide other remedies to the citizen. He has a right, an independent right, to approach the Supreme Court under art. 32...Apart from that there is a right of appeal given to the citizen from an order of refusal of the High Court to enforce his fundamental rights. He has the right to ask the Supreme Court to grant him special leave to appeal under art. 136. Therefore it is not as if the citizen is without a remedy in the event of the High Court refusing to review its own judgment, however erroneous that judgment may be."

Mr. Solomon has cited several authorities dealing with the nature of the proceedings by way of a petition under art. 226 of the Constitution. Having regard to the view which I am taking I find it unnecessary to discuss the various authorities cited by Mr. Solomon.

It is relevant to point out that the High Court of Madras in the case of *Chenchamma v. P. S. Transports Ltd.*⁴ has held as follows:—

"If the application for the issue of a writ under Art. 226 is made on the civil side, in dealing with such an application the High Court is governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and the High Court has jurisdiction to review its order under Art. 226."

The High Court of Calcutta in the case of *Budge Budge Municipality v. Mongru Mia*⁵, also observed as follows (p. 433):

"...A judgment of a single Judge on an application under Art. 226, whether in a matter arising within the original jurisdiction or in a matter arising outside, is a judgment pursuant to s. 108, Government of India Act, 1915 and therefore is appealable under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent..."

It is unarguable that nothing but judgments given in exercise of the jurisdictions specifically conferred by and mentioned in the Letters Patent is contemplated by Cl. 15. In actual fact, judgments given in exercise of several jurisdictions not expressly mentioned in the Letters Patent have been held to be appealable."

Though no decision has been cited to me as regards the principles of s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure being applicable to a matter which is initially decided in a writ petition under art. 226 of the Constitution, having regard to what I have already observed, I am of the view that the same principles ought to be held to be applicable to all such matters. I accordingly hold that the plaintiff's suit is barred by rules of res judicata.

Defendant No. 2 in this suit is described as the Collector of Customs. On December 29, 1950, the impugned order was made by one M. E. Rahman who was the then Collector of Customs. At the date when the suit was filed, viz. February 24, 1954, it is admitted by Mr. Solomon that one M. G. Abrol was the Collector of Customs. The Collector of Customs is not a legal entity, but is merely an office occupied by several persons from time to time as appointed by the authorities. On prima facie grounds a suit cannot be filed against any one who is not a legal entity. Defendant No. 2 in this case is described as "the Collector of Customs" and does not indicate any legal entity or person against whom this suit is filed. In my view a suit cannot be filed against or in the name of the Collector of Customs and my finding on issue No. 5 is that the suit against defendant No. 2 in official description is not maintainable.

My answers to issues Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 are:

Issue No. 3: In the negative.

Issue No. 4: In the affirmative.

Issue No. 5: In the negative.

Issue No. 6: In the affirmative.

The result, therefore, is that this suit is dismissed with costs.

MAHARANA MILLS (PRIVATE) LTD. v. THE INCOME-TAX OFFICER, PORBANDAR.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 35, 63, 10(5)(b)—Necessity of notice under first proviso to s. 35(1)—Whether want of such notice renders adverse order against assessee invalid where he knows of rectification proceedings and matter discussed with him—Written down value determined under s. 35 whether can be redetermined in following assessment years—Whether Income-tax officer can redetermine figure of original cost—Record referred to in expression "apparent from record" in s. 35 whether means only order of assessment—Whether recalculation of written down value, rectifying mistake apparent from record.

The rule laid down as to notice in the first proviso to s. 35(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, is not so rigid that if, as a matter of fact, the assessee knows of the proceedings and the matter has been discussed with him then an adverse order would be invalid merely because no notice under s. 63 of the Act was given.

The limit to which the Income-tax Officer can go back does not stop at the written down value of the previous year but extends up to the figure of the original cost, and the method enjoined by s. 10(5)(b) is not that the Income-tax Officer should merely scale down the written down value of the previous year but that he should take into consideration the actual cost, determining it for himself, if necessary, take also into consideration the allowances granted in the past and then make his own computation as to the written down value for the assessment year with which he is concerned. Therefore, merely because under s. 35 of the Act some written down value and the depreciation amount have been determined they are not a final determination binding for all times to come nor does the determination operate as estoppel or res judicata for the following years.

The record referred to in the expression "apparent from the record" in s. 35 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, does not mean only the order of assessment but it comprises all proceedings on which the assessment order is based and the Income-tax Officer is entitled for the purpose of exercising his jurisdiction under s. 35 to look into the whole evidence and the law applicable to ascertain whether there was an error. If, therefore, he doubts the written down value of the previous year it is open to him to check up the previous calculations in accordance with the law applicable including the rules made thereunder.

A mistake contemplated by s. 35 of the Act is not one which is to be discovered as a result of an argument, but it is open to the Income-tax Officer to examine the record including the evidence, and if he discovers any mistake, he is entitled to rectify the error provided that if the result is enhancement of assessment or reducing the refund then notice has to be given to the assessee and he should be allowed a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

tion under art. 226. The appellant before us is a private limited company carrying on the business of manufacturing and selling textiles and the respondent is the Income-tax Officer of Porbander.

Previous to the year 1949, in Porbander which became a part of the State of Saurashtra, there was no income-tax. In 1949 the Saurashtra Income-tax Ordinance (hereinafter termed the Ordinance) was promulgated which was applicable to the State of Saurashtra. By that Ordinance income-tax became leviable, and from 1950 onwards when Saurashtra became part of the Union of India the Indian Income-tax Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act) became applicable by reason of the Finance Act of 1950 (Act XXV of 1950). The appellant was taxed for the accounting year 1949 i.e. the assessment year 1950-51. In that year the amount of depreciation allowed under s. 10(2)(vi) of the Act was Rs. 3,43,869. The appellant continued to be assessed to income-tax in the assessment years 1951-52, 1952-53 and 1953-54 and the present appeal relates to the assessment of year 1953-54. According to the assessment order dated June 30, 1955, the amount of depreciation allowed for the assessment year 1953-54 was Rs. 3,48,105. On August 8, 1955, the appellant made an application for rectification under s. 35 of the Act. In this application he pointed out several mistakes in calculations in regard to the depreciation amount. By his order of February 27, 1956, the Income-tax Officer corrected the written down value of the different properties of the appellant and determined the total allowable depreciation to be Rs. 1,94,074. The order of the Income-tax Officer was as follows:—

"To arrive at the Written Down Value of the assets it was necessary to maintain depreciation record. This being not done so far, is done now and working attached.

Depreciation allowance as per rules is worked out at Rs. 1,94,074 as per working sheet attached.

The correct computation of income is as under:—

Income before allowing depreciation as per original assessment order: Rs. 1,00,874
Less charity disallowed wrongly written Rs. 21,839 instead of Rs. 20,124: Rs. 1,785

					Income	..	Rs.	98,909
Less depreciation	..	..	..	..	..	..	Rs.	1,94,074
					(—)	..	Rs.	95,165
Less Dividend income as per original assessment order	..	..	..	..	..	..	Rs.	11,870
					Loss	..	Rs.	83,295

Loss on account of depreciation to be carried forward. Declared N.A."

And thus the unabsorbed depreciation amount which under the assessment order of June 30, 1955, was Rs. 2,81,944 was reduced to Rs. 83,295 and this was set off against the appellant's income of the assessment year 1954-55. On February 29, 1956, the Income-tax Officer passed two provisional assessment orders for the years 1954-55 and 1955-56. In both these orders he calculated the depreciation amounts on the basis of the same written down value as he had determined for the year 1953-54. The reasons for calculating them on the new basis were set out by the Income-tax Officer in his order dated May 18, 1956, and they were:—

"Less Depreciation. The depreciation of the Company has not been properly calculated by arriving at Written Down Value as per the Saurashtra Income Tax Ordinance and also as per Indian Income-tax Act. The assessee Company was being assessed regularly even as per Indian Income-tax Act. So Written Down Value of all assets are arrived at by working out the depreciation as per above Ordinance as well as Income-tax Act. The depreciation is worked out as per separate statement keeping in view the following:—

(1) Definition of 'assessee' as per Indian Income-tax Act.

(2) The exact meaning of W.D.V. as per Income-tax Act.

(iii) The meaning of W.D.V. as per the Saurashtra Income-tax Ordinance 1949 and Rules (page 20, para. 13-5-A).

(iv) I.T.R. Volume 25, 558. Decision of Calcutta High Court as regards C.I.T., West Bengal,—M/s. Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd.

(v) Views expressed by Taxation Enquiry Commissioner, 1953-54, Volume II, page 84, para. 34.

(vi) Taxation Laws (Part 'B' State) (Removal of Difficulties) Order 1950.

The depreciation thus worked out as per separate statement."

On August 8, 1955, the appellant made an application under s. 35 for certain corrections in the calculations and the order thereon was passed on February 27, 1956, but no written notice of the intended rectification of the written down value and the depreciation amount was given by the Income-tax Officer to the appellant under s. 35 read with s. 63 of the Act. On March 9, 1956, the appellant wrote to the Income-tax Officer protesting against the order:—

"You have exercised powers not vested in you under the said Section, and you have gone beyond the purview of the Act by preparing statements and records which are prejudicial to the rights of the Company."

The appellant requested the Income-tax Officer to cancel his previous order and to pass a fresh order correcting only those mistakes which had been pointed out by it. On the same day the appellant sent another letter asking for the cancellation of the provisional assessment order for 1954-55 and requested for a revised assessment order on the basis of the return filed by it. The reply of the Income-tax Officer of the same date was that the order was correct and a similar order was made on the second application in regard to the assessment of 1954-55.

On April 16, 1956, the appellant filed a petition in the High Court of Bombay under arts. 226 and 227 in which it alleged that the Income-tax Officer had "exceeded the limits of jurisdiction vested in him and exercised illegally jurisdiction not vested in him by law under Section 35 and passed orders, inter alia, and suo motu and without giving any prior notice and altered the entire procedure and basis of calculating depreciation on the written down value of buildings and machinery of the petitioners."

The appellant prayed that the order made under s. 35 of the Act be quashed and an injunction issued restraining the Income-tax Officer from recovering the assessed tax. The High Court dismissed this petition on the ground that it contained mis-statements of fact; that

"The advantage of this jurisdiction is not available to the subject when adequate and efficacious remedy is available to him under the ordinary law;"

that the appellant could, under s. 33A of the Act, have gone in revision to the Commissioner. The High Court also held against the appellant on merits. The appellant has come to this Court by special leave and three questions were raised: (1) that no notice as required under s. 35 was given to the appellant; (2) that there was no record on the basis of which the rectification in the written down value of the property could be made; and (3) that there was no mistake apparent from the record.

The learned Attorney General contended in the first instance that the remedy available under art. 226 is a discretionary one, and if the High Court had exercised its discretion, no appeal was competent; and in support of his contention he relied upon the judgment of this Court in K. S. Rashid and Son v. The Income-tax Investigation Commission, etc.,¹ where Mukherjee J., (as he then was), said (p. 747):—

"...For purpose of this case it is enough to state that the remedy provided for in article 226 of the Constitution is a discretionary remedy and the High Court has always the discretion to refuse to grant any writ if it is satisfied that the aggrieved party can have an adequate or suitable relief elsewhere."

It is not necessary to decide in this case whether the order passed under art. 226 is of a discretionary nature and, therefore, in appeal this Court would not interfere with the exercise of discretion, because, in our opinion, the case can be decided on other grounds of substance.

The first question is that of notice under s. 35 of the Act. The affidavit of the Income-tax Officer shows that the correctness of the figures for determining the depreciation was discussed with the appellant's Secretary. The Income-tax Officer stated that "The depreciation which was calculated in the assessment order of 1953-54 was as per the statement given by the petitioner. On submission of the said application the petitioner (Shri Ganatra, the Secretary of the Mills) was told that the depreciation will be given after rectifying mistakes. The petitioner had agreed to the same. There being no record of the working out from the first available record in the assessment order for the assessment year 1943-44, the petitioner was also supplied with the copy of the working of the depreciation along with the necessary rules and regulation for calculating the same."

He also stated that the order of rectification was passed "almost at the end of the financial year, after explaining and discussing all the above calculation along with the relevant rules and regulation of the calculated depreciation"; that the order was not passed without giving a reasonable opportunity to the appellant; that the matter was discussed with its representative more than once; that the assessment for the year 1954-55 was made final after calculating the depreciation; that the point of depreciation was not raised by the applicant at any hearing and that even though no written notice was given, the representative of the appellant was given notice of the intended determination of the written down values. He also stated:

"Thus though no written notice is given, applicant is given notice of the intention of calculating depreciation on record basis and is also allowed a reasonable opportunity of being heard inasmuch as he was given the calculation of depreciation on 21-2-1956."

The orders placed on the record show that the Income-tax Officer made calculation for the purpose of determining the depreciation amount, and, after giving deductions allowed by the Act and the Rules made thereunder, arrived at the corrected figure of Rs. 1,94,074 for the assessment year 1953-54.

Apart from the fact that the petition of the appellant does not set out clearly all the facts which should have been set out, there is the affidavit of the respondent that the matter was discussed with the representative of the appellant although no written notice was given. In this connection the learned Attorney General has further submitted (1) that the order determining the depreciation amount allowable was not final; (2) that the effect of the order making the rectification was not of enhancing the assessment or reducing the refund; and (3) that the question of depreciation could be raised at the time of assessment in any subsequent year.

The object of the provision as to notice in the second sub-section of s. 35 is that no order should be passed to the detriment of an assessee without affording him an opportunity, but it cannot be said that the rule is so rigid that if, as a matter of fact, the assessee knows of the proceedings and the matter has been discussed with him then an adverse order would be invalid merely because no notice under s. 63 was given. Of course, this postulates that a reasonable opportunity has been given to show cause. Secondly, this provision is applicable only where the assessment is enhanced or refund is reduced. Neither of those contingencies has arisen in the present case.

The depreciation allowed to the appellant in the year of assessment 1943-44, when the appellant was assessed as a non-resident, was Rs. 1,91,224. In the year 1944-45 there was no assessable income in British India and so also in 1945-46. In the year 1946-47 there was a loss. In the year 1947-48 as in the preceding years the sales were effected at Porbander and there was no collection made in British India. The total tax due was calculated at Rs. 43-11-0. In 1948-49 the sales were Rs. 38,656 and they were assessed to income-tax on a total income of Rs. 9,326. For the accounting year 1948 i.e. the assessment year 1949-50 when the Ordinance came into force the total depreciation amount allowed was Rs. 3,66,925 which was much more than what was allowable on the written down values determined in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance which defined written down value:

“Written Down Value means—

(a) In the case of assets acquired in the previous year, the actual cost to the assessee;

(b) In the case of assets acquired before the previous year the actual cost to the assessee less all depreciation actually allowed to him under this Ordinance or allowed under any Act repealed hereby or which would have been allowed to him if the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was in force in past.”

On the basis of this Ordinance and the other statutes and Rules mentioned in his affidavit, which have been set out above, the Income-tax Officer made the various calculations and determined the depreciation amounts which have given rise to the controversy before us. These calculations were based on the written down values for the successive assessment years up to the year of assessment 1953-54.

But it was argued by counsel for the appellant that according to s. 10(5)(b) of the Act the written down value in the case of assets acquired before the previous year mean the actual cost to the assessee less all depreciation actually allowed to him under the Act or under any Act repealed thereby and, therefore, the provisions of the Saurashtra Ordinance which came to an end when the Act became applicable cannot form the basis of determining the written down value for the purposes of assessment of the years 1950-51 onwards. In reply it was submitted that the written down values were calculated and depreciation determined for the year 1943-44 and should in subsequent years have been calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance and they could not become higher for purposes of s. 10(5)(b) of the Act merely because the Ordinance was replaced by the Act. In this connection reference was made to s. 12 of the Finance Act, 1950, which empowered the Central Government to make provision for the removal of difficulties in giving effect to the provisions of any of the Acts, Rules or Orders extended by s. 3 or s. 11 of that Act i.e. Finance Act, 1950. Under that section (s. 12) the Taxation Laws (Part B States) Removal of Difficulties Order, 1950, was promulgated on December 2, 1950, and by cl. 2 of this Order provision was made for computation of aggregate depreciation allowance and written down values. To this Order the following explanation was added on March 9, 1953:

(Notification No. S. R. O. 477) :—

“For the purposes of this paragraph, the expression ‘all depreciation actually allowed under any laws or rules of a Part B State’ means and shall be deemed to have always meant the aggregate allowance for depreciation taken into account in computing the Written Down Value under any laws or rules of a Part B State or carried forward under the said laws or rules.”

But the appellant’s counsel contended that this explanation is ultra vires because it was promulgated under s. 60-A of the Act and that section was inapplicable to the Order made under s. 12 of the Finance Act, 1950. He relied on two cases decided by the Hyderabad High Court in *S. V. Nair v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*² and Commr. of Inc.-tax v. D. B. R. Mills Ltd.,³ but we are informed that one of those judgments is under appeal to this Court and we, therefore, do not wish to express any opinion upon the correctness or otherwise of this contention raised by the appellant.

It was next argued by the learned Attorney General that the written down values determined under s. 35 are not final and can be redetermined in the following assessment years, and in support he referred to *Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd. v. Commr. Inc.-tax*⁴ where the original cost of the machinery purchased at Rs. 3,40,000—was accepted in the successive assessment years till it was doubted in the assessment order 1946-47 and was determined at Rs. 2,80,000 and it was contended that the Income-tax Officer had to take the written down value of the previous year as correct. Thus the question there raised was whether the Income-tax Officer was entitled in law to go behind the original cost accepted by his predecessor ever since the assessment year 1939-40. It was held that neither the principle of res judicata nor estoppel nor the terms of s. 10(2) (vi) of the Act prevented the Income-tax Officer from determining for himself what the actual cost of the machinery had been and that depreciation had to be calculated for every year and it was open to the Income-tax Officer not merely to perform "a mathematical operation on the basis of the Written Down Value of the previous year, but one of determining the Written Down Value himself".

The limit to which the Income-tax Officer can go back does not stop at the written down value of the previous year but extends up to the figure of the original cost, and the method enjoined by s. 10(5) (b) is not that the Income-tax Officer should merely scale down the written down value of the previous year, but that he should take into consideration the actual cost, determining it for himself, if necessary, take also into consideration the allowances granted in the past and then make his own computation as to the written down value for the assessment year with which he is concerned. Thus it cannot be said that merely because under s. 35 some written down value and the depreciation amount have been determined they are a final determination binding for all times to come nor does the determination operate as estoppel or res judicata for the following years. Therefore, it cannot be said that there is no other efficacious and adequate remedy open to the appellant to challenge the depreciation amount determined under s. 35.

Counsel for the appellant contended that the provision under which the Income-tax Officer acted, i.e. s. 35, was not meant for the purpose of making corrections in written down values; and that for the purpose the appropriate and correct provision was s. 34 which specifically refers to excessive depreciation. There are two sections under which an Income-tax Officer can act i.e. ss. 34 and 35 and the question for decision that arises is whether s. 35 was open to him. Section 35 provides:

"(1) The Commissioner or Appellate Assistant Commissioner may, at any time within four years from the date of any order passed by him in appeal or, in the case of the Commissioner, in revision under section 33A and the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within four years from the date of any assessment order or refund order passed by him on his own motion rectify any mistake apparent from the record of the appeal, revision, assessment or refund as the case may be, and shall within the like period rectify any such mistake which has been brought to his notice by an assessee."

The question, therefore, is was it a mistake apparent from the record which the Income-tax Officer has rectified. It was submitted that recalculation is not rectifying a mistake which is apparent from the record. The words used in the section are "apparent from the record", and the record does not mean only the order of assessment but it comprises all proceedings on which the assessment order is based and the Income-tax Officer is entitled for the purpose of exercising his jurisdiction under s. 35 to look into the whole evidence and the law applicable to ascertain whether there was an error. If he doubts the written down value of the previous year it is open to him to check up the previous calculations, and if he finds any mistake, it is open to him to make fresh calculations in accordance with the law applicable including the rules made thereunder.

The Privy Council in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand*⁵ held s. 35 to be applicable where the facts were that the assessee did not produce books of account and an assessment was made by the Income-tax Officer to the best of his judgment. An application for the registration of the firm was, however, allowed and it was registered on January 17, 1927. On the same day assessment was made under s. 23(4). As it was a registered firm no super-tax was assessed. The Commissioner called for the record under s. 33 and cancelled the registration on January 28, and ordered the Income-tax Officer to take necessary consequential action. The result of that was that the assessee became liable to super-tax. Consequently an order for super-tax was made on May 4, 1929, and three days later notice of demand was issued. The Privy Council held that as the fresh action taken by the Income-tax Officer was hopelessly out of time the demand for super-tax was illegal because after the final assessment the Income-tax Officer could not go on making fresh computations and issuing fresh notices of demand to the end of all time but it was held that the provisions of ss. 34 and 35 prescribed the only circumstances in which fresh assessment could be made and fresh notice of demand could be issued. At page 867 Lord Romer observed:

"...In the present case it is a debatable question whether the circumstances were such as to bring it within the provisions of s. 34. It is not necessary to determine that question inasmuch as, in their Lordships' opinion, the case clearly would have fallen within the provisions of s. 35 had the Income-tax Officer exercised his powers under the section within one year from the date on which the earlier demand was served upon the respondents. For, looking at the record of the assessments made upon them as it stood after the cancellation of the respondent's registration—and the order effecting the cancellation would have formed part of that record—it would be apparent that a mistake had been made in stating that no super-tax was leviable."

Thus the order effecting the cancellation of the registration of the assessee's firm was considered to have formed part of the record of the case.

In *Sidhramappa v. Commr. I.T.*⁶ the facts were that a debt belonging to a joint family fell on partition to the share of the assessee. This debt was held not to be recoverable by a judgment of the Bombay High Court dated September 29, 1941. Holding it to be within the accounting year the Appellate Tribunal allowed this sum to be taken into consideration for the purpose of the accounting year. It subsequently corrected the error. It was held that under s. 35 the Tribunal was entitled to rectify the mistake and was competent to pass a consequential order dismissing the appeal instead of allowing it.

The power under s. 35 is no doubt limited to rectification of mistakes which are apparent from the record. A mistake contemplated by this section is not one which is to be discovered as a result of an argument, but it is open to the Income-tax Officer to examine the record including the evidence, and if he discovers any mistake, he is entitled to rectify the error provided that if the result is enhancement of assessment or reducing the refund then notice has to be given to the assessee and he should be allowed a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

The scope and effect of the expression "mistake apparent from the record" and the extent of the powers of the Income-tax Officer under s. 35 of the Act were discussed by this Court in *Venkatachalam v. B'bay Dyg. & Mfg. Co.*⁷ where the facts were these: A sum of Rs. 50,063 being interest on tax paid in advance was given credit for under s. 18A(5) of the Act. Subsequently there was an amendment of the Act by which the interest became allowable only on the difference between the amount of tax paid and what was actually determined. As a consequence of this the Income-tax Officer purporting to act under s. 35 of the Act rectified the mistake and reduced the amount of interest credited to Rs. 21,157 and issued a demand for the difference. The assessee obtained a writ of prohibition against the Income-tax Officer on the ground that the mistake contemplated under that provision had to be apparent on the face of the order and it was not contemplated to cover a mistake resulting from an amendment of the law even though it was retrospective in its effect. The Revenue appealed to this Court. Thus the question for decision in that case was whether an order proper and valid when made could be said to disclose a mistake apparent from the record merely because it became erroneous as a result of a subsequent amendment of the law which was retrospective in its operation. In delivering the judgment of the Court Gajendragadkar J. said (p. 540) :—

"At the time when the Income-tax Officer applied his mind to the question of rectifying the alleged mistake, there can be no doubt that he had to read the principal Act as containing the inserted proviso as from April 1, 1952. If that be the true position then the order which he made giving credit to the respondent for Rs. 50,603-15-0 is plainly and obviously inconsistent with a specific and clear provision of the statute and that must inevitably be treated as a mistake of law apparent from the record. If a mistake of fact apparent from the record of the assessment order can be rectified under s. 35, we see no reason why a mistake of law which is glaring and obvious cannot be similarly rectified." The decision of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand was referred to.

Counsel for the appellant sought to distinguish both these cases; Venkatachalam's case and Khemchand's case, on the ground that the record there considered was the assessment record of that year and the Income-tax Officer did not have to go to the records of the previous year. That is a distinction without a difference. If, for instance, the Income-tax Officer had found that in the assessment year 1952-53 there was an apparent arithmetical mistake in the account of the written down value of the properties which resulted in a corresponding mistake in the assessment of the year in controversy could he not take the corrected figure for the purposes of the assessment and could it be said that the mistake was not apparent from the record. A fortiori if he discovered that the very basis of the different assessments was erroneous because of an initial mistake in determining the written down value could it be said that this would not be a mistake apparent from the record. And if in order to determine the correct written down value the Income-tax Officer makes correct calculations, can it be said that that is not rectifying a mistake apparent from the record but is de hors it.

In our opinion this appeal is without force and we would, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Naik.

GAJANAN KRISHNARAO CHAWANDKE v. THE COLLECTOR, BULDANA.*

Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act (II of 1922), Secs. 25(6), 172; Rules framed under s. 25(6)—Employee of Municipal Committee appealing against his exclusion from promotion by Committee—Competency of such appeal—Whether refusal by Committee to promote employee can be regarded as punishment.

The rules framed under s. 25(6) of the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, are limited to appeals against departmental punishments only. They cannot be regarded as general rules enabling any employee of the Municipal Committee who is aggrieved by any decision of the Municipal Committee to prefer an appeal.

No Government servant has a vested right to promotion; if a person though entitled because of the length of his service or of his qualifications to promotion is not promoted in due course, it cannot be said that he has been punished. Where, therefore, the Municipal Committee refuses to promote its employee in due course, it cannot be regarded as a punishment. The action of the Municipal Committee may be regarded as a punishment only where as a result of it the existing position of its employee is worsened.

*Decided, April 16, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 394 of 1958.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

C. P. Kalele, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, for respondents Nos. 3 and 5.

W. B. Pendharkar, for respondents Nos. 6, 8 and 9.

MUDHOLKAR J. The petitioner is a primary school teacher serving with the Municipal Committee, Khamgaon. He joined service on January 18, 1932, and was eventually confirmed. There are six posts in the Select Grade which are open to primary school teachers serving with the Municipal Committee. The question of filling those posts came before the Municipal Committee on April 17, 1953. On that date they called for recommendations from the Education Sub-Committee. That Sub-Committee sent up the names of six teachers. Apparently, the recommendations of the Sub-Committee did not find favour with the General Committee and, therefore, the General Committee referred the matter to the Education Sub-Committee for fresh recommendations. The petitioner's name was originally recommended by the Sub-Committee, but on the second occasion it was not recommended. On March 19, 1953, the Municipal Committee considered the entire question at its general meeting and resolved to appoint the following six persons in the Select Grade:—

- (1) G. D. Shegokar.
- (2) B. N. Rajhansa.
- (3) H. T. Saraf.
- (4) R. M. Amle.
- (5) S. T. Potdar.
- (6) S. B. Panat.

The petitioner was thus not one of those persons who were appointed in the Select Grade by the Municipal Committee. One K. M. Ghatol was also a senior primary school teacher and he preferred an appeal before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Khamgaon, apparently under the rules framed under s. 25(6) of the C.P. and Berar Municipalities Act against his exclusion from promotion to the Select Grade. This appeal was allowed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Khamgaon, by the Order dated November 24, 1954. The operative portion of the order of the Additional Deputy Commissioner was:—

"I, therefore, order that the applicant should be given the selection grade. He should be given selected grade either out of the teachers described above or the order of selection of either Amle or Saraf should be cancelled and preference given to the applicant. It is for the M.C. to decide whether to cancel Amle's selection grade or Saraf's but the applicant should be given the selection grade."

The Municipal Committee, purporting to comply with the aforesaid order, reviewed the entire position and passed a resolution on March 14, 1955, cancelling the select grade of four teachers, S. B. Panat, S. T. Potdar, R. M. Amle and H. T. Saraf, and instead appointed the following six teachers to the select grade with effect from March 1, 1955:—

- (1) D. N. Bhangadbhatti.
- (2) N. M. Mandvekar.
- (3) G. D. Shegokar.
- (4) B. N. Rajhansa.
- (5) G. K. Chawandke (Petitioner).
- (6) K. M. Ghatol.

This was by a resolution of the General Meeting of the Municipal Committee held on April 6, 1958.

The four persons whose select grade was taken away preferred an appeal before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Khamgaon, again apparently under the rules framed under s. 25(6). The Sub-Divisional Officer allowed the appeal and observed:—

"I therefore hold that the action of the Municipal Committee in withdrawing the select grade of the 4 appellants and selecting the aforesaid 4 teachers in their place is illegal and improper. I therefore set aside the decision of the Municipal Committee and further direct the 4 appellants shall continue in the select grade as before and the other 4 teachers namely Shri Bhangadhatti, Shri Mandvekar, Shri Rajhansa and Shri Chavandke shall revert, if promoted to select grade, to their original grade."

After the aforesaid order was passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, the President of the Municipal Committee made the following endorsement:—

"Effect needs be given to the S.D.O.'s order. Inform all those affected by the order and place before Ex. S.C. for its information."

The petitioner and the other three teachers, who were affected by the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, moved the Municipal Committee for preferring an appeal against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer. The Municipal Committee then went up in appeal before the Deputy Commissioner against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer. That appeal was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner. In that appeal one of the contentions raised on behalf of the Municipal Committee was that the appeal before the Sub-Divisional Officer was incompetent. This contention was overruled by the Deputy Commissioner and the appeal of the Municipal Committee was dismissed on merits. The Municipal Committee then went up to the Board of Revenue, Madhya Pradesh, in revision and the application for revision was transferred to the Divisional Officer, Vidarbha. The Divisional Officer dismissed the revision application on the ground that the application was incompetent.

After the dismissal of the revision application the Municipal Committee, Khamgaon, served the following notice dated November 29, 1957, on the petitioner:—

"Subject:—Select Grade.

Reference:—Since the appeal (revision) of the Municipal Committee before the Revenue Tribunal has been rejected, therefore your Select Grade has been taken away. Note."

It may be mentioned that the petitioner actually worked in the Select Grade from March 1, 1955, till the end of November 1957 and was given his pay admissible in that grade. After the petitioner was served with the aforesaid order he preferred an appeal before the Sub-Divisional Officer. The Sub-Divisional Officer also dismissed the appeal on the ground that the order sought to be appealed from was against only an administrative order which intended to give effect to the previous judicial order and was thus incompetent. The petitioner then preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner and that appeal was dismissed on that ground as also on the ground that the teachers who were appointed in place of the petitioner and other ousted persons were not joined as parties to the appeal. The petitioner has, therefore, come up to this Court under art. 226 of the Constitution.

It seems to us that there has been a complete misapprehension of the question as to the right of appeal in such cases on the part of Revenue Officers. Section 172 of the Municipalities Act provides that no appeal shall lie against any order made under the Act except where express provision for appeal from such order has been made in the Act or any rule made thereunder. Section 25 of the Act deals with appointment, duties and conditions of service of the municipal servants. Sub-section (6) of that section makes the following provision in regard to the right of appeal:—

"The Provincial Government may prescribe the classes or grades of officers and servants who shall have the right of appeal except in the case of dismissal under sub-section (5) from any decision of the committee inflicting any departmental punishment other than censure."

In regard to this provision rules have been framed by the then Provincial Government which are to be found at pp. 183 to 184 of the Municipal Manual.

It is to be borne in mind that sub-s. (6) of s. 25 confers power on the Provincial Government to make rules for providing for appeals only against those decisions of the Municipal Committee which inflict departmental punishments otherwise mentioned. Therefore, those rules must be deemed to be limited to appeals against departmental punishments only. They cannot be regarded as general rules enabling any employee of the Municipal Committee who is aggrieved by the decision of the municipal committee to prefer an appeal. It would appear that the Revenue Officers are under the impression that those rules confer a general right of appeal upon a municipal servant against any decision of the municipal committee. If the right of appeal is limited, and it must be according to the rules limited, to those decisions of the municipal committee which inflict departmental punishments on a municipal servant, then it would follow that the appeal preferred by Ghatol against the resolution dated March 19, 1953, appointing Shegokar, Rajhansa, Saraf, Amle, Potdar and Panat to the select grade, was incompetent. Ghatol's contention in the appeal was that he had better claims to be appointed to the select grade than the persons whom the Municipal Committee by its resolution dated March 19, 1953, had appointed. Even though Ghatol may have a just grievance, we do not think that any redress could be given to him in an appeal by the Sub-Divisional Officer. It must be borne in mind that no Government servant has a vested right to promotion; if a person, though entitled because of the length of his service or of his qualifications to promotion, is not promoted in due course, it cannot be said that he has been punished. If the Revenue Officers think that the refusal to promote a person in due course is a punishment, then we would like to remove the misconception. The action of the Municipal Committee may be regarded as a punishment only where as a result of it the existing position of a person is worsened. It cannot be regarded as a punishment where there is a refusal on the part of the Municipal Committee or any other employer to promote its employee or to improve his position.

If, therefore, the resolution of March 19, 1953, could not be interfered with by the Sub-Divisional Officer in appeal, it follows that the subsequent resolution of the Municipal Committee dated April 6, 1955, whereunder the petitioner was appointed, must be regarded as without jurisdiction. Upon this view, we must hold that the petitioner's grievance cannot be redressed because there was no legal basis for his appointment to the select grade. Here we would like to make one point clear and it is this that in so far as the appeal to the Sub-Divisional Officer by the four persons who were appointed by the resolution dated March 19, 1953, but were reverted by the resolution of April 6, 1955, is concerned it was competent because the action of the Municipal Committee amounted to a reversion of those persons without following the procedure laid down in the rules.

We realize that the petitioner having worked in the select grade for almost three years has been hit hard by what has happened subsequently, but since his original appointment itself was illegal, there is nothing which we can do for him except recommend to the Municipal Committee to consider his case favourably when the next occasion arises for selection. Mr. Kalele, who appears for the petitioner, says that the Municipal Committee will ask him to refund the excess salary which he drew during the period he worked in the select grade. Now we realize that it would be very hard for the petitioner to pay back that amount. But we cannot do anything about it. We, therefore, leave it to the good sense of the Municipal Committee to deal with the petitioner in a sympathetic way.

The rule is discharged. We make no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

BHAGWANDAS MOTIRAM MARWARI v. THE BOMBAY REVENUE TRIBUNAL, NAGPUR.*

Bombay Commissioners of Divisions Act (VIII of 1958), Sec. 8—Constitution of India, art. 226—Bombay Revenue Tribunal whether an "authority" within s. 8—Whether word "authority" in art. 226 of Constitution includes a purely judicial tribunal.

The Bombay Revenue Tribunal does not fall within the term "authority" as used in s. 8 of the Bombay Commissioners of Divisions Act, 1957.

The word "authority" in art. 226 of the Constitution of India does not include a purely judicial tribunal. A quasi-judicial body or tribunal (that is, an administrative or executive body or tribunal entrusted with judicial functions) will fall within the ambit of the word "authority". But where the sole function of a tribunal is to administer justice judicially, it cannot fall within the expression "authority."

THE facts appear in the judgment.

C. P. Kalele, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, for opponent No. 4.

MUDHOLKAR J. This is a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution for quashing the order of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal at Nagpur, transferring an appeal preferred by the petitioner and pending before it to the Commissioner, Nagpur, for disposal. According to the Tribunal, by virtue of s. 8 of the Bombay Commissioners of Divisions Act (Act VIII of 1958) an appeal of this kind has to be transferred to the Commissioner for disposal. The appeal in question arose out of an order made by the Sub-Divisional Officer upon an application made by respondent No. 4 under s. 19 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

In coming to the conclusion that the appeal has to be transferred to the Commissioner, the Revenue Tribunal has relied upon a decision of the Full Bench of the Tribunal in *Vishweshar Rao v. State of Bombay*¹. Section 8 of the Bombay Commissioners of Divisions Act runs thus:—

"All proceedings including proceedings by way of appeals, revision or review pending under any existing law before the State Government or a Divisional Officer or Director of Local Authorities or any other officer or authority immediately before the commencement of this Act shall, where disposal of the proceedings falls within the purview of the powers and duties of the Commissioner, be transferred to the Commissioner for disposal according to law."

Now, the Revenue Tribunal is not specifically mentioned in this section, but in Vishweshar Rao's case it has been held that the word "authority" occurring in this section includes a Revenue Tribunal. It was contended before the Tribunal that the word "authority" should be construed ejusdem generis. Negating this argument the Revenue Tribunal pointed out that before applying the rule of ejusdem generis it must be shown that the authorities enumerated in the section belong to the same genus. It was further argued before the Tribunal that in s. 8 the expressions "State Government", "Divisional Officer" and "Director of Local Authorities" are used in the descending order and, therefore, the words "any other officer or authority" must be construed to indicate officers or authorities subordinate to those mentioned already. This argument was also repelled by the Tribunal upon the view that there is nothing to show that the status of the Director of Local Authorities was inferior to that of the Divisional Officer.

In our opinion, however, the word "authority" cannot, at any rate in the particular context, be deemed to include a tribunal which is entrusted with the exercise of purely judicial powers. The word "authority" literally means a body exercising executive, administrative or legislative power and is usually used by the Legislature to indicate subordinate agencies i.e. agencies subordinate to the Executive Government, entrusted with the exercise of executive or administrative or quasi-judicial power. It is also used to denote agencies such as independent or semi-independent Corporations to which power has been delegated by Government or upon which power to exercise executive or administrative functions is conferred by the Legislature. The term "authority" cannot be deemed to include a Court or any other judicial tribunal. In our opinion, therefore, that term, as used in s. 8, would not include a tribunal like the Bombay Revenue Tribunal, which is entrusted with the duty of adjudicating upon the rights of persons judicially. Now, if the word "authority" is given the meaning accorded to it by the Full Bench of the Revenue Tribunal, then it would mean that the Revenue Tribunal must transfer every proceeding pending before it, whether it is an appeal or a revision and which falls "within the purview of the power and duties of the Commissioner" to the Commissioner. The result of this would be that a Revenue Tribunal which has been constituted by the Revenue Tribunals Act of 1939, would be bereft of almost all its work and will have hardly anything to do. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature to deprive the tribunal of its work and strike at the very root of its existence.

We have already adverted to the second condition which has to be fulfilled before any appeal or application could be transferred to the Commissioner and that is that the proceedings must fall within the purview of the powers and duties of the Commissioner. This point has been dealt with by the Full Bench of the Tribunal in para. 9 of its judgment. The Tribunal had examined the provisions of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code and had come to the conclusion that every appeal against the orders of the Additional Deputy Commissioner and Collector which could have been entertained or dealt with by the Commissioner would lie to the Commissioner or, if it had been preferred to the Tribunal, would have to be transferred to the Commissioner. Upon this view, it will follow that the Revenue Tribunal will have no work whatsoever to deal with.

It is true that in art. 226 of the Constitution, which deals with the power of the High Court to issue writs, it is provided that such a writ can issue to any person or "authority" including a Government. It is suggested that the word "authority" so used must include even a Revenue Tribunal or a Board of Revenue. However wide may be the meaning of the word "authority" used in this article, it cannot, in our opinion, include a purely judicial tribunal. A quasi-judicial body or a tribunal (that is, an administrative or an executive body or a tribunal entrusted with judicial functions) would certainly fall within the ambit of the word "authority". But where the sole function of a tribunal is to administer justice judicially, it cannot fall within the expression "authority". The Bombay Revenue Tribunal is not entrusted with any administrative work but is solely entrusted with the duty of deciding matters judicially, whether between an individual and an individual or between the State and an individual. It cannot be deemed to be performing quasi-judicial functions but must be regarded as performing purely judicial functions. We are, therefore, clear that the Revenue Tribunal does not fall within the term "authority" as used in s. 8 of the Act. Upon this view it will follow that the appeal will have to be dealt with by the Revenue Tribunal itself and that its transfer to the Commissioner is erroneous.

We accordingly make the rule absolute, quash the order of the Revenue Tribunal and direct it to withdraw the appeal from the file of the Commissioner and hear it. There will be no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

ANDHERI MAROL KURLA BUS SERVICE v. THE STATE OF BOMBAY.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), Secs. 20(2)(b), 12(6)—Whether conciliation proceedings and when report under s. 12(6) made by Conciliation Officer—Conciliation proceedings continuing beyond fourteen days or report under s. 12(6) not made within fourteen days—Whether such proceedings come to an end after fourteen days.

Under s. 20(2)(b) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the conciliation proceedings do not end when the report under s. 12(6) of the Act is made by the Conciliation Officer but when that report is received by the appropriate Government.

Workers of the Industry Colliery, Dhanbad v. Management of the Industry Colliery, referred to.

If conciliation proceedings are not closed but are carried on beyond a period of fourteen days, or if the Conciliation Officer does not make his report within fourteen days as required by s. 12(6) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, in law the proceedings do not automatically come to an end after fourteen days but only terminate as provided in s. 20(2)(b) of the Act.

Colliery Mazdoor Congress v. New Beerbhoom Coal Co., Ltd., referred to.

THE facts are stated at 57 Bombay Law Reporter 529.

Hardayal Hardy, for the appellants.

H. J. Umrigar and R. H. Dhebar, for the respondent.

KAPUR J. This is an appeal by special leave against the judgment and order of the High Court of Bombay reversing the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, and thus convicting accused Nos. 1 and 5 under s. 31(1) read with s. 33(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act (Act XIV of 1947) (hereinafter called the Act) and sentencing accused No. 1 to a fine of Rs. 250 and accused No. 5 to a fine of Rs. 50.

The appellants are the Andheri Marol Kurla Bus Service who was accused No. 1 (now appellant No. 1) and its manager H. M. Khan who was accused No. 5 (now appellant No. 2). Some disputes arose between appellant No. 1 and its workmen. On December 13, 1951, the Conciliation Officer wrote to appellant No. 1 and enclosed the demands of the Union which were dated August 9, 1951. On December 31, 1951, appellant No. 1 was asked to appear before the Conciliation Officer on January 9, 1952, and after getting one adjournment appellant No. 1 appeared before the Conciliation Officer on January 17, 1952, and filed its written statement and raised various objections. The next date of hearing was January 31, 1952, and the proceedings went on till June 2, 1952, when appellant No. 1 wrote to the Conciliation Officer saying that no useful purpose would be served by holding any further meetings. On May 9, 1952, the Union had also indicated to the Conciliation Officer that the negotiations had failed. On March 18, 1952, the appellant dismissed Louis Pereira, a bus conductor, and proceedings were taken on a complaint by the Assistant Commissioner of Labour under s. 33 read with s. 31 of the Act against 5 accused persons, the two appellants and the partners of appellant No. 1. The Chief Presidency Magistrate acquitted all the accused including the appellants and held that as the conciliation proceedings had continued for a period of more than 14 days as from January 17, 1952, further proceedings for conciliation were illegal and, therefore, the accused persons could not be convicted under s. 31(1) of the Act. The State took an appeal to the High Court and the judgment of acquittal was reversed and of the accused persons the two appellants were convicted and the others were acquitted. The two appellants have appealed by special leave.

The question for decision is whether the conciliation proceedings could be said to be pending when Louis Pereira was dismissed. If the answer is in the affirmative then the appellants have been properly convicted, and if not, the conviction must be set aside. Section 31(1) makes the contravention of the provision of s. 33 of the Act an offence punishable with imprisonment for a period which may extend to six months or with fine or with both.

No. 46 of 1957. 2 (1952) L. A. C. 210, 222.

Section 33(1) provides:

"Section 33. (1) During the pendency of any conciliation proceeding before a Conciliation Officer or a Board or of any proceeding before a Labour Court or Tribunal or National Tribunal in respect of an industrial dispute, no employer shall:—

(a) in regard to any matter connected with the dispute, alter to the prejudice of the workmen concerned in such dispute, the conditions of service applicable to them immediately before the commencement of such proceedings; or

(b) for any misconduct connected with the dispute, discharge or punish, whether by dismissal or otherwise, any workmen concerned in such dispute, save with the express permission in writing of the authority before which the proceeding is pending."

Therefore, the question reduces itself to the meaning of the words "pendency of any conciliation proceedings before a conciliation officer".

The argument raised on behalf of the appellant is that the object of conciliation is to get a settlement made with expedition and, therefore, under s. 12 the Conciliation Officer was bound to make his report within 14 days of the commencement of the conciliation proceedings or within such shorter period fixed by the appropriate Government. From this it was submitted that as 14 days had expired before March 18, 1952, the dismissal could not be said to be one within the words "pendency of conciliation proceedings". The Act provides for commencement and conclusion of conciliation proceedings under s. 20, but the first sub-section of s. 20 deals with what are called utility services and sub-s. (2) of that section provides as to when the conciliation proceedings conclude. That sub-section is as follows:—

"Section 20. (1) ...

(2) A conciliation proceeding shall be deemed to have concluded—

(a) where a settlement is arrived at, when a memorandum of the settlement is signed by the parties to the dispute;

(b) where no settlement is arrived at, when the report of the Conciliation Officer is received by the appropriate Government or when the report of the Board is published under section 17, as the case may be, or

(c) when a reference is made to a Court, Labour Court, Tribunal or National Tribunal under section 10 during the pendency of conciliation proceedings."

The provisions of sub-s. 20(2) apply to all conciliation proceedings whether in regard to utility services or otherwise. All conciliation proceedings under this sub-section shall be deemed to have concluded in the case where no settlement is reached, when the report of the Conciliation Officer is received by the appropriate Government. The conciliation proceedings, therefore, do not end when the report under s. 12(6) is made by the Conciliation Officer but when that report is received by the appropriate Government. It was contended that the conciliation proceedings should be held to terminate when the Conciliation Officer is required under s. 12(6) of the Act to submit his report but the provisions of the Act above quoted do not support this contention as the termination of the conciliation proceedings is deemed to take place when the report is received by the appropriate Government. This is how s. 20(2)(b) was interpreted in Workers of the Industry Colliery, Dhanbad v. Management of the Industry Colliery.¹

It was next contended that on this interpretation the conciliation proceedings could be prolonged much beyond what was contemplated by the Act and the termination would depend upon how soon a report is received by the appropriate Government. It is true that s. 12(6) of the Act contemplates the submission of the report by the Conciliation Officer within 14 days but that does not affect the pendency of the conciliation proceedings, and if for some reason the Conciliation Officer delays the submission of his report his action may be reprehensible, but that will not affect the interpretation to be put on s. 20(2)(b) of the Act. Section 12 lays down the duties of the Conciliation Officer. He is required to bring about settlement between the parties and must begin his investigation without delay, and if no settlement is arrived at, he is to submit his report to the appropriate Government. No doubt s. 12 contemplates that the report should be made and the proceedings closed within a fortnight, and if proceedings are not closed but are carried on, as they were in the present case, or if the Conciliation Officer does not make his report within 14 days he may be guilty of a breach of duty, but in law the proceedings do not automatically come to an end after 14 days but only terminate as provided in s. 20(2)(b) of the Act. (*Colliery Mazdoor Congress v. New Beerbhoom Coal Co., Ltd.*²). As the conciliation proceedings were pending at the time when Louis Pereira was dismissed the appellants were rightly convicted under s. 31(1) read with s. 33 of the Act.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Nalk.

MST. JANKU ZIBAL v. SHAMRAO MALHARRAO PANDHARE.*

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 181, 182—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 11—Plaintiff's suit for possession decreed on December 20, 1947, on condition that plaintiff deposited certain amount in Court—Appeal by parties to suit dismissed on October 31, 1955—Application for execution of decree without deposit of money made on October 2, 1956—Deposit made by October 9, 1958—Whether application barred by time—Applicability of arts. 181 and 182—Whether application not in accordance with law because not accompanied by deposit.

Plaintiff filed a suit against the defendants for possession of property and the suit was partly decreed on December 20, 1947, whereby possession was granted to the plaintiff on condition that he deposited a certain amount in Court. The parties to the suit appealed and their appeals were dismissed on October 31, 1955. On October 2, 1956, the plaintiff made an application for execution of the decree without depositing any money along with it, but by October 9, 1958, he had deposited the amount in Court. On the questions whether the application for execution was barred by time and whether it was not in accordance with law, the defendants contended that the decree passed by the trial Court was a conditional decree and that to such a decree the appropriate Article of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, which applied was art. 181 of the Act, and, therefore, the application was barred by time, and that as the plaintiff's application was not accompanied by the deposit, it was not in accordance with law:—

Held, that on general principles, apart from the provisions of item 2 in column 3 of art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, where execution is sought of a decree passed in a suit in which an appeal has been preferred and decided, the starting point of limitation would be the date of the appellate decree, that even though art. 181 of the Act applied to an appellate decree, the deposit of the amount having been made by the plaintiff within three years of that decree and the execution application having also been made during this period, the application was not barred by time:

*Decided, May 1, 1959. Second Appeal No. 29 of 1959, against the order passed by T. L. Junankar, First Additional District Judge at Nagpur, in Execution Case No. 5-A of 1946, arising out of Civil Suit No. 5-A of 1946, decided by M. L. Shrivastava, First Additional District Judge, Nagpur.

Gopal Sattu v. Dnyanu Maruti,¹ Bhuralal v. Jivan Singh,² *Maharaja of Darbhanga v. Homeshwar Singh*³ and Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh,⁴ referred to; and that the relief which the plaintiff had sought was clearly one which was awarded by the decree and the executing Court had jurisdiction to grant it, but if ultimately the plaintiff failed to deposit the amount within the time allowed by the Court, then the Court could dismiss his application but it could not do so simply on the ground that the amount was not put in along with the application for execution:

Gopal Parsharam v. Damodar Janardhan,⁵ referred to.

Normally the article which is applicable to an application for execution is art. 182, and it is only in those cases where for some reason that article does not apply that art. 181, which is a residuary article, can be pressed in aid. Where the question is whether the main article or the residuary article applies, what the Court must do is to determine whether any of the starting points in art. 182 is applicable to the particular application for execution. If none of the starting points is applicable then only the Court can resort to art. 181.

There is a distinction between a case where an application is liable to be dismissed on the ground that it is not in accordance with law and one where it is liable to be dismissed on the ground that the decree-holder is not entitled to obtain any relief because of non-compliance with the condition laid down in the decree sought to be executed.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

D. B. Padhye, for the appellants.

N. S. Nandedkar, for the respondent.

MUDHOLKAR J. This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution and has been referred for decision to a Division Bench because it involves an important question of law.

The relevant facts are these. The plaintiff, who is respondent in the appeal, instituted civil suit No. 5-A/46 for possession of certain property and for setting aside certain alienations made by its limited owners. That suit was partly decreed on December 30, 1947. The appellants before us are some of the alienees who were defendants to that suit. They were in possession of some of the property of which possession was granted to the respondent on condition that he deposited Rs. 41,026-12-6. The decree was appealed from both by the appellants as well as the respondent. Their appeals were dismissed on October 31, 1955. It may be mentioned that defendant No. 8 to the suit had also preferred an appeal against the decree of the trial Court in so far as it affected him. That appeal was allowed and the respondent's claim as against him was dismissed. Therefore, the net result of the appeals preferred before this Court by the parties to the suit was that the decree of the trial Court was modified in so far as it related to defendant No. 8, but was upheld with respect to the plaintiff and other defendants thereto.

On October 2, 1956, the respondent made an application for execution of the decree, but he did not deposit any money along with the execution application. He, however, deposited Rs. 32,000 on August 7, 1958, Rs. 3,000 on August 8, 1958, and Rs. 6,026-12-6 on August 16, 1958. Soon after this amount was deposited, defendants Nos. 6 to 8 and the present appellants attached in all a sum of Rs. 2,407.56 nP. out of the amount deposited by the respondent in execution of the decree for costs which they held against the respondent and in their favour. On October 9, 1958, the respondent deposited a sum of Rs. 2,407.56 nP. in Court 'without prejudice' and thus restored the amount deposited by him for payment to the appellants to the original figure of Rs. 41,026-12-6.

The appellants resisted the application for execution on two grounds; firstly, that that application was barred by time, and, secondly, that it was not in accordance with law. Both these grounds were negatived by the Court below and possession of the property which was with the appellants was ordered to be delivered to the respondent along with the standing crops. In this appeal the appellants have reiterated both the contentions raised by them before the executing Court and have also taken an additional contention to the effect that the Court below was in error in ordering delivery of possession to the respondent along with the standing crops.

In support of the plea of limitation it is urged by Mr. D. B. Padhye for the appellants, that the decree which was passed by the Court below was a conditional decree, that to that decree the appropriate article of the Limitation Act which applied was art. 181, that under that article the respondent was bound to apply for execution on the date on which the decree was passed, or within three years of that date, and that the application having been made nearly 9 years after the passing of the decree by the trial Court was barred by time.

Reliance was placed by Mr. Padhye strongly on the decision of this Court in *Gopal Sattu v. Dnyanu Maruti*¹ and *Bhuralal v. Jiwansingh*². In the first mentioned case the suit was for possession of certain immovable property and was decreed by consent. The decree provided that the plaintiff shall pay to Bayabai a sum of Rs. 350 by January, 1926, that if he failed to do so, the amount was to carry interest at six per cent. per annum and that on payment of that sum the plaintiff was to get possession of the suit property. Thus under the decree the plaintiff's right to get possession of the property was conditional on his paying the sum of Rs. 350 to Bayabai. Pending the suit Bayabai had sold the property to the defendant, but since he was a purchaser pendente lite he acquired no independent rights to the property as against the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not pay Rs. 350 to Bayabai or to the defendant nor did he sue out execution. On July 8, 1930, however, he filed a suit against the defendant for possession of the property. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. In appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the trial Court and decreed the suit subject to the plaintiff paying to the defendant a sum of Rs. 350. The decision of the District Judge was based upon the view taken in *Basappa Budappa v. Bhimangowda Shiddangowda*³ that an alienee pendente lite is bound by the result of the suit although he is not a party to it, and that a separate suit can lie against such an alienee to recover possession of the property. The defendant, thereupon, came up to this Court in a second appeal. This Court held, following the decision of the Privy Council in *Parmeshari Din v. Ram Charan*⁴, that the transferee of the defendant pendente lite is a representative of the defendant, and that being so, the decree must be enforced against him in execution and not by a separate suit. Then it was contended before this Court on behalf of the plaintiff that the suit could under sub-s. (2) of s. 47 be treated as an application in execution. Dealing with this plea Beaumont C.J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, observed (p. 654):—

"...We should be very ready to treat this suit as an application if we have jurisdiction to do so. But the objection is taken that if we treat this suit as an application, the application is barred by limitation. Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act provides that for the execution of a decree or order of any civil Court the time is to be three years from the date of the decree or order, and then various alternative dates are given in the case of different forms of decrees. None of those alternatives apply to the present case, which is a case of a decree upon a condition. Where you have, as here, a decree for possession on the payment of a sum on a future date, I do not think that the provisions of Art. 182 can have any application. It seems to me impossible to say that the date of the decree is the starting point of time, because the future date on which the decree is to become executable may be more than three years from the date of the decree. I, therefore, think that Art. 181 is the article applicable to such a case, and it was so held by the Allahabad High Court in Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal.^{4a} Under Art. 181 limitation runs from the time when the right to apply accrues. It is argued here that the right to apply for execution of this decree did not arise until the sum of Rs. 350 with requisite interest was paid or tendered, and inasmuch as the sum has not been paid up to the present time or tendered, it is said that limitation has not yet begun to run. It seems to me that the plaintiff's right to enforce the decree arose probably on the day of the decree, because there was nothing in the decree to prevent him paying the Rs. 350 at once. But at any rate it arose in January, 1926, when the sum was payable, and he had an absolute right to enforce the decree on payment of the amount. The execution of most decrees necessitates the possession of a certain amount of money, and it is impossible to say that a decree is not executable because the plaintiff has not got the money necessary to enable him to execute it. I think we are bound to hold that this decree could have been executed by the plaintiff at the latest in January, 1926, and as the suit was not filed until July, 1930, an application in execution would have been out of time. That being so, we cannot treat this suit as an application."

Upon this view, this Court dismissed the appeal.

Now, Mr. Padhye, while conceding that the decree was a consent decree and that it specified the date on which money was to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants relied strongly on the observations of the learned Chief Justice that the plaintiff's right to enforce the decree arose on the day of the decree because there was nothing in the decree to prevent him from paying at once the amount stated in the decree. He says that the plaintiff who has obtained a decree of this kind in his favour cannot be permitted to extend the period of limitation by his own inaction in depositing money which he was required to deposit. It is true that these observations of the learned Chief Justice do lend some support to Mr. Padhye's contention, but we must point out that they are, in fact, obiter and that the substantial ground upon which the decision of that case rested was that a sum of money which the plaintiff was required to pay became payable at a specified point of time and, therefore, the provisions of art. 182 could not apply to the application for execution. There is, however, one important point of distinction between that case and the present one. The point is that an appeal was preferred from the decree of the trial Court making the deposit of a certain sum of money as a condition for obtaining possession of the suit property. Now, item 2, in col. 3 of art. 182 of the Limitation Act provides that where there has been an appeal from a decree the date from which the period of limitation begins to run would be the date of the final decree or order of the appellate Court. Mr. Padhye, however, points out that whereas six different points of time from which limitation commences to run have been set out in art. 182 only one point of time is set out in art. 181, which is "when the right to apply accrues", and that as the decree was a conditional decree, the application for execution must be governed by that article despite the fact that an appeal had been preferred and not by art. 182. It is in support of this particular part of the argument that Mr. Padhye strongly relies upon the decision of the Rajasthan High Court.

Normally the article which is applicable to an application for execution is art. 182 and it is only in those cases where for some reason that article does not apply that art. 181, which is a residuary article, can be pressed in aid. Where the question is whether the main article or the residuary article applies, what the Court must do is to determine whether any of the starting points in art. 182 is applicable to the particular application for execution. If none of these starting points is applicable then only the Court can resort to art. 181. Now, applying this test we at once find that one of the starting points is applicable to the present case and, therefore, it is art. 182 that will be attracted and not art. 181.

Mr. Padhye, however, says that for applying this test what we have to look to are the circumstances which existed when the decree was passed and not those which came into being subsequently. Indeed, had the question been of executing the decree of the trial Court then regard would have had to be had only to the circumstances which obtained when that decree was passed and in the light of those circumstances it would have to be held that the application for execution of the decree originally passed would be governed by art. 181 on the basis of the decision of this Court. But after an appeal is filed a change in circumstances does occur. Where such change occurs then the appropriate article to apply would be art. 182. Indeed, even in the Rajasthan case, on which reliance was placed by Mr. Padhye, the learned Judge held that the maximum period which could be allowed to the plaintiff to deposit the amount required to be deposited under the decree before obtaining possession of the property was three years from the date of the appellate decree, even though the learned Judge has held that the appropriate article to apply is art. 181.

It is no doubt true, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, *Maharaja of Darbhanga v. Homeshwar Singh*⁵, that for art. 182 of the Limitation Act to apply the decree sought to be enforced must be in such a form as to render it capable in the circumstances of being enforced. Therefore, where a decree provides that the right to obtain possession thereunder is conditional upon the payment of a certain sum of money by the plaintiff to the defendant, the application for execution will not be governed by art. 182 of the Limitation Act. In such circumstances, the residuary article i.e. art. 181 must, therefore, apply.

But it must be borne in mind that their Lordships were not dealing with a case where an appeal had been preferred from the original decree and execution was sought within three years of the appellate decree. Mr. Padhye, however, says that this should make no difference in a case where an appellate Court merely confirms the decree of a trial Court. It must however be borne in mind that where there has been an appeal from a decree, it is the decree of an appellate Court which is the final and ultimate decree of the Court, and it is that decree alone which could be executed. See *Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh*⁶. Therefore, whether an appellate Court modifies or sets aside a decree of a trial Court or merely affirms it, the latter decree must be deemed to have merged in the decree of the appellate Court. It cannot be disputed that there can but be only one decree in a suit and, therefore, the only decree of which execution is permissible is the final or the ultimate decree passed in that case. The period of limitation for executing such a decree must necessarily commence after that decree came into being and not from a date anterior thereto. We are accordingly of opinion that on general principles, quite apart from the provisions of item 2 in col. 3 of art. 182, where execution is sought of a decree passed in a suit in which an appeal has been preferred and decided the starting point of limitation would be the date of the appellate decree. It would follow from this that even though art. 181 of the Limitation Act applied to an appellate decree, the deposit of the amount having been made by the respondent within three years of that decree and the execution application having also been made during this period, it will not be barred by time. Of course, if art. 182 applies to this case, then no question of limitation would at all arise. Looking at the matter either way, the respondent's application for execution must be held to be within time.

Mr. Padhye then contended that the respondent's application was not accompanied by the deposit and was consequently not in accordance with law. Now, an application for execution will be deemed to be in accordance with law provided it complies with the requirements of O. XXI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Padhye frankly conceded that all the requirements of that rule were satisfied by the respondent, but he says that it was not open to the Court to grant relief to him because he had not deposited the amount of Rs. 41,000 and odd, which the decree made it obligatory upon him to deposit before being entitled to be in possession of the suit property. It seems to us that there is a distinction between a case where an application is liable to be dismissed on the ground that it is not in accordance with law and one where it is liable to be dismissed on the ground that the decree-holder is not entitled to obtain any relief because of non-compliance with the condition laid down in the decree sought to be executed.

Mr. Padhye referred us to a decision of this Court in *Gopal Parsharam v. Damodar Janardhan*⁷ in which it has been held that "not in accordance with law" cannot be construed so as to mean "not in accordance with law on the face of the application," but must have some reference to the material content, apart from the form and formal content of the application for execution. The question in that case was whether the execution application was within time by reason of the fact that the decree-holder had made some previous applications for execution. It would appear that in those previous applications for execution the decree-holder had asked for a relief which was not within the power of the Court to grant and, therefore, the learned Judges who decided the case held that those execution applications did not help the decree-holder. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judges had relied upon, among other decisions, two decisions of this Court, *Nathubhai Kasandas v. Pranjivan Lalchand*⁸ and Bando Krishna v. Narsimha.⁹ In one of those cases the learned Judges held that if a person, other than one entitled to apply, applies for execution, or if the person entitled applies for execution in a mode and for a relief outside the decree, the application is not in accordance with law. The reason given by one of the learned Judges (Chandavarkar J.) was that the decree of which execution is sought is not in reality the decree to which the application professes to relate but some other decree, one not existing, and, therefore, incapable of execution according to law. The learned Judge then pointed out that where on the other hand a decree gives certain reliefs and the application for execution seeks some or all of them, it may happen that after going into the merits of the application and considering all the circumstances and equities of the case, the Court comes to the conclusion that the particular relief or reliefs sought shall not be granted. In such a case the decision of the Court on merits cannot affect the application for the purposes of the question whether it is in accordance with law, provided it meets in substance the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure or any other law relating to execution. Batchelor J., who was the other Judge constituting the Division Bench, held that if the applying complies with the forms and the procedure prescribed in that behalf that applying was in accordance with law, and not the less so because on the merits of the application, whether for one reason or another the application had to be refused. The learned Judge thought that the words "in accordance with law" were an adverbial qualification of the word "applying". He was of the opinion that it is not even an application but it is the applying which must be in accordance with law. As pointed out in Gopal Parsharam's case by Sen J., the distinction is extremely subtle. But with this aspect of the matter we are not concerned.

What has to be borne in mind is that according to both the learned Judges there is a distinction between a case where an execution application is liable to be dismissed on the ground that it is not in accordance with law and one where it is liable to be dismissed on the ground that in the particular circumstances of a case a decree-holder is not entitled to a relief. Two more cases were cited by Mr. Padhye, but they also proceed on the view that the relief which the decree-holder sought was outside the decree or beyond the power of the jurisdiction of the Court to grant. That is not the case here. The relief which the respondent sought was clearly one which was awarded by the decree and the executing Court had jurisdiction to grant it. It is true that before being put in possession the respondent was required to deposit a certain sum of money, but that is entirely a different matter. If ultimately the respondent failed to deposit the amount within the time allowed by the Court, then the Court would be entitled to dismiss his application, but it certainly could not do so simply on the ground that the amount was not put in along with the application for execution.

Then Mr. Padhye contended that there was no proper and valid tender of a sum of Rs. 2,407.56 nP which was deposited by the respondent "without prejudice" on September 10, 1958. We do not understand what Mr. Padhye means by saying that depositing an amount without prejudice by a party cannot be regarded as a proper deposit in law. He referred to the provisions of s. 38 of the Contract Act but those provisions have nothing to do with a question of the kind which we have here. What s. 38 provides is that where a promisor has made an offer of performance to the promisee and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the Contract Act. Then it provides that every such offer must fulfil certain conditions of which one is that it must be unconditional. Here, we are concerned with the execution of the decree and not with the performance of a contract. Where a person deposits a certain sum of money because he is required to do so by a Court or because a decree prima facie requires him to do so, he cannot be deemed to be making an offer to anyone. He only discharges an obligation resting on him, and if while making a deposit he says that there is no obligation upon him, it cannot be said that he has failed to comply with an order of a Court or the prima facie requirements of a decree. What is of the essence is the depositing of the amount. If he actually makes it within the time allowed by law or by the Court, the deposit is a good one, whether it is conditional or otherwise, and cannot be ignored or said to be no deposit at all in law just because it is conditional. We, therefore, overrule Mr. Padhye's contention.

Finally, Mr. Padhye said that the respondent had sought possession of the fields without standing crops, but the lower Court granted him possession along with the standing crops, and that this was clearly illegal. In column 10 of the execution application "nature of help required from the Court," the respondent has not made an express prayer that he should be given possession along with the standing crops. No doubt, what he asked for was possession only and in fact there were crops standing on the land when the application was made. But we are really not concerned with the crops then standing because the order of the Court below was made almost two years after the execution application was filed and the crops which were standing when the execution application was made have long since been removed. The respondent, however, demanded possession of the standing crops specifically in a later application. He made that application on August 18, 1958, i.e. after he deposited the full amount which the decree had ordered him to deposit as a condition precedent to the obtaining of the possession. In that application he prayed for the issue of a warrant of possession with crops standing on the land. In reply to that application the appellants stated that they had spent Rs. 6,138-9-0

"for preparing the soil and cultivating and sowing and doing other agricultural operations in the fields."

In reply to this application the respondent stated that the amount claimed is highly exaggerated and not admitted and further stated as follows:

"But in order to save trouble and time of ascertaining these expenses the decree-holder submits that possession be given of 81-11 acres of land after the crops are taken out by the judgment-debtors. They should not hereafter make any expenses or sow fresh crop so as to disentitle the decree-holder to claim possession for want of crops."

Dealing with this matter the learned Judge has directed in para. 12 of his order an enquiry into the expenses which the appellants had incurred and directed the respondent to deposit a sum of Rs. 2,000 for payment to the appellants pending enquiry and further directed the issue of a warrant of possession in favour of the respondent. The result of this order was that the respondent was entitled to immediate possession of the land i.e. along with the standing crops. He, however, did not get such possession because of a stay order passed by this Court. It is common ground that the appellants have removed the crop. Mr. Nandedkar, therefore, says that since the respondent did not get any standing crop, the amount of Rs. 2,000 which the respondent was required to deposit should be refunded to him and that he should be awarded immediate possession. In view of the fact that the respondent did not get possession of the land along with the standing crops, there is no doubt whatsoever that he is entitled to get back the amount of Rs. 2,000 which he had deposited in the Court below.

Then Mr. Nandedkar said that if the appellants placed the respondent in immediate possession of the property, he would be willing to give up his claim for the accounts of the crops realized by the appellants during the agricultural year 1958-59. It is, therefore, open to the appellants to avail themselves of this offer by delivering possession of the land to the respondent without delay. However, we cannot make any specific order with regard to this aspect of the matter.

For all these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Payment of Wages Act (IV of 1936), Sec. 2—Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), Secs. 25C, 2(kkk)—Lay-off compensation whether wages within Payment of Wages Act—Whether lay-off terminates contract of employment—Section 2(e) whether applies to lay-off compensation.

Compensation payable for lay-off, under the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, is not wages within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act, 1936.

Bala Subrahmanya v. B. C. Patil,² Asher v. Seaford Court Estates Ltd.³ and Tolaram Relumal v. The State of Bombay,⁴ referred to.

Lay-off does not terminate or bring to an end the contract of employment.

Section 2(e) of the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, contemplates a payment under some scheme like a Provident Fund scheme framed under some enactment. It does not apply to any sum payable under the provisions of the Act itself.

ANUSUYABAI and others (petitioners in Special Civil Application No. 3665 of 1958) were employees of India United Mills Ltd., No. 4 (respondent No. 2), which was a cotton textile concern situated within Greater Bombay. The petitioners were played off by respondent No. 2 and they filed an application in the Court of the Authority under the Payment of Wages Act, 1936 (respondent No. 1), for play off compensation amounting to Rs. 3,772. Respondent No. 2 raised a preliminary objection contending that the claim being for "compensation for lay-off" did not constitute wages as defined under the Payment of Wages Act and that, therefore, respondent No. 1 had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Respondent No. 1 accepted respondent No. 2's contention and dismissed the application.

The petitioners applied to the High Court under art. 227 of the Constitution of India to set aside the order passed by respondent No. 1.

CHAIYANI C.J. The question, which arises for determination in these two applications, is whether compensation, payable to workers, who have been laid off, under the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, is "wages" within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act. The term "lay-off" is defined in cl. (kkk) of s. 2 of the Industrial Disputes Act as meaning the failure, refusal or inability of an employer on account of shortage of coal, power or raw materials or the accumulation of stocks or the breakdown of machinery or for any other reason to give employment to a workman whose name is borne on the muster rolls of his industrial establishment and who has not been retrenched. To put it briefly, lay-off, therefore, means the failure, refusal or inability of an employer to give employment to his employee. There is an Explanation to this clause, which states:

"Every workman whose name is borne on the muster rolls of the industrial establishment and who presents himself for work at the establishment at the time appointed for the purpose during normal working hours on any day and is not given employment by the employer within two hours of his so presenting himself shall be deemed to have been laid-off for that day within the meaning of this clause."

Section 25C of the Act provides that whenever a workman, whose name is borne on the muster rolls of an industrial establishment and who has completed not less than one year of continuous service under an employer is laid-off, he shall be paid by the employer for all days during which he is so laid-off, except for such weekly holidays as may intervene, compensation which shall be equal to fifty per cent. of the total of the basic wages and dearness allowance that would have been payable to him had he not been so laid-off. Section 25D imposes an obligation upon the employer to maintain a muster roll during the period of lay-off and to provide for the making of entries therein by workmen who may present themselves for work at the establishment at the appointed time during normal working hours. Section 25E specifies cases and circumstances in which no compensation shall be payable to a workman, who has been laid-off. For instance, under cl. (i), no compensation is payable, if the workman refuses to accept any alternative employment provided by the employer. These provisions of the Act impose a liability on an employer to make certain payments to his employees, when he fails, refuses or is unable to provide work to them. The payments are referred to as "compensation" and not as "wages". The Legislature has drawn a distinction between wages and compensation. It was open to the Legislature to say that during the period of lay-off, a workman shall be paid wages calculated in the prescribed manner. But the Legislature has deliberately referred to the sum payable to a workman during the period of lay-off as compensation, thereby suggesting that the Legislature did not intend that it should be regarded as wages.

Standing Order No. 17 of the Standing Orders settled by the Industrial Court under s. 36(3) of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, and which determines the relations between the petitioners and their employers, i.e. respondent No. 2 is as follows:

"Any operative played off under Order 16 shall not be considered as dismissed from service, but as temporarily unemployed, and shall not be entitled to wages during such unemployment except to the extent mentioned in Order 16. Whenever practicable a reasonable notice shall be given of resumption of normal work and all operatives played off under Order 16, who present themselves for work, when the normal working is resumed, shall have prior right of reinstatement."

This Standing Order uses the term "played off" instead of "laid off". It gives a right to the employer to lay-off his workmen, that is to say, it relieves him from an obligation to provide work to them. It also relieves him from the liability to pay wages during this period. Consequently, during the period of lay-off, a workman cannot insist on work being provided by his employer. There is also no obligation on him to render service. Consequently, he does not enjoy a right to demand wages. It is, therefore, urged by Mr. Gokhale that as during this period the mutual obligations of the employer and the employee, of the employer to provide work and to pay wages and of the employee to work, cease to exist, and also as the employee cannot claim wages during this period, the contract of employment does not subsist or at least is suspended during this period. Mr. Nargolkar, who appears on behalf of the petitioners, has, on the other hand, urged that the terms of their employment have been modified by statute and that s. 25C of the Industrial Disputes Act makes it a term of their employment that compensation shall be paid to them whenever they are laid-off. He has contended that the obligation to pay such compensation and the right to claim it arise under the terms of employment and that consequently it would be wrong to say that during the period of lay-off, the contract of employment does not subsist or is suspended, or that the relationship of master and servant ceases to exist. We do not think that it is necessary for us to express any definite opinion on this point in these cases. It is, however, clear that lay off does not terminate or bring to an end the contract of employment. The employees continue to be on the muster-roll of the employer and they have to be reinstated as soon as normal working is resumed.

The next question to be considered is whether the compensation granted for lay-off is wages within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act. The definition of the word "Wages" given in the Act was amended in 1957. The amended definition is as follows:—

"Wages" means all remuneration (whether by way of salary, allowances or otherwise) expressed in terms of money or capable of being so expressed which would, if the terms of employment, express or implied, were fulfilled, be payable to a person employed in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment, and includes—

(a) any remuneration payable under any award or settlement between the parties or order of a court;

(b) any remuneration to which the person employed is entitled in respect of over time work or holidays or any leave period;

(c) any additional remuneration payable under the terms of employment (whether called a bonus or by any other name);

(d) any sum which by reason of the termination of employment of the person employed is payable under any law, contract or instrument which provides for the payment of such sum, whether with or without deductions, but does not provide for the time within which the payment is to be made;

(e) any sum to which the person employed is entitled under any scheme framed under any law for the time being in force;..."

Then follow six clauses, under which certain kinds of payments are not to be regarded as wages. It is not necessary to refer to them. Leaving out of consideration, for the time being, cls. (a) to (e), which extend the meaning of the term "wages", the term as defined in the main part of the definition means a payment, which must satisfy three conditions. Firstly, it must be remuneration. Secondly, it must be payable if the terms of employment are fulfilled. Thirdly, it must be payable in respect of employment or work done in such employment. The word "remuneration" ordinarily means any consideration, which a person receives for giving his services (see Stroud's Judicial Dictionary). It is, therefore, a payment made for services rendered. When no services are rendered and when in fact there is no obligation to render services and when the amount becomes payable owing to the failure of the employer to provide work, it would be difficult to hold that it is remuneration. That the Legislature did not also intend that such payments should be regarded as remuneration, is clear from the different phraseology used by it in cls. (a) to (e) as compared to that used in cls. (d) and (e) of the defi-inition. In cls. (a), (b) and (c), the sums payable are described as remuneration. These sums are payable in respect of, or on account of, services which have been or are to be rendered. Clause (d) refers to a sum, which is payable by reason of the termination of employment. Even though such sum may be payable under the contract of employment or under any law, the Legislature has not described it as remuneration. The reason is obvious and that is that the amount is payable not on account of services rendered, but by reason of services having been brought to an end. The definition of the term "wages", therefore, itself suggests that the word remuneration is used in the sense of any payment, which is made for work done or for services rendered. The Supreme Court appears to have taken the same view in *Bala Subrahmanya v. B. C. Patil*¹. At p. 945 Bose J. observes:

"Remuneration is only a more formal version of 'payment' and payment is a recompense for service rendered."

Compensation, which is payable for lay-off, that is, on account of the failure or inability of the employer to provide work, cannot therefore be said to be remuneration. The payment is made not as consideration for work done or services rendered, but as compensation for temporary loss of employment.

Another requirement of a payment to fall within the term "wages" is that it must be "in respect of employment or work done in such employment". The expression "in respect of" means "attributable to", (see *Asher v. Seaford Court Estates Ltd.*²); or, if it is given a wider meaning, "relating to or with reference to" (see *Tolaram Relumal v. The State of Bombay*³). The payment must, therefore, be attributable to employment, that is, engagement in work, or to work done. During the period of lay-off, the employer is not in a position to provide work and the employee cannot insist on work being provided or wages being paid to him. The employee is also not under any duty to work for his master or even to present himself for work. He has to present himself for work, if he desires to claim compensation (see s. 25E of the Industrial Disputes Act). But he has an option in the matter. If he remains absent, he will not be entitled to compensation, but he will not lose the right, which he possesses under the Standing Orders, of reinstatement when the normal working is resumed. The employer cannot insist on his attendance and there is also no obligation upon him to provide work or to pay wages, even if the worker presents himself for work. In order to escape liability for compensation, the employer may provide the worker with alternative employment, but the worker is not bound to accept it. If he does not accept it, he will not be entitled to claim lay-off compensation, but he will not lose his right of reinstatement when the lay-off ends. The compensation for lay-off is, therefore, paid in respect of a period when no work is done and when in fact there is no liability on the employer to provide work and on the employee to do work. It is not paid as additional remuneration for work done previously. It cannot, therefore, be said to be attributable to the employment of a worker or to the work done by him. It is made payable in order to mitigate or reduce the hardship caused by reason of unemployment or temporary loss of employment. Consequently, it cannot be said to be a payment "in respect of employment or work done in such employment."

As, therefore, compensation payable for lay off is not remuneration and is also not payable to a worker in respect of his employment or work done in such employment, it is not "wages" within the meaning of this term given in the main part of the definition. In this view, it is not necessary to consider whether such compensation is payable by reason of the terms of employment being fulfilled.

Mr. Nargolkar has also contended that lay off compensation will fall under cls. (c) and (e) of the definition of wages. Clause (c) brings within the definition any additional remuneration, such as bonus, payable under the terms of employment. Lay off compensation is, however, not remuneration. It will, therefore, not fall under cl. (e).

3 [1955] 1 S. C. R. 158, 165, s.c. 56 Bom. L. R. 1206, 1209.

Clause (e) refers to any sum payable under any scheme framed under any law. This clause contemplates a payment under some scheme like a Provident Fund scheme framed under some enactment. It is not intended to apply to any sum payable under the provisions of the Act itself. If that had been the intention of the Legislature, the words "any sum to which the person employed is entitled under any law" would have been sufficient to carry out the intention of the Legislature and it would not have been necessary to also add the words "under any scheme framed" before "under any law". In our opinion, therefore, cl. (e) has no application to lay off compensation.

We are accordingly of the opinion that compensation payable for lay off, under the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, is not wages within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act. Similar view was taken in Ref. under S. 81, Emp. State Ins. Act.⁴ That was a case under the Employees' State Insurance Act, but the definition of "wages" given in that Act was for all practical purposes the same as the unamended definition of this word in the Payment of Wages Act. The definition of "wages" given in the Payment of Wages Act has since then been amended. But the amendment does not in any way alter the ratio or principle of the decision in Ref. under S. 81, Emp. State Ins. Act. With respect, we agree with the view taken in this case that lay off compensation is not wages.

The rules issued in the two applications will, therefore, be discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

DHARMA VIJAYA AGENCY, BOMBAY v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY I, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 4(3)(i)—Insurance Act (IV of 1938)—Assessee-firm principal agents of insurance company—Business conducted by assessee as principal agents settled on trust exclusively for charitable purposes—Whether income arising from such business exempt from tax under s. 4(3)(i)—Whether principal agency property within s. 4(3)(i)—Applicability of proviso to s. 4(3)(i) as amended by Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act (25 of 1953).

The assessee, which was a partnership firm, were appointed principal agents of an insurance company and remuneration was paid for conducting the business as principal agents. The appointment was subject to termination by either party giving to the other party one month's notice in writing. Thereafter the business conducted by the assessee as principal agents was settled on trust exclusively for charitable purposes. On the question whether the income arising to the assessee in respect of the assessment years 1951-52 to 1954-55, as chief agent of the insurance company was exempt from tax under s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, it was inter alia contended by the Department (1) that the principal agency was nothing but a right of service and it could not be regarded as business and, therefore, not property held upon charitable trust and (2) that in respect of the assessment years 1952-53 to 1954-55, the case fell within the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Act as amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953:—

Held, that the principal agency conducted by the assessee was a business and, therefore, "property" within the meaning of s. 4(3)(i) of the Act, which was capable of being lawfully settled upon trust for charitable purposes:

*J. K. Trust v. Commr. of Inc.-tax,*¹ followed; that the business of the assesses, not being one which was carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, was not governed by the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Act as amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953, and that the income was governed by the operative part of s. 4(3)(i), and that, therefore, the income arising to the assesses, in respect of the four assessment years, as chief agent of the insurance company, was exempt from tax under s. 4(3)(i) of the Act.

The business referred to in cl. (b) of the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, need not be business which is held for religious or charitable purposes, provided it is business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution.

SHAH J. This reference arises from proceedings for assessment of income-tax in respect of assessment years 1951-52, 1952-53, 1953-54 and 1954-55. Four brothers Tulsidas, Ramdas, Ambalal and Chinubhai—whom I will hereafter refer to collectively as “Kilachand brothers”—entered into a partnership agreement for carrying on business—the nature whereof is not clear on the record—in the name and style of Dharma Vijaya Agency. There was no formal deed recording the terms of this partnership. By an agreement, dated September 28, 1950, the firm was appointed as from September 1, 1950, the principal agents of the New Great Insurance Co. of India, Ltd. The appointment was made by a letter setting out certain terms and conditions addressed by the insurance company to the firm, and these terms and conditions were accepted by the firm. By the first condition of the letter the firm was to act as the principal agent on behalf of the insurance company and was at all times to be the holder of a certificate from the Controller of Insurance to act as principal agent. By condition No. 6 the appointment was subject to termination at the will of either party by one party giving to the other one month's notice in writing. By the seventh condition the company invited the attention of the firm to ss. 41 and 102(1) of the Insurance Act, 1938. On February 17, 1951, Kilachand brothers styling themselves as “the founders” executed a deed of trust of the business carried on by them in the name of Dharma Vijaya Agency as principal agents of the New Great Insurance Co. of India Ltd. It was recited by the first paragraph of the deed that the “founders” so long as they shall respectively remain trustees of the deed and all persons thereafter becoming trustees hold and shall hold the business of principal agency and all the benefits and profits to arise from the said business and the realisation and proceeds thereof and all sums of money thereafter received by the trustees and all investments at any time representing the same or any part thereof and all monies arising therefrom upon trust “to pay and apply the same for the relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other subject of general public utility as the trustees shall from time to time think fit:” and by a parenthetical clause the “founders” and the survivors or survivor of them were included in the expression “trustees”. By para. 12 it was provided that “all moneys received by the trustees on account of the said trust, except such sums as may be reasonably required to be kept for current expenses, shall be deposited forthwith on receipt thereof in the trustees’ banking account.” By para. 13 it was provided:

“A banking account for the purposes of the charity shall be opened with one or more scheduled banks. Such banking account shall be operated on by any one trustee unless the trustees otherwise decide. Every sum of money received on account of the charity shall be forthwith paid into the credit of that account unless otherwise expressly ordered by the trustees."

There is no dispute that the trust was created for purposes exclusively charitable. On July 21, 1951, a banking account was opened with the Bank of Baroda, Ltd., in the name of "Dharma Vijaya Agency" with a special instruction that the account will be operated upon by any one of the trustees according to clause 13 of the deed of trust, and under the specimen signature of each of the trustees the word "trustee" was appended. On August 21, 1951, another account was opened also with the same bank under the name and style of "Dharma Vijaya Agency Account No. 2". This account was to be operated upon by any one of the Kilachand brothers who were described as "attorneys", and the specimen signature was to be in the form of "per pro: Dharma Vijaya Agency."

The Income-tax Officer brought the income of the Dharma Vijaya Agency to tax on the footing that no valid trust was created by the deed, dated February 17, 1951. In the view of the Income-tax Officer, in order that the business may be vested in trust there must be a valid transfer of the business from Kilachand Brothers to the trust, which "transfer was not permissible as per the agreement" and accordingly there arose no trust and the title of the trustees was "inchoate". He also observed that the account opened on August 21, 1951, with the Bank of Baroda, Ltd., authorising any one of the four "attorneys" to operate was opened by Kilachand brothers as Insurance Agents and not on behalf of a religious or charitable institution. Against the order refusing to grant to the income earned in the business of the Dharma Vijaya Agency exemption under s. 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act, Dharma Vijaya Agency preferred an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. That officer held that in the first instance no valid trust was created, but because the insurance company had ratified the trust it must be regarded as valid. He further observed that the Controller of Insurance had been duly informed that the business of the Dharma Vijaya Agency was settled upon trust and no objection had been raised by the Controller in that behalf. He finally observed that if certain property was held under trust or a legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, all that was required for exemption under s. 4(3)(i) was that the income should be applied or accumulated for application to such religious or charitable purposes: and in the case before him that condition was fulfilled. Against the order passed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner an appeal was preferred to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. The Tribunal set aside the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner holding that there was no transfer of the principal agency business with the consent of the Board of Directors of the company, that in any event the right, title and interest in a principal agency was not a business, as the appointment was terminable at one month's notice on either side, and that the contract of general insurance being an annual contract, in substance the trust was sought to be made of the earnings of commission for rendering service. The Tribunal relied upon the fact that the cheques which were signed on behalf of Dharma Vijaya Agency were signed by one or more of the Kilachand brothers as "per pro" and the word "trustee" was omitted from the description. The Tribunal also held that before the income of a trust for charitable purposes is exempt from tax, it must satisfy the conditions laid down in s. 4(3)(i), i.e., "the business income can only be exempt from taxation if the business was carried on in the course of the actual carrying out of the primary purpose of the institution": and "in the present case the business not being carried on in the course of carrying out the primary purpose of the trust", the income was not exempt from liability to pay tax. The Tribunal has, at the instance of the assessee the Dharma Vijaya Agency, referred the following question:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case the income arising to the applicant as chief agent of the New Great Insurance Co. of India Ltd. is exempt from tax under the provisions of section 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act?"

Implicit in this reference are two component branches of the question:

(i) Whether the business of Principal Agency conducted by the assesses is "property" held upon charitable trust?, and if it is property held upon charitable trust,

(ii) Whether the case falls within the proviso to section 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act as amended by Act 25 of 1953?

We may observe that the second branch of the question falls to be determined only in respect of the assessment years 1952-53, 1953-54 and 1954-55.

Kilachand brothers had entered into a partnership to trade in the name of the assesses. After the partnership agreement the assesses were appointed by deed, dated September 28, 1950, principal agents of the New Great Insurance Co. of India, Ltd.: and this business conducted by the assesses as principal agents was settled on trust by the deed, dated February 17, 1951. It is now not disputed that within the meaning of the Income-tax Act the expression "property" is a term of the widest import and, subject to any limitation or qualification which the context might require, signifies every possible interest which a person can acquire, hold and enjoy. By the terms of appointment of the assesses as principal agents for conducting the business of the principal agency, remuneration was to be paid. In *J. K. Trust v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*¹, their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed that "business" will be property unless there is something to the contrary in the enactment. Mr. Joshi, for the Revenue, contends that principal agency is nothing but a "right of service" conferred by an agreement by the insurance company upon a set of persons, and it cannot be regarded as a business. Mr. Joshi also contends that where the primary component of a principal agency agreement is the performance of service, and in consideration of performance of service remuneration is paid, the principal agency under which the service is rendered will not be regarded as a business and, therefore, not property. In J. K. Trust's case, to which we have already referred, their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that the managing agency of a company is business.

By the Insurance Act, 1938, a "principal agent" is defined as meaning

"a person, who, not being a salaried employee of an insurer, in consideration of any commission, (i) performs any administrative and organising functions for the insurer and (ii) procures general insurance business whether wholly or in part by employing or causing to be employed insurance agents on behalf of the insurer."

Evidently a principal agent by the definition does not merely render personal service but is concerned with performing certain administrative and organising functions and also with procuring of general insurance business by employing or causing to be employed insurance agents. In our judgment, such an agent by the very definition will be regarded as carrying on the business of a principal agent. He is not merely an employee engaged for rendering services of a personal nature: he is invested with the right as an agent to perform the administrative and organising functions for the insurer and also to procure general insurance business by employing, directly or indirectly, insurance agents. By s. 42A of the Insurance Act principal agents are required to obtain a certificate from the Controller of Insurance or an officer authorized by him entitling them to conduct the business of principal agency, and the certificate remains in operation for a period of twelve months only from the date of issue but is liable to be renewed. It is also true that under Part A of the sixth schedule to the Insurance Act certain terms are deemed to be included in every contract between an insurer carrying on general insurance business and a principal agent. Under cl. 2 of Part A of the sixth schedule the principal agent has to procure or cause to be procured through insurance agents such an amount of general insurance business as will yield a gross premium income of not less than Rs. 20,000 in each calendar year. Under cl. 4, in the event of the principal agent failing to comply with the requirements of cl. 2 in any two successive calendar years, the contract shall, without prejudice to the provisions of cl. 3, terminate on the 31st day of March immediately following the second calendar year. Under cl. 3 the agency is also liable to be forfeited in the events set out in sub-cl. (i) and (ii) thereof. By cl. 5 certain restrictions are placed upon the principal agent.

But on account of these provisions, which impose certain restrictive conditions upon the principal agents, we are unable to hold that the appointment of a principal agent gives rise to a bare service agreement and that the remuneration paid is not for the conduct of a business but for performance of personal service. The circumstance that the appointment was liable to be terminated at short notice and the agency was not permanent and was liable to be forfeited, in the events set out hereinbefore will not, in our judgment, affect the character of the agency as business. We are also unable, having regard to the definition of principal agent, to agree with the contention for the Revenue that in the case of a principal agent there is no organisation, asset or goodwill which can form the capital of the business. Under s. 2, cl. (25), of the Companies Act, "managing agent" means amongst others any firm or body corporate entitled, subject to the provisions of the Act, to the management of the whole, or substantially the whole, of the affairs of a company by virtue of an agreement with the company or by virtue of its memorandum or articles of association. If a managing agent in conducting the affairs of a company as such managing agent can be regarded as carrying on a business, we are unable to hold that a principal agent appointed under the Insurance Act is not conducting a business.

In J. K. Trust's case, their Lordships of the Supreme Court negatived the contention that a managing agency was merely an office which involved performance of services and rendering of certain obligations and was, therefore, not property which could be the subject-matter of a trust. It was observed that even an office of a trustee was property especially when emoluments were attached to it, and that must a fortiori be the position in the case of office of managing agency which was "clearly one of profit and even alienable under certain circumstances". They further observed (p. 543):

"...The office requires no doubt the performance of services; but there is no antithesis between service and business, as there are several kinds of business, which involve the performance of services, such as insurance and commission agency. The true test is whether the services are a regular source of income... Nor is it an accurate statement of the true position to describe trust of the managing agency as a trust of an obligation. It is in truth a trust of property, which carries with it certain obligations, and in law, there is no objection to creating a trust over property burdened with obligations, though, if it is onerous by reason of such obligations, the trustee may be entitled to disclaim it."

Their Lordships also negatived the plea that because the agency was liable to be terminated at short notice no trust could be created in respect thereof, observing that the plea proceeded upon a confusion between charity and properties devoted to charity. In their Lordships' opinion, a public charity was perpetual in character even though some of the objects may become incapable of performance or the trust property itself may be destroyed by reason of operation of law and that the circumstance that the trustees had the option at any time to throw up the agency was not a legal impediment to its being property which could be held on trust.

Following the observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in J. K. Trust's case, we are of the view that the principal agency conducted by the assessee was a business and, therefore, "property" within the meaning of s. 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act. Being property which is capable of being settled upon trust, by the deed of trust, dated February 17, 1951, it was lawfully settled upon trust for charitable purposes.

But Mr. Joshi for the Revenue contends that by the agreement dated September 28, 1950, the partnership of Kilachand brothers was appointed the prinprincipal agents, and that at some time after the appointment of Kilachand brothers as principal agents there was a change in the constitution of the firm Dharma Vijaya Agency and certain partners dropped out of the management of the principal agency business and certain other persons entered the agency and that in the absence of any evidence to show that the persons, who had been newly introduced in the Dharma Vijaya Agency and upon whom the right to conduct the principal agency business was conferred, were introduced with the consent of the company, it cannot be said that the same business continued or that the trust in respect of the business endured after the alteration in the constitution of the agency. Indisputably in the Dharma Vijaya Agency, of which Kilachand brothers were originally the partners, at some time after their appointment as principal agents two of the original partners ceased to be interested and an outsider was introduced into the agency. It appears, however, clear from the record that intimation was given to the company about the alteration in the constitution of the firm and the company approved of the same. There is on the record a letter dated February 6, 1953, addressed by the company to the Income-tax Officer in answer to the latter's communication, dated January 20, 1953, by which the General Manager of the company informed the Income-tax Officer that the principal agency in the name of Dharma Vijaya Agency was applied for by Messrs. Tulsidas Kilachand, Ramdas Kilachand, Ambalal Kilachand and Chinubhai Kilachand as partners, that the principal agency was given to Dharma Vijaya Agency and that the agency could not be transferred to other persons. Thereafter by letter, dated July 13, 1954, in reply to the Income-tax Officer's letter dated July 8, 1954, the General Manager of the company informed the Income-tax Officer that the company was aware of the creation of a trust and it did not consider the formation of the trust a violation of the agreement as it was not a transfer of the agency. The General Manager also stated that the company was not aware of the internal working of the agency, but papers were being signed from time to time on behalf of the Dharma Vijaya Agency by one or the other of the trustees in charge of the administrative functions. The Assistant Controller of Insurance also by his letter, dated August 11, 1954, informed the Income-tax Officer that he had been informed by the company that the Dharma Vijaya Agency had been converted into a trust and that the company had forwarded a copy of the trust-deed, dated February 17, 1951. On the record there is no clear evidence as to whether at the time of renewal of the principal agency certificate, intimation was given to the authorities concerned about the alteration in the constitution of the agency. But evidently neither the company nor the Assistant Controller of Insurance raised any objection to the conduct of the trust business of principal agents by the Dharma Vijaya Agency, from which some of the original trustees had ceased to function and in which another trustee was introduced. Even assuming that there arose some irregularity by the alteration in the constitution of the Dharma Vijaya Agency, we are unable to hold that this circumstance affects the character of the income received as remuneration for conducting the business of the agency as income received from property held for a public charitable trust. The taxing authorities are primarily concerned with the question whether the income sought to be taxed is income from property which is held on trust for a religious or charitable purpose. If the business of the principal agency was transferred to the trustees under a deed of settlement, and from that business income was received, the income will fall within s. 4(3)(i) of the Act and be exempt from tax in the hands of the trustees. We are, therefore, of the view that under the terms of appointment made with the company Dharma Vijaya Agency became the principal agents conducting a business and that business was property within the meaning of s. 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act, and that the alteration, sometime after their appointment as principal agents, in the constitution of the Dharma Vijaya Agency does not alter the character of the income earned in the course of the business.

Clause (i) of s. 4(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act was amended by Act 25 of 1953. Section 4(3), as it originally stood, provided in so far as it is material:

"Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them:

(i) Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied, or finally set apart for application, thereto.

(i-a) Any income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution when the income is applied solely to the purposes of the institution and—

(a) the business is carried on in the course of the carrying out of a primary purpose of the institution, or

(b) the work in connection with the business is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the institution."

It is undisputed that under s. 4(3), before it was amended by Act 25 of 1953, cl. (i-a) was not intended to derogate from cl. (i); i.e., the two clauses were independent of each other, and if a certain income fell within either cl. (i) or cl. (i-a), it was entitled to exemption. It was observed in *Gadodia Swadeshi Stores v. Commr. of Inc.-tax, Punjab*² (p. 390):

"Clause (i-a) as it stands cannot in any way derogate or subtract anything from clause (i). It rather adds to the list of exceptions and provides immunity for a certain kind of business which in the view of the Legislature had not already been provided for. A new clause inserted by the Legislature cannot be presumed to be inconsistent with or repugnant to a foregoing clause in the same sub-section unless it is so expressly provided. Viewed in its proper perspective, therefore, clause (ia) can be taken to apply only to such business as is carried on on behalf of religious or charitable institutions which were not held under trust and not to such business as was itself held under trust or was conducted by or on behalf of such charitable or religious institutions as were held under trust."

These observations were approved of by this Court in *J. K. Trust v. Commr. of Income-tax*³, after it was remanded by the Supreme Court. The income from the trust in the present case clearly falls within the terms of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) before it was amended by Act 25 of 1953, and it was, therefore, exempt from payment of tax.

By Act 25 of 1953, s. 4(3)(i) was substantially altered. In so far as it is material, that section (as it now stands) provides:

"Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them:

(i) ...any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, in so far as such income is applied or accumulated for application to such religious or charitable purposes as relate to anything done within the taxable territories...

Provided that such income shall be included in the total income—

(a) ...

(b) in the case of income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, unless the income is applied wholly for the purposes of the institution and either—

(i) the business is carried on in the course of the actual carrying out of a primary purpose of the institution; or

(ii) the work in connection with the business is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the institution;

(c) if it is applied to purposes other than religious or charitable purposes or ceases to be accumulated or set apart for application thereto in which case it shall be deemed to be the income of the year in which it is so applied or ceases to be so accumulated or set apart."

Clause (i-a) of s. 4(3) of the Act, as it stood before it was amended by Act

25 of 1953, was deleted by the amendment as a substantive provision under which exemption could be claimed, and the Legislature incorporated a proviso to cl. (i) of s. 4(3) whereby any income from property held under a trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes was liable to be included in the total income of the assessee (i) if it was applied to religious or charitable purposes without the taxable territories, and (ii) in the case of income derived from business conducted on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, unless the income was applied wholly for the purposes of the institution and one of the two conditions prescribed therein was fulfilled. By the amendment income received from property held under trust for a religious or charitable purpose is not exempt from taxation if such income is to be applied outside the taxable territories. Similarly, income received from a business conducted by a religious or charitable institution is liable to be included in the total income of the assessee unless the income is applied wholly for the purposes of the institution and the business is carried on in the course of the actual carrying out of a primary purpose of the institution or the work in connection with the business is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the institution.

Mr. Joshi for the Revenue contends that the Legislature intended by the proviso merely to incorporate certain conditions cumulative with those prescribed by the operative part of cl. (i), and not to prescribe an excepted category. Mr. Joshi says that where property held under trust is a business, the income derived from that business is exempt from tax only if the business is carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution and the income thereof is applied wholly for the purposes of the institution and one of the two conditions prescribed by cl. (b) of the proviso is fulfilled. In asking us to accept this interpretation, Mr. Joshi is asking us substantially to re-write the material provisions. The Legislature has attempted to carve out certain categories of income from the operative part of the exception and has made them liable to tax despite the fact that they are derived from property held under a trust created for religious or charitable purposes. Mr. Joshi's argument is that if business is property within the meaning of s. 4(3)(i), and that business is held on trust, the business in cl. (b) of the proviso must also be held on trust, and if it is not so held on trust the income thereof will not be exempted as income derived from property held under a trust for religious or charitable purposes. But we do not think that there is any warrant for this submission on the plain language used by the Legislature. The income, which is liable to be included in the total income of the assessee, is income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, unless that income fulfils the conditions prescribed by cl. (b). The expression "such income" in the proviso refers to the income derived from property (which expression includes a business) held for religious or charitable purposes. But that does not, in our view, justify the submission that the business which is referred to in cl. (b) of the proviso must be business which is held for charitable or religious purposes. In our view, the business referred to in cl. (b) of the proviso need not be business which is held for religious or charitable purposes, provided it is business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution.

Mr. Joshi invited our attention to the objects and reasons and to the notes on the clauses of the Bill which was enacted as Act 25 of 1953 and submitted that it was the intention of the Legislature to provide that income derived from business is exempt under the amended Act only if the business is carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution and it is carried on in the course of implementation of a primary purpose of the institution or the work in connection with the business is mainly done by beneficiaries of the institution. It is not possible for us to interpret the words of the section by reference to the objects and reasons or to the notes on clauses of the Act, especially when the words are plain and we are not confronted with any ambiguity in their interpretation. It may also be pertinent to observe that the clause as finally enacted by the Legislature is not in the same form in which it was presented as a Bill. In any event, we do not think that where the Legislature has by using definite phraseology expressed its intention clearly it will be open to us to fall back upon the objects and reasons for enacting legislation and to construe the provisions of the Act in the light of the objects and reasons.

We are, therefore, of the view that the business of the assessee, not being one which is carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, is not governed by the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act as amended by Act 25 of 1953 and that the income is governed by the operative part of s. 4(3)(i). On that view of the case, the answer to the question submitted by the Tribunal will be in the affirmative in respect of all the four assessment years. The Commissioner of Income-tax to pay the costs of the assessee.

S. T. DESAI J. A question of construction, rather fine and not without some difficulty, arises for our determination on this reference. The facts leading up to this reference have been stated by my learned brother and I need not refer to the same. The question submitted to us has invited rather elaborate arguments on either side, and the arguments really fall to be considered under two heads: firstly, whether the insurance agency business which was carried on by the assessee firm and in respect of which a charitable trust was created is "property" within the meaning of that expression to be found in s. 4(3)(i) of the Income-tax Act; and secondly, what is the exclusion in respect of income derived from property held under trust wholly for religious or charitable purposes enacted by the Legislature in s. 4(3)(i)?

The first head need not detain me at any length. A Division Bench of this Court had to interpret cls. (i) and (ii) of s. 4(3) as they stood prior to the amending Act of 1953. The language of those two clauses of sub-s. (3) of s. 4 was, if not wholly in pari materia, very similar to the provisions which we are called upon to interpret on this reference. But we are not concerned in this reference with the interpretation of those provisions which have now been amended. One question which arose in that case was whether the managing agency of a textile concern was property within the ambit of the expression "property" used in s. 4(3)(i). The decision of the Bombay High Court did not directly touch that point: but the point was canvassed at great length before their Lordships of the Supreme Court, and the decision of their Lordships is reported in *J. K. Trust v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*¹. Mr. Justice Venkatarama Aiyar examined the question at some length, and it was laid down in that case (p. 541):

"... 'Property' is a term of the widest import, and subject to any limitation or qualification which the context might require, it signifies every possible interest which a person can acquire, hold and enjoy. Business would undoubtedly be property, unless there is something to the contrary in the enactment."

At page 543 of the report, Mr. Justice Venkatarama Aiyar after referring to some cases observed:

"... even an office of trusteeship was held to be property especially when emoluments were attached to it, and that must a fortiori be the position in the case of office of managing agency, which is clearly one of profit and even alienable under certain circumstances. The office requires no doubt the performance of services; but there is no antithesis between service and business, as there are several kinds of business, which involve the performance of services, such as insurance and commission agency."

Of course, it was not necessary for their Lordships to decide whether the business of commission agency was property within the meaning of that expression in s. 4(3)(i). But here is a very clear and weighty observation of the Supreme Court, and there is every reason why I should find myself in respectful and dutiful agreement with that observation of the Supreme Court. A valiant attempt was made by Mr. Joshi, learned counsel for the Department, to persuade us to take a view different from the view expressed in the passage just quoted by me. The distinction sought to be drawn was rather fine and not permissible in the context of the expressions "business" and "property" which have a very wide connotation in income-tax law. Therefore, the conclusion seems inescapable to me that the business of insurance agency carried on by the assessee-firm is property within the meaning of that expression in the relevant provision before us.

To turn to the other head on which considerable arguments have been urged before us on either side. It will be convenient to set out the relevant and material part of sub-s. (3) of s. 4. Section 4(3) of the Income-tax Act, as amended by Act 25 of 1953, provides in so far as it is material:

"Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them:

(i) ...any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, in so far as such income is applied or accumulated for application to such religious or charitable purposes as relate to anything done within the taxable territories...

(a) ...

(b) in the case of income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, unless the income is applied wholly for the purposes of the institution and either—

(i) the business is carried on in the course of the actual carrying out of a primary purpose of the institution; or

(ii) the work in connection with the business is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the institution;

(c) if it is applied to purposes other than religious or charitable purposes or ceases to be accumulated or set apart for application thereto in which case it shall be deemed to be the income of the year in which it is so applied or ceases to be so accumulated or set apart."

It has been urged before us by Mr. Palkhivala, learned counsel for the assessee, that the language of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) in terms applies to the facts of this case, if once the conclusion is reached that the insurance agency business, of which a trust was created, is property within this enactment. The argument proceeded that the proviso to s. 4(3)(i), which relates to income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, is restricted to income derived from business carried on by or on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, and that in the case before us there is no religious or charitable institution: and the conclusion based on this premise pressed for our acceptance has been that the case is not touched by the proviso and clearly falls within the purview of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) read without the proviso. It seems convenient to refer briefly to the scheme of s. 4. Sub-section (1) of s. 4 lays down that subject to the provisions of the Act the total income of a person includes all his income, profits and gains from whatever source derived. Then follow words which are not material for our present purpose. Sub-section (2) is not material. Then comes sub-s. (3) which is a very important provision. It lays down that income, profits or gains falling within the classes enumerated in that sub-section are not to be included in the total income of the person receiving them. That is clearly an exclusion from the total income of an assessee to be computed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. A perusal of s. 4, which follows upon s. 3 (which is the charging section) and itself defines the gamut of total income, shows that its arrangement is not logical and its provisions have no lucidity of expression. It was for this reason that we permitted ourselves to be taken to the history of the legislation contained in sub-s. (3), though I propose to be very brief in examining it.

Before, however, I do so, I should prefer to examine the language of the section as it stands today.

It is now established law that business itself may be held on trust. If a business itself may be held on trust, as, for instance, in the present case, where a trust is created of property which consists of a business, it is abundantly clear and not now disputable that income derived from property consisting of business held on trust for religious or charitable purposes is within the ambit of the exclusion contained in cl. (i) of s. 4(3). As I have already pointed out, the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court leads to the inescapable conclusion that an insurance agency business must be treated as a business within the ambit of this section. Therefore, the short question that remains for consideration is, is there any qualification, any modification or any exception to that exclusion? The contention of the assessee, as I have already mentioned, is that there is nothing in the section which prevents the application of cl. (i) to the present case. On the other hand, it has been strenuously urged before us by Mr. Joshi that the proviso, if properly and carefully scrutinised, confines the exclusion, so far as it relates to income derived from business, only to the cases of religious or charitable institutions and where the conditions stipulated in proviso (b) are fulfilled. To put it differently the argument of Mr. Joshi is that income of a business held on trust is primarily liable to tax and the only exception to that rule is the case of a religious or charitable institution for which provision is made in proviso (b). Ultimately learned counsel had to agree that the argument urged on behalf of the Department could only succeed if an equation could be established between "income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution" referred to in proviso (b) to cl. (i) and "income derived from property (consisting of business) held under trust... wholly for religious or charitable purposes" to be found in cl. (i). The words in bracket have been added by me since the argument has been pressed before us in the context of a business which, in our view, is property. The question I put to myself is, are the words "income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution" in proviso (b) wide enough to carve out from cl. (i) all such property as consists of business? A business which falls within the ambit of cl. (i) may be carried on by persons in whom it is vested under a trust, and the trustees may still not be carrying on the business on behalf of any religious or charitable institution. Of this, there seems to be little doubt. Therefore, it is impossible to equate the scope of proviso (b) with the scope of property consisting of business held under trust wholly for religious or charitable purposes. It must of necessity mean that we have in cl. (i) a very wide category of business which is trust property, and we have in proviso (b) a restricted and a lesser category of business which is carried on by or on behalf of a religious or charitable institution. This, to my mind, is the plain reading of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) read with the proviso: and if this be the position, it is extremely difficult to accede to the argument pressed before us on behalf of the Department that although the insurance agency business, of which a trust was created, is within the operation of cl. (i) of s. 4(3), it is yet hit by the initial words of proviso (b) to cl. (i).

I have stated that the observations which I have made follow from a plain reading of s. 4(3)(i) read with the relevant proviso. I have also mentioned that there was an amendment in s. 4(3)(i) in 1958, and it is on the language of s. 4(3)(i) as it stood before the amendment that learned counsel for the Department has very strongly relied. Learned counsel has also relied on a decision of the Lahore High Court in a case to which I shall presently refer. He has also relied on certain observations in a judgment reported in J. K. Trust v. Comm'r. of Income-tax,² to which I was a party. Now, I must confess that there are some observations in that judgment which do lend some support to some part of the argument urged before us by Mr. Joshi: but, as I shall presently point out, those observations were made in a rather distinct and different context and cannot have any real bearing on the interpretation of the provisions after their amendment. Our attention was also drawn to the decision of the Punjab High Court in the case of *Gadodia Swadeshi Stores v. Commr. of Inc.-tax, Punjab*³ and in J. K. Trust's case decided by my brother Tendolkar and myself we quoted a passage from that judgment.

In J. K. Trust v. Commr. of Income-tax, after referring to the case of Gadodia Swadeshi Stores and to a decision of the Allahabad High Court, to which also our attention was drawn in that case, we pointed out that words in s. 4(3)(i-a) as it stood before the amendment did not refer to business which fell within the ambit of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) as it then stood. We observed in that case that s. 4(3)(i-a) was not intended to be an exclusion to s. 4(3)(i) and that it dealt with a different class of income, viz., income from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution. We observed (p. 1257):

"...since the requirement that the business should be held on trust does not appear in cl. (ia), would it not be reasonable so to interpret cl. (ia) as to restrict it to a business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution which is not held on trust? Such a construction leads to the result that whilst s. 4(3)(i) includes within its scope income from business held under trust, the true scope of s. 4(3)(ia) is to include within its scope business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, which business is itself not held under trust, although the words used in cl. (ia) are prima facie capable of including within its scope business which may be held under trust."

Now, these observations were made by us in an attempt to reconcile the two clauses of s. 4(3), and I may emphasize that we were not examining the language of any proviso in that case, though, it is true, the language of the two clauses is, if not identical, almost in pari materia with the language of cl. (i) of s. 4(3) and the proviso with which we are here concerned. The passage from the decision of the Lahore High Court which we quoted is as follows:

"Clause (ia) as it stands cannot in any way derogate or subtract anything from clause (i). It rather adds to the list of exceptions and provides immunity for a certain kind of business which in the view of the Legislature had not already been provided for. A new clause inserted by the Legislature cannot be presumed to be inconsistent with or repugnant to a foregoing clause in the same sub-section unless it is so expressly provided. Viewed in its proper perspective, therefore, clause (ia) can be taken to apply only to such business as is carried on on behalf of religious or charitable institutions which were not held under trust and not to such business as was itself held under trust or was conducted by or on behalf of such charitable or religious institutions as were held under trust. If it was intended to narrow down the scope of clause (i) so as to withdraw the exemption enjoyed by a business held in trust or conducted by or on behalf of a religious or charitable trust, the new clause should have been added as a proviso to the old clause. It would then have mentioned that the scope of the original clause was being restricted to that extent. But this is not being the case here, it cannot reasonably be urged that something that was already included in clause (i) has been removed by the insertion of an additional clause."

Now, it is true that it would appear from the passage just quoted that Mr. Justice Din Muhammad seemed inclined to take the view that the scope of cl. (i) had been narrowed down by inserting similar words in the form of a proviso, and that since they were in the form of a separate clause that would make a difference in interpretation. The argument of Mr. Joshi before us has been that by inserting proviso (b) in s. 4(3)(i) the scope of cl. (i) has been considerably narrowed down, and the exemption from inclusion of such income from the total income of an assessee is restricted only to such business as is carried on by or on behalf of a religious or charitable institution: and in the case of other business which may be trust property and the income of which may be applied to religious or charitable purposes there would be the liability to pay tax as it would be included in the total income of the trustees. I am unable to accede to this argument, and I am unable to agree that the effect of the amendment and the proviso is as urged on behalf of the Department. It does not seem necessary to examine at any length the provisions which were considered in the decisions to which I have made a reference. A reference to those decisions, as I have already pointed out, was made in drawing our attention to the history of the legislation relating to this sub-section. There is nothing in the history of the legislation which lends support to the argument so strongly pressed for our acceptance by Mr. Joshi. In these cases, where the language is clear, we have to look merely at what is stated. As has often been said, there is no room for any intendment in such cases and it is not permissible to us to read in the relevant provisions something which is not there. We can only look at the language used and construe the provision on a fair reading of the same. On a fair reading of cl. (i), it must be held, in my judgment, that there is nothing in proviso (b) to cl. (i) of s. 4(3) which in any manner touches the case of a business which is held under trust for religious or charitable purposes. The income derived from such business is not to be included in the total income of the person receiving it.

Our attention was sought to be drawn by Mr. Joshi to the Statement of Objects and Reasons when amendments were made in s. 4(3) in 1953. It is not permissible to us to look at the same. It is rather difficult to see the reason or the object of permitting income derived from property consisting of business held under trust wholly for religious or charitable purposes being excluded from the total income of the person receiving it as enacted in cl. (i) of s. 4(3) and not permitting such exclusion if the business is carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution and it does not satisfy the requirements which are inserted in the latter part of proviso (b) to cl. (i). It does appear that income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution can very well be income of a business which is itself the subject-matter of a religious or charitable trust: but it is not for us to enter into this enquiry or allow ourselves to speculate on the reasons.

The construction of the relevant provisions must be as already mentioned by me, and on that view the answer to the question referred to us will be in the affirmative.

Wealth-tax Act (XXVII of 1957), Sec. 3—Constitution of India, Seventh Schedule, List I, entries 86, 97; art. 248—Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 3—Whether s. 3 of Wealth-tax Act in so far as it levies wealth-tax on Hindu undivided families ultra vires Parliament—Expression “individuals” in entry 86, List I, Seventh Schedule to Constitution whether includes Hindu undivided family—Hindu undivided family whether a corporation—Whether entries in Lists contained in Seventh Schedule to Constitution circumscribe or define ambit of art. 248—Construction of statute—Legislative practice as an aid to construction of word or phrase in statute—When may Court avail itself of such assistance.

Section 3 of the Wealth-tax Act, 1957, which authorises the levy of wealth-tax on the net wealth of a Hindu undivided family is not ultra vires the Union Parliament.

*Decided, July 27, 1959. O.C.J. Miscellaneous Application No. 401 of 1958.

The expression "individuals" used in entry No. 86 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India includes an association of individuals such as a Hindu undivided family.

Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni,¹ Narainchandra Mafatlal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay City,² Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Trustees of Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim,³ Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Millowners' Association,⁴ *Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Salem District Urban Bank, Ltd.*⁵ and Chukun Lall v. Poran Chunder,⁶ referred to.

Quære: Whether in the residuary powers of the Union Parliament power to legislate on a topic which is partially dealt with by a specific entry in the first List may be regarded as included.

Per S. T. Desai J. The entries in the Lists contained in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India are legislative heads primarily designed to demarcate the areas of legislative competence of the Union and the State Legislatures. They give simplex enumeratio of categories of legislation and are not designed to circumscribe or logically define the ambit of art. 248 of the Constitution. It would be difficult, therefore, to read in any entry in List I any restriction by implication or otherwise on the residuary legislative power conferred on the Union Legislature by art. 248.

If the Legislature of a country has been accustomed to use any word or expression with a more restricted or extended meaning than might be commonly attributed to it in its ordinary sense, the Court should not blandly shut out that consideration but should avail of that assistance, albeit limited, in the process of interpretation. Legislative practice is one of the accepted aids to construction and furnishes extrinsic evidence to which resort may legitimately be had when the Court has to construe a word or phrase and the task of preferring one meaning to another can really be said to have arisen.

THE facts appear in the judgments.

Sir Noshirwanji Engineer, with K. K. Koticha and M. N. Shah, for the petitioner.

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney General of India, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. By this petition the competence of the Union Parliament to enact the Wealth-tax Act (Act XXVII) of 1957, in so far as that Act seeks to levy wealth-tax on Hindu undivided families, is challenged. The petitioner, who is the karta of a Hindu undivided family and is being assessed to wealth-tax in the status of Hindu undivided family was, by notice dated July 12, 1958, issued in exercise of powers conferred by s. 14(2) of the Wealth-tax Act, called upon by the Second Wealth-tax Officer, C-II Ward, Bombay, to furnish a return of the net wealth of his undivided Hindu family. The petitioner claims that the notice is invalid because s. 3 of the Wealth-tax Act is ultra vires the Union Parliament in so far as that section authorises the levy of wealth-tax on the net wealth of a Hindu undivided family.

By s. 3 of Act XXVII of 1957 liability to pay for every financial year commencing on and from April 1, 1957, a tax referred to as the wealth-tax in respect of the net wealth on the corresponding valuation date of every individual, Hindu undivided family and company at the rate or rates specified in the Schedule is imposed. The petitioner contends that to the extent the Union Parliament authorised the levy of wealth-tax on Hindu undivided families as units, the legislation is ultra vires, and in support of that contention reliance is placed upon entry No. 86 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India. That entry reads as follows:

"Taxes on the capital value of the assets, exclusive of agricultural land, of individuals and companies; taxes on the capital of companies."

It is submitted that legislation imposing taxes on the capital value of the assets only of individuals and of companies but not of Hindu undivided families can, under the authority of entry No. 86, be enacted by the Union Parliament.

A Hindu undivided family in essence is an association of male Hindus lineally descended in the male line from a common ancestor and includes their wives and their unmarried daughters. The property belonging to the family is of the ownership of the co-parceners in that family, and whilst the family remains undivided no individual member of the family can predicate his share in the family property. A Hindu undivided family is not a corporation; it is not a juridical entity distinct from the members who constitute it; it cannot sue or be sued in the joint family name and cannot convey the property held by it in its joint character. The co-parceners who are members of the Hindu undivided family are undoubtedly owners of the property, and there is corporate enjoyment of the property: but a Hindu undivided family has no independent existence apart from the individuals who constitute the same. Statements sometimes made in decided cases and text books that a Hindu joint family is a "sort of corporation" in dealing with questions relating to enjoyment of the property of the family (see for instance *Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni*¹ and Mayne's Hindu Law, 11th edn., art. 243, at p. 305) do not justify the view that a Hindu undivided family is a corporation. In a Hindu undivided family there is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family, and until partition takes place there is common enjoyment and common possession of the family property. The family property is the property of the co-parceners who for the time being constitute the Hindu undivided family. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the contention of Sir Nasserwanji Engineer that a Hindu undivided family is a corporation.

Entry No. 86 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution confers authority upon the Union Parliament to enact legislation for levy of taxes on the capital value of assets of individuals: and if a Hindu undivided family is in substance a body of individuals, the Parliament will unquestionably be competent to legislate in respect of levy of wealth-tax upon Hindu undivided families. It is a cardinal rule of interpretation that the words used in a statute should be read in their ordinary, natural and grammatical meaning, subject to the rule that the words in a constitutional enactment conferring legislative powers should be construed most liberally and in their widest amplitude (see Navinchandra Mafatlal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay City).² The Lists in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution have been so framed that subject to the distribution of powers they cover, as far as possible, the entire field of legislation. By entry No. 86 it was intended to confer upon the Union Parliament power to impose tax on the capital value of the assets, exclusive of agricultural land, belonging to individuals and companies. If the expression "individual" includes an association or body of individuals, there is nothing in the context in which entry No. 86 occurs to justify the view that within the connotation of the expression "individuals" a body of individuals which is known as a Hindu undivided family was not intended to be included.

Referring to entries Nos. 82 to 89 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution by which authority is conferred upon the Union Parliament to impose taxes and duties of diverse descriptions, counsel for the petitioner pointed out that whereas entries Nos. 82 to 85 and 87 to 89 do not refer to the persons on whom the tax is to be imposed, entry No. 86 expressly provides that the levy of taxes on the capital value of the assets is to be on the assets of individuals and companies. This, it is urged, is a limitation upon the power conferred by the topic of taxation which cannot be ignored by implications. By entry No. 86 power to tax capital assets is undoubtedly conferred: and even assuming that the assets to be taxed must be of individuals or of companies before they could be taxed under a law enacted in exercise of the power under that entry the assets of a Hindu joint family will still be liable to be taxed.

Counsel for the petitioner submits that the word "individuals" must be read, in the light of what he calls a settled legislative practice in enacting taxing statutes, as meaning individual human beings only. By the Indian Income-tax Act, by s. 3 which is the charging section income-tax, it is true, is made chargeable in respect of the total income of every individual, Hindu undivided family, company and local authority, and of every firm and other association of persons or the partners of the firm or the members of the association individually. But the use of this form of legislation does not justify the inference that in taxing statutes a Hindu undivided family is distinct from the individuals who constitute the same. Our attention has not been invited, apart from the use in juxtaposition of the expressions "individual" and "Hindu undivided family" in s. 3 of the Income-tax Act, to any settled legislative practice, supporting the contention that the word "individual" used in a taxing statute means only a single human being.

Even on the interpretation of the expression "individual" as used in the Indian Income-tax Act there is no consensus of judicial opinion. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Trustees of Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim,³ Sir John Beaumont C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, held that a corporation constituted by a special Act was an "individual" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Income-tax Act. But in a later judgment the learned Chief Justice appeared to express a somewhat different view. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Mill-owners' Association,⁴ he expressed the view that the expression "association of individuals" as used in s. 3 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, before it was amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act (Act VII) of 1939, meant an association of human-beings and not an association of companies. In that case, it was held that an association which consisted of limited companies and one natural person was not an "association of individuals" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Income-tax Act. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Salem District Urban Bank, Ltd.,⁵ a full bench of the Madras High Court held that a co-operative society registered under the Indian Co-operative Societies Act was an "individual" within the meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act. Evidently there is not only no settled legislative practice as to the meaning of the expression "individual" in taxing statutes, but there is not even unanimity of judicial opinion as to the meaning of that expression in the Indian Income-tax Act. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the expression "individuals" used in defining the topic of legislation in the Constitution does not include an association of individuals such as a Hindu undivided family.

The learned Attorney General appearing for the Union of India contended that even assuming that by the 86th entry in List I of the Seventh Schedule the Union Parliament was not invested with power to legislate for levying wealth-tax on the assets of Hindu undivided families, the Union Parliament was still invested with that authority by art. 248 of the Constitution and entry No. 97 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. By art. 248 it is declared that the Union Parliament has exclusive power to make any law with respect to any matter not enumerated in the Concurrent List or State List, and that such power includes power to make any law imposing a tax not mentioned in either of those Lists. Relying upon the amplitude of the residual powers conferred upon the Parliament to make any law imposing a tax, it was urged that the power to tax the capital value of the assets of Hindu undivided families was, if not derived from entry No. 86, exercisable by entry No. 97 which confers upon the Union Parliament power to legislate in respect of "any other matter not enumerated in List II or List III including any tax not mentioned in either of those Lists." There being no matter enumerated in List II or List III whereby power to legislate in respect of wealth-tax to be levied on the capital value of the assets of Hindu undivided families is invested, relying upon the powers conferred by art. 248 and upon the amplitude of the powers conferred by entry No. 97, the validity of the Wealth-tax Act, even on the argument advanced by counsel for the assessee, was sought to be upheld by the learned Attorney General. For the assessee it was submitted that where the Constitution, in defining powers to legislate on a topic, has by incorporating words of limitation expressly placed a restriction upon the competence of the Union Parliament to enact legislation, relying upon the residuary powers contained in art. 248 and entry No. 97 in List I of the Seventh Schedule the restriction cannot be ignored. On the view I have taken on the interpretation of the expression "individuals" in entry No. 86, I do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the question whether in the residuary powers of the Union Parliament, power to legislate on a topic which is partially dealt with by a specific entry in the first List may be regarded as included.

On the view we have taken, this petition must fail and it is dismissed with costs. Costs to be taxed on long cause scale; two counsel allowed.

S. T. DESAI J. This is a Rule obtained at the instance of the petitioner, calling upon the respondent, a Wealth Tax Officer under the Wealth-tax Act, 1957 (to be referred to by me as the Act), to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue quashing a notice issued by him under s. 14 of that Act and further to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue restraining him from taking any steps against the petitioner by way of assessment or otherwise in pursuance of that notice. The petitioner is the Karta and manager of a Hindu undivided family which is being assessed under the Income-tax Act in the status of Hindu undivided family. In July 1958 the petitioner received a notice from the respondent requiring him to furnish a return of net wealth of his Hindu undivided family, as on valuation date. The petitioner has thereupon moved this Court for relief by issuance of appropriate writ or writs under art. 226 of the Constitution. The petitioner challenges the competence of the Union Legislature to charge tax on the net wealth of a joint Hindu family on the ground that s. 3 of the Act is ultra vires the Union Legislature in so far as it purports to levy tax on net wealth of the petitioner in his capacity as the Karta of his joint family.

In opposition to the rule the respondent has filed an affidavit resisting the contentions of law pleaded by the petitioner. His case is that the Union Legislature is fully competent to levy the impugned tax on the net wealth of a joint Hindu family under entry 86 of List I to the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. It is also his case that in any event the tax is covered by entry 97 of that List. No facts are in dispute and I shall, therefore, immediately set out the relevant provisions of the Act in respect of which the contention of ultra vires has been raised.

Section 3, which is the charging section in the Act, is as follows:

"Subject to the other provisions contained in this Act, there shall be charged for every financial year commencing on and from the first day of April, 1957, a tax (hereinafter referred to as wealth-tax) in respect of the net wealth on the corresponding valuation date of every individual, Hindu undivided family and company at the rate or rates specified in the Schedule."

Section 14 deals with return of wealth. Sub-section (1) of that section imposes a duty on every person liable to pay tax under the Act to furnish a return in prescribed form. Section 14(2) is as follows:

"If the Wealth-tax Officer is of the opinion that the net wealth of any person is of such an amount as to render him liable to wealth-tax under this Act, then, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), he may serve a notice upon such person requiring him to furnish within such period, not being less than thirty days, as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner and setting forth such other particulars as may be required in the notice, the net wealth of such person as on the valuation date mentioned in the notice."

It will be convenient to state here the relevant provisions of the Constitution, the interpretation of which has been debated before us by learned counsel on either side.

Article 248 of the Constitution is as under:

"(1) Parliament has exclusive power to make any law with respect to any matter not enumerated in the Concurrent List or State List.

(2) Such power shall include the power of making any law imposing a tax not mentioned in either of those Lists."

Entry 86 in List I (Union List) of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution is as follows:

"Taxes on the capital value of the assets, exclusive of agricultural land, of individuals and companies; taxes on the capital of companies."

Entry 97 in List I of that Schedule is as follows:

"Any other matter not enumerated in List II or List III including any tax not mentioned in either of those Lists."

It has been contended before us by Sir Noshirwan Engineer, learned counsel for the petitioner, that s. 3 of the Act, which levies the tax upon every individual, Hindu undivided family and company is ultra vires the Union Legislature in so far as it charges the Hindu undivided family with this tax and the argument has been that entry 86 in List I authorises the Union Legislature to impose a tax of the nature under consideration only upon individuals and companies. The pivotal point of the argument was that the expression "individuals" cannot include a joint Hindu family because a joint Hindu family is not in the eye of law a group of individuals. It was urged that a Hindu coparcenery is a sort of a corporation and coparcenery property belongs to a unit having corporate existence and not to the individual coparceners or members of the joint family. It will be necessary to examine this argument in some detail, but before doing so I shall turn to the other aspects of this question of interpretation of entry 86 on which arguments were advanced before us by learned counsel for the petitioner.

Our attention was drawn to a number of entries in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. It was said that while entries 82, 83, 84, 87 and 88, which relate to taxation and levy of duties upon commodities and goods, were all in such general terms as made them applicable to every person such as individual or individuals, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, partnership firm and other association or group of persons, entry 86 was quite differently worded. The archstone of this contention was that there was a contrast in the language used in those entries on the one hand and entry 86 on the other which latter entry while empowering the Union Legislature to levy tax on capital value of assets expressly confined such imposition to "individuals" and "companies". It was said that if it was intended to empower the Union Legislature to impose wealth-tax on a Hindu undivided family, the simplest thing to do would have been to say so categorically as was done in s. 3 of the Income-tax Act. The argument proceeded that the makers of the Constitution must be regarded as fully aware of the legislative practice of the country and the legislative practice relied upon was that in s. 3 of the Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) the units of taxation had categorically been stated to be every individual, Hindu undivided family, company and local authority, every firm and other association of persons or the partners of the firm or the members of the association individually.

The argument of the learned Attorney General on this aspect of the case was that the word "individual" had been interpreted in cases arising under the Income-tax Act and been given wide amplitude and it was said that the word "individuals" in entry 86 must be read so as to include a body or group of individuals. It was also argued that no legislative practice as contended by the petitioner had been established.

This topic of legislative practice as an aid to construction was keenly debated before a division bench of this Court consisting of Chagla C.J. and Tendolkar J. in the case of *Col. Sir Duggan v. Comr. I. T.*¹ and there was some cleavage of opinion on this point but it is not necessary for me to refer to the judgments in that case on this point and I shall restrict myself to a few observations on the subject.

Where the language of an enactment is plain and clear upon its face and of itself fairly susceptible of one meaning the task of interpretation can hardly be said to have arisen. Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. But language at best is not a perfect medium of expression and a variety of significations often lie in a word or expression. Any examination of cases involving construction of statutes must reveal that "few words are so plain that the context or the occasion is without capacity to enlarge or narrow their extension". So if the Legislature of a country has been accustomed to use any word or expression with a more restricted or extended meaning than might be commonly attributed to it in its ordinary sense the Court should not blandly shut out that consideration but should avail of that assistance, albeit limited, in the process of interpretation. Legislative practice is one of the accepted aids to construction and furnishes extrinsic evidence to which resort may legitimately be had when the Court has to construe a word or phrase and the task of preferring one meaning to another can really be said to have arisen.

What then is this legislative practice so much sought to be relied upon by Sir Noshirwan Engineer? It was said that the units of assessments enumerated in s. 3 of the Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) categorically mentioned the Hindu undivided family. It was pointed out that prior to its amendment in 1939 also that section expressly enumerated inter alia as units of assessment "every individual" and "Hindu undivided family". The argument was stressed in the form of an interrogation: "Where was the necessity of doing so unless the Legislature took the view that the expression individual which of necessity meant 'individual' in the singular or plural did not embrace a Hindu Undivided Family?" Therefore, the legislative practice relied upon on behalf of the petitioner is none other than that to be gathered from s. 3 which is the charging section in the Income-tax Act of 1922 and which expressly mentions Hindu undivided family as a unit of taxation along with other units such as individual, company, firm and association of persons.

In course of his argument I asked learned counsel for the petitioner if the legislative expression "individuals" which would apply both to an individual or group of individuals was to be found in any enactment, preferably a taxing enactment, and understood to exclude a Hindu undivided family on the ground that it had a corporate existence distinct from its members. The answer was that he was unable to say so and that he relied on the language of s. 3 of the Income-tax Act. I have examined the relevant provisions of the Indian Income-tax Acts of 1860, 1886, 1918 and 1922 and the amendments incorporated from time to time in s. 3 of the Act of 1922. It appears from Schedule 2 to the Act of 1860 that the unit of assessment under it was any "person". The expression "person" in that enactment obviously embraced inter alia any association or body or group of persons by virtue of the definition in s. 3(42) of the General Clauses Act. The position under the Act of 1886 was similar. There was nothing in the language of the relevant provisions of the Act of 1918 which can support the present contention of the petitioner. Section 3 of the Act of 1922 has been amended from time to time and one thing is clear that the expressions "individual" and "Hindu undivided family" have at all times been expressly mentioned in it along with other units of taxation such for instance as "company", "firm" and "associations of individuals". Therefore, it is on the tenuous basis, that in s. 3 of the Income-tax Act of 1922 there is express mention of "Hindu undivided family" after the expression "individual" has been expressly stated as a unit of taxation, that this argument wholly rests. There can be more than one answer to it but only one will suffice. An obvious answer is that there is no principle of taxation law or general law which prevents income-tax being charged on a group of individuals like members of a joint Hindu family as a unit of taxation. The Hindu undivided family, though not a juridical person, is intended to be taxed as a unit and the tax on the income of the joint family is not intended to be levied separately on each member or coparcener for that would raise considerable difficulty and give scope for legal ingenuity and disputations. It does not at all follow from this that the Hindu undivided family is by legislative practice understood to be a legal person or an artificial person distinct from the individuals who are its members or coparceners. No legislative practice as argued has been established and the contention is not well founded.

To turn to the contention of the petitioner that a joint Hindu family is not a group of individuals but a distinct unit which is a sort of a corporation and, therefore, not within the scope of the expression "individuals" to be found in entry 86. Learned counsel for the petitioner drew our attention to the following statement in para. 243 in Mayne's Hindu law:

"Three forms of the corporate system of property exist in India: The Patriarchal Family, the Joint Family and the Village Community. The two former, in one shape or other, may be said to prevail throughout the length and breadth of India...The Joint Family is a corporate body, of which the members are individuals."

It will suffice to note that this statement was made by the learned author in tracing the history of early Hindu law of property and was obviously intended as a background to the proper understanding of the nature and incidents of joint family property and for the purpose of drawing attention to misleading effect of English analogies from previous notions drawn from English law relating to joint tenancy. Reliance was also placed on behalf of the petitioner on the following observations of Telang J. in *Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni*² at pages 39 and 77-78:

"...The family property', to borrow the language of Mr. Mayne, 'is owned by the whole co-parcenership as a sort of corporation'."

"...The Mitakshara joint property scarcely presents any points upon which a comparison between it and joint tenancy could be instituted. No doubt the joint family is a corporate body, a sort of corporation, but a corporation in which there are shareholders, but no shares. It is, therefore, not correct to suppose that when the joint ownership of father and son was established the joint family ceased to be a corporation with perpetual succession, and became a mere partnership terminable at will. The right of the sons as against their father does not change the fundamental nature of the corporate body. It does not become a partnership formed by volition."

Reliance was also placed by learned counsel on the following observations in *Chukun Lall Singh v. Poran Chunder Singh*³ (p. 484):

"...It appears to me that the joint-family is, as regards the enjoyment of the joint-property, a single entity. As long as the members, who have, what may be termed, vested interests in the property, choose to continue in a state of commensality and in joint-fruition and enjoyment of the profits of the property, they cannot be said to possess individually any several proprietary right other than the right to call for partition—a right which they may alien. For proprietary purposes, they exist as a whole, somewhat in the character of a corporation. They manage the property together, and the Karta is but the mouthpiece of the body, chosen and capable of being changed by themselves."

I agree that in a sense it is permissible and sometimes even helpful to speak of the joint Hindu family as a sort of a corporate body, but that is in no manner decisive of, or even of particular cogency to, the crucial point which arises for our determination. Since, however, so much reliance is placed on the statement from Mayne's Hindu Law and the observations from decisions of Courts quoted above, it becomes necessary to examine the question whether a Hindu undivided family is a corporate unit by itself and not a group of individuals or to put the question slightly differently does coparcenary property of a joint Hindu family vest in the Hindu coparcenary as a corporate unit distinct from the individual coparceners who constitute the coparcenary. I shall do so as succinctly as possible.

In Hindu law the joint family system comes first in historical order. The law of inheritance was of later growth and, in general, applied only to property held in absolute severalty as distinguished from property held by the joint family. The joint and undivided Hindu family is the normal condition of Hindu society and the fundamental conception of the Hindu joint family is a common ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line and so long as that family is in its normal condition, that is, its undivided state, it forms a corporate unit, though not a juridical person. The joint family traces its origin to the ancient patriarchal system and the transition from that system to the joint family was a natural and logical development. In the joint family also the paterfamilias was the unquestioned ruler and the authority of the father of the family and some of his exclusive privileges are even now traceable in the rights of the father as the Karta of the joint family, though the principle of patria potestas has long ceased to be recognized. The earlier concept of the joint family was somewhat analogous to that of a corporate body and the tendency was to sink the individual in the family. Social conditions, however, underwent considerable transformation and there grew up a body of rules of inheritance under the title of Dayavibhaga which as explained by Vijnaneshwara means division of property which becomes the property of another solely by reason of his relation to the owner. Even under early Hindu law rights of sons (as junior members of the family) were recognised and they acquired equal interest with the father in the ancestral property as coparceners. I had to refer to this historical aspect of the matter on another occasion and have only recapitulated what I then stated.

The rights of sons to equal interest with the father in the ancestral property being recognized by early Hindu law the inevitable corollary that emerged was the recognition and establishment of that right by birth and the right to claim partition. It is not necessary to burden this brief conspectus with reference to the texts of the Smritikars and the commentators which show how the law on the subject was developed in what came to be described later on as the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga Schools. The nature and incidents of coparcenary property under the Mitakshara and the rights and extent of interest of the members of such coparcenary and the basic principles of this branch of the law have been examined in numerous decisions of the High Courts and the Privy Council and now also by the Supreme Court. The principles, now firmly established, which are relevant for the purpose of the examination of the present contention of the petitioner, need no elaborate discussion. They will be found in the following statement of the law in Article 216 of Sir Dinshah Mulla's Hindu Law:

"The essence of a coparcenary under the Mitakshara law is unity of ownership. The ownership of the coparcenary property is in the whole body of coparceners. According to the true notion of an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate, of the joint and undivided property, that he, that particular member, has a definite share, one-third or one-fourth. His interest is a fluctuating interest, capable of being enlarged by deaths in the family, and liable to be diminished by births in the family. It is only on a partition that he becomes entitled to a definite share. The most appropriate term to describe the interest of a coparcener in coparcenary property is 'undivided coparcenary interest'... The rights of each coparcener until a partition takes place consist in a common possession and common enjoyment of the coparcenary property. As observed by the Privy Council in Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Shrivagunga 'there is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family, and upon the death of any one of them the others may well take by survivorship that in which they had during the deceased's lifetime a common interest and a common possession.'

Now, the contention of the petitioner that a Hindu undivided family is outside the scope and ambit of the expression "individuals" and therefore of entry 86 can possibly succeed only if the property of such family can be shown to vest not in the individuals who are members or coparceners of the family but in a jural entity which is in the eye of law distinct from its members or coparceners. The incidents of joint family or coparcenary property do not in the present context in the least affect the vesting of the property. When it is said that the ownership of the coparcenary property is in the whole body of coparceners, it does not mean that it vests in any corporate legal entity apart from the coparceners. The property vests in all the coparceners. The interest of a coparcener is "undivided coparcenary interest". It is interest which vests in him and with which, subject to certain limitations, which are not relevant for the present purpose, he is entitled to deal as he likes. Joint family or coparcenary property, therefore, is that in which every coparcener has a vested joint interest and joint possession. Cadit questio it is not property which is of the ownership of any jural person or entity distinct from individual coparceners who as a group constitute the joint family. A joint Hindu family, it may be observed, is not entitled to sue as such nor can the joint family be sued as a legal person in respect of any joint family property.

The argument that a Hindu undivided family is owner of the joint family property as a corporate body was evidently presented by the learned counsel only in the context of a Mitakshara family and on the footing that the joint family of the petitioner is governed by the Mitakshara school. Since, however, the argument can apply to members of a joint family governed by the Dayabhaga law and members of a Tarwad, Tavazhi, Ilom, Kutumba or Kavaru governed by the Marumakkattayam, Aliyasantana or Nambudri law it becomes necessary to consider whether the expression "individuals" in entry 86 can embrace members of such joint Hindu families. The contention of the petitioner would, of course, derive support if the property of any such joint Hindu family can be said to belong not to the members but to the family as a corporate legal entity. If the expression "individuals" in entry 86 could not embrace the members of any such joint Hindu family it would be extremely difficult to attribute to the makers of the Constitution the intention to empower the Parliament to impose capital levy on members of some joint Hindu families as a unit of taxation and not in case of members of some other joint Hindu families. I would have found myself faced with some difficulty in examining the contention from this angle since this aspect of the matter was not mooted by learned counsel for the petitioner and the learned Attorney General was not called upon to present any argument on the same. I confess this aspect of the matter did not strike me at the time but it is not absolutely necessary to invite further arguments on the same. No difficulty arises since, as I shall very briefly point out, the position seems clear that the property of any such joint Hindu family vests in individuals who are members of the joint family and not in the family as a juridical person apart from its members.

The conception of a coparcenary and of coparcenary property according to the Dayabhaga law is entirely distinct from that according to the Mitakshara law. The essence of a coparcenary under the Dayabhaga law is unity of possession and it is not possible even in a general manner to say that under that system the ownership of the coparcenary property is in the whole body of coparceners. Every coparcener takes a defined share in such property and he is the owner of that share. Even before partition any coparcener can say that he is entitled to a particular share. Therefore, there is not even scope for the argument that Dayabhaga joint family can own property as a jural person distinct from its members.

The existence of a system founded on matriarchy in certain parts of Southern India in contradistinction to that in the rest of the country which is patriarchal having the common ancestor as the founder of the family and in which relationship is primarily by agnation has been well established and judicially recognized for a long time. The joint family in one form or another does exist under the systems prevalent in Southern India known as Marumakkattayam, Aliyasantana and Nambudri Laws. While the incidents of the joint family property under the laws of those who favour the matriarchate must in certain respects be different it is abundantly clear that the members of any Tarwad, Tavazhi, Ilom, Kutumba or Kavaru have vested interest in the joint family property. Although it is not unusual to refer to these families as family corporations, it cannot be said that ownership of the joint family property vests in a corporate body as a juridical person as distinct from the members of the joint family. On an aspect of the matter not argued before us it is unnecessary, however, to pursue this point any further.

The conclusion, therefore, seems inescapable that the property of a Hindu undivided family is within the ambit of entry 86. It is property of the "individuals" who are members or coparceners of the joint family. It must follow, therefore, that it was within the competence of the Union Legislature to impose wealth tax on the Hindu undivided family as a unit of taxation and that the impugned legislation in s. 3 of the Wealth-tax Act, 1957, affecting a Hindu undivided family cannot be struck down on the score of vires. The Court will not declare any enactment as unconstitutional or ultra vires unless the repugnance to the Constitution is clear and beyond doubt, and in case of the legislation challenged before us, I do not see any repugnance.

A further point was stated by Sir Noshirwan Engineer, rather as an apprehension of the respondent's counsel than as an argument actually advanced for the petitioner, that if the word "individuals" in entry 86 be interpreted in the restricted sense urged on behalf of the petitioner, the respondent cannot seek to uphold the impugned legislation by resorting to entry 97 which is the residuary entry in List I. The learned Attorney General strongly relied on this residuary entry and art. 248 and pressed for our acceptance the contention of the respondent founded on the same. The argument was that the three Lists in the Seventh Schedule embraced the entire gamut of legislation and that it was art. 248 to which the Court must in the first instance turn for ascertainment of the residuary powers of the Parliament when any question arises in the field of the exclusive powers of the Union Legislature to make any law and particularly the power of making any law imposing a tax not mentioned in the Concurrent List or the State List. Article 248, it was said, gave unfettered power of taxation to the Union Legislature in its own domain of legislation and could not be controlled by the language of entry 86. The rejoinder to this on behalf of the petitioner was that the scope of entry 86 cannot be expanded by recourse to the residuary entry. The argument, of course, was on the footing that the expression "individuals" in entry 86 did not include a Hindu undivided family. It was said that if the construction of entry 86 pressed on behalf of the petitioner is accepted the word "individuals" must be read as laying down a restriction upon the powers of the Union Legislature to impose capital levy by confining it to individuals and companies. Now it would appear that the entries in the Lists are legislative heads primarily designed to demarcate the areas of legislative competence of the Union and the State Legislatures. They give simplex enumeratio of categories of legislation and are not designed to circumscribe or logically define the ambit of art. 248. It would be difficult, therefore, to read in any entry in List I any restrictions by implication or otherwise on the residuary legislative power conferred on the Union Legislature by art. 248. But in the view I have already taken on the interpretation and effect of entry 86 it is not necessary to decide this interesting question.

For reasons I have already stated, I agree with my learned brother that this petition fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Present: The Hon'ble Mr. S. R. Das, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Bhagwati and Mr. Justice M. Hidayatullah.

SARUPCHAND HUKAMCHAND & CO. v. THE UNION OF INDIA.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 23(5)(b), 24(2) proviso (d), 31—Income-tax Officer applying s. 23(5)(b) to unregistered firm on finding that firm had made profit during relevant assessment year—Assistant Appellate Commissioner on appeal holding that loss sustained by firm in assessment year and directing Income-tax Officer to modify assessment—Income-tax Officer carrying loss to partners of firm in their assessments—Maintainability of Income-tax Officer's Order—Applicability of proviso (d) to s. 24(2).

The Income-tax Officer in assessing a partnership firm which was unregistered found that it had made a profit during the relevant assessment year and applying s. 23(5)(b) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, he assessed the partners of the firm carrying the profit into their individual returns and made no demand upon the firm. On appeal by the firm the Appellate Assistant Commissioner found that there was error in the computation of income made by the Income-tax Officer and held that in the assessment year there was a loss in the total world income of the firm. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner directed the Income-tax Officer to modify the assessment made by him. The Income-tax Officer thereafter gave effect to the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under s. 31 of the Act and carried the loss to the partners in their assessments and granted a refund to them. On the question whether the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner left the Income-tax Officer free of his earlier order and whether he was under a duty to re-consider the position under s. 23(5)(b) of the Act:—

Held, that the reversal of the finding of profit destroyed the substratum of the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to act under s. 23(5)(b) and his order automatically fell through, and that in the light of the losses determined by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the Income-tax Officer was under a duty to apply his mind de novo to determine whether he should, in the altered circumstances, apply s. 23(5)(b) to the case or not.

Section 23(5)(b) and proviso (d) to s. 24(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, must be read in harmony, and when so read, yield the only result that proviso (d) is to be invoked, subject to the conditions under s. 23(5)(b) to obtain more revenue for the State by applying s. 23(5)(a) of the Act.

Proviso (d) to s. 24(2) could only be resorted to when, in spite of taking the losses to the accounts of the partners, more revenue would be available to the State. The proviso is an enabling one. An unregistered firm, treated as such in the previous years, may, during any year, be treated as a registered firm provided the Revenue would benefit. It may be that the firm may have a loss in that year or was carrying a loss from the previous years but, if by treating the firm as registered, the Revenue would be benefited, the proviso can be used.

THE facts are stated in the judgment.

HIDAYATULLAH J. This appeal, by special leave of this Court, is directed against the judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay dated February 26, 1953, in Appeal No. 108 of 1952. By that judgment, the Divisional Bench (Chagla C.J. and Shah J.) declined to interfere, in Letters Patent Appeal, with the judgment of Tendolkar J. dated July 8, 1952, in Miscellaneous Application No. 48 of 1952. In the petition which was originally filed in the High Court under art. 226 of the Constitution, a writ of mandamus was asked against the Union of India and two Income-tax Officers to compel them to give effect to the appellate order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of I.T.F. Range, Bombay, dated April 29, 1949. The High Court in both the judgments declined the writ.

The facts of the case are as follows: The appellant, Messrs. Sarupchand Hukamchand and Co., (hereinafter referred to as the assessee firm) was carrying on business, inter alia as shroffs, merchants and commission agents at Bombay, Indore, Ujjain and Calcutta. It had, in the relevant account years, two partners, Sir Sarupchand Hukamchand and Sri Hiralal Kalyanmal. The two partners were also separately liable to income-tax, the former as a Hindu undivided family and the latter as an individual. We are concerned here with the assessment years 1940-41, 1941-42 and 1942-43. These correspond to the account years, 1995-1996 (Samvat) to 1997-1998 (Samvat). When the assessment of the assessee firm was made, the Income-tax Officer, Section VIII (Central), Bombay, treated the firm as "resident and ordinarily resident". For the assessment year 1940-41 the Income-tax Officer found a profit of Rs. 80,358, and applying s. 23(5)(b) of the Indian Income-tax Act (hereafter called the Act), he proceeded to treat the firm which was unregistered as registered for the purpose of assessment. On March 15, 1945, he, therefore, assessed the two partners carrying the profit into their individual returns and made no demand upon the firm. It appears that an application for registration had already been filed under s. 26A of the Act before the Income-tax Officer, but it was rejected—and quite correctly—because no instrument of partnership was disclosed. That order was also passed on the same date.

For the assessment years 1941-42 and 1942-43, the Income-tax Officer by his orders dated July 31, 1945, and October 31, 1945, respectively, treated the firm as "resident and ordinarily resident" and as an unregistered firm. For the first of the two assessment years, he assessed the firm on a total income of Rs. 2,30,798 to income-tax and super-tax, and for the second year, its British Indian income was taken at Rs. 2,62,827 and the total income at Rs. 7,00,116 and was also treated accordingly.

The assessee firm appealed against these assessments. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner by his order passed in the consolidated appeals on April 29, 1949, held that the assessee firm was non-resident and excluded the income of the firm outside British India, though it was included in the total world income for the purpose of computing the rate of tax. He also found error in the computation of income made by the Income-tax Officer, and held that in the assessment year 1940-41 there was a loss of Rs. 1,61,084 in the total world income of the assessee firm. For the subsequent years also there were slight variations in the amounts determined by the Income-tax Officer, but it was held that the assessee firm had made profits in those years. The following is the summary of the findings of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, as given by him in his order:

Assessment year	Income in British India	Income outside British India	Total world income.
1940-41	Loss Rs. 2,26,028	Rs. 74,944	Loss Rs. 1,61,084
1941-42	.. Rs. 1,27,062	Rs. 1,08,236	.. Rs. 2,35,298
1942-43	.. Rs. 2,62,827	Rs. 4,41,789	.. Rs. 7,04,616

In addition to these findings, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner added a direction to the following effect:

“The Income-tax Officer is directed to modify the assessments accordingly.”

When the matter reached the Income-tax Officer, he gave effect to the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under s. 31 of the Act and carried the loss to the partners in their assessment for the year 1940-41, and granted a refund of Rs. 16,977-11-0 to Sir Sarupchand Hukamchand and Rs. 68,339 to Sri Hiralal Kalyanmal. The assessee firm, however, was not satisfied, and embarked upon voluminous correspondence beginning with a letter dated September 10, 1949, by which it claimed that inasmuch as it had been shown to have incurred a loss in the first of the three assessment years, it could not for that year be treated as a registered firm, and that as an unregistered firm it was entitled, therefore, to carry forward the loss to the subsequent years. In addition to the correspondence, the assessee firm moved in turn the Income-tax Officer as well as the Appellate Assistant Commissioner respectively under s. 35 of the Act for rectification of the assessment to the same effect. The officers of the Department at both levels declined to interfere, and stated that the direction of the Income-tax Officer under s. 23(5)(b) was not appealable, and had become final. They also pointed out that the period during which the original order of the Income-tax Officer could be rectified (viz. 4 years) had already run out, and that the petitions were accordingly out of time. The assessee firm moved the Commissioner as well as the Central Board of Revenue, but failed to get the desired order.

Finally, after the receipt of the order of the Central Board of Revenue, the assessee firm applied on July 16, 1951, to the Additional Income-tax Officer, Section VIII (Central) to give effect to an order which the assessee firm had secured from the Appellate Assistant Commissioner earlier. By that order, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner had, at the request of the assessee firm, directed the Income-tax Officer to take the losses of the first assessment year into the accounts of the partners, which direction, in the opinion of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, his predecessor had omitted to make in the first instance. It was after this that fresh assessment forms were drawn up, and the refund was determined. It may be pointed out here that the partners withdrew the amount of refund, though in making the request to the Additional Income-tax Officer the assessee firm had reserved its right “to move further in the matter as may be advised”, and had pointed out that the action was without prejudice to such rights.

Having failed to obtain relief from the Department, the appellate authorities and the Central Board of Revenue, the assessee firm filed the petition under art. 226 of the Constitution in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay. That petition was heard by Tendolkar J., and he declined to interfere mainly on the ground that it was possible to take two views of the matter whether after a profit assessment was turned into a loss assessment by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the original order of the Income-tax Officer under s. 23(5)(b) remained outstanding or not. He thought that this was not a fit case for the issuance of a writ of mandamus by the High Court. In appeal which was taken from this decision, Chagla C.J. looked at proviso (d) to s. 24(2), and also came to the view that there was a possibility of two views being taken in the matter, and that the learned single Judge was right in not interfering. Shah J. in a concurring judgment explained what he considered was the meaning of s. 23(5)(b) read with s. 24(2), proviso (d), but he also felt that this was not a case in which a writ could be claimed against the Union of India or the Income-tax Officers. Chagla C.J., however, expressed the hope that the taxing authorities would not deny the assessee firm its rights under the Act on any technical ground, such as limitation, or failure to pursue a particular procedure. In the result, the Divisional Bench sustained the order of Tendolkar J., who had dismissed the petition earlier. This Court on May 3, 1954, granted special leave to appeal against the judgment of the Divisional Bench.

Before arguing on merits of the appeal, the learned Additional Solicitor General and subsequently Mr. Rajagopala Sastri who took over the argument, raised three objections to the present appeal. According to them, the petition in the High Court was directed against the Union of India and the two Income-tax Officers who had dealt with this matter, and the relief which was claimed could be granted by none of them. They further argued that mandamus was an inappropriate writ to issue in this matter when the order passed by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23(5)(b) was not appealable and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner could do nothing about it in the appeal against the quantum of assessment. They also stated that the relief asked for in the petition could not be granted by the High Court, and that the powers of this Court were accordingly limited.

We shall deal with these objections, when we have determined the essence of the matter. Under s. 23(5)(b), a power is conferred on the Income-tax Officer to treat an unregistered firm as a registered firm, if by adopting that method more tax and super-tax would be realisable from the individual partners in their own assessments than in assessing the firm. The clause may be quoted in extenso for ready reference here:

23. (5) "Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing sub-sections, when the assessee is a firm and the total income of the firm has been assessed under sub-section (1), sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), as the case may be,—...

(b) in the case of an unregistered firm, the Income-tax Officer may, instead of determining the sum payable by the firm itself, proceed in the manner laid down in clause (a) as applicable to a registered firm, if, in his opinion, the aggregate amount of the tax including super-tax, if any, payable by the partners under such procedure would be greater than the aggregate amount which would be payable by the firm and the partners individually if the firm were assessed as an unregistered firm."

The contention of the assessee firm is that the action of the Income-tax Officer in treating an unregistered firm as a registered firm is mainly in the interests of the revenue and he can act if more revenue would be available and not otherwise. When an unregistered firm makes a loss, it is entitled to carry forward the loss for a certain number of years till it is absorbed in the profits, if any, of subsequent years. By carrying the loss to the account of the individual partners, relief is afforded to them in their own income-tax payment, and there is presently a loss of revenue to the State. This, according to the assessee firm, is outside the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, because his action is conditioned upon realisation of more revenue and not creating loss for the State. Learned counsel for the Department agree that there would be, in the assessment year in which there is a loss by an unregistered firm, a loss to the Revenue if it is carried into the accounts of the partners; but they contend that there is no inhibition against the action and refer to proviso (d) to s. 24(2) as indicating that such a course is perfectly valid. The assessee firm also contends that the moment loss was determined by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the previous order made by the Income-tax Officer under s. 25(5)(b) of the Act automatically fell to the ground and the loss could only be carried forward in the future assessments of the unregistered assessee firm and not in the account of the partners. The assessee firm contends that the direction by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to modify the assessments of the three years accordingly implied the re-opening of the entire question whether this unregistered firm could be treated as a registered firm for purposes of assessment in the first year. The Department, on the other hand, refers to the provisions of s. 80 of the Act to show that an appeal lies to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner on the grounds expressly mentioned there and none other. It further points out that this is not one of the grounds on which the appeal could have been taken, and the Act cannot by implication be deemed to have conferred on the Appellate Assistant Commissioner a power which he ordinarily did not possess under the Act. The order of the Income-tax Officer to treat the unregistered firm as registered must, therefore, be held to be outstanding, and all that has happened in the case is to take that order to its logical conclusion in the light of the assessed loss of the firm, in the three years under assessment.

This question was urged before us in great detail, as apparently it had also been in the Court below. There is no doubt that the matter is one of some complexity, which is not unusual in a statute of the type we are considering, but, in our opinion, only one correct view of the matter was possible, and with all due respect, the High Court made but little attempt to determine it. We shall now attempt to lay down the interpretation of the various sections bearing upon the matter. Section 23(5)(b) has already been quoted. It will appear from it that the Income-tax Officer is given the option to apply the procedure laid down in cl. (a) to an unregistered firm, if, in his opinion, the aggregate amount of tax including super-tax, if any, payable by the partners under such procedure would be greater than the aggregate amount of tax which would be payable by the firm and the partners individually, if the firm was assessed as an unregistered firm. Clause (a) provides that the sum payable by the firm shall not be determined, but the total income of each partner of the firm, including therein his share of its income, profits and gains of the previous year, shall be assessed and the sum payable by him on the basis of such assessment shall be determined. To put it simply, in the case of a registered firm its assessable income is first determined, but is not processed further to determine the tax. Instead, the shares of the partners in the assessable income are determined in accordance with the particulars furnished by them, and the resultant amounts are respectively carried to each partner's return and included in his income, and the tax on the total is determined. In the case of an unregistered firm, the assessable income is found out, and then the tax payable by the unregistered firm is determined and a demand issued. If there is a loss, then the loss is carried forward to the succeeding years till it is absorbed or for six (now, eight) years but no further. Previously, the number of years ranged from one to six, but there is no need to refer to the provision in detail.

What happened in this case was that for the assessment year 1940-41, the Income-tax Officer determined the assessable income at Rs. 80,358. He felt that more tax was likely to be realised if the partners were assessed instead of the firm, and he accordingly decided to apply the procedure laid down in s. 23(5)(b) to the firm. In passing his order, the Income-tax Officer observed as follows:

"The firm is an unregistered one but the aggregate amount of tax payable by the partners would be greater by applying the procedure laid down in s. 23(5)(a) of the Act than the aggregate amount which would be payable by the firm and the partners individually if the firm were assessed as an unregistered one. I, therefore, order under s. 23(5)(b) of the Act that the procedure laid down in s. 23(5)(a) should be applied and the firm declared N.D. for the assessment year 1940-41."

It is no doubt true that if the Income-tax Officer had determined a loss, he could not and probably would not have passed this order, which would have had the immediate effect of loss to the Revenue of the sums which have now been ordered to be refunded to the partners of this unregistered firm. The Department, however, says that the assessment for 1940-41 except in so far as profit was converted into loss has become final and cannot be set aside now. It relies on *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand*¹ and Commr. I.T., Punjab v. Tribune Trust, Lahore.² There is no doubt that an assessment which has once been made does become final, subject only to the powers exercisable under ss. 34 and 35 of the Act. The position, however, is different when the assessment itself is subject to appeal, and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner passes an order converting the profit into a loss, and gives a direction to the Income-tax Officer to modify the assessment accordingly.

The position then was that the Income-tax Officer had exercised his powers under s. 23(5)(b) as there was a profit. When the Appellate Assistant Commissioner found a loss it became clear that the Income-tax Officer had, by an erroneous finding of profit, assumed jurisdiction to act under s. 23(5)(b). The reversal of the finding of profit destroyed the substratum of the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to act under that clause and his order automatically fell through.

The Department's contention that such an order is referable to cl. (a) of s. 31(3) and does not involve the setting aside of the order under s. 23(5)(b) passed earlier by the Income-tax Officer is not correct. No doubt, the right of appeal given to the assessee under s. 30 is limited to the matters therein contained, but the relief which the appellate authority can give is to be found in s. 31(3). The assessment order having come before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, he can, under cl. (a), confirm, reduce, enhance or annul the assessment. Under cl. (b) he can set aside the assessment and direct the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment, after making such further enquiries as the Income-tax Officer thinks fit or the Appellate Assistant Commissioner directs, and the Income-tax Officer must thereupon proceed to make fresh assessment and determine the amount of tax payable on the basis of such fresh assessment. It is contended by the Department that the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was passed under cl. (a) and not cl. (b), and there being no fresh assessment ordered, the only thing that the Income-tax Officer could do was to re-determine the tax within the limits of his own order under s. 23(5)(b) of the Act, which applied cl. (a) of that sub-section to this case.

In our opinion, this is not a correct approach. Even if the order be referred to cl. (a) of s. 31(3), the effect, in law, was the annulment of the assessment which had been made in the case, and the necessary consequence of the determination of the loss in the assessable income remained to be worked out. The Income-tax Officer worked it out by carrying the losses to the return of the partners. Under what section could he do so except under s. 23(5)(b)? There was no authorisation under s. 31(4) of the Act and the second proviso to s. 24 was clear. In such a case, the Income-tax Officer was required once again to apply his mind to determine whether it would be in the interests of Revenue to proceed, as he had done before. It is manifest that if he had done this duty in the interests of the Revenue, as the law indeed contemplates, he would never have passed the order that the loss of the firm should be carried to the accounts of the partners immediately in that year of assessment. Learned counsel for the Department admits that no Income-tax Officer would have, with a loss by the firm, given relief on the basis of that loss to the partners, but he contends that this is not illegal in view of the special provisions of proviso (d) to s. 24(2) of the Act. We accordingly proceed to consider the effect of that proviso, which reads as follows:

"Provided that—

From this, it is argued, as it was argued in the High Court, that even the losses of an unregistered firm can be carried to the partners' account, as if the firm were registered. No doubt, if the proviso is read in an extended manner, the result asked for would follow; but a careful reading of it would show that it was not designed to enable the Income-tax Officer to forego the obligation laid on him by cl. (b) of s. 23(5), to find out the interests of the Revenue. To read this proviso as enabling the Income-tax Officer to overlook the said clause is to give no meaning to the words "during any year". Those words form a material part of the proviso, because the proviso with or without those words makes an entirely different sense. Without those words, it gives a general power to carry the losses to the partners' account. With those words, it only provides for a contingency in which an unregistered firm treated as such in the previous years, is sought in any particular year to be treated as a registered firm, and by reason of its carrying some business losses in the past, arrangement for the carrying forward and absorption of those losses has to be made for the year in which it is to be treated as a registered firm. In that event, the proviso provides that its losses shall be carried to the partners' account, as if it were a registered firm. It is inconceivable that if the firm was carrying heavy business losses, it would suddenly be treated in a year of assessment as a registered firm, so that its losses might give relief to the partners and not give revenue to the State. This proviso would only be resorted to, when, in spite of taking the losses to the accounts of the partners, more revenue would be available to the State. The proviso is an enabling one. An unregistered firm, treated as such in previous years, may, during any year, be treated as a registered firm provided the Revenue would benefit. It may be that the firm may have made a loss in that year or was carrying a loss from the previous years but, if by treating the firm as registered, the Revenue would be benefited, the proviso can be used. But there is no general power to act this way to the detriment of the Revenue. To give any other interpretation to this proviso will mean that the words "during any year" have not received any meaning and that the proviso is interpreted to make it not incumbent on the Income-tax Officer to consider the interests of the Revenue, as required by cl. (b) of s. 23(5). The two provisions must be read in harmony, and when so read, yield the only result that proviso (d) is to be invoked, subject to the conditions under s. 23(5)(b) to obtain more revenue for the State by applying s. 23(5)(a).

It would appear, therefore, that the Income-tax Officer in the light of the losses determined by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, was under a duty to apply his mind de novo to the problem which he had undertaken, when he resorted to s. 23(5)(b). It is admitted that if the matter had been so plain to him, he would not have, if he did his duty correctly under that provision, carried the losses to the partners' account.

The only question, therefore, which survives for determination is whether the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner left the Income-tax Officer free of his earlier order, and whether he was under a duty to reconsider the position under s. 23(5)(b). When the basis for assessing a profit was gone, it is manifest that there was nothing but loss to carry forward to the partners' account. With the fall of the assessment in this manner, fell the need for applying the special provisions of cl. (b) of s. 23(5) to the case. Indeed, the duty of the Income-tax Officer indicated a contrary course, if he was to act under s. 23(5)(b) at all. The order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was passed in respect of three years' assessment, and was a consolidated order. He set out in parallel columns the income and losses of the firm and not of the partners and directed the Income-tax Officer to modify the assessments accordingly. The intention obviously underlying that order was to put the matter at the stage at which the assessable income of the assessee firm was determined before computing the tax thereupon. To compute the tax, the Income-tax Officer had to determine whether the loss occasioned in the first year should be carried forward to the assessee firm in the subsequent year, and he could not give effect to the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner fully, unless he determined once again the question under s. 23(5)(b). In other words, the implication of the appellate order was to take the matter prior to the order regarding the treatment of the unregistered firm as a registered firm, and of necessity, that order fell to the ground as being passed beyond that stage.

It is contended on the strength of the ruling of the Privy Council in Commr. I.T., Punjab v. Tribune Trust, Lahore that once the assessment is final and valid, it remains so until it is set aside, but once it has become final, it cannot be altered except under ss. 34 and 35. No exception can be taken to the statement of the law by the Privy Council, which, with all due respect, is absolutely correct, but it is impossible to hold, on analogy, that the order determining that this unregistered firm should be treated as registered, had equally become final and open to further consideration. Learned counsel for the Department also urged on the strength of *Commr. Inc.-tax v. McMillan & Co.*³ and *Commr. Inc.-tax v. Amritlal Bhogilal*⁴, that if the powers of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner did not involve a review of the determination by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23(5)(b), this result could not indirectly follow. No doubt, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner could not, if the matter had gone before him in appeal against the order under that section, have interfered. But the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was exercising his powers under s. 31 of the Act and annulling the assessment of the first year and converting a profit in that year into a loss. None can deny that he had that power in the appeal which was before him. Section 31(4) of the Act enjoins that where as the result of an appeal any change is made in the assessment of a firm the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may authorise the Income-tax Officer to amend accordingly any assessment made on any partner of the firm. This power was implicit in the order which the Appellate Assistant Commissioner passed, namely, that there was a loss in the assessment year in question and the assessments for the three years had to be modified. The Income-tax Officer, therefore, was under a duty to modify the assessments of the partners accordingly, and to take the matter up again from the point at which the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner had placed it. He had once again to determine whether he would, in the altered circumstances, apply s. 23(5)(b) to this case or not.

In our opinion, the Income-tax Officers in question did not do their duty as required by law, and we should, therefore, by a writ compel them to do so.

As regards the argument that the petition is directed against wrong persons and for a wrong relief, we do not think that it is so. The petition sought relief against the Union of India, which, in any event, was not concerned with this matter, and was wrongly joined. But the two Income-tax Officers, who dealt with this matter, were required under the statute to do their duty once again in the matter of the application of s. 23(5)(b) of the Act. That they failed to apply their mind to this matter under a wrong apprehension of the law is manifest, and they did not give effect to the orders of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The assessee firm having failed to secure this relief from all the authorities superior to the Income-tax Officers, it was open to the High Court by a writ to order the Income-tax Officer concerned to hear and determine this matter in accordance with law. This is precisely the relief which was claimed in the High Court and is now claimed in the present appeal. We think, with due respect, that the High Court should have, on a correct appraisal of the legal situation, ordered this relief, and we accordingly, after explaining the law applicable to the case, order the appropriate Income-tax Officer to hear and determine this matter in the light of our observations.

We may set down here that the two partners of the firm to whom relief has been given by way of refund after the Appellate Assistant Commissioner's order undertook unconditionally to refund the amounts, before the matter is considered by the Income-tax Officer. We order that the two partners shall return the amounts in the manner to be ordered by the Income-tax Officer, before action is taken to determine the matter.

In the result, the appeal is allowed with costs throughout to be paid by respondents Nos. 2 and 3. The Union of India shall, however, bear its own costs. It may be noted that no separate costs were incurred by it either in this Court or in the Court below. It joined respondents Nos. 2 and 3 in the statement of the case filed in this Court and also appeared through the same counsel in both the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE CHARITY FUND v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 4(3)(i)—Trust created for relief of members of Jewish or other communities and other public charitable purposes—Trust-deed providing that preference to be given to relations and members of settlor belonging to Jewish faith and not less than half the income of trust fund to be given to members of Jewish faith including settlor's relations—Whether such trust a public charitable trust and exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i).

Under a Deed of Declaration of Trust executed by Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and others, the trust fund was declared to be held by the trustees upon trusts to apply the net income thereof, for all or any of the six purposes enumerated in clause 13 therein, namely, (a) the relief and benefit of the poor and indigent members of Jewish or any other community of Bombay or other parts of India, or of the world, (b) the institution, maintenance and support of hospitals and schools, colleges or other educational institutions, (c) the relief of any distress caused by the elements of nature such as famine, pestilence, fire, tempest, flood, earthquake or any other such calamity, (d) the care and protection of animals useful to mankind, (e) the advancement of religion and (f) other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the foregoing purposes. Clause 13 contained certain provisos which inter alia stated: "Provided always that in applying the income as aforesaid the Trustees shall give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein distant and collateral relations; provided further that in the application of the income of the said Charitable Trust Fund the said Trustees for the time being shall observe the following proportions, viz: that not less than half the income of the said funds shall at all times be applied for the benefit of the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay only (including the relations of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. as aforesaid) and Jewish objects and particularly in giving donations to the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay on the anniversary of the death of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and his wife... and the remaining income for the benefit of all persons and objects including Jewish persons and objects and in such proportions as the said Trustees may think proper." On the question whether the trust fund was exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, it was contended by the Department that the trust was primarily for the benefit of the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart.:—

Held, that the earlier part of cl. 13 of trust-deed, omitting the provisos, constituted a public charitable trust, that the circumstance that in selecting the beneficiaries under cl. 13(a) preference is given under the provisos to the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., did not affect that public charitable trust, and that, therefore, the income from the trust properties came within the scope of s. 4(3)(i) of the Act, and was entitled to exemption from tax.

DAS C.J. This is an appeal brought on a certificate granted on September 19, 1956, by the High Court of Bombay under s. 66(A)(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act (hereinafter referred to as "the said Act") against its order dated February 21, 1956, in Income-tax Reference No. 32 of 1954 answering in the negative two questions of law referred to it under s. 66(1) of the said Act at the instance of the appellants.

The appellants are the trustees of a charity fund known as "The Charity Fund Founded by Sir Sassoon David, Baronet of Bombay". The said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and four other persons, who were holding certain securities of the value of Rs. 24,25,000 for the purpose of charity and had been applying the same for and towards charitable purposes, executed, on June 8, 1922, a Deed of Declaration of Trust declaring that the said trust fund would be held by them on trusts more specifically therein mentioned. Clause 13 of the said deed, on the true construction of which depends the answer to the referred questions, runs as follows:—

"13. The Trust Fund shall be held by the Trustees upon the trusts to apply the net income thereof after providing for all necessary expenses in relation to the management of the Trust Funds for all or any of the following purposes that is to say,

(a) the relief and benefit of the poor and indigent members of Jewish or any other community of Bombay or other parts of India or of the world either by making payments to them in cash or providing them with food and clothes and/or lodging or residential quarters or in giving education including scholarships to or setting them up in life or in such other manner as to the said Trustees may seem proper or...

(b) the institution, maintenance and support of hospitals and schools, colleges or other educational institutions or...

(c) the relief of any distress caused by the elements of nature such as famine, pestilence, fire, tempest, flood, earthquake or any other such calamity or...

(d) the care and protection of animals useful to mankind or...

(e) the advancement of religion or...

(f) other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the foregoing purposes...

Provided always that in applying the income as aforesaid the Trustees shall give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein distant and collateral relations; provided further that in the application of the income of the said Charitable Trust Fund the said Trustees for the time being shall observe the following proportions, viz.: that not less than half the income of the said funds shall at all times be applied for the benefit of the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay only (including the relations of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. as aforesaid) and Jewish objects and particularly in giving donations to the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay on the anniversary of the death of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and his wife Lady Hannah David which falls on the Twenty-second day of June and the remaining income for the benefit of all persons and objects including Jewish persons and objects and in such proportions as the said Trustees may think proper. Provided further that if the income of the Trust Funds for any year shall not be wholly applied during that year on the Trusts aforesaid such surplus income may be carried forward to the subsequent year or years and be applied as the income arising during that year or years. Provided also that during the lifetime of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., in the application of the said income the Trustees shall have regard to the wishes of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., who shall also be entitled to direct if he so desires that the income for the time being of the Trust-Funds or any part thereof may be applied to such charitable object or objects as the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. shall direct and in such case the Trustees shall so apply the income."

This Deed of Declaration of Trust was, on June 4, 1953, registered under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950.

The Trust Fund had been invested by the trustees in inter alia 3½ per cent. Government securities. In the year 1930 a certificate was issued by the Income-tax Officer, A Ward, Bombay, whereby the Reserve Bank of India was authorised not to deduct at source the tax on the interest on the said securities so held by the trustees. It was mentioned in the said certificate that it was to enure till its cancellation. In 1946 the 3½ per cent. Government securities were redeemed by the Government of India and were converted into 3 per cent.

Conversion Loan, 1946. Accordingly in February 1948 the said certificate of exemption was cancelled, as the securities covered thereby had been redeemed by the Government. The trustees thereupon asked for a fresh certificate of exemption from the Income-tax Officer, Bombay Refund Circle, in respect of the 3 per cent. Conversion Loan, 1946. But the said Income-tax Officer refused to issue such certificate on the ground that the income from the trust fund in question was not exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i) of the said Act which, at the material time, was as follows:—

(3) Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them:

(4) Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied, or finally set apart for application, thereto:—"

Upon the fact of the withholding of the certificate by the Income-tax Officer, Refund Circle, being intimated to the Income-tax Officer, A-V Ward, Bombay, the latter Officer started proceedings against the appellants under s. 34 of the said Act in respect of the assessment years 1944-45 to 1947-48. He also started regular proceedings for the assessment year 1948-49 and the succeeding years up to 1952-53.

In the assessment proceedings for those nine years the Income-tax Officer took the view that the income from the trust fund was not exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i), and accordingly he assessed the appellants for the first four assessment years (1944-45 to 1947-48) on the ground that the income for those years had escaped assessment. He also assessed the appellants to tax for the subsequent five years (1948-49 to 1952-53). On appeal the Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the said assessments. On further appeal by the appellants, the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal set aside the assessments for the first four years (1944-45 to 1947-48) holding that s. 34 had been wrongly invoked, for it was only a case of difference of opinion of one Income-tax Officer from his predecessor on the same set of facts. The Department did not take any further steps in the matter and accepted that view of the Tribunal as regards the assessments of those years and we are not in this appeal concerned with them. As regards the assessments for the five years (1948-49 to 1952-53) the Tribunal upheld the decision of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner who had confirmed the assessments made by the Income-tax Officer.

On application being made by the appellants, under s. 66(1) of the said Act, the Tribunal drew up a statement of case and referred two questions of law arising out of its order to the High Court for its opinion. The said questions are as follows:—

(1) Whether the Trust property is held wholly for religious or charitable purposes within the meaning of section 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act?

(2) If the answer to question (1) is in the negative, whether the trust property is held in part only for religious or charitable purposes?

The said reference came up for hearing before the said High Court and both the referred questions were answered in the negative. The High Court, however, gave the appellants a certificate of fitness for appeal to this Court and the present appeal has been filed on the strength of such certificate.

A perusal of cl. 13 of the deed shows that the trust fund is declared to be held by the trustees upon trusts to apply the net income thereof for all or any of the six purposes enumerated therein. It was conceded before the High Court—and it has not been disputed before us—that if there was nothing else in this clause, then each of these six purposes would have to be upheld as a charitable purpose involving an element of public utility and consequently within the protection of s. 4(3)(i). The fact that the trustees could expend the net income on any of the six purposes to the exclusion of the other five purposes would not, it is also conceded, have made the slightest difference in the matter of such exemption from income-tax. For instance, if the trustees spent the net income solely and wholly for the purposes mentioned under sub-cl. (a) to the exclusion of those mentioned in sub-cl. (b) to (f) such income would still be exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i). The High Court, however, took the view that cl. 13 should be read as a whole along with the provisos and that so read the trust is primarily for the benefit of the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. It is pointed out that in applying the net income for the purposes mentioned in sub-cl. (a), the trustees are bound, under the first proviso, to give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein distant and collateral relations. The second proviso, it is urged, makes it further clear that in the application of the income for the said purpose, the trustees are enjoined to apply not less than half the income for the benefit of the members of the Jewish community of Bombay only "including the relations of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., as aforesaid" and the Jewish objects. Emphasis is laid on the words "not less than half" as indicating that it is permissible for the trustees to spend more than half and indeed the whole of the net income for the benefit of the said relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. It is also pointed out that, although the remaining income, if any, has to be spent for the benefit of all persons and objects including Jewish persons and objects, the trustees could, if they so wished, spend the same also for the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. as Jewish persons. The argument, which found favour with the High Court, is that the provisos impose a mandatory obligation on the trustees (i) to give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and (ii) to spend not less than half the income, which may extend to the entire income, for the benefit of the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. The High Court points out that in view of the language of cl. 13 of the deed read as a whole, it is open to the trustees, without being guilty of any breach of trust, to spend the entire net income of the trust fund for the purpose of giving relief to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein the distant and collateral relations and such being the position, the High Court came to the conclusion that it could not be said that the property was held wholly or partly for religious or charitable purposes involving an element of public utility. The High Court, accordingly, held that the income from the trust fund was not exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i) and answered both the questions in the negative. The problem before us is whether the High Court was right in so answering the questions.

In coming to the decision that it did, the High Court relied on its own earlier decision in the case of *Trustees of G. G. Trust v. Comr. I. T.*¹ The facts in that case, however, were somewhat different from the facts now before us. In that case the trust was significantly enough described as "Gordhandas Govindram Family Charitable Trust". Clause 2 of that trust deed provided for the application of the net income in giving help or relief to such poor Vaishyas and other Hindoos as the trustees might consider deserving of help in the manner and to the extent specified in the said trust deed and subject to the conditions and directions stated in the next following clauses. Sub-clause (a) of cl. 3 provided that Vaishya Hindoos who were members of the Seksharia family should be preferred to poor Vaishyas not belonging to the said family. Maintenance had to be provided under sub-cl. (b) for the poor male descendants of the settlor and under sub-cl. (c) for the poor female descendants of the settlor. Marriage expenses were provided under sub-cl. (d) for the poor male descendants and under sub-cl. (e) for the poor female descendants of the settlor. There were other sub-clauses providing for payment of money to the poor male or female descendants of the other members of the Sekaria family. In the present judgment now under appeal, the High Court recognises that the particular trust they were dealing with in the earlier case "was a fairly blatant illustration of a settlor trying to benefit his own family and his own relations" and states that in the earlier case it had pointed out "that the benefit to the public was too remote and too illusory and accordingly held that that was not a trust which had for its object a general public utility". Such, however, cannot be said of the provisions of the present Deed of Declaration of Trust. Under cl. 13 the trustees are at liberty to hold the trust fund and to apply the net income thereof for all or any of the six purposes mentioned therein. The relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein distant and collateral relations do not figure as direct recipients of any benefit under sub-cl. (b) to (f) and, therefore, in so far as those purposes are concerned the trust certainly involves an element of public utility. We are not unmindful of the fact that it is open to the trustees to spend the net income entirely for the purpose referred to in sub-cl. (a) to the exclusion of the other clauses. But the very fact that the relations or members of the family do not come in directly under any of those latter sub-clauses cannot be ignored, for they certainly have some bearing on the question as to who or what were the primary objects of the trust as a whole. In the next place, the purpose of sub-cl. (a) is the "relief and benefit of the poor and indigent members of Jewish or any other community of Bombay or other parts of India or of the world". It is conceded by learned counsel that this sub-clause clearly expresses a general charitable intention involving an element of public utility. It follows, therefore, that sub-cl. (a) constitutes a valid public charitable trust having as its beneficiaries the several classes of persons referred to therein. This is the first position. We then pass on to the provisos. The first proviso opens with the words "in applying the income as aforesaid". This takes us back to sub-cl. (a). The meaning of the proviso obviously is that in applying the income for the purpose of sub-cl. (a), the trustees shall give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. The proviso does not operate independently, but comes into play only "in applying the income as aforesaid". The provision for giving preference involves the idea of selection of some persons out of a bigger class envisaged in sub-cl. (a). The poor and indigent relations or members of the family can claim to participate in the benefits under the trust only if they come within one of the several classes enumerated in sub-cl. (a). To take an extreme example: If a poor and indigent relation of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., abjures the faith held by the Jewish community and does not adopt any other faith and thus ceases to be a member of the Jewish community but does not become a member of any other community, he will certainly not be entitled to the benefits of sub-cl. (a) although he is a poor and indigent relation or member of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., within the meaning of the first proviso. In other words, sub-cl. (a) prescribes the primary class of beneficiaries out of which the actual beneficiaries are to be selected by the application of the provisions of the provisos, that is to say, by giving preference to the relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. The case of Koettgen's Will Trusts, In re² appears to us, on the facts, to be more in point than the case of Gordhandas Govindram Family Charity Trust case (supra) relied on by the High Court. In the last mentioned English case the testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate upon trust for the promotion and furtherance of commercial education. The persons eligible as beneficiaries under the fund were stated to be

"persons of either sex who are British born subjects and who are desirous of educating themselves or obtaining tuition for a higher commercial career but whose means are insufficient or will not allow of their obtaining such education or tuition at their own expense..."

"The testatrix further directed that in selecting the beneficiaries

"It is my wish that the...trustees shall give a preference to any employees of John Batt & Co. (London) Ltd. or any members of the families of such employees; failing a sufficient number of beneficiaries under such description then the persons eligible shall be any persons of British birth as the...trustees may select.

Provided that the total income to be available for benefitting the preferred beneficiaries shall not in any one year be more than 75 per cent of the total available income for that year." (p. 254)

It was held, on a construction of the will, that the gift to the primary class from which the trustees could select the beneficiaries contained the necessary element of benefit to the public and that it was when that class was ascertained that the validity of the trust had to be determined, so that the subsequent direction to prefer, as to the 75 per cent. of the income, a limited class did not affect the validity of the trust which was accordingly a valid and effective charitable trust. Referring to the first part of the will Upjohn J. at p. 257 said:—

"If the will concluded there, the trust would clearly be a valid charitable trust, having regard to the admission that a gift for commercial education is for the advancement of education."

Then after stating that the next task was to make a selection from that primary class of eligible persons, the learned Judge continued (p. 257):—

"It is only when one comes to make a selection from that primary class that the employees of John Batt & Co. and the members of their families come into consideration, and the question is, does that direction as to selection invalidate the primary trust? In my judgment it does not do so."

Further down he said (p. 258):—

"In my judgment it is at the stage when the primary class of eligible persons is ascertained that the question of the public nature of the trust arises and falls to be decided, and it seems to me that the will satisfies that requirement and that the trust is of a sufficiently public nature."

The learned Judge then concluded (p. 259):—

"If, when selecting from that primary class the trustees are directed to give a preference to the employees of the company and members of their families, that cannot affect the validity of the primary trust, it being quite uncertain whether such persons will exhaust in any year 75 per cent. of the trust fund. On the true construction of this will, that is not (as to 75 per cent.) primarily a trust for persons connected with John Batt & Co., and the class of persons to benefit is not 'confined' to them, and in my judgment the trust contained in clauses 7 and 8 of the will of the testatrix is a valid charitable trust."

It is true that this is a judgment of a single Judge, but it does not appear to have been departed from or over-ruled in any subsequent case and appears to us to be based on sound principle. Applying this test, there can be no question—indeed it has been conceded—that the earlier part of cl. 13, omitting the provisos, constitutes a valid public charitable trust. The circumstance that in selecting the beneficiaries under sub-cl. (a) preference has to be given, under the provisos, to the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., cannot affect that public charitable trust. In our judgment, the facts of this case come nearer to the facts of the English case referred to above than to the facts of the earlier decision of the Bombay High Court in Gordhandas Govindram Family Charity Trust case. As we have already stated the relations or members of the family are clearly not the primary object contemplated by sub-cl. (b) to (f). The first part of sub-cl. (a), omitting the provisos, is not said to be too wide or vague and unenforceable. The provision for giving preference to the poor and indigent relations or the members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., cannot affect the public charitable trust constituted under sub-cl. (a). In our opinion the income from the trust properties comes within the scope of s. 4(3)(i) and is, therefore, entitled to exemption. Therefore the negative answer given by the High Court to question No. 1 cannot be supported and that question should be answered in the affirmative. In this view of the matter, question No. 2 does not arise and needs no answer. The result is that this appeal must be allowed and question No. 1 must be answered in the affirmative. The appellants will have the costs of the reference in the High Court and of this appeal in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY II, BOMBAY
v.
RANCHHODDAS KARSONDAS.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 34, 22—Assessee making 'voluntary' return showing income below maximum not chargeable to tax—Income-tax Officer issuing notice under s. 34 upon assessee to submit return—Assessee submitting similar return and Income-tax Officer completing the assessment of assessee—Whether notice under s. 34 and assessment thereon valid.

For the assessment year 1945-46 a public notice under s. 22(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was published on May 1, 1945. On January 5, 1950, the assessee submitted a "voluntary" return of his income for the assessment year 1945-46 showing a total net income which was below the maximum not chargeable to tax. The Income-tax Officer did not act on this return, but on February 27, 1950, he issued a notice purporting to be under s. 34 of the Act calling upon the assessee to submit his return. This notice was served on the assessee on March 3, 1950, and the assessee submitted a return similar to his previous return. The Income-tax Officer then completed the assessment of the assessee for the assessment year 1945-46 on February 28, 1951. On the question whether the notice issued under s. 34 and the assessment thereon were valid in law:—

Held, that as the return was already filed by the assessee on January 5, 1950, there was neither an omission nor a failure on the part of the assessee nor was there any question of assessment 'escaping' and, therefore, the notice under s. 34(1) and the consequent assessment were invalid.

*Commr. of Agri. Inc.-tax v. Sultan Ali,*² *R. K. Das & Co. v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*³ and *Commr. of Inc.-tax v. Govindlal Dutta,*⁴ overruled.

HIDAYATULLAH J. This appeal on a certificate of fitness granted by the High Court of Judicature at Bombay has been filed by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, against Ranchhoddas Karsondas of Bombay (hereinafter referred to as the assessee) under s. 66A of the Indian Income-tax Act.

The facts leading up to this appeal are as follows: For the assessment year 1945-46, a public notice under s. 22(1) of the Income-tax Act (hereinafter called the Act) was issued, requiring every person whose total income during the previous year exceeded the maximum amount which was not chargeable to income-tax to furnish, within such period not being less than sixty days as might be specified in the notice, a return of his income in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner. This notice was published on or about May 1, 1945.

*Decided, May 8, 1959. Civil Appeal No. 281 of 1955.

The assessee did not make a return of his income. The Income-tax Officer, while examining the books of account of a partnership called the "Assar Syndicate" of which the assessee was a partner, found that in the account year corresponding to the assessment year 1945-1946, there were six cash credits aggregating to Rs. 59,026 in the name of the assessee's wife. Before, however, the Income-tax Officer could take any action, the assessee submitted a "voluntary" return on January 5, 1950, of his income for the accounting year 1944-1945 (assessment year 1945-1946) showing a total net income of Rs. 1,935. He added a footnote to the return to the following effect:

"My wife has sold her old ornaments and deposited the sum of Rs. 59,026 in the firm of Assar Syndicate in which I am a partner."

The Income-tax Officer did not act on this return, but on February 27, 1950, he issued a notice purporting to be under s. 34 of the Act calling upon the assessee to submit his return. This notice was served on the assessee on March 3, 1950, and in answer thereto, the assessee submitted a similar return on March 14, 1950, showing the same income and adding the same footnote. The Income-tax Officer then issued and served upon the assessee notices under ss. 22(4) and 23(2) of the Act asking him to produce his books of account and to tender any evidence he cared to lead. It appears from the record that these notices were complied with, but on February 26, 1951, the Income-tax Officer included the sum of Rs. 59,026 in the total income of the assessee and assessed him on it for the assessment year 1945-1946.

The assessee appealed, in turn, to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. His contentions were three, viz., that the amount of Rs. 59,026 could not and should not have been included in his income, that the amended s. 24 of the Act had no retrospective effect, and that the assessment completed on February 26, 1951, was invalid, inasmuch as it was completed four years after the end of the relevant assessment year. Both the Appellate Assistant Commissioner as well as the Tribunal rejected his contentions, but the Tribunal on being moved by him, raised and referred two questions of law under s. 66(1) of the Act to the High Court of Judicature, Bombay, for its decision. These questions were:

"(1) Whether the notice issued under Section 34 of the Act by the Income-tax Officer on 27-2-1950 after the assessee had filed a voluntary return was valid in law?

(2) Whether the assessment made on 26-2-1951 is valid in law?"

This reference was heard by the High Court on March 18, 1954, and by a judgment delivered on the same day, Chagla C.J. and Tendolkar J. answered both the questions in the negative. Before the High Court, it was again contended by the assessee that since he had submitted a return under s. 22(3) of the Act on January 5, 1950, the assessment, if any, had to be completed before March 31, 1950, as required by s. 34(3) of the Act. He also contended that he was entitled under s. 22(3) to make a "voluntary" return on the date he did, and with a voluntary return before the Income-tax Officer, there was no scope for the issuance of a notice under s. 34. The High Court upheld the contentions of the assessee, and gave its opinion that the Department ought to have issued a notice under s. 22(2) within the assessment year, and if no return was made within the time fixed by the notice, the Department should have proceeded under s. 23(4) to a 'best judgment' assessment. The other alternative for the Department was to issue a notice under s. 34 of the Act, if the period for sending a notice under s. 22(2) had expired. But it could not issue a notice under s. 34 after a return was already made before it, and the benefit of the extended period of limitation for assessment available under the first proviso to sub-s. (3) of s. 34 of one year from the service of the notice under sub-s. (1) of that section was not available in this case. The High Court granted a certificate of fitness, and hence this appeal.

The arguments which were urged before the High Court were all raised in this Court by the parties. The case of the Department was supplemented by an argument that, inasmuch as the assessee had suppressed his income or given incorrect particulars thereof, the period during which action under s. 34 could be taken was the extended one of eight years.

In the arguments before us, our attention was drawn to a cleavage of opinion between the Bombay High Court on the one hand and the Calcutta High Court on the other. While the Bombay High Court seems to be of the view that a "voluntary" return showing a non-taxable income is still a good return for all purposes under the Act, the Calcutta High Court is of the view that what s. 22(1) of the Act requires is a return of taxable income and not a return of income, which shows a loss or is below the taxable limit. It appears that at one time the Calcutta High Court also entertained the view that such a return was no return at all, but it was explained later that this meant that the return was ineffective for the purposes of s. 22(1) of the Act, though it might be a "return" being in the prescribed form. The Bombay High Court also entertains the view that the assessment proceedings commence with the issue of a public notice, and that s. 34 of the Act cannot apply, where in answer to the public notice a return is made whether of taxable income or not. The view of the Calcutta High Court is that assessment proceedings commence either with a notice under s. 22(2) of the Act or with the filing of a return showing taxable income.

We are not here concerned with the quantum but only with the legality of the assessment. The side issue whether, in point of fact, the cash credits in the name of the wife represented the income of the husband does not survive for decision. Thus, the only question is whether the notice issued under s. 34 of the Act on February 27, 1950 (after the assessee filed his "voluntary" return on January 5, 1950) and the assessment thereon, were valid in law. Section 24(3) of the Act provides that no assessment except the assessment within cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) thereof or under s. 23 to which cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of s. 28 applies, shall be made after the expiry of four years from the end of the year in which income, profits or gains were first assessable. A proviso, however, allows one year from the date of the service of the notice for the completion of the assessment. It reads, omitting matters not relevant here:—

"...where a notice under sub-section (1) has been issued within the time therein limited, the assessment or reassessment to be made in pursuance of such notice may be made before the expiry of one year from the date of the service of the notice even if such period exceeds the period of...four years..."

It is, therefore, quite clear that the extra period is available only if a notice under sub-s. (1) of s. 34 has been issued within the time therein limited. This takes us to s. 34(1).

Section 34(1), omitting parts not relevant, reads:—

"(1) If...

(a) the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that by reason of the omission or failure on the part of an assessee to make a return of his income under section 22, for any year..., or

(b) notwithstanding that there has been no omission or failure as mentioned in clause (a) on the part of the assessee, the Income-tax Officer has in consequence of information in his possession reason to believe that income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax have escaped assessment for any year,...

he may in cases falling under clause (a) at any time within eight years and in cases falling under clause (b) at any time within four years of the end of that year, serve on the assessee, ...a notice...and may proceed to assess such income..."

It would appear from this that if the return filed on January 5, 1950, was a return of income, there was no failure or omission on the part of the assessee, so as to bring the matter within s. 34(1)(a) of the Act, and sub-s. (3) of s. 34 would then apply to the case limiting the period to four years. In that event, the assessment should have been completed on or before March 31, 1950. But if the return made by the assessee was no return to all, then the conditions under the first sub-section of s. 34 obtained, and the assessment could be completed within one year of the date of service of the notice (March 3, 1950) i.e. on or before March 2, 1951. In that event, the assessment would be valid.

The validity of the return in this context is tied to the validity of the notice and also vice versa.

Section 22 of the Act (omitting the parts not relevant) may now be quoted:

"(1) The Income-tax Officer shall, on or before the 1st day of May in each year, give notice, by publication in the press..., requiring every person whose total income during the previous year exceeded the maximum amount which is not chargeable to income-tax to furnish, within such period not being less than sixty days...a return, ...setting forth...his total income and total world income during that year:...

(2) In the case of any person whose total income is, in the Income-tax Officer's opinion, of such an amount as to render such person liable to income-tax, the Income-tax Officer may serve a notice upon him requiring him to furnish, within such period, not being less than thirty days...a return...setting forth...his total income and total world income during the previous year....

(3) If any person has not furnished a return within the time allowed by or under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), or having furnished a return under either of those sub-sections, discovers any omission or wrong statement therein, he may furnish a return or a revised return, as the case may be, at any time before the assessment is made."

It will be seen from this, that, as the Bombay High Court correctly pointed out, there is a time limit provided in sub-ss. (1) and (2) and the failure or omission occurs when that period passes, but sub-s. (3) allows a locus poenitentiae before the assessment is actually made. There is no dispute that a return could be filed in this case, late though it was. The controversy centres round the fact that the return, when it was filed, disclosed an income which was below the maximum not chargeable to tax, and the question is whether in such an event the Income-tax Officer was precluded from issuing a notice under s. 34 of the Act. There has been in the past a well-marked difference of opinion between the Bombay and the Calcutta High Courts, the leading cases in Bombay being *Harakchand Makanji & Co. v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*¹, *All India Groundnut Syndicate v. Comr. I.T.*² and the decision under appeal here, while the Calcutta view is to be found in Commr. of Agri. Inc.-tax v. Sultan Ali,³ *R. K. Das & Co. v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*⁴ and *Commr. of Inc.-tax v. Govindalal Dutta*⁵. To these may be added P. S. Rama Iyer v. Commr. of Inc.-tax,⁶ in which the Madras High Court has accepted the Bombay view.

No useful purpose will be served in discussing these cases in detail. In some of them, the point need not have been taken up for decision, though it was. We shall refer very briefly to the two rival views and the grounds on which they are rested, and in doing so, we begin with the Calcutta decisions. In Sultan Ali Gharami's case, a notice under s. 24(1) of the Bengal Agricultural Income-tax Act (corresponding to s. 22(1) of the Act) was issued. No return was filed. Three years later, a notice under s. 24(2) of that Act (corresponding to s. 22(2) of the Act) was served, and a return showing an income below the taxable minimum was filed. The contention was that without a notice under s. 24(2) within the assessment year or a notice under s. 38(1) (corresponding to s. 34(1) of the Act) the 'best judgment' assessment was bad. The contention further was that the return could be taken to be under s. 24(1) or s. 24(3). Chakravarti J. (as he then was) and Das Gupta J. held that a person who had no assessable income was not placed under a duty to file a return, that the return whether filed under s. 24(1) or s. 24(3) which had failed to show an assessable income could not possibly be 'treated' as a return under s. 24(1) or even s. 24(3) when filed in answer to a notice under s. 24(2). They further observed (p. 442):

"A return under section 24(1) is a return filed by a person who decides for himself that he had an assessable income in the previous year and by filing the return he offers that income for assessment. A person who had no assessable income in the previous year is placed under no duty by a notice under section 24(1) to furnish a return and a person who thinks, rightly or wrongly, that he had no assessable income will furnish none. A return under section 24(1), whether filed within the time allowed under the section or filed subsequently under the provisions of section 24(3), will therefore show an assessable income... A return, which showed no assessable income, could not possibly be 'treated' as a return filed under section 24(1) or a return called for under that section but filed under section 24(3), when in fact it was filed in response to a notice under section 24(2)."

5 (1957) 33 I.T.R. 630.

6 (1957) 32 I.T.R. 458.

The opinion here expressed was criticised in the judgment under appeal, and in the next case, R. K. Das & Co. v. Commr. of Inc.-tax, the Calcutta High Court (Chakravarti C.J. and Sarkar J.) explained what was really meant. It is not necessary to refer to the facts of that case. This is what Chakravarti C.J. observed at p. 449:

"It should be remembered", I observed, 'that the return in the present case is being sought to be treated as a return under section 24(1), belatedly filed.' And then I went on to say that a return under section 24(1) would only be filed by a person who thought that he had a taxable income and therefore a return showing an income below the taxable limit could not be held, on a construction thereof, to be a return under section 24(1) and consequently the return in the case we were then considering could not be treated as such a return filed under section 24(3). To say that, was not so say that even a return filed in compliance with a notice under section 22(2), if filed belatedly under section 22(3), could not be a return showing an income below the taxable limit."

This left the matter somewhat ambiguous as to what was really meant, and in Commr. of Inc.-tax v. Govindalal Dutta, Chakravarti C.J. and Guha J. again explained the true import of the law laid down. They referred to s. 22(1) of the Act as it stood prior to the amendment of 1953, and observed that under that section a person was required to file a return only if his total income during the preceding year exceeded the maximum amount which was not chargeable to tax. The return contemplated was thus only a return of income and not a return of loss and not even a return of income, but a return of taxable income. Not only had a person no duty but he had even no right to file a return voluntarily, if he had suffered a loss, to 'report' that loss. The learned Judges concluded that it was a complete mistake to think that s. 22(3) provided for the filing of a voluntary return showing loss, at any time, before assessment. That section, they opined, contemplated the filing of a return of taxable income, and a return not showing such income was not a return at all in law.

The Calcutta view, as shown above, really proceeds upon the wording of s. 22(1). It lays down that the public notice requires only persons having an income above the taxable limit to make a return. A person who has no such income need not make a return, and if he does make a return, it is not a return which need be considered, being not a return in law.

It is a little difficult to understand how the existence of return can be ignored, once it has been filed. A return showing income below the taxable limit can be made even in answer to a notice under s. 22(2). The notice under s. 22(1) requires in a general way what a notice under s. 22(2) requires of an individual. If a return of income below the taxable limit is a good return in answer to a notice under s. 22(2), there is no reason to think that a return of a similar kind in answer to a public notice is no return at all. The conclusion does not follow from the words of s. 22(1). No doubt, under that subsection only those persons are required to make a return, whose income is above taxable limits, but a person may legitimately consider himself entitled to certain deductions and allowances, and yet file a return to be on the safe side. He may show his income and the deductions and allowances he claims. But it may be that on a correct processing his income may be found to be above the exempted limit. No doubt, it is futile for a person not liable to tax to rush in with a return, but the return in law is not a mere scrap of paper. It is a return, such as the assessee considers, represents his true income.

We are unable (and we say this with due respect) to accept the view adumbrated in the Calcutta cases. The contrary view is expressed by the Bombay High Court in the earlier case of Harakchand Makanji & Co. v. Commr. of Inc.-tax and in the judgment under appeal. That view was accepted by the Madras High Court in P. S. Rama Iyer v. Commr. of Inc.-tax and also, in our opinion, is the sounder view of the two. In the earlier of the two Bombay cases, Chagla C.J. and Tandolkar J. held (as stated in the headnote):

"Notice under section 34 is only necessary if at the end of the assessment year no return has been made by the assessee, and the authorities wished to proceed under section 22(2), but where the assessee himself chooses voluntarily to make a return, no question can arise under section 34 of assessment escaping, and therefore there is no necessity to serve any notice under section 34."

This represents the law applicable to the facts as they are to be found in this case. In the assessment year no return of income was filed, nor was any notice served under s. 22(2). There was, however, the general notice under s. 22(1). A return in answer to that notice could be filed under s. 22(3) before assessment, and for this there is no limit of time. It was filed on January 5, 1950. There was nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer from taking up the return and proceeding to assess the income of the assessee. It was open to him, if there was sufficient justification for it, to hold that the amount noted in the footnote was really the assessee's income, in which case an assessable income would have been found and the tax could be charged thereon. If the Income-tax Officer had acted on that return and assessed the assessee before March 31, 1950, the assessment would have been valid. He chose to ignore the return, and served on the assessee a notice under s. 34(1). This notice was improper, because with the return already filed, there was neither an omission nor a failure on the part of the assessee, nor was there any question of assessment 'escaping'. The notice under s. 34(1) was, therefore, invalid and the consequent assessment, equally so. We accordingly agree with the judgment under appeal.

Before leaving this case, we may refer to two other arguments, which were raised. Mr. Rajagopala Sastri pointed out that an assessee might file the 'voluntary' return on the last day showing income less than the taxable limit, and the Department would, in that case, be driven to complete the assessment proceedings within a few hours or lose the right to send a notice under s. 34(1). An argument ab inconvenienti is not a decisive argument. The Income-tax Officer could have avoided the result by issuing a notice under s. 23(2) and not remaining inactive until the period was about to expire. Further, all laws of limitation lead to some inconvenience and hard cases. The remedy is for the Legislature to amend the law suitably. The Courts can administer the laws as they find them, and they are seldom required to be astute to defeat the law of limitation. This argument is thus no answer to the clear meaning and implications of the Act.

The other argument was that the return was not a true one, and fell within the mischief of cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of s. 28, and that, therefore, the period during which action could be taken was the extended one of 8 years. The short answer to that is that this was not a part of the Department's case at any prior stage, and cannot be allowed to be raised now.

In our opinion, the answers given by the High Court of Bombay were correct in all the circumstances of this case.

The appeal thus fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE NEW JEHANGIR VAKIL MILLS LTD. v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY NORTH, CUTCH AND SAURASHTRA.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 66(4)—Nature, scope and extent of jurisdiction vested in High Court under s. 66(4)—Whether High Court can raise a new question of law not arising out of Tribunal's order and submit supplementary statement of case—Scope of directions given by High Court under s. 66(4).

Section 66(4) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, does not enable the High Court to raise a new question of law which does not arise out of the Tribunal's order and direct the Tribunal to investigate new or further facts necessary to determine this new question which had not been referred to it under s. 66(1) or s. 66(2) of the Act and direct the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case.

Even though the terms of s. 66(4) are wide enough to comprise "such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf" the scope of such directions has got to be read in the context of and in conjunction with the provisions of ss. 66(1) and 66(2) and under the guise of that direction the High Court cannot refer the case back to the Tribunal to find new facts or embark upon a new line of enquiry which would enable either the assessee or the Commissioner to make out a case which had never been made during the course of the proceedings before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal so far. Such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf are additions of facts to the statement of case or alterations therein which though they were part of the record before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal, were not incorporated in the statement of case drawn up by the Tribunal either because such facts or statements though contained in the record were not found by the Tribunal or were omitted to be incorporated in the statement of case drawn up by it.

BHAGWATI J. This appeal with special leave arises out of a judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay dated September 23, 1955, delivered in Income-tax Reference No. 19 of 1955 made by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal (hereinafter referred to as "the Tribunal") to the High Court under s. 66(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—(hereinafter referred to as "the Act")—whereby the High Court directed the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case on the points mentioned therein.

The appellant is a limited liability company manufacturing textile goods at Bhavnagar which was an Indian State during the assessment years 1943-44 and 1944-45. For the said assessment years the appellant was held to be a non-resident, its years of account being calendar years 1942 and 1943. For the assessment years 1943-44 and 1944-45 (account years 1942 and 1943), the Income-tax Officer computed the British Indian Income of the appellant on a proportionate basis under s. 4(1)(a) of the Act. In the account year 1942 its total sales amounted to Rs. 66,14,852 out of which sale proceeds amounting to Rs. 35,92,157 as detailed below were held by the Income-tax Officer to have been received in British India:—

Cheques on the Imperial Bank issued by the Supply Department of the Government of India	Rs. 2,58,987
Sale proceeds received through Trikamlal Mahasukhrum	Rs. 20,24,190
Other cheques received at Bhavnagar but drawn on Banks in British India	Rs. 13,08,980
	Rs. 35,92,157

The Income-tax Officer computed the income of the appellant at Rs. 27,11,136 on a proportionate basis i.e. proportionate to the sales in and outside British India. He held that the income amounting to Rs. 14,72,267 was received in British India under s. 4(1)(a) of the Act. There was no dispute in regard to the sale proceeds received through Trikamlal Mahasukhrum.

In respect of the assessment year 1944-45 corresponding to the account year 1943 the Income-tax Officer held that sale proceeds amounting to Rs. 16,72,693 received by the appellant by cheques from the Supply Department of the Government of India on British India Banks were taxable under s. 4(1)(a) of the Act. The figure of Rs. 16,72,693, according to the appellant, was a mistake for Rs. 12,97,631.

The appellant had contended that the amounts had been received at Bhavnagar, by cheques drawn on banks in British India. The Revenue had not disputed the fact that the cheques had been actually received at Bhavnagar, but had contended that payments by cheques, though such cheques were received at Bhavnagar, were received in British India at the time and the place where the cheques were ultimately cashed and honoured by the banks on which the cheques were drawn and that until such encashment of the cheques, the monies could not be said to have been received by the appellant.

The appellant preferred appeals to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Ahmedabad Range, against this order of the Income-tax Officer for the said two assessment years. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner by his two separate orders confirmed the orders of the Income-tax Officer and held that the cheques were not legal tender and were not monies or monies worth as such and that the receipt of cheques at Bhavnagar was not receipt of money. The receipt of money, according to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, took place on actual payments by the drawee banks and he, therefore, held that the said amounts were taxable under s. 4(1)(a) of the Act.

A further appeal was taken by the appellant to the Tribunal against the said orders of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Tribunal by its consolidated order for both the years, dated July 17, 1952, held that the cheques for the said amounts of Rs. 2,58,987 and Rs. 13,08,987 in respect of the assessment year 1943-44, were received at Bhavnagar and that the sale proceeds were also received in Bhavnagar. The Tribunal stated inter alia as follows:—

“There is no evidence that the cheques from Government were received in Bhavnagar. It is not the Department's case that the assessee company has a registered office elsewhere. The presumption is that the letters containing the cheques were addressed to the assessee company at Bhavnagar. We therefore hold that the cheques were received from Government at Bhavnagar and that the money was also received in Bhavnagar.”

In doing so, the Tribunal followed the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of *Kirloskar Bros. v. Commr. I.T.*¹ In view of the fact, however, that an appeal had been filed in this Court against that decision of the Bombay High Court the Tribunal further stated:—

"We might point out that in case the Supreme Court does not uphold the Bombay High Court decision in Kirloskar case an enquiry will have to be made as to whether the ~~assessee~~ company's banks at Ahmedabad acted as the ~~assessee~~ company's agents for collecting the money due on the cheques."

In respect of the assessment year 1944-45, the Tribunal, after directing the Income-tax Officer to verify the correctness of the figure of the amounts received by the appellant by cheques from the Government (i.e., whether it was Rs. 12,97,631 as contended for by the appellant or Rs. 16,72,693 as held by the Income-tax Officer or any other figure), held that the cheques representing the said amount were received at Bhavnagar and the monies or sale proceeds were also received in Bhavnagar. The Tribunal also held that another amount of Rs. 5,53,447 in respect of the said latter year, being the aggregate amount of the cheques received at Bhavnagar from other merchants was also received in Bhavnagar.

It may be pointed out that neither did the Income-tax Officer, when the proceedings were before him, or when the proceedings were before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, nor did the Revenue, when the proceedings were before the Tribunal, at any stage contend that the cheques aggregating to the said amounts in the said two years were not received at Bhavnagar because of the alleged posting of the cheques in British India and/or by reason of the allegation that the cheques were sent by post and/or that the post office was the agent of the appellant and that too, in spite of the decision in the case of Kirloskar Bros. which decision had already been pronounced by then and where the said question had been debated and argued by the Revenue. The only ground urged by the Revenue at all material stages was that because the amounts which were received, from the merchants or the Government, were received by cheques drawn on banks in British India which were ultimately encashed in British India, the monies could not be said to have been received in Bhavnagar though the cheques were in fact received at Bhavnagar.

Being aggrieved by the said decision of the Tribunal, the respondent (Commissioner of Income-tax) filed two applications under s. 66(1) of the Act requesting the Tribunal to draw up a statement of the case and refer the question of law arising out of the order of the Tribunal to the High Court.

In the said applications the facts which were admitted and/or found by the Tribunal and which were necessary for drawing up a statement of the case were stated as under:—

"Regarding items of Rs. 2,58,987 and Rs. 12,97,631 received from the Government of India in the accounting years relevant to the assessment for 1943-44 and 1944-45 respectively the amounts were received by cheques drawn on the Imperial Bank of India. No evidence was produced by the ~~assessee~~ at any stage even before the Appellate Tribunal, that the cheques were received at Bhavnagar, nor was any evidence produced to show that these cheques were received as unconditional discharge of debtor's liability. These cheques were collected by the Company's bankers in British India. The Income-tax Officer, therefore, held that the amount was received in British India. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the Income-tax Officer's action. The Tribunal, however, relied upon the Bombay High Court decision in Kirloskar Brothers' case and held that the amount was received in Bhavnagar."

"As regards items of Rs. 13,08,980 and Rs. 5,53,447 received in the accounting years relevant to the assessments for 1943-44 and 1944-45 respectively, the relevant facts are that the company received these cheques and sent them to their bankers in Ahmedabad for collection...The Tribunal held that the sale proceeds were received at Bhavnagar on the basis of the Bombay High Court's decision in the Kirloskar Brothers' case without enquiring as to whether the cheques were received by the company in unconditional discharge of the drawer's liability."

On these facts the respondent submitted that the following questions of law arose out of the order of the Tribunal:—

"(i) Was there any evidence on the record to justify the Tribunal's finding that the mere receipt by the assessee of cheques of Rs. 2,58,987 and Rs. 13,08,980 in Bhavnagar amounted to receipt of the above amounts in Bhavnagar even though the said cheques had actually been cashed in British India and the proceeds thereof were credited to the assessee's accounts with certain Banks in British India?

(ii) Whether in the circumstances of this case, the income, profits and gains in respect of the sales amounting to Rs. 15,67,967 made to the Government of India and other customers were received in British India within the meaning of section 4(1)(a) of the Indian Income-tax Act?"

A similar statement of facts which were admitted and/or found by the Tribunal was also made in regard to the assessment year 1944-45 and similar questions of law were asked to be referred as in the case of the assessment year 1943-44 except in regard to the change in the figures necessitated by the differences in the amounts received.

These reference applications being Reference Applications Nos. 615 and 616 of 1952-53 were kept pending until the decision of this Court in the case of *Commissioner of Income-tax v. Kirlskar Bros. Ltd.*² This Court decided that appeal and the companion appeal *The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay South, Bombay v. Messrs. Ogale Glass Works Ltd., Ogale Wadi*³ on April 17, 1954, and the said Reference Applications were thereafter heard and decided by the Tribunal on November 8, 1954.

It is worthy of note that the decision of this Court in the said two cases proceeded on the basis that on the particular facts of those appeals the Post Office had acted as the agent of the assessee and that though the cheques were in fact received by post by the assessee outside British India, nevertheless, by reason of the fact that the assessee in the said two appeals had expressly requested the Government to remit the amounts by cheques, the assessee had constituted the Post Office their agent to receive, on their respective behalves, the said cheques which were posted by the Government at Delhi having addressed them to the assessee outside British India.

In spite of the said decisions, the Revenue did not urge before the Tribunal that the said aspect of the matter should in the present case also be referred to the High Court for its decision and the Reference applications were heard on the materials which were on the record before the Tribunal when it made its orders dated July 17, 1952. The said order of the Tribunal was based on the facts admitted and/or found by the Tribunal as stated in the Reference Applications made by the Revenue as aforesaid and this aspect of the case viz., whether any portion of these cheques were received by post and if so whether there was any request by the appellant express or implied that the amounts of those cheques should be remitted to Bhavnagar by post, had certainly not been canvassed before any of the income-tax authorities or before the Tribunal and did not find its place in the order of the Tribunal and any question of law appertaining thereto could not be said to arise out of the said order of the Tribunal.

On the materials as they stood on the record then, the Tribunal drew up on November 5, 1952, a statement of case in which all the facts and events above referred to were set out. Besides the same the Tribunal also referred in para. 8 thereof to two letters on the record which showed that the cheques from the Supply Department were received by post. It also annexed a sample agreement form on record between the appellant and its customers other than the Government and annexed thereto the copies of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner's orders for the assessment years 1943-44 and 1944-45. The two letters showing that the cheques from the Supply Department were received by post were evidently put in with a view to show that the order of the Tribunal dated July 17, 1952, was correct in making the presumption that the letters containing the cheques were addressed to the appellant at Bhavnagar and in holding that the cheques were received from the Government at Bhavnagar. There was no other reason, so far as the record then stood, to make any reference to the said two letters. Out of the facts stated above the Tribunal raised the following question of law:—

“Whether the receipt of the cheques in Bhavnagar amounted to receipt of sale proceeds in Bhavnagar?”

The said Reference was heard by the High Court on September 23, 1955, and judgment was delivered the same day whereby the High Court held that it was not possible to answer the question in the absence of materials as to whether the cheques which were received in Bhavnagar were posted by the Government at the request of the appellant and the High Court observed:—

“The question that has been submitted to us by the Tribunal is whether the receipt of the cheques in Bhavnagar amounted to receipt of sale proceeds in Bhavnagar. This question over-looks the important aspect which was dealt with both by us in Kirloskar's case and also by the Supreme Court. Assuming that the cheques were received in Bhavnagar, the question still remains as to whether if the cheques were received by post, the post office was constituted the agent of the assessee or not. The mere receipt of cheques by post in Bhavnagar is not conclusive of the question raised by the Tribunal. Unless we are in a position to say whether the cheques were sent to Bhavnagar by post without there being a request express or implied by the assessee the mere receipt of the cheques in Bhavnagar would not constitute receipt of sale proceeds in Bhavnagar. When we look at the statement of the case there is no reference at all to this aspect of the case.”

The High Court further observed that the burden would be upon the Revenue to establish that the cheques which were received by post were so received at the request express or implied of the appellant and that therefore the Post Office was the agent of the appellant. But it observed in this context:—

“But we cannot shut out the necessary inquiry which even from our own point of view is necessary to be made in order that we should satisfactorily answer the question raised in the Reference. It must not be forgotten that under sec. 86(4) of the Income-tax Act we have a right independently of the conduct of the parties to direct the Tribunal to state further facts so that we may properly exercise our advisory jurisdiction.”

In the result, the High Court directed that a supplementary statement of case should be submitted by the Tribunal on the following points:—

“On the finding of the Tribunal that all the cheques were received in Bhavnagar, the Tribunal to find what portion of these cheques were received by post, whether there was any request by the assessee, express or implied, that the amounts which are the subject matter of these cheques should be remitted to Bhavnagar by post. Mr. Joshi concedes that to the extent that the cheques were not received by post but by hand, the receipt will be for the purpose of tax in Bhavnagar.”

The appellant filed a petition in the High Court on November 22, 1955, for the grant of a certificate under s. 66A(2) of the Act to appeal to this Court from the said judgment and order of the High Court. This application was dismissed by the High Court by its order dated December 8, 1955, with the result that the appellant presented on December 22, 1955, a petition in this Court for special leave to appeal from the said judgment of the High Court dated September 23, 1955. This Court by its order dated March 12, 1956, granted special leave to appeal, such leave being limited to the question whether the High Court had jurisdiction under s. 66(4) of the Act to call for a supplemental statement of case. This is how the appeal has come up for hearing and final disposal before us.

We have narrated the facts and events leading up to this appeal in such detail in order that we may have the proper perspective and the background against which the High Court directed the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case on the points mentioned therein. The appeal raises an important question as to the nature, scope and extent of the jurisdiction vested in the High Court under s. 66(4) of the Act and we shall now address ourselves to that question.

The relevant provision of s. 66 of the Act may now be referred to:—

"66. (1) Within sixty days of the date upon which he is served with notice of an order under sub-section (4) of section 33 the assessee or the Commissioner may, by application in the prescribed form, accompanied where application is made by the assessee by a fee of one hundred rupees, require the Appellate Tribunal to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of such order, and the Appellate Tribunal shall within ninety days of the receipt of such application draw up a statement of the case and refer it to the High Court:

Provided that, if, in the exercise of its powers under sub-section (2), the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state a case which it has been required by the assessee to state, the assessee may, within thirty days from the date on which he receives notice of the refusal to state the case, withdraw his application and, if he does so, the fee paid shall be refunded.

(2) If on any application being made under sub-s. (1) the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises, the assessee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, within six months from the date on which he is served with notice of the refusal, apply to the High Court, and the High Court may, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the decision of the Appellate Tribunal, require the Appellate Tribunal to state the case and to refer it, and on receipt of any such requisition the Appellate Tribunal shall state the case and refer it accordingly...

(4) If the High Court is not satisfied that the statements in a case referred under this section are sufficient to enable it to determine the question raised thereby, the Court may refer the case back to the Appellate Tribunal to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf."

It is clear on a plain reading of the terms of s. 66(1) that the only question of law which the assessee or the Commissioner can require the Tribunal to refer to the High Court is "any question of law arising out of the order of the Tribunal" so that if the question of law which the assessee or the Commissioner requires the Tribunal to so refer to the High Court does not arise out of its order the Tribunal is not bound to refer the same. What has, therefore, to be looked at in the first instance is whether the question of law thus required to be referred arises out of the order of the Tribunal. The Tribunal no doubt has got before it the facts which are admitted and/or found by the Tribunal and which are necessary for drawing up a statement of the case and it is the facts admitted and/or found by it that would form the basis on which the statement of case would be drawn and references of the question of law made by the Tribunal to the High Court. If such facts were not there whether in the order of the Tribunal or in the record before it there would certainly not be any foundation for the raising of any question of law either in the abstract or otherwise and it is only a question of law which would arise out of such facts which are admitted and/or found by the Tribunal that would be the substratum of the reference to the High Court. The facts admitted and/or found by the Tribunal would really be the foundation or the basis on which such questions of law could be raised and neither party would be entitled to require the Tribunal to refer to the High Court any question of law which could not thus arise out of the order of the Tribunal. Section 66(2), which gives the power to the High Court to require the Tribunal to state the case and refer the question of law to it, also proceeds on the same basis, and even where the High Court exercises the power under s. 66(2) it can only require the Tribunal to state the case on any question of law arising out of such order. The scope and subject-matter of the reference under s. 66(2) therefore is co-extensive with that of the reference under s. 66(1) of the Act and the High Court has no power or jurisdiction under s. 66(2) to travel beyond the ambit of s. 66(1). Section 66(2) comes into play only when the Tribunal refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises and if the High Court is not satisfied of the correctness of the decision of the Tribunal, it has got the power and jurisdiction to require the Tribunal to state the case and refer the same to it.

On the conditions of s. 66(1) and s. 66(2) being thus complied with the statement of case has to be drawn up by the Tribunal and the question of law arising out of its order referred to the High Court for its opinion. This statement of case which is based, as stated above, on the facts which are admitted and/or found by the Tribunal may not contain sufficient material to enable the High Court to determine the question raised thereby and in that case the High Court under s. 66(4) is vested with the jurisdiction to refer the case back to the Tribunal to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf only for the purpose of determining the question referred to it. If the question actually referred does not bring out clearly the real issue between the parties, the High Court may reframe the question so that the matter actually agitated before the Tribunal may be raised before the High Court. But s. 66(4) does not enable the High Court to raise a new question of law which does not arise out of the Tribunal's order and direct the Tribunal to investigate new or further facts necessary to determine this new question which had not been referred to it under s. 66(1) or s. 66(2) and direct the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case. This power and jurisdiction which is vested in the High Court is to be exercised within the four corners of s. 66. If under s. 66(1) and s. 66(2) the statement of case has to be drawn up on the basis of the facts which are admitted and/or found by the Tribunal and this is the requirement also of para. 3 of the prescribed form—the scope of such statement of case cannot, in our opinion, be in any manner enlarged by the power which is given to the High Court under s. 66(4) to make such additions thereto or alterations therein in the statement of case as the Court may direct in that behalf. The jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 66 is a consultative or advisory jurisdiction. In order to satisfactorily discharge that advisory jurisdiction the High Court must have before it all the facts which are admitted and/or found by the Tribunal properly set out in the statement in the case. It is only in those cases where the statement of case referred to the High Court under s. 66(1) and s. 66(2) are not sufficient to enable the High Court to determine the question raised thereby that the High Court is empowered to refer the case back to the Tribunal, so that the Tribunal within the four corners of s. 66(1) and s. 66(2) may make such additions to those statements or alterations therein as may be directed by the Court. Even though the terms of s. 66(4) are wide enough to comprise "such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf" the scope of such directions has got to be read in the context of and in conjunction with the provisions of s. 66(1) and s. 66(2) and under the guise of that direction the High Court cannot refer the case back to the Tribunal to find new facts or embark upon a new line of enquiry which would enable either the assessee or the Commissioner to make out a case which had never been made during the course of the proceedings before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal so far. Such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf are additions of facts to the statement of case or alterations therein which though they were part of the record before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal were not incorporated in the statement of case drawn up by the Tribunal either because such facts or statements though contained in the record were not found by the Tribunal or were omitted to be incorporated in the statement of case drawn up by it.

That this is the scope, nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 66(4) of the Act is amply borne out by the authorities. In *Craddock (H. M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Zeno Finance Co., Ltd.*⁴ Lord Greene, M. R., observed at p. 277:

"The Crown, therefore, failed before the Commissioners to establish the only measure of value for which it was contending. It was, however, suggested that this difficulty could be avoided by sending the matter back to the Commissioners, so as to give the Crown an opportunity of setting up a different measure of value supported by different evidence. Even assuming that this was the only difficulty in the way of the Crown's argument, it would not, in my opinion, have been proper to take this course. The Crown failed in its contention on a matter of fact and it must abide by the result: it would be contrary to all principle to give it another chance to establish by fresh and different evidence a quite different contention which, if it was desired to rely upon it, ought to have been advanced in the first instance. Our task is to deal with the case on the basis of the facts as found by the Commissioners upon the submissions made to them, and on this basis the value of the investments has not been established."

In Commr. of Inc.-tax v. State Bank of India,⁵ Chakravarti C.J., who delivered the judgment of the High Court at Calcutta, said at p. 551:—

"We intimated to Mr. Meyer as soon as he formulated his points that he could not be allowed to take the first of them, since it did not appear to have been taken on behalf of the Department at any stage of the proceedings and certainly not before the Tribunal. It could not therefore, be said to arise out of the Tribunal's order. The practice followed in this Court in references under section 68(1) of the Act has always been to limit the party, at whose instance a reference has been made, to the points raised and canvassed before the Tribunal. Questions are often framed in a general form, such as whether the assessment for a particular year made in a certain manner was valid in view of the provisions of a certain section of the Act. A question framed in that form might be said to comprise all possible contentions to which the terms of the relevant section might give rise, but this Court has always refused to treat matters arising out of questions so framed as entirely at large. It has adopted and acted on that view for reason that this Court is only an advisory body and the advice which it can be properly asked to give is only advice on matters which had been in contention before the Tribunal and which had been decided in one way or another such advice being sought in order that the parties interested might know whether the decision on those contentions had been in accordance with law. In hearing a reference under section 68(1), this Court does not sit in appeal from the assessment and it is not called upon to give its advice on matters which the Tribunal was not asked to decide and which the Tribunal neither decided, nor included in the statement of case for the opinion of this Court."

The Bombay High Court also expressed the same opinion in the case of Indl. Development Etc. Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of E.P.T.,⁶ Chagla C.J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, pointed out to the Tribunal what the correct procedure was with regard to the submission of a statement of the case and observed (p. 695):—

"It is true that very often the Tribunal may not refer to all the evidence and all the facts in its appellate order. We quite appreciate the difficulty of the Tribunal as it has to deal with a large number of cases, and it may be that in many cases the decision may seem obvious to the Tribunal and it might dispose of an appeal by a very short order. If a statement of the case is subsequently called for, naturally the Tribunal would want to elaborate its decision by pointing out various materials and pieces of evidence to which it had not referred in the appellate order. But all that can be referred to in the Statement of the case are materials and evidence which were before the Tribunal when it heard the appeal. A statement of the case is not intended for the purpose of buttressing up the order of the Appellate Tribunal or further fortifying it by requisitioning to its aid materials and evidence which were not before the Tribunal but which it discovers by investigation after the order was passed in appeal."

Much more so would be the case where no such material and evidence were at all in existence when the High Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under s. 66(4) of the Act referred the case back to the Tribunal and asked it to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in order to enable it to determine the question raised thereby. Adopting such a procedure would involve, in effect, raising fresh issues and taking fresh evidence in order that fresh facts may be found which facts certainly were not there at the time when the matter was heard before the Income-tax authorities or before the Tribunal in the first instance.

Two more decisions may be referred to in this context. One is a decision of the Bombay High Court in *Vadilal Ichhachand v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*⁷ where Tendolkar J. dealt with an argument advanced by counsel that the Court should send the matter back to the Tribunal for determining the quantum of penalty, and observed:—

“...Then Mr. Palkhivala says that we should, therefore, send this matter back to the Tribunal for determining that question. We do not find any power in this Court under the provisions of section 66 of the Income-tax Act to remand a matter back to the Tribunal for determining what might have been left undetermined by them, because they took a particular view of the law. We have merely the jurisdiction to answer the question of law referred to us, and we are not concerned with any questions which are pure questions of fact or its determination by the Tribunal.”

The other is the decision of this Court in Commissioner of Inc.-tax v. Bhuranga Coal Co.,⁸ where Venkatarama Aiyar J. dealt with a similar argument which was addressed before this Court at p. 805:—

“The matter then came before the High Court of Patna on a reference under section 66(1) of the Income-tax Act, at the instance of the appellant. There the contention was raised that the differentiation between movables and immovables on which the judgment of the Tribunal rested had not been made at any time in the prior stages of the proceedings and that was a matter on which further evidence would have to be taken to ascertain the intention of the parties and that, therefore, the matter should be remanded for further enquiry to the Appellate Tribunal. The learned Judges refused to accede to this contention for the reason that no such application was made before the Tribunal and that it was a point which ought not to be allowed to be taken for the first time in the High Court. On behalf of the appellant, it is stated that the question as to what are immovables and what are movables, arises only on the judgment of the Tribunal and that, therefore, an opportunity ought to be given for an investigation of this aspect of the question. We are not impressed by this argument. Surely, before the Tribunal there must have been a discussion as to the position with reference to the movables as distinct from the immovables, under the transaction and if the appellant considered that in view of that distinction, further enquiry was called for, it was incumbent upon it to apply to the Tribunal itself to order it and not having done so, it had no right to call upon the High Court to remand the matter for that purpose. In our opinion the High Court was justified in declining to entertain this point.”

If there is no power in the High Court to remand the case to the Tribunal for fresh findings of facts on further enquiry in the manner stated above, much less would the High Court have the power while exercising its jurisdiction under s. 66(4) of the Act to refer the case back to the Tribunal to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct as would require the Tribunal to embark upon a fresh line of enquiry which had never been canvassed at any time before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal in the first instance and record fresh findings on evidence adduced by the parties in that behalf.

Our attention was drawn on behalf of the Revenue to the observations of Fazl Ali J. (as he then was) in *Commr. of Inc.-tax, B. & O. v. Visweshwar Singh*⁹ where the learned Judge dealt with the procedure adopted by the Commissioner of Income-tax in sending up the reference in question. The High Court sent the matter back to the Commissioner in order that he may re-state the statement of case. When the matter went back to the Commissioner he sent up a re-statement of the case, but unfortunately without hearing the assessee. The High Court sent the re-stated case back to the Commissioner once again in order that the case might be re-stated with such further finding of fact as the Commissioner may consider necessary after hearing the assessee.

⁹ [1959] 7 I.T.R. 536, 554.

The matter then went back to another Commissioner, who instead of re-stating the case, as he was ordered by the High Court to do, sent up a letter to the High Court stating that he had not heard the party in regard to the opinion of the Commissioner, and that in any event he should not consider that he had power within s. 66(4) to vary an opinion given under s. 66(2) if no new facts were admitted. The learned Judge pointed out that the Commissioner was in duty bound to carry out the order of the High Court and he should have reheard the parties, admitted such further evidence as he considered relevant on the point at issue and re-stated the case with his opinion thereon. It is not clear, however, from the record as to whether the re-hearing of the parties and the recording of such further finding as was considered relevant on the point at issue embraced a fresh line of enquiry which had not been entertained at any earlier stage of the proceedings or was merely by way of elucidation of the very same points at issue which had been canvassed earlier but had not been thrashed out completely and properly reflected in the finding of the Tribunal. These observations, in our opinion, do not make any difference to the position that we have adopted herein, viz., it is not open to the High Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under s. 66(4) of the Act to raise a new question and to require the Tribunal to entertain a fresh line of enquiry, hear the parties in regard to the same and record fresh finding of fact which would enable either the assessee or the Commissioner to advance a case which had never been made by it before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal and which, therefore, could not be said to arise out of the order of the Tribunal.

The decision of the Privy Council in *Sunder Singh Majithia v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*¹⁰ was also referred to by the Revenue in this context. In that case the question of law which was formulated was in the following terms (p. 461):

"In all the circumstances of the case, having regard to the personal law governing the assessee and the requirements of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and the Stamp Act (II of 1899) has the deed of partnership dated February 12, 1933, brought into existence a genuine firm entitled to registration under the provisions of section 28-A of the Act?"

The High Court while answering this question did not advert to the relevant aspect of the question and this result was brought about because the Commissioner had taken pains to state some matters very fully, but he had not found the material facts as he should have done. The various essential facts were not found and stated by the Commissioner and the Privy Council observed that the referred question could not be answered until the High Court had exercised its powers under sub-s. (4) of s. 66 of the Act and left it to the discretion of the High Court to specify the particular additions and alterations which the Commissioner should be directed to make. Here also the nature, scope and extent of the jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 66(4) of the Act was not specifically discussed and the only order which was passed was that the case be remanded to the High Court for disposal after taking such action under sub-s. (4) of s. 66 of the Act as the High Court might think fit in the light of the judgment.

The same observations which we have made earlier while discussing the case of Commissioner of Income-tax v. Visweshwar Singh (supra) would apply to this case also and the observations of the Privy Council really do not militate against the position as we have laid down above.

On the facts of the present case before us it is abundantly clear that the only question which was canvassed before the Income-tax authorities and the Tribunal before it made its order dated July 17, 1952, was whether the cheques which were received at Bhavnagar having been cashed in British India, the monies in respect of the same should be said to have been received in British India and the Tribunal had held following the case of Kirloskar Brothers' case that the cheques were received from the Government at Bhavnagar and the receipt of money in respect of these cheques from banks in British India related back to the receipt of the cheque at Bhavnagar and, therefore, was also received in Bhavnagar.

At no time was the question as regards the posting of the cheques in British India (Delhi) at the request, express or implied, of the appellant and the consequent receipt of the sale proceeds in British India ever mooted before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal before the Tribunal made its order on July 17, 1952, or even in the reference applications filed on September 15, 1952, nor was the said question mooted before the Tribunal when it heard the reference and drew up the statement of case on November 5, 1954, even though this Court had pronounced its decision in Kirloskar Brothers' case (supra) and the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay South v. Messrs. Ogale Glass Works Ltd. (supra) on April 19, 1954. The facts admitted and/or found by the Tribunal as stated in the said applications for reference took count of the position as it had been adopted by the Revenue in all these proceedings and it could not by any stretch of imagination be urged that the question now sought to be mooted was ever in the minds of the Revenue. The question of law which was referred by the Tribunal to the High Court for its decision was:—

and it was only based on the facts admitted and/or found by the Tribunal which had relevance only to that question and not to the question which was sought to be mooted by the High Court in its judgment under appeal. If the latter question was allowed to be entertained the question would have to be recast as under:—

“Whether the posting of the cheques in British India at the request, express or implied of the appellant, amounted to receipt of sale proceeds in British India.”

—a question quite distinct and separate from the question of law which was actually referred by the Tribunal to the High Court in the statement of case drawn on November 5, 1954.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the High Court was in error in not deciding the reference before it and answering the question on the facts disclosed in the statement of case. We are also of opinion that in the circumstances of this case the High Court had no jurisdiction under s. 66(4) to direct the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case on the points mentioned in its judgment.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal will be allowed and the matter remanded to the High Court to arrive at its decision on the question of law referred to it in the statement of case already submitted to it by the Tribunal. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before the Hon'ble Mr. H. K. Chatnani, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice V. S. Desai.

BAI JIVIBEN v. BOMBAY REVENUE TRIBUNAL.*

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (Bom. LXVII of 1948), Secs. 31, 2(6), 8, 37
—Whether widow can terminate tenancy of her tenant—Words “cultivating personally” in s. 31(1)(a) whether include cultivation through tenant.

Under s. 31 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, a widow can terminate the tenancy of her land and can apply for possession of the land under s. 29 of the Act.

The words “cultivating personally” occurring in s. 31(1)(a) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, do not in the case of a widow include cultivation through a tenant.

Y. V. Chandrachud, Government Pleader, for respondent No. 2 (1 & 2).

CHAINANI C.J. The point involved in both these applications is whether a widow can terminate the tenancy of her land under s. 31 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act. The Bombay Revenue Tribunal has taken the view that a widow has no such right and that the right to maintain such an application is available only to the successor-in-title of the widow under sub-s. (3) of s. 31. This view is in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench of the Revenue Tribunal in Parvati Bhaui Patil v. Nagu Ragho Patil, decided on October 22, 1958.

The question to be determined, therefore, is whether this view is correct. Sub-section (1) of s. 31 provides that a landlord may, after giving notice and making an application for possession as provided in sub-s. (2), terminate the tenancy of any land, if the landlord bona fide requires the land for cultivating personally, or for any non-agricultural purpose. Sub-section (3) of s. 31 provides inter alia that where a landlord is a minor, or a widow, or a person subject to mental or physical disability or a serving member of the armed forces, then such notice may be given and an application for possession under s. 29 may be made,

(i) by the minor within one year from the date on which he attains majority,

(ii) by the successor-in-title of a widow within one year from the date on which her interest in the land ceases to exist,

(iii) within one year from the date on which mental or physical disability ceases to exist; and

(iv) within one year from the date on which a serving member of the armed forces ceases to be a serving member.

There is a proviso to this sub-section with which we are not concerned. Sub-section (1), therefore, gives a right to every landlord to terminate the tenancy of his land, if he requires it bona fide for personal cultivation. There is nothing in this sub-section, which states that this right shall not be available to a widow or that it cannot be exercised by her in the manner provided. Clause (ii) in sub-s. (3), no doubt, gives a similar right to the successor-in-title of a widow, but it does not in any way restrict the right, which the widow herself possesses, of terminating the tenancy under sub-s. (1) of s. 31. The object of this clause is to protect the rights of the successor-in-title of the widow and to ensure that he does not suffer owing to negligence or inaction on the part of the widow. But there are no words either in this clause or in any other part of the section, which deprive a widow of the right conferred upon every landlord under sub-s. (1). It could never have been the intention of the Legislature that even though a widow may require additional income from her land for her maintenance, she should not be able to obtain possession of the land during her lifetime and that this right should only be available to her successor-in-title.

The full bench of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal has given two reasons for the view taken by it. The first is based on the special meaning given to the expression "cultivate personally", when the landlord is a widow. Clause (6) in s. 2 of the Act defines the expression "to cultivate personally" as meaning "to cultivate land on one's own account—

(i) by one's own labour, or

(ii) by the labour of any member of one's family, or

(iii) under the personal supervision of oneself or any member of one's family by hired labour or by servants on wages payable in cash or kind but not in crop share,..."

Explanation I to this section states that a widow or a minor or a person, who is subject to physical or mental disability, or a serving member of the armed forces, shall be deemed to cultivate the land personally, if such land is cultivated by servants, or by hired labour, or through tenants. This provision creates a legal fiction, under which cultivation through a tenant is to be deemed to be personal cultivation. Consequently, if a land belonging to a widow is leased to and cultivated by a tenant, it is to be regarded as being cultivated by her personally. It has, therefore, been urged that as in law a land leased to a tenant is to be deemed to be cultivated by the widow personally, she cannot terminate the tenancy under s. 31 on the ground that she requires the land for personal cultivation. Sub-section (1) of s. 31, which gives a landlord a right to terminate the tenancy on the ground that he wants the land for personal cultivation, no doubt contemplates that the land must not previously be in the personal cultivation of the landlord. But under cl. (6) of s. 2, read with the Explanation, "personal cultivation" in the case of a widow includes five different modes of cultivation. She may let it out to a tenant or she may cultivate it by her own labour, or by the labour of any member of her family, or she may engage servants, or she may hire labour in order to cultivate it. If she desires to terminate the tenancy on the ground that she wants to lease the land to another tenant, she will not be able to do so, because she will then be cultivating the land by the same mode by which it was being cultivated previously. The entire scheme of the Act is to provide security of tenure for a tenant and to prevent a landlord from substituting one tenant by another. The object of the Act would, therefore, be defeated, if a widow is allowed to replace one tenant by another. But there is no reason why a widow should not be able to terminate the tenancy on the ground that she wants to cultivate the land by her own labour or the labour of a member of her family or through servants or by hired labour. Section 8 of the Act provides that the rent payable by a tenant shall not exceed five times the assessment payable in respect of the land or twenty rupees per acre, whichever is less. The maximum rent, which a widow can, therefore, get from her land by letting it out to a tenant is, therefore, limited by the Act. It cannot exceed five times the assessment or rupees twenty per acre. On the other hand, it is not in dispute that she will realise very much more income, if she works on the land herself or gets it cultivated through servants or by hired labour.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting sub-s. (3) of s. 31 was not to deprive widows, minors or other persons subject to disabilities of any rights, which they possess in common with other landlords, but to confer certain additional rights on them. On the view taken by the Revenue Tribunal, a widow can never obtain possession of a land from a tenant, even though she requires additional income from it for her maintenance. We are certain that the Legislature could not have intended to cause such hardship, particularly in these days, when the general tendency is to enlarge and not restrict the rights of widows and other persons subject to disabilities.

In our opinion, therefore, in the case of a widow, the words "cultivating personally" in cl. (a) in sub-s. (1) of s. 31 mean cultivation through her own labour or the labour of any member of her family or through servants or by hired labour. It has been contended that this interpretation will not be in accordance with the rule that a word or expression must be given the same meaning in every part of the statute. This, however, is not a universal rule. (See Shamrao V. Parulekar v. The District Magistrate, Thana,¹ and *Shamrao Vishnu Parulekar v. The District Magistrate, Thana*²). As observed in Craies' Statute Law, 5th edn., p. 159,

"The presumption that the same words are used in the same meaning is however very slight, and it is proper if sufficient reason can be assigned, to construe a word in one part of an Act in a different sense from that which it bears in another part of an Act."

Similar remarks appear in Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, Tenth Edition (p. 322):

"But the presumption is not of much weight. The same word may be used in different senses in the same statute and even in the same section."

Section 2 also states that the words defined in this section shall have the special meanings given in the section, unless there is "anything repugnant in the subject or context." Having regard to the context, in which the words "cultivating personally" occur in cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 31, they will not in the case of a widow include cultivation through a tenant.

The other ground given by the Tribunal has reference to s. 37 of the Act. Sub-section (1) of this section states that if after the landlord takes possession of the land after the termination of the tenancy under s. 31, he fails to use it for any of the purposes specified in the notice given under s. 31 within one year from the date on which he took possession or ceases to use it at any time for any of the aforesaid purposes within twelve years from the date on which he took such possession, the landlord shall forthwith restore possession of the land to the tenant whose tenancy he had terminated. The difficulty felt by the Tribunal was that if a widow obtains possession of a land from her tenant on the ground that she requires it for personal cultivation and subsequently leases it to another tenant, the first tenant would not be able to avail himself of the right conferred by s. 37, as he cannot contend that the widow is not cultivating the land personally. The position then would be that a widow would be able to replace one tenant by another. This difficulty will also not arise in the view which we take that a widow cannot obtain possession under s. 31 on the ground that she wants to lease the land to another tenant. It is also not likely that a Tenancy Court will hold her requirement to be bona fide when she only wants to substitute one tenant for another. Her income is not likely to be augmented in this manner, for the maximum rent which she can realise is five times the assessment or rupees twenty per acre, whichever is less. If, however, after obtaining possession of the land from her tenant on the ground that she wants to cultivate it, not through a tenant, but in some other way, she leases it to another tenant, it would perhaps be possible to say that she has not used it for the purpose for which she had taken possession of the land. In that case, the former tenant would be entitled to obtain back possession of the land under s. 37.

I may add that the view, which we are taking, is in accordance with the view, which Mr. Justice S. T. Desai and myself had taken in Padmakar Ramchandra Pethakar v. Murlidhar Hari Jadhav.³ That was a case of a minor landlord, but the principle of that decision will also apply in the present case, because the explanation to the definition contained in cl. (6) of s. 2 and sub-s. (3) of s. 31 apply not only to minors but also to widows.

We are accordingly of the opinion that the view taken by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal is wrong. In our opinion, the widow-petitioners in the two cases were competent to terminate the tenancies of their tenants under s. 31 and to make applications to the Mamlatdar under s. 29 for obtaining possession of their lands.

The orders passed by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal in the two cases will be set aside and the matters will be remanded to the Revenue Tribunal for disposal in accordance with law. No order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

This appeal has been filed by the State against the order of the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Kolhapur, by which the respondent-accused was acquitted of an offence consisting of the alleged contravention of certain provisions of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, and the Rules and Bye-laws made thereunder. The accused was the working partner of a firm which did business at Kolhapur. The city of Kolhapur is included in a “Market” under the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, and transactions of the sale and purchase of agricultural produce in the market are governed by the provisions of that Act. licence which enabled it to function as a trader as well as a commission agent in the market. On February 23, 1955, the accused, as a partner in his firm, sold 491 lumps of jaggery to the Sabarkantha District Co-operative Purchase and Sale Union, Himatnagar. He sent a bill for the dues of that transaction, which included certain items in addition to the price of the lumps of jaggery, and the items which are claimed by the prosecution to have been unauthorised were: (1) Rs. 3-1-6 as "Sadharan"; (2) Rs. 6-3-0 as "Vatav"; (3) Rs. 7-10-9 as "Panjarpol"; and (4) Rs. 12-1-0 as "Marfat". The prosecution case was that the accused, by including the above items in the bill, contravened three provisions: firstly, s. 17 of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, a contravention of which is made punishable by s. 21; secondly, r. 74 of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Rules, 1941, a contravention of which is made punishable under r. 77; and thirdly, r. 12 of Bye-law 35A of the Bye-laws made by the Kolhapur Market Committee, a contravention of which is made punishable under Bye-law 68.

In his defence, the accused admitted having included the aforesaid charges in the bill, but he claimed that he had not committed any offence by doing so. He contended that these charges were his trade expenses and were not "trade allowances" within the meaning of that phrase in s. 17 of the Act. His further defence was that the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, and the Rules and Bye-laws made thereunder, apply only to transactions in which an agriculturist producer sells his produce to a purchaser or commission agent, and that subsequent transactions of the sale and purchase of that produce are not covered by the Act and by the Rules and Bye-laws made thereunder.

In the Court below, the charge in respect of the item of Rs. 6-3-0 claimed as "Vatav" was not pressed. Regarding the remaining three items, the learned Magistrate held that they were in the nature of trade expenses and not trade allowances. He also held that re-sales between traders of agricultural commodities are not covered by the Act, the Rules and the Bye-laws. On these findings, he held the accused not guilty of the alleged offence.

None of the facts found by the learned Magistrate has been challenged before us. According to the learned Magistrate, "Panjarpol" is a charitable institution functioning in Kolhapur since 1906. Traders in Kolhapur who purchase jaggery from the primary producers pay "Panjarpol" charges to the institution at the rate of one pice per lump of jaggery, and these traders in their turn recover the amount so paid from those who purchase the jaggery from them. The learned Magistrate found that, in the present case, the accused had himself paid Rs. 7-10-9 as "Panjarpol" to two persons from whom he had purchased the 491 lumps of jaggery, and that in including the amount in the bill the accused merely tried to recover the expenses incurred by him in that behalf. "Marfat" is the name given to the charges of carting agents called hundekaries, and these charges are calculated at a rate related to the number of cartloads, each of 24 lumps of jaggery, handled by the hundekaries. It is not disputed in this case that the accused had to incur these charges in despatching the goods to the Sabarkantha District Co-operative Purchase and Sale Union, Himatnagar. "Sadharan" is a charge which represents the average of the expenses incurred by the local traders in Kolhapur for making arrangements for the lodging and boarding of their customers who come from outside places, and this charge is calculated at the rate of one anna for 24 lumps of jaggery purchased by the outside customers. The learned Magistrate found that this charge as well as the charges described as "Panjarpol" and "Marfat" were included in the bill by the accused according to a well-recognised custom in the Kolhapur market.

The main charge against the accused was that he contravened s. 17 of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939. Section 17 runs as follows:

"No person shall make or recover any trade allowance, other than an allowance prescribed by rules or bye-laws made under this Act, in any market area in any transaction in respect of the agricultural produce concerned and no civil Court shall, in any suit or proceeding arising out of any such transaction, have regard to or recognise any trade allowance not so prescribed."

An Explanation is included in the section and it is in the following terms:—

"Every deduction other than a deduction on account of deviation from sample when the purchase is made by sample or on account of deviation from standard when the purchase is made by reference to a known standard or on account of difference between the actual weight of the container and the standard weight or on account of the admixture of foreign matter, shall be regarded as a trade allowance for the purposes of this section."

It is clear from this Explanation that it applies to all deductions, and provides that deductions other than those specifically mentioned in the Explanation are to be regarded as trade allowances for the purpose of s. 17. It is also clear from the context that the word "deduction" in the Explanation means a deduction in the price which a purchaser has to pay or in the weight of the goods purchased. In the present case, the charges included in the bill by the accused are not deductions in any sense, but are items of expenditure added by the seller to the purchase price. It must, therefore, follow that they are not trade allowances under the Explanation to s. 17.

It was urged before us by the learned Assistant Government Pleader that the Explanation to s. 17 is not exhaustive of the meaning of the term "trade allowance" used in s. 17, and that, although the Explanation comprehensively covers "every deduction", the term "trade allowance" would comprise an allowance not consisting of a deduction. If we were to accept the argument of the learned Assistant Government Pleader and to hold that the Explanation to s. 17 does not purport to define what is meant by a trade allowance, it must follow that the Legislature has nowhere defined that term, although it is provided by s. 21 that whoever makes or recovers any trade allowance in contravention of the provisions of s. 17 shall be punishable with a fine which may extend to Rs. 200. It appears to us, however, that the word "allowance" in its commercial meaning implies only a customary deduction, and if that is the ordinary meaning of the term "trade allowance", it would follow that the Explanation, since it deals with "every deduction", is exhaustive of the meaning of "trade allowance" in s. 17 of the Act.

In Webster's New International Dictionary, 2nd edn., the meaning given to the word "allowance", when used in commerce, is "a customary deduction from the gross weight of goods, different in different countries, as tare and tret." The Dictionary further gives the meaning of "trade allowance" to be the same as "trade discount", and gives the meaning of "trade discount" as "a deduction from the retail or list price of goods allowed by a manufacturer or distributor to a merchant". It would thus appear that a trade allowance means a deduction either in the weight of goods or in the purchase-price. A similar meaning is found assigned to the terms "allowance" and "trade allowance" in Chambers' 20th Century Dictionary. In Wharton's Law Lexicon, 14th edn., the general meaning of the word "allowance" is given as a "deduction, an average payment, a portion", and it is further observed (p. 54):

"Also in selling goods, and in paying duties upon them, certain deductions are made from their weights, depending on the nature of the packages in which they are enclosed, and which are regulated in most instances by the custom of merchants, and the rules laid down by public offices. These allowances, as they are termed, are distinguished by the epithets draft, tare, tret, and cloff."

The terms "draft", "tare", "tret" and "cloff" are then explained, and the explanation of these terms shows that they apply to certain deductions from the weight of the goods.

It would thus appear that the term "trade allowance" applies to deductions allowed by custom either in the weight of goods sold or in the purchase price. If that is the correct interpretation of the term "trade allowance", it must follow that the charges included by the accused in his bill, being in addition to the purchase-price, were not in the nature of trade allowances.

The learned Assistant Government Pleader relied on a recent decision of the Supreme Court in *Arunachala Nadar v. State of Madras*¹, in which the term "trade allowance" occurring in s. 14 of the Madras Commercial Crops Markets Act came up for interpretation. On the meaning of the term "trade allowance", the judgment of the Supreme Court says:—

"...Allowance means something given as compensation, rebate or deduction. Under the section (i.e. section 14 of the Madras Commercial Crops Markets Act), the said deduction should be in any transaction in respect of commercial crops. The deduction may be out of the commodity or out of the price. The recipient may be the seller, the buyer or a third party...The question whether a particular payment is a trade allowance or not, depends upon the facts of each case. Firstly, it must be a deduction in any transaction in respect of commercial crops. If it is a deduction out of the price or commodity agreed to be paid or transferred, it would be a trade allowance. On the other hand, if the payment is 'de hors' the terms of the transaction but made towards consideration for the use of the premises or services rendered, it would not be a deduction from the price or in any transaction."

This passage, in our opinion, also indicates that a trade allowance must be a deduction either in the weight of the goods sold or in the purchase-price. The learned Assistant Government Pleader pointed out that in the above passage it has been stated that the term "allowance" means something given as "compensation, rebate or reduction", and he argued that the trade allowance may not be a deduction, but may be an amount given by way of compensation or rebate without at the same time being a deduction. It appears, however, from the above passage that a trade allowance in all cases must be a deduction, though the deduction may have been given as compensation or rebate. The only substantial difference which we are able to find between the meaning of the term "trade allowance" as given in Webster's New International Dictionary, Chambers' 20th Century Dictionary and Wharton's Law Lexicon on the one hand, and the aforesaid judgment of the Supreme Court on the other, is that, whereas in the former the term "trade allowance" appears to imply an allowance made in favour of the purchaser, it is specifically stated in the latter that the recipient of the trade allowance may be the seller, the buyer or a third party. But in any case a trade allowance must be a customary deduction either in the weight of the goods sold or in the purchase-price, and the charges made by the accused are not of that nature.

Supposing, however, that the learned Assistant Government Pleader is right in his contention that the term "trade allowance" may have a wider meaning than what we have mentioned above, we must nevertheless put a narrow construction on that term, as it occurs in a provision the contravention of which has been made penal by the Legislature. If the Legislature intended that charges like "Panjarpol", "Marfat" and "Sadharan", which are customarily imposed in several markets in the State, should be abolished or otherwise restricted, it was necessary that the Legislature should have expressed its intention in clear and unambiguous terms.

Another reason why the acquittal of the accused must be confirmed is that, according to s. 17 read with s. 21 of the Act, what is made punishable is to "make or recover any trade allowance, other than allowance prescribed by rules or bye-laws made under this Act". In this case, the accused has merely included certain charges in the bill which he sent to the Sabarkantha District Co-operative Purchase and Sale Union. It is not the prosecution case that he has "recovered" the charges mentioned in the bill. Being the seller in the transaction, he cannot, of course, be said to have "made" the alleged trade allowances. The mere inclusion of the charges in the bill does not amount to an offence under s. 21 of the Act.

Turning next to r. 74 of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Rules, 1941, the rule provides, in so far as it is material, that no licensed general commission agent shall solicit or receive fees other than those specified for his services in the bye-laws. Rule 77 penalises, amongst others, a licensed general commission agent who demands, receives or retains, on account of fees or under the colour of fees, any sum not due under the rules or the bye-laws. Now it is obvious that the charges made by the accused are not in respect of his fees as commission agent, nor are they made under the colour of fees of a commission agent. They are charges in respect of what he claims to have been his expenses. He cannot, therefore, be guilty under these Rules.

The last objection of the prosecution to the inclusion of these charges in the bill is that the accused thereby contravened r. 12 of the "Duties of General Commission Agents" mentioned in Bye-law 35A of the Bye-laws made by the Kolhapur Market Committee. Contravention of any of these bye-laws has been made punishable by Bye-law 68. Rule 12 in the aforesaid part of the bye-law reads as follows:—

"The general commission agent or purchaser shall not charge any amount which is not authorised by the Act, Rules and Bye-laws."

A reference to the context in which this rule appears makes it perfectly clear that the rule applies where a general commission agent or a purchaser purchases an agricultural commodity from a seller. Rule 12 prevents a general commission agent or a purchaser from charging to a seller any amount which is not authorised by the Act, Rules and Bye-laws. It has no application to the charges which may be made by a general commission agent as against a person who purchases agricultural commodities from him. In the present case, the accused has sold jaggery to the Sabarkantha District Co-operative Purchase and Sale Union, and obviously r. 12 has no application to this transaction.

In view of these findings, it is not necessary to deal with the other question, namely, whether the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, the Rules made thereunder, and the Bye-laws of the Kolhapur Market Committee, apply to the sale of agricultural produce by one trader to another.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed.

No order on the application filed by the complainant.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

MESSRS. PARMAR & CO. v. V. R. GUPTE.*

Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), Secs. 167(37)(c), 167(8), 29, 30, 86, 87—Imports and Exports (Control) Act (XVIII of 1947), Sec. 3(2)—Constitution of India, Art 226—Expression "value" in s. 167(37)(c) whether means "real value" as defined in s. 30 or cost price—Value relevant for purpose of offence under s. 167(8)—Practice (Civil)—Prerogative writs—Rule Nisi when should Court grant—Construction of statutes—Penal statutes how to be construed.

The expression "value" in s. 167(37)(c) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, means "real value" of the goods as required to be stated under s. 29 of the Act and as defined in s. 30 of the Act.

Where the import or export licence speaks only of c.i.f. value of the goods, it is the c.i.f. value of the goods and not the real value of the goods that is relevant for the purpose of the offence alleged to have been committed under s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

In cases where small penalties are imposed by the customs authorities and no fundamental right of the subject is violated, the Court should be slow in granting *Decided, July 31/August 3, 1959. O. C. J. Appeal No. 430 of 1958.

Appeal No. 32 of 1959: Miscellaneous Appli-

Rule Nisi unless it is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out for the interference of the Court by issuance of any of the extraordinary writs, and the circumstances of the case demand its interference. A petitioner who seeks relief from the Court by issuance of any of the prerogative writs should take care to set out in his petition the reasons why he approaches the Court instead of adopting the normal machinery available to him under the Act by appealing to higher authorities.

Penal statutes are construed with reference to the true meaning and the real intention of the Legislature.

T. KAKIUCHI AND CO. LTD. of Japan had issued a sale note dated December 21, 1957, for sale of 10,000 yards of Q/No. 25760 Spun Rayon Gaberdine at the rate of d. 30 per yard c.i.f. nett Bombay in favour of Messrs. Kishinchand and Co. of Bombay. Messrs. Kishinchand and Co. issued purchase advise No. 1162 dated January 4, 1958, to the Japanese company in respect of the aforesaid goods. In this purchase advice these goods were directed to be stamped after every two or three yards at selvedge "Kaybee Gaberdine No. 60 made in Japan." The petitioners desired to purchase and take delivery of 2,000 yards of the aforesaid goods directly from the Japanese company. The petitioners obtained an import licence No. 998614 dated January 15, 1958, and placed an indent dated January 24, 1958, with Kishinchand and Co. in respect of 1950 yards of the aforesaid goods. The petitioners ultimately received a sale note from the Japanese company for sale to the petitioners of 1950 yards of the aforesaid goods at d. 30 per yard c.i.f. Bombay less 1 per cent. insurance premium, shipment being February 1958. These goods were described in the sale note issued to the petitioners as "Kaybee 60 Spun Rayon Gaberdine 54" x 25 Yds non-resin finished". The petitioners opened a letter of credit for £241-7-0 being c.i.f. value of the said 1950 yards of the said goods in favour of the Japanese company. S. S. Kirsten Maersk carrying the consignment of 8 cases of the aforesaid goods for the petitioners arrived at Bombay on April 14, 1958. The petitioners submitted the bill of entry dated April 14, 1958, showing the real value of the said goods as Rs. 3,260 being the c.i.f. price of the said goods.

The examiner of the customs examined the goods and noted the bill of entry on about April 19, 1958, and forwarded the same to the Appraising Department. After more than two months respondent No. 1 issued two show cause notices respectively dated June 23, 1958, and July 1, 1958, against the petitioners. By the first notice it was recited that the value of the goods imported exceeded the value of the import licence by Rs. 325 and the import constituted an offence under s. 167(8) read with s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act, 1947. The petitioners were called upon to explain the matter. By the second notice it was recited that the value ascertained by the Customs of the petitioners' import came to Rs. 3,588 whilst the value declared by the petitioners was Rs. 3,260. It was recited that though the value shown was d. 30 per yard, it was ascertained at d. 33 per yard. The petitioners' conduct had resulted into the loss of difference in duty amounting to Rs. 328 and that the same constituted an offence under s. 167(37). The petitioners were called upon to explain the matter. The petitioners were heard on July 9, 1958, and July 12, 1958. The petitioners submitted written explanations and also further addressed their counsel's letter dated July 12, 1958, to respondent No. 1. This letter contained all the arguments which the petitioners advanced and the explanation of the charge levelled against the petitioners. On July 16, 1958, an order was passed by respondent No. 1 under ss. 167(8) and 167(37) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, whereby the petitioners were held guilty of both the charges levelled against them and it was ordered that the goods in question be confiscated under cls. (8) and (37) of s. 167 of the Act. Option was given to the petitioners under s. 183 of the Act to pay in lieu of such confiscation a fine of Rs. 325 for offence under s. 167(8) of the Act and a fine of Rs. 160 for offence under s. 167(37) of the Act and clear the goods for home consumption. This option was directed to be exercised within four months. By a foot note in the order it was also directed that the goods were dutiable and proper duty would have to be paid before they were cleared.

The petitioners by the present petition challenged the validity of the order dated July 16, 1958, under art. 226 of the Constitution of India. Rule was granted by K. T. Desai J.

The petition came up for hearing before K. K. Desai J., who delivered the following judgment on April 8, 1959.

K. K. DESAI J. [His Lordship after stating the facts as above, proceeded.] It is apparent that the question before me relates to the jurisdiction of respondent No. 1 to proceed to investigate the charges made against the petitioners under cls. (8) and (37) of s. 167 of the Act. It is also apparent that the provisions relating to levy of customs duty as contained in Chap. V, ss. 20 to 41, of the Act have no direct bearing on the provisions relating to offences and penalties and procedure relating to offences, appeals etc. as contained in Chaps. XVI and XVII and ss. 167 to 193 of the Act. It is, however, true that the offences mentioned in s. 167 are related to questions of the evasion of duty and importation and exportation of goods in violation of prohibition or restrictions imposed and that all these provisions are indirectly connected with each other. The approach to the question before me, accordingly, in my view, must be to examine the question of jurisdiction and rights of respondent No. 1 under the provisions of Chaps. XVI and XVII. Mr. Lulla for the petitioners has argued the contentions made by the petitioners by laying great emphasis on the provisions contained in Chap. V without examining in detail the question of jurisdiction of respondent No. 1 under Chaps. XVI and XVII of the Act.

The first contention raised by the petitioners is that under the provisions of ss. 31 and 32 of the Act it is compulsory for the assessing authority, in every case where goods appear to be chargeable with a higher rate or amount of duty than that to which they would be subject according to the value thereof as mentioned in the bill of entry or shipping bill, to detain the goods. It is further contended that the assessing authority has upon detention to decide either to retain the goods for the Central Government at the value mentioned in the bill of entry or in default to deliver the goods in question on payment of duty charged according to the value mentioned in the bill of entry to the importer. Reference is thereupon made to the provisions for penalties of confiscation of goods in respect of offences in cls. (8) and (37) of s. 167. It is contended that having regard to the aforesaid scheme of compulsory detention and release of ad valorem goods the penalty of confiscation is impossible to be imposed on an importer of ad valorem goods. The contention is that it being compulsory for the assessing authority to detain and keep the imported goods under s. 32 for the Central Government or in default to deliver the goods on payment of duty charged according to the bill of entry, it is impossible that the goods should be liable to be confiscated as provided in respect of the offences under the aforesaid two clauses of s. 167. It is contended that the provisions of s. 32 are compulsory and confiscation being impossible there is no jurisdiction in the assessing authorities under Chaps. XVI and XVII to take proceedings against an importer of ad valorem goods.

In this connection reference may be made to the provisions of ss. 31 and 32 of the Act. The marginal notes to each of these sections run as follows:

"Examination of ad valorem goods."

"Procedure where such goods are under valued by owner."

"31. Goods chargeable with duty...shall, without unnecessary delay, be examined... If it appears that the real value of such goods is correctly stated in the bill-of-entry or shipping-bill, the goods shall be assessed in accordance therewith.

32. If it appears that such goods are properly chargeable with a higher rate or amount of duty than that to which they would be subject according to the value thereof as stated in the bill-of-entry or shipping-bill, such officer may detain such goods.

In every such case the detaining officer shall forthwith give notice in writing to the owner of the goods of their detention, and of the value thereof as estimated by him; and the Customs-Collector shall, within two clear working days after such detention, or within such reasonable period as may with the consent of the parties be arranged, determine either to deliver such goods on payment of duty charged according to the entry of such owner, or to retain the same for the use of the Central Government."

Mr. Lulla contends that under s. 31 the assessing authority has to examine the goods without unnecessary delay, and if it appears that the goods are chargeable with a higher rate of duty under s. 32, there is no option left to the assessing authority, but to decide to retain the goods for use of the Central Government or to deliver the same upon payment of duty charged according to the value mentioned in the bill of entry. He stated that these two sections create obligations on the assessing authorities which are compulsory. The procedure prescribed in these two sections must be followed and there is no other procedure of any kind available to the assessing authorities where it is found that the goods are chargeable to a higher duty and the value mentioned in the bill of entry is not correct. Having regard to the scheme of these two sections, he says that the word "may" in para. 1 of s. 32 must be construed in the sense of "must".

In this connection it is important to notice that the word "may" has been used in para. 1 of s. 32 whilst the word "shall" is used in s. 31 and also in paras. 2, 3 and 6 of s. 32. In s. 33 the word "may" is used at several places while the word "shall" is used in ss. 34 and 34A, 35, 36 and 37 and other sections which need not be mentioned. This illustrates that the words "may" and "shall" are used in the Act advisedly and intentionally and the word "may" contained in para. 1 of s. 32 is not accidental but intentional. It is also relevant to notice that under the scheme of ss. 29, 29A, 29B, 86, 87, 88 and 89 of the Act all imported goods have to be entered in the bill of entries and the owner is not entitled to clearance thereof except upon payment of import duty. In the event of the detention under s. 32 unless the Collector of Customs decides to retain the goods for the Central Government the goods are directed to be released on payment of duty which is lesser than the duty payable in respect thereof in the opinion of the assessing authority. The provisions of s. 32, therefore, contemplate a situation which is contrary to the general scheme for payment of import duty as assessed by the authority on the value of import determined by the authority. It is difficult to accept the contention of the petitioners that the Legislature contemplated that this abnormal situation must arise and the benefit of payment of duty lesser than that assessed by the authorities should be available to an importer or owner in each and every case where in respect of ad valorem goods the assessing authority apprehends that the duty is chargeable at higher rate than that mentioned in the bill of entry or shipping bill.

Obligation is cast under s. 87 on the assessing authority to assess all goods imported where duty is leviable. Under s. 89 until there is an order for clearing subsequent upon the assessment made, goods cannot be cleared by any owner or importer. Under s. 167, cls. (8) and (37) the goods are liable to be confiscated for certain offences. It is, therefore, clear that the contention of Mr. Lulla that there is no procedure other than that mentioned in s. 32 available to the assessing authorities is not correct. The power to assess the duty payable in respect of any imports and for that purpose to ascertain the real value is not to be found only in s. 32, but is also implicit in the provisions of s. 87 read with s. 89 of the Act. Reference may be made in this connection to ss. 29, 29A, 29B, 89, 86 and 88 also. The question is whether there is any compulsory restriction imposed on the general power to ascertain "real value" and make assessment accordingly by reason of the provisions in s. 32 of the Act. In this connection it is important to note that the language of s. 32 does not create an obligation on the assessing authority to make the Central Government owners of all goods where duty is found to be chargeable at a higher amount than according to the value mentioned in the bill of entry. It would be anomalous to hold that the owner should be entitled to delivery of goods at duty lesser than in fact found to be chargeable because the assessing authority does not think it desirable to acquire the imported goods for the ownership of the Central Government. In my view the detention under para. 1 of s. 32 is a condition precedent to the obligations cast on the assessing authority in the subsequent paragraphs of s. 32. As the construction put by Mr. Lulla leads to the curious result that the owner should be entitled to clearance of goods on payment of lesser duty than found to be chargeable, I am of the view that "may" in s. 32, para. 1, cannot be construed as "must". The provision in s. 32 does not cast any obligation on the assessing authority in respect of ad valorem goods to compulsorily detain the same. In my view this section is an enabling section which gives power which may be utilised at the discretion of the assessing authorities.

In the case of *Willaitiram Jaishiram v. Secy. of State*¹, the question of true construction of s. 32 directly arose. As regards the contention of the plaintiff in that case that the section empowered an importer to compel the customs officer either to accept his declared value as correct or if he challenges it to buy the goods on behalf of the Government at the declared value, it was held as follows (p. 130):—

"This is not what the section says, nor is it permissible to interpret it in that sense. The Act contemplates three different procedures which a Customs Officer may adopt if he finds the declared value to be incorrect. He may proceed to fix the real value in accordance with the provisions of s. 30 and levy customs duty accordingly. He may, if he so wishes, detain the goods, with the object of enabling the Collector of Customs to decide whether the goods should be delivered to the importer on payment of duty in accordance with the declaration made by him, or to buy the goods... Lastly, the customs officer duly authorised in that behalf may forfeit the goods and at the same time impose a penalty by way of fine as contemplated by S. 167 of the Act. The interpretation contended for by the plaintiff is not warranted by the provisions of the Act, and cannot possibly be accepted for more reasons than one. Such an interpretation would at once render the provisions of S. 167, Cl. 37(b) nugatory, as it would enable a fraudulent importer to avoid the forfeiture of his goods by offering to sell them to Government at their declared value. It would also make the provisions of Ss. 32 and 39 not easily reconcilable. An importer has no option given to him by S. 39 of the Act of compelling Government to purchase his goods at the declared value when excess duty is levied from him within three months after the goods have been taxed and even removed from the Customs premises. If that be so, there is no reason why he should have an option of compelling Government to purchase his goods at the declared value when such value is found to be incorrect before the proper duty is demanded from him.

The option lies with Government to buy the goods in fit cases and not with the importer. The use of the expression 'may' in the first part of S. 32 makes it abundantly clear that the option lies with the Customs Officer."...

I am in respectful agreement with the above observations contained in that decision.

Mr. Lulla developed his argument by relying upon certain decisions which may be referred to.

In the case of *Nazir Ahmad v. Emperor (No. 2)*², the question before the Privy Council related to a confession not recorded in accordance with the provisions of s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and it was observed (p. 993):

"...Whether a Magistrate records any confession is a matter of duty and discretion and not of obligation. The rule which applies is a different and not less well recognised rule, namely, that where a power is given to do a certain thing in a certain way, the thing must be done in that way or not at all. Other methods of performance are necessarily forbidden. This doctrine has often been applied to Courts—*Taylor v. Taylor*³—and although the Magistrate acting under this group of sections is not acting as a Court, yet he is a judicial officer, and both as a matter of construction and of good sense there are strong reasons for applying the rule in question to s. 164."

Mr. Lulla contends that the only procedure prescribed for assessment of ad valorem goods is in s. 32 of the Act and power to detain must be exercised in the prescribed manner. This contention of Mr. Lulla is based upon the construction which he has put upon s. 32, namely, that it creates a compulsory obligation on the assessing authority to detain the goods and that "may" should be held to mean "must" in that section. As I have already observed the scheme of the Act and particularly the provisions contained in Chaps. V, IX, XVI and XVII do not warrant any such construction of s. 32.

Mr. Lulla has also relied upon the case of *Emperor v. Bhana Makan*⁴. In that case it was observed that (p. 434):—

"It is a well recognised canon of construction that where there is a specific provision in a statute as well as general one, and the case is covered by the specific provision, it is that specific provision, which must govern the case and not the general one,..."

I do not accept that the provisions in s. 32 are compulsory or specific provisions applicable in all cases where ad valorem goods are found to be chargeable with a higher rate of duty than that mentioned in the bill-of-entry or shipping bill. I have already observed that this is an enabling power given to the assessing authority to be exercised at his discretion.

Mr. Lulla has also relied upon the case of *Wan Ten Lang v. Collector of Customs*⁵. The petition in that case was an application under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act for an order upon the customs authority to proceed under s. 32 of the Sea Customs Act. The respondent contended that the Court had no jurisdiction and relief could not be granted under s. 45 of the Act. The petitioner contended that there was a statutory obligation on the customs authorities to proceed to determine his case under the provisions of s. 32 of the Act. The contentions of the respondent were upheld and it was held that the High Court had no jurisdiction and the relief could not be granted under s. 45. Tentative observations were, however, made in regard to the provisions of ss. 30 to 32 and 87 and 167 of the Sea Customs Act and it was intended that further arguments would be advanced on behalf of the respondent on the basis of such observations. No further arguments were, however, advanced. Whilst making these observations Ameer Ali J. has expressed grievance that assistance had not been received from the Advocate General in regard to the construction of these sections. After holding that s. 32 related to ad valorem goods, it is observed as follows (p. 176):—

"...It is therefore inferred that this Act intends to prescribe different procedure for different classes of goods. There is no question of option. If it is ad valorem goods there is a special class of procedure, Ss. 30 and 32. If it is tariff value goods then the assessment is under the general powers and the power to detain under the general power. If that view is right (and indeed upon any view) the action of the Customs in making a penal assessment, merely increasing it by 50 per cent. is not warranted by any provision of the Act. They can confiscate, they can impose a penalty under S. 167."

At p. 177 of the report after considering the decision of the Sind Court cited by the Advocate General, it is observed that:

"...The real point was whether S. 167 was excluded by S. 32, i.e. whether the Customs were precluded from proceeding criminally and were not bound to proceed under S. 32. The learned Judge does go on to say that there are three alternatives. Then he goes on to say 'there is an option on the part of the Customs Authorities,' and his point is not that there is an alternative procedure, or option to proceed under S. 32 or by way of some other Section, but that under S. 32, by reason of the word 'may', notwithstanding that he is applying S. 32, he need not follow the course there laid down. That was the learned Advocate-General's argument based on this case. That argument is I think wrong. If S. 32 applies, 'may' is 'must'. If S. 32 applies, there is no other procedure."

With great respect to the learned Judge I do not agree with the observations contained in that decision. As I have already discussed it is not possible to accept the view that s. 32 creates any obligatory procedure in respect of ad valorem goods found to be chargeable with higher duty than chargeable on the value mentioned in the bill of entry. It is only an enabling section which may be resorted to at the discretion of the assessing authority. The general power to assess the 'real value' of the goods and to accordingly charge duty payable as contained in the other parts of the Act has not been in any manner affected by the provisions in s. 32.

In the case of *Glaxo Laboratories v. A. V. Venkateswaran*⁶ whilst considering the provisions of ss. 30 and 39 of the Act and also the scheme of the Act in connection with the assessment and recovery of the duty I held that "with the knowledge that the goods are liable to be charged with a higher amount of duty than mentioned in the bill of entry" the customs were bound to proceed under s. 29B to make a provisional assessment or detain the goods under s. 32 and that they had no right to release the goods and allow the same to be cleared with that knowledge without proceeding in the aforesaid manner. In that connection I observed "From the scheme of the Act the word 'may' in section 32 appears to have been used in the sense of 'must'". On further considerations as mentioned above, this observation made by me appears to be incorrect.

The second contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is based on the provisions in s. 183 which provides:

"Whenever confiscation is authorized by this Act, the officer adjudging it shall give the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of confiscation such fine as the officer thinks fit."

Under s. 184 when anything is confiscated under s. 182 such thing upon confiscation vests in Government and the officer adjudging confiscation is directed to take and hold possession of the thing confiscated. Mr. Lulla contends that in respect of penalty of confiscation imposed against the petitioners on the footing of their having committed offences under items (8) and (37) of s. 167 of the Act, the petitioners are deprived of the option which must be available to them to a release of the goods upon payment of fine. He contends that even if the petitioners paid the fine of Rs. 325 levied in respect of offence under s. 167(8), because of penalty of confiscation imposed in respect of the offence under s. 167(37), the petitioners would not get a release of goods in accordance with s. 183. He also contends that the same argument with equal force applies in respect of penalty of fine of Rs. 160 and confiscation for the offence under s. 167(37). He also contends that the direction to the petitioners contained in the foot note of the impugned order that proper duty will have to be paid before the goods are cleared contravenes the provisions of s. 183. He contends that the result of this direction is that the goods will not be allowed to be cleared in spite of the payment of fine. He further contends that this direction involves payment of duty in respect of the goods ownership whereof by reason of confiscation has vested in the Government. He says that there is no provision in the Act enabling the customs to recover duty from the petitioners in respect of goods vested in Government by reason of the order of confiscation. In my view the directions in the impugned order are in consonance with the provisions of s. 183. Confiscation is authorised in respect of the offences under s. 167(8) and (37). It is ordered that in respect of each of the offences under items (8) and (37) of s. 167 respectively a fine of Rs. 325 and Rs. 160 should be paid. It is directed that in lieu of confiscation upon payment of fine in respect of offence under each of the aforesaid items the petitioners be entitled to claim the goods for home consumption. The order, therefore, does not contravene the provisions of s. 183 and on the contrary provides for payment of fine in lieu of confiscation as contemplated

of 1957, decided by K. K. Desai J., on Novem-under s. 183. Section 183 has nothing to do with the release or clearance of the goods. The true effect of the section is that a single order of confiscation and payment of fine in lieu of confiscation has to be made in every case where penalty of confiscation is adjudged. This section creates an artificial situation whereunder upon payment of fine the confiscation and vesting of goods in the Government ceases to be effective altogether, and the goods continue to belong to the owner as if there was no intervention in ownership of the goods in consequence of the order of confiscation. That being the true construction the contention of Mr. Lulla that in respect of the goods ordered to be confiscated there is no provision for payment of import duty by the owner for the purpose of clearance thereof is not sustainable. I have not been able to appreciate why by reason of provisions of s. 183 more than one order of confiscation and payment of fine in lieu thereof cannot be made if circumstances of the case warrant such orders.

In support of his second contention Mr. Lulla has relied upon the decision in *Seopujanrai I. Ltd. v. Collector of Customs*⁷. The petitioners in that case were held to be the owners of certain smuggled gold though they were not concerned in smuggling. An offence under s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act was held to have been committed and order of confiscation of the gold was made. It was further inter alia ordered that upon payment of certain fine and the import duty payable the petitioners should be entitled to delivery of the goods. One of the grounds on which the petitioners challenged the order was that the condition directing payment of duty was invalid. In that case it was held that (p. 852):

"...The point to note is that so far as the confiscation of the goods is concerned, it is a proceeding in rem and the penalty is enforced against the goods whether the offender is known or not known."

As regards the question of invalid condition directing payment of duty as it was not clear from the facts as to how the goods were imported into India and who was the importer, the direct question which arose was regarding the provisions in the Act under which an obligation for payment of duty could be imposed against the petitioners. On behalf of the Union of India the only section which was relied upon by the Solicitor-General for India was s. 88 of the Act. Under that section if any goods are not entered and cleared for home consumption, or warehoused within four months from the date of entry of the vessel, the customs is authorised to sell off the goods and apply the sale proceeds inter alia for payment of duty leviable on such goods. In respect of that contention raised by the Solicitor General it was observed (p. 854):

"...As to the second condition of payment of customs duty etc., the learned Solicitor-General referred us to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Keki Hormusji Elavia v. The Union of India^{7a} and submitted that customs duty was payable under S. 88 of the Sea Customs Act, as in the Bombay case. The facts of the Bombay case were entirely different; it was found there that the goods, which were toilet and perfumery goods, had been smuggled through the port of Kantilal near Surat without payment of any duty and in those circumstances, it was held that S. 88 applied. In the case before us there is no finding by what means the gold was smuggled—by sea or land—and it is difficult to see how S. 88, which relates to goods not cleared or warehoused within four months after entry of vessel, can be of any help in the present case.

We are, therefore, of the view that the Collector of Customs had no jurisdiction to impose any of the two conditions mentioned above."

It is apparent that the Supreme Court considered the provisions of s. 88 and found that as there was no evidence as to the entry of any vessel in the case before them, the provisions in s. 88 were not applicable. If the provisions of s. 88 were applicable to the case before the Supreme Court, the decision might have been the same as the decision of this Court in Keki Hormusji v. Union of India.

7a (1953) Special Civil Application No.

1296 of 1953, decided by Chagla C. J., and Shah J., on August 18, 1953 (Unrep.).

In the case before me the facts are altogether different. The petitioners are the importers and owners of the goods which were imported by s.s. Kirsten Maersk. The goods are admittedly liable to pay import duty. The petitioners have been found to be guilty under ss. 167(8) and (37). In my view the existence of the impugned order of confiscation does not in any manner affect the liability of the petitioners to pay duty in respect of the goods imported by them. Section 183 cannot be construed to affect the rights of the customs to recover duty in respect of these goods prior to the clearance thereof.

In this connection it is relevant to point out that the petitioners and the respondent have both submitted that the directions in the foot note do not form part of the impugned order and that in the event of the petitioners paying the fine as mentioned in the order the question of payment of duty would arise and will require to be decided in future. Mr. Mehta has, therefore, contended that the petitioners are not entitled to raise their second contention in the present proceeding and the contention is premature. Having regard to the views already expressed by me it is unnecessary to decide this contention of the respondent.

The third contention raised for the petitioners is that as regards the offence under s. 167(8) the expression "real value" as defined in s. 30 of the Sea Customs Act has no relevance at all. The contention is that prohibition and restriction as contained in the licence of the petitioners as regards the value of the goods permitted to be imported relates to c.i.f. value or cost in fact incurred and paid. The same is not to be ascertained on the artificial basis in respect of the value to be found in s. 30.

As regards the levy of import duty the cost incurred is not the value and the duty is to be levied on the "real value" ascertained in accordance with the definition in s. 30. A copy of the licence of the petitioners meant for exchange control purposes has been produced before me. The licence mentions the name of the importer, country of consignment and origin, description of goods and also contains conditions of the licence. Clauses 6 and 8 of licence provide as follows:—

"(6) Approximate value c.i.f. Rupees forty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-eight only.

(8) Limiting factor for purposes of clearance through customs:—'value.'
Printed condition No. 2 runs as follows:—

"(H) It is a condition of this licence that where an irrevocable letter of credit is opened by the holder of the licence to finance the import of any goods covered thereby, then the authorised dealer in foreign exchange through whom the credit is opened shall be deemed to be a joint holder of this licence to the extent of the goods covered by the credit."

Relevant parts of the typed conditions provide as follows:—

1. 10 per cent. of the face value of the licence may be utilised for import of permissible spare parts...

2. 15 per cent. of the face value of the licence may be utilised for import of art silk fabrics...

The licence holders will not be permitted to utilise more than 10 per cent. of the face value of their licence for import of 120 deniers art silk yarn in bright finish...

The bond is to be guaranteed by a scheduled bank of at least 30 per cent. of the c.i.f. value of the goods... Processed manufactured goods of a minimum value equal to twice c.i.f. value of the imported raw materials are required to be exported.

At the back of the licence there is a stamped endorsement with reference to £241.7 equal to Rs. 3,260 for which letter-of-credit was opened in respect of the petitioners' goods by the Union Bank of India Ltd., as authorised exchange bank.

The adjudication in respect of offence under item (8) of s. 167 related in this case to the importation of the petitioners' goods contrary to the restrictions as contained in this licence. The charge against the petitioners was that the value of the goods imported by them was in excess of Rs. 3,260 being the amount for which the letter-of-credit had been opened by the petitioners in favour of the exporters in Japan and premia paid for insurance.

The finding in the order in respect of this charge is that the value of the goods imported exceeded the unutilised value of the licence by Rs. 325 for which amount the importers had no valid licence. It cannot be disputed that this finding is not based on any ascertainment of facts relating to the c.i.f. value or price in fact paid by the petitioners to the Japanese exporters. In fact the finding is based on the "real value" of the petitioners' import as defined in s. 30 of the Act. That, however, is entirely unjustified. Under cl. (a) of s. 30 the wholesale cash price in local market is the "real value" for levying customs duty. Under cl. (b) the cost of any other goods of the like kind and quality is the basis of "real value". Broadly stated "real value" as mentioned in s. 30 has no reference to the actual c.i.f. cost or price incurred, except in the case where there is no other "goods of the like kind and quality". This aspect of s. 30 has been discussed in decisions of this Court and the Privy Council and does not require any further elucidation here. The question that arises is whether in investigating an offence under s. 167(8) of the Act it is permissible for the authority to make a finding on the basis of "real value" as defined in s. 30 of the Act or whether the decision must be based on actual c.i.f. value or costs incurred. The offence obviously relates to violation of restriction as contained in the licence for import. The conditions in the licence and the language of the licence in various particulars as already quoted above have apparently reference only to the c.i.f. cost or price incurred. The same has direct reference to moneys transmitted outside India. The conditions in the licence as to value are not on the basis of artificial "real value" of imports. If that is the true position it is not permissible for the authority in proceedings under s. 167(8) to base its finding on the "real value" (of the goods imported) as defined in s. 30 of the Act. The finding must be based on actual c.i.f. value or cost incurred by the importers. There is in fact no attempt made in the findings contained in the impugned order to find the actual c.i.f. value incurred and paid or whether the same was in excess of that mentioned in the bill-of-entry. It appears to me that in fact the actual c.i.f. cost incurred was the same as moneys transmitted by letter-of-credit plus costs of insurance amounting to Rs. 3,260. True construction of the impugned order is that on the basis of the "real value" as defined in s. 30 of the Act it is found that there was violation of the condition as to value as contained in the licence. That appears to me to be an apparent error of law in the impugned order and the finding that the petitioners committed an offence under s. 167(8) is not sustainable. The order of confiscation and payment of fine of Rs. 325 in respect of that offence is accordingly not sustainable. It is, however, admitted by both sides that the order is severable in respect of two offences mentioned in the order and that even if my finding is against the respondents in respect of the offence under s. 167(8) the same does not affect in any manner the finding in the impugned order in respect of the offence under s. 167(37).

Mr. Mehta has in this connection relied upon s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, which runs as follows:—

"All goods to which any order under sub-section (1) applies shall be deemed to be goods of which the import or export has been prohibited or restricted under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act and all the provisions of that Act shall have effect accordingly."

These provisions, in my view, do not in any way enable the authority to base its findings in matters of an offence under s. 167(8) on the footing of the "real value" of the goods imported. In my view the conditions imposed under restrictions notified under s. 3 of the Imports and Exports Act, 1947, or s. 19 of the Sea Customs Act would have to be construed on the language of the restrictions whether in the licence or otherwise. The provisions in s. 30 as to "real value" cannot have any relevance to the restrictions as contained in the import licence unless specifically incorporated by the language of the restrictions.

In this connection Mr. Lulla also argued that violation of restriction as to value related to the goods of the value of Rs. 325 only and that the penalty which could be imposed must relate to the goods of the equivalent value. He, therefore, contended that for an offence under s. 167(8) order for confiscation of all the goods imported could not be made. Having regard to the conclusion which I have come to in respect of the alleged offence under s. 167(8) it is unnecessary to decide this contention.

In respect of the finding that the petitioners committed an offence under s. 167(37) of the Act, the contention of the petitioners is that there were no other goods of the like kind and quality and, therefore, the "real value" of the imported goods under s. 30(B) must be held to be the actual c.i.f. costs incurred. The respondents deny that contention. The respondents' case is that in fact there were other goods of the like kind and quality and that accordingly the customs duty was payable in respect of the petitioners' import on the basis of the costs at which "the goods of the like kind and quality" could be delivered at Bombay at material times. In support of this contention, the respondents have produced before me by way of illustration documents relating to imports made by H. N. Pahilaj and Co. of Bombay from Yakota and Co. of Japan. These documents show that H. N. Pahilaj and Co. imported dyed spun rayon gaberdine 54" x 25" under a bill of lading dated January 21, 1958, at the price of d. 36 less 3 per cent. c.i.f. Bombay. The contract is dated December 12, 1957, and provides for shipment January/February, 1958. The construction of goods in the contract is mentioned as $\frac{30/2 \times 20/s.}{104 \times 54}$. It is the case of the petitioners that their contract was also for spun rayon gaberdine 54" x 25 yards and of the construction of $\frac{30/2 \times 20/s.}{104 \times 54}$. The petitioners' contract is dated December 21, 1957, and the shipment is February 1958. The invoice and the contract of H. N. Pahilaj and Co. is relied upon in the impugned order. Substantially there is no difference of any kind in the goods of the petitioners and that of H. N. Pahilaj and Co. The respondents have also relied upon several other invoices and it is the respondents' case that slight differences in construction do not in any manner distinguish the spun rayon gaberdine imported by the petitioners from the gaberdine mentioned in other invoices relied upon by the respondents. Respondent No. 1 has in para. 31 of the affidavit in reply stated "that the real value in the present case was ascertained on the basis of the c.i.f. value of goods of the like kind and quality imported at Bombay at the time of importation of the petitioners' goods."

Having regard to these facts I cannot accept the contention of the petitioners that there were no other goods of the like kind and quality on the basis whereof respondent No. 1 could make a finding in respect of goods of the petitioners as he in fact did by the impugned order. The petitioners had contended before respondent No. 1 that their goods were "kaybee gaberdine 60" and, therefore, respondent No. 1 was not entitled to hold that there were other goods of the like kind and quality. Respondent No. 1 has made a finding that the petitioner's contention could not be upheld. It is not for me in this writ petition to go behind that finding. There is no reason why I should hold that respondent No. 1 was not entitled in law to make that finding. In fact from the documents annexed to the petition it appears that Kishin Chand and Co. had not in the first instance provided for marking of the goods to be imported as "kaybee 60". That mark was subsequently agreed to be woven in the selvedge of the gaberdine to be imported. The petitioners' case that "kaybee 60" is the trade description of their goods does not on facts appear to be correct.

In this connection Mr. Lulla relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in the case of *Vacuum Oil Company v. Secretary of State*². In that case the plaintiffs had imported from the United States of America lubricating oil known as Gargoyle. In that case it is observed as follows (p. 1060):—

"And, first, with reference to the position of the oils in the Bombay market, the outstanding fact is that, imported as they are under the trade description of 'Gargoyle', of no other oils can it be said, in Bombay, that, using the language of the Act, they are of 'the like kind and quality'. Accordingly, the relevant 'wholesale cash price' for the appellants' lubricating oils, if any there be, must be found in the actual sales of these oils in Bombay by the appellants themselves."

These observations, in my view, related to the facts of that particular case before the Privy Council. There is no general observation in that case which is applicable to the facts before me. In that case it appears to be admitted by both sides that Gargoyle was the trade description of the goods of the plaintiffs. It is denied by the respondents that "kaybee 60" is any trade description at all of the goods imported by the petitioners. In that view of the matter the decision of the Privy Council cannot in any manner support the contentions of the petitioners.

I, therefore, negative the contentions of the petitioners that there were no "goods of the like kind and quality" and/or that the finding made against the petitioners on the footing of the other invoices as mentioned in the impugned order and in the affidavit in reply is invalid.

Mr. Lulla has further contended that the impugned order does not contain any finding that the invoice value produced by the petitioners was false or incorrect and he, therefore, says that the finding that the petitioners had committed an offence under s. 167(37) is not sustainable. The inquiry before respondent No. 1 as regards the offence under s. 167(37) was that the assessable value of the goods was Rs. 3,588 and not Rs. 3,260 as mentioned in the bill of entry. In the enquiry the contention of the petitioners was that their invoice evidenced the "real value" of the petitioners' goods. The finding of respondent No. 1 is that the petitioners' contention cannot be accepted and that the goods had been under-valued involving a loss in revenue and that accordingly an offence had been committed under s. 167(37). That is the only correct way of reading the impugned order. I, therefore, cannot accept the contention of the petitioners that there is no finding in this order that the value of these goods as mentioned in the invoice produced by the petitioners is not correct "real value".

Having regard to the findings which I have made and the position accepted by the petitioners that the impugned order is severable as regards the two offences mentioned therein, the order that the petitioners are entitled to is that there will be a writ of prohibition and an order of injunction directing the respondents not to enforce against the petitioners the penalty of confiscation of the goods and the fine of Rs. 325 in respect of the offence under s. 167(8). The petitioners are under the circumstances entitled to an extension of time for payment of fine of Rs. 160 in lieu of confiscation ordered under s. 167(37). The time mentioned for the purpose in the impugned order will run from to-day. The petitioners have succeeded only in part, but have not by this petition acquired any substantial result for release of their goods. The fair order for costs accordingly will be that each party will bear its own costs.

The petitioners appealed. The respondents filed cross-objections.

R. Jethmalani, with M. J. Mirchandani, for the appellants.

Porus A. Mehta, with P. K. Irani, for the respondents.

S. T. DESAI J. An order was made by the Assistant Collector of Customs against the petitioners (appellants) on two counts on the facts and in the circumstances which we shall presently indicate. The first count was under s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act, to which we will hereafter refer as "the Act", and a fine of Rs. 160 was imposed on the petitioners. The second count was under s. 167(37) of the Act, and the petitioners were given an option under s. 183 of the Act to pay, in lieu of confiscation, a fine of Rs. 325. The petitioners challenged the legality of the order and in their petition asked for an appropriate writ or writs under art. 226 of the Constitution.

A sale note, dated December 21, 1957, in respect of sale of 10,000 yards of Spun Rayon Gaberdine at the rate of d. 30 per yard c.i.f. Bombay, was passed by T. Kakiuchi and Co., Ltd., Japan, in favour of Messrs. Kishinchand and Co., Bombay, and in respect of those goods purchase advice was issued by the latter to the company in Japan. In the purchase advice it was mentioned that the goods should be stamped after every two or three yards at selvage "Kay-bee Gaberdine No. 60 made in Japan". The petitioners wanted to purchase a part of those goods and obtained the requisite import licence and thereafter placed an indent with Kishinchand and Co. in respect of 1,950 yards of the same. Ultimately the petitioners received a sale note from the company in Japan for the sale of 1,950 yards of the goods at d. 30 per yard c.i.f. Bombay. The goods were described in the sale note as "Kaybee 60 Spun Rayon Gaberdine 54". The petitioners opened a letter of credit for £241-7-0 being the c.i.f. value of the goods agreed to be sold to them. "S.S. Kirsten Maersk" carrying inter alia the goods sold to the petitioners arrived in Bombay on April 14, 1958. The petitioners submitted on the same day the bill of entry showing the real value of the goods as Rs. 3,260 being the c.i.f. price of the goods. The Customs Authorities examined the goods and after noting the bill of entry on or about April 19, 1958, forwarded the same to the Appraising Department. About two months thereafter, two notices were received by the petitioners from respondent No. 1 who is the Assistant Collector of Customs. The first notice related to the count under s. 167(8) of the Act read with s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act, 1947. The other notice related to the other count already mentioned by us. According to respondent No. 1, the value ascertained by the Customs Authorities of the goods imported by the petitioners came to Rs. 3,588, whereas the value actually declared by the petitioners in the bill of entry was Rs. 3,260. It was stated in the notice that though the value shown was d. 30 per yard, it was ascertained at d. 33 per yard, and that the petitioners' conduct had resulted in the loss of difference in duty amounting to Rs. 328 and that constituted the offence under the second count. An opportunity was given to the petitioners to explain the matter as required by the provisions of s. 167(37) of the Act. After hearing the petitioners and after considering the written explanations submitted on their behalf which contained all the arguments of the petitioners on the two counts with which they were charged, respondent No. 1 on July 16, 1958, passed the order which was impugned in the petition. The effect of that order was that the goods in question would be confiscated. Option was given to the petitioners under s. 183 of the Act to pay in lieu of such confiscation a fine of Rs. 325 for the offence under s. 167(37) of the Act. That option was directed to be exercised within four months. There was a foot-note in the order to which the learned Judge has referred in his judgment. We do not think it is necessary to refer to it in this synopsis of the facts of the case. The view which we take of this case will not in any manner affect any contention that the petitioners may in any future proceedings be advised to take having regard to that foot-note.

The petition was heard by Mr. Justice K. K. Desai, and considerable arguments were advanced before him. He held in favour of the petitioners on the first count relating to the offence under s. 167(8) of the Act read with s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act, 1947. On the other count relating to the offence under s. 167(37) of the Act, the learned Judge dismissed the petition, and the petitioners have preferred this appeal. There are cross-objections filed on behalf of the respondents to the petition and they relate to the count which was decided against them by the learned Judge.

Various contentions have been pressed for our acceptance by Mr. Jethmalani, learned counsel for the petitioners. We shall examine them in the same order in which they were urged before us. It was argued by learned counsel that s. 167(37) of the Act cannot have any application to the facts of the petitioners' case. That section is as under:

"The offences mentioned in the first column of the following schedule shall be punishable to the extent mentioned in the third column of the same with reference to such offences respectively:—

Offences	Section of this Act to which offence has reference	Penalties
37. If it be found, when any goods are entered at, or brought to be passed through, a custom-house, either for importation or exportation, that—	86 & 137	such packages, together with the whole of the goods contained therein, shall be liable to confiscation, and every person concerned in any such offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees.
(a) the packages in which they are contained differ widely from the description given in the bill-of-entry or application for passing them; or
(b) the contents thereof have been wrongly described in such bill or application as regards the denominations, characters or conditions according to which such goods are chargeable with duty, or are being imported or exported; or
(c) the contents of such packages have been mis-stated in regard to sort, quality, quantity or value; or
(d) goods not stated in the bill-of-entry or application have been concealed in, or mixed with, the articles specified therein, or have apparently been packed so as to deceive the officers or Customs, and such circumstance is not accounted for to the satisfaction of the Customs-Collector.

It was said that s. 167(37)(c) contemplated mis-statements about "value" of the goods and not about the "real value" of the goods as defined in s. 30(b) of the Act. Our attention was drawn by learned counsel to ss. 29, 30, 31, 32 and 87 of the Act. Before we deal with the argument as it was developed by learned counsel, it will be convenient to examine the scheme of the section, in so far as it is necessary to do so in the context of the present contention which was strongly pressed before us.

Chapter V of the Sea Customs Act deals with levy of, and exemption from, customs-duties. Section 20 deals with the subject of "goods dutiable", and lays down that except as provided in the Act, customs-duties shall be levied at such rates as may be prescribed by or under any law for the time being in force, and then goes on to refer to various categories of goods. Section 21 relates to goods partially composed of dutiable articles. Section 22 empowers the Central Government, from time to time, by notification in the Official Gazette, to fix, for the purpose of levying duties, tariff-values of any goods exported or imported by sea on which customs-duties are by law imposed. Sections 23 to 28 are not material for the present purpose, nor are ss. 29A and 29B. Sections 29 and 30 are crucial, and the controversy before us relates inter alia to the meaning and effect of those sections. Section 29 imposes on the owner of the goods an obligation to declare the "real value" of the goods in the bill of entry or shipping bill. The material and relevant part of that section is as under:

"On the importation into, or exportation from, any customs-port of any goods, whether liable to duty or not, the owner of such goods shall, in his bill-of-entry or shipping-bill, as the case may be, state the real value, quantity and description of such goods to the best of his knowledge and belief, and shall subscribe a declaration of the truth of such statement at the foot of such bill."

It will be seen that the duty cast on the owner of the goods is to declare not his cost price or the value paid by him but the "real value" of the goods. The expression "real value" has, for the purposes of the Act, been defined in s. 30. It is a notional definition. That section lays down as follows:

"For the purposes of this Act the real value shall be deemed to be—

(a) the wholesale cash price, less trade discount, for which goods of the like kind and quality are sold, or are capable of being sold, at the time and place of importation or exportation, as the case may be, without any abatement or deduction whatever, except (in the case of goods imported) of the amount of the duties payable on the importation thereof; or,

(b) where such price is not ascertainable, the cost at which goods of the like kind and quality could be delivered at such place without any abatement or deduction except as aforesaid."

Section 86 relates to entry for home consumption or ware-housing and is as under:—

"The owner of any goods shall, after the delivery of the manifest by the master of the vessel in which they are imported, make entry of the goods for home consumption or warehousing by delivering to the Customs-Collector a bill of entry thereof with such number of copies, in such form and containing such particulars, in addition to the particulars specified in section 29, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by the Chief Customs-officer.

The particulars of such entry shall correspond with the particulars given of the same goods in the manifest of the ship."

Section 87, which is also one of the material sections for the present purpose, relates to assessment of dutiable goods and is as under:

"On the delivery of such bill the duty (if any) leviable on such goods shall be assessed, and the owner of such goods may then proceed to clear the same for home consumption, or warehouse them, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained."

We have already set out the provisions of s. 167(37) of the Act. It will be noticed that the initial words of the section which relates to punishments for offences are, "the offences mentioned in the first column of the following schedule shall be punishable to the extent mentioned in the third column of the same with reference to such offences respectively:—". The schedule, it will be noticed, is in three columns. The first column enumerates the various offences and the third column lays down the penalty to be imposed in case of any contravention of the provisions of the Act which amounts to an offence under the Act. Column 2 is headed "section of this Act to which offence has reference". It will be noticed from s. 167(37) that the second column of the schedule mentions ss. 86 and 137. They are sections of the Act to which, according to that column, the offence has reference. Some argument has been advanced before us about the effect of column 2 and the reference to ss. 86 and 137 of the Act in the second column relating to s. 167(37). There is a note at the end of the section which is as under:

"Nothing in the second column of the above schedule shall be deemed to have the force of law."

In the view we take of the construction of s. 167(37), it will not be necessary for us to attach any importance to the second column and to the fact that the second column, so far as it relates to s. 167(37), makes reference to ss. 86 and 137. We intend to construe s. 167(37) without seeking any assistance from the second column.

To turn to the argument of Mr. Jethmalani. It is said that cl. (c) of s. 167(37) is the only provision relating to offences which can, if at all, be applicable to the facts of the case before us and that is the clause which was applied by the Customs Authorities to the case of the petitioners. The argument has proceeded that the clause only speaks of mis-statements in regard to the value of the contents of the packages in which the goods were contained. The expression "value", it is said, must be construed in its plain, ordinary and natural sense; and the plain, ordinary and natural sense of the expression "value", according to learned counsel for the petitioners, is the cost price of the goods, or, to put it differently, the value of the goods paid by the petitioners. It is strongly urged that it would be importing words into this clause to interpret the word "value" as the "real value" and then to incorporate into the penal clause the somewhat artificial definition of the expression "real value". The argument was stressed in the form of an interrogation: "What have I mis-stated?" It was said that the petitioners did not make any mis-statement in regard to the value of the goods when they declared the value of the goods which they themselves had paid and of which fact there was abundant evidence and the correctness of which had not been challenged by the Customs Authorities. It has also been urged that we are examining a penal statute and the language of a penal statute should be strictly interpreted in favour of the subject and against the Revenue.

Now at first blush the argument may seem somewhat attractive, but an examination of the relevant provisions and particularly the language of s. 167(37) shows that it is not well-founded. In coming to a determination as to the meaning of a particular word or expression in a statute, it is permissible to consider two points: (i) the external evidence derived from extraneous circumstances such as the previous legislation and decided cases, and (ii) the internal evidence derived from the statute. This is of particular cogency when the internal evidence is afforded by the other clauses of the section itself. As we shall presently point out considerable light is thrown on this question of interpretation of cl. (c) when we scrutinise the provisions contained in the other clauses which are relevant for the purpose of ascertainment of the true meaning and effect of s. 167(37)(c) of the Act. A good deal has been said about the broad principles on which penal statutes should receive interpretation. In a general sense it is true to say that a penal statute should be strictly interpreted in favour of the subject. But the distinction between a strict and a liberal construction has considerably dwindled with regard to all classes of statutes, whether penal or not, and the rules of interpretation are now substantially the same rules when one has to deal with modern enactments; and the reason for this is that all modern Acts are framed having regard to equitable as well as legal principles. Penal statutes are construed with reference to the true meaning and the real intention of the Legislature as is done in the case of other statutes. It is not our purpose to suggest that there are no special considerations which weigh with the Court when it is interpreting a penal statute. The considerations indubitably are there, but when we speak of the canons of construction there is no distinction between a strict and a liberal construction of a penal statute. Of course, in a penal statute, "where you depart from an ordinary meaning of the words used, the intention of the Legislature that those words should be understood in a more large or popular sense must plainly appear". It is well established that those who contend that a penalty may be inflicted must show that the words of the Act distinctly enact that it shall be incurred in the present circumstances. They must fail if the words are equally capable of a construction that would, and one that would not, inflict the penalty. The more correct version of this doctrine, it has been said, appears to be that the statutes of this class are to be fairly construed and faithfully applied according to the intent of the Legislature, without unwarrantable severity on the one hand or unjustifiable lenity on the other, in cases of doubt the Courts inclining to mercy." (see, Craies on Statute Law, 5th edn., p. 504).

Clause (c) of s. 167(37) cannot be read in isolation as the argument of learned counsel for the petitioners seems to ask us to do. The language of cl. (c) itself shows that it is a part of one whole sentence and one comprehensive statement and it has to be read in the context of the preceding clauses of that section. Section 167(37) is enacted under four sub-heads, and cl. (c) is one of them. Clause (a) rules that in case the packages in which the goods are contained differ widely from the description given in the bill of entry or application for passing them, the packages together with the whole of the goods contained therein shall be liable to confiscation and the person concerned in any such offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees. Clause (b) speaks of "the contents thereof", meaning thereby the contents of the packages in which the goods are contained, and rules that if the contents have been wrongly described "in such bill or application as regards the denominations, characters or conditions according to which such goods are chargeable with duty", a like penalty will be imposed. Clause (c) rules that if "the contents of such packages have been mis-stated in regard to sort, quality, quantity or value," a like penalty shall be imposed. The question must immediately arise: "mis-stated where?" The answer to that is furnished by the contexture of what has been expressed in the preceding clauses. Clause (c) read with the preceding clauses as part of one whole statement of law in s. 167(37) makes it clear beyond doubt that the mis-statement is a mis-statement as to sort, quality, quantity or value of the goods in the bill of entry or application for passing of the goods. Both cls. (a) and (b) in terms express and explicit refer to the bill of entry and application for passing of the goods. Therefore, the mis-statement in respect of which a penalty can be imposed under cl. (c) must be a mis-statement in the bill of entry or application for passing of the goods. Section 167(37) of the Act does not in terms refer to the provisions of the Act relating to the contents of the bill of entry or application for passing of the goods. True, column 2 in the schedule refers to ss. 86 and 137. But we propose in this case to ignore the content of column 2 and examine the point solely from the language of the enacting parts of the statute. Section 29, which states the crucial law, requires the owner of the goods to declare "in his bill of entry" or shipping bill, as the case may be, the "real value" of the goods to the best of his knowledge and belief. That section imposes an obligation on the owner of the goods to declare the "real value" of the goods in his bill of entry; and if in the bill of entry the owner of the goods fails to declare the "real value" of the goods to the best of his knowledge and belief, that obviously would be a mis-statement. The other relevant section is s. 86, the provisions of which we have already stated in examining the scheme of the Act. That section in terms refers to s. 29. Therefore, s. 167(37)(c) must be read along with ss. 29 and 86 of the Act.

If that be the law, and we have little doubt that it is, the expression "value" in cl. (c) of s. 167(37) must mean, in the light of the cognate sections, the "real value" of the goods; and the real value of the goods can only be the value of the goods in accordance with the definition contained in s. 30. Although we have stated in our judgment that we will not look at the contents of column 2 in the schedule, we do not intend to be understood to say that it is not permissible to the Court, in interpreting any of the provisions of s. 167, to look at column 2; but that would only be for facilitating reference, and in doing so, the Court would take care to see that nothing in the second column of the schedule is deemed to have the force of law. In fairness to Mr. Jethmalani we may observe that he stated in the course of his arguments that the second column may be looked at as a sort of a marginal note and the Court may derive some assistance from the second column for the purpose of viewing the drift of the section. For the reasons discussed above, we have reached the conclusion that the expression "value" in s. 167(37)(c) means "real value" of the goods as required to be stated under s. 29 and as defined in s. 30.

The next contention pressed before us by learned counsel for the petitioners has been that the mis-statement referred to in s. 167(37)(c) means an intentional mis-statement. It is urged that there can be no mis-statement where the owner of the goods has stated the value of the goods actually paid by him. It is said that there must be mens rea established before it can be held that there was a mis-statement in regard to the value of the goods made by the owner of the goods. We shall assume for the purpose of examining the present argument that there should be the element of mens rea in a case of this nature, viz., an offence under s. 167(37)(c). But as we have already observed, the words "mis-stated" and "value" in cl. (c) must be read in the context of the other cognate provisions of the Act, and when we turn to s. 29 it is clear that it enforces a duty on the owner of the goods to state the "real value" of the goods in the sense in which that expression is defined in s. 30. So if the real value of the goods is not stated by the owner in the bill of entry that would be a mis-statement deliberately made by him. Therefore, there is little substance in the contention that the expressions "mis-stated" and "value" can only embrace the actual value of the goods paid by the owner therefor and not the real value of the goods as required by s. 29.

It is next argued that the order made by the customs authorities is not in accordance with s. 30(b) of the Act. It is said that the goods bore upon them the trade mark of the indenting agent and the trade mark was printed after every two or three yards at selvedge, and the trade mark was "Kaybee 60". The trade mark of the indenter, so it has been argued, had the effect of putting these goods in a class by themselves, because goods of other merchants, even though they may in a general sense be said to be of like kind and quality, cannot strictly be regarded as goods of like kind and quality because they would not bear the distinctive mark of the indenting agent. The crux of the argument is that these goods purchased by the petitioners are sui generis, and if they are sui generis, they can by themselves be regarded as goods of "like kind and quality" within the meaning of that expression as used in both the cls. (a) and (b) of s. 30. Reliance in this connection has been placed by learned counsel for the petitioners on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Vacuum Oil Co. v. Secretary of State for India.¹ Now, that was a case in which by any reasonable standard the goods in question had to be treated as sui generis. Another case to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Jethmalani is Ford Motor Co. of India v. Secretary of State for India.² The goods in that case were motor vehicles. It is extremely difficult for us to see how the doctrine of sui generis, which found favour with their Lordships of the Privy Council in the two cases mentioned above, can possibly apply to the facts of the case before us. The goods in question are Spun Rayon Gaberdine, and it is impossible to treat these goods as a class by themselves for the purpose of the enquiry before us. Therefore, the present argument must be negatived. In the view we take of the matter, it is not necessary to examine some other decisions to which our attention was drawn by learned counsel.

The case before us was dealt with by the authorities under s. 30(b) of the Act, as indeed they were bound to do, and the last argument of learned counsel is founded on the effect of s. 30(b). It is said that the words "goods of the like kind and quality" in s. 30(b) would include the goods of the owner himself. This proposition pressed by learned counsel for our acceptance is, as we shall immediately point out, based on a fallacy. Support was sought to be derived for the argument from the above decisions of the Privy Council that the words "like kind and quality" in s. 30(a) could very well apply to the goods of the owner himself if the goods were sui generis. It was said that the words "like kind and quality" in s. 30(b) would also include goods which are sui generis. For the purpose of the present case, we shall assume that learned counsel is right in this first premise of his syllogism. Then it was said, and this was his second premise, that the goods of the petitioners bearing trade mark "Kaybee 60" are goods which fall in a class by themselves and sui generis and, therefore, they should be regarded as goods of like kind and quality. This second premise is wholly unsound, and one has only to look at the language of s. 30(b) to see that it is so. Section 30(b) requires that, where the price is not ascertainable the real value of the goods shall be deemed to be the cost at which goods of the like kind and quality could be delivered at such place. This must, of necessity, mean in a case of the nature before us goods other than those the real value of which has to be determined by application of the definition given in s. 30. It was on the footing of the above-mentioned two premises that the argument proceeded that in ascertaining the value of goods of like kind and quality the customs authorities should have taken into consideration the price paid by the petitioners themselves. Our attention was drawn by learned counsel to certain observations made in some reported cases. But we do not deem it necessary to examine them because those observations were made in different contexts and the question which arises for our determination did not directly arise for the decision of the Court in any of those cases. It is extremely difficult for us to see how goods of the nature before us, of which the real value has to be ascertained, can themselves be the data for the application of s. 30(b). But the submission of Mr. Jethmalani is otherwise. That appears to us to be the fallacy underlying the whole argument.

These were the contentions raised before us in support of the appeal by learned counsel for the petitioners-appellants. In our judgment, they fail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

There are cross-objections brought by the respondents to the appeal. The cross-objections relate to the offence under s. 167(8) of the Act read with s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act, 1947. The brief argument of Mr. Porus Mehta, learned counsel for the respondents to the appeal, who has urged these cross-objections before us, is that for the purposes of s. 167(8) of the Act and s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act the value of the goods must be the "real value" and that the licence of the petitioners permitted them to import goods only of the "value" of Rs. 3,260. The real value of the goods was ascertained to be Rs. 3,588 and, therefore, goods of the value of Rs. 328 more were imported by the petitioners. In our opinion, Mr. Justice K. K. Desai was right in the conclusion reached by him when he allowed the petitioners' contention on this part of the case. The licence of the petitioners speaks only of c.i.f. value of the goods and it is the c.i.f. value of the goods and not the real value of the goods, which, as we have said, is a notional value, that is relevant for the purpose of the offence alleged to have been committed under s. 167(8) of the Act read with s. 3(2) of the Imports and Exports Control Act, 1947. We are in agreement with the reasons which found favour with the learned trial Judge on this part of the case to which the cross-objections relate. There is, in our judgment, no substance in the cross-objections, and they will be dismissed with costs.

Before we part with this appeal, we should like to note that the petition related to two amounts of penalty—Rs. 325 and Rs. 160. We may observe that it was open to the petitioners to appeal to the higher authorities under the machinery contained in the Act itself. But the petitioners did not choose to adopt that course which they would normally be expected to do, but sought relief through this Court by way of an extraordinary writ. In a number of cases we have said that these are matters of discretion with the Court and a party cannot come before us as a matter of right. We have also said that we would be very slow to entertain these matters where the disputes relate to small penalties, unless some question of principle was involved or the nature and circumstances of the case were such as would invite the ready interference of this Court in order to do substantial justice between the parties. We were informed by Mr. Jethmalani that the present petition was filed in Court as a test case because similar goods of very large value were being imported into the country and it was felt desirable that the expeditious remedy by way of a writ should be sought by the petitioners. We have proceeded with the hearing of this appeal on that assurance given by learned counsel. In this case we have also assumed that when Rule Nisi was granted in this matter the learned Judge must have taken into consideration this aspect of the matter. We may observe that in cases where small penalties are imposed by the customs authorities and no fundamental right of the subject is violated, the Court should be rather slow in granting Rule Nisi unless it is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out for the interference of this Court by issuance of any of the extraordinary writs, and the circumstances of the case demand its interference. We may also observe that a petitioner who seeks relief from this Court by issuance of any of the prerogative writs should take care to set out in his petition the reasons why he approaches this Court instead of adopting the normal machinery available to him under the Act by appealing to higher authorities.

On the view taken by us, both the appeal and the cross-objections will be dismissed with costs. Costs to be taxed on long cause scale. Two counsel certified.

Appeal and Cross-objections dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Patel.

VAKRATUNDA CHINTAMAN DEO v. THE SPECIAL LAND ACQUISITION OFFICER, POONA.*

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), Secs. 3, 23, 24—Land assessed as agricultural land and valued as such in assessing compensation payable to occupants—Whether such land can be treated as fit for non-agricultural use in valuing interest of claimant—Whether Land Acquisition Officer can assess compensation payable to occupants and claimant in separate proceedings—Compensation whether can be awarded to claimant on account of circumstance that land may be put to non-agricultural use after acquisition—Whether compensation payable to claimant Inamdar can be awarded as market value or as compensation for damage.

Lands which are assessed to land revenue as agricultural land and which are valued in assessing compensation payable to the occupants as land fit only for agricultural use, cannot in valuing the interest of the claimant therein be treated as fit for non-agricultural use.

When land is acquired, all the interests of the owners of the land but not the interest of the State are notified for acquisition and after the composite value for all these interests is assessed the compensation is distributed amongst the owners of the diverse interests in the land in apportionment proceedings. Where, therefore, the Land Acquisition Officer proceeds to assess the compensation payable to the occupants in one proceeding and the compensation payable to the claimant in a separate proceeding, such proceedings would be irregular.

The circumstance that the land under acquisition may be put to non-agricultural use after it is acquired by the State has to be ignored under s. 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and compensation cannot be awarded to the claimant on that account.

*Decided, March 16/August 26, 1959. First Appeal No. 505 of 1956 (with First Appeals Nos. 506 and 507 of 1956), from the orders

A benefit to arise out of land is "land" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and by the acquisition of that interest the claimant becomes entitled to the market value thereof on the date of the publication of the notification. Therefore, compensation payable to a claimant for extinction of his interest as Inamdar of the land can be awarded as market value of that interest and not as compensation for damage and he is entitled to the 15 per cent. solatium on the amount awarded to him.

Every piece of land within a municipal area may not be assumed to have an immediate building potentiality.

THE facts are stated in the judgment.

SHAH J. These are three appeals from awards made by the Civil Judge, S.D., Poona, in a group of land acquisition references. By a notification published on December 12, 1946, in exercise of powers under s. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, the Government of Bombay notified for acquisition 276 acres and 35 gunthas of land out of the village of Aundh, in the district of Poona, for the National Chemical Laboratory. The lands at the date of the notification were in the possession of occupants. The claimant, who is one of the Inamdars of the village, was awarded Rs. 4,093-9-6 as capitalised value of agricultural assessment receivable by him in respect of the lands from the occupants. The occupants were separately awarded compensation for compulsory acquisition of their interest in the lands. We are, in these appeals, not concerned with the compensation which was awarded to the occupants of the lands. It may be noticed, however, that compensation was awarded to the occupants on the footing that the lands were assessed and put to agricultural use and had no immediate building potentiality. The claimant, who is one of the Inamdars of the village and is entitled to a six anna share in the Inam, prayed for a reference to the District Court at Poona, claiming that he was entitled to the capitalised value of the non-agricultural assessment of the land. A reference was accordingly made and was transferred for trial to the Civil Judge, Senior Division, and was numbered 132 of 1953. Before the Civil Judge, Senior Division, the claimant demanded compensation for extinction of his rights to mines, minerals etc. in the land and he also demanded compensation for extinction of the Inamdar's right to receive non-agricultural assessment on the footing that the lands had at the date of the notification acquired a building potentiality. The Civil Judge, Senior Division, rejected both the claims. He held that the claimant failed to establish that he was the owner of any mines or minerals in the lands, and that the lands had at the date of the notification not acquired any building potentiality. It appeared, however, that the Land Acquisition Officer committed an error in stating that the assessment of Survey No. 100B out of the lands notified for acquisition for the National Chemical Laboratory was Rs. 9 per annum and in capitalising the assessment at 30 times and in awarding to the claimant compensation accordingly. The assessment of the land S. No. 100B was Rs. 90 and not Rs. 9. The trial Judge rectified that mistake and awarded an additional amount of Rs. 2,430 to the claimant for his six anna share in the compensation. But the learned trial Judge did not award the 15 per cent. solatium in addition to the amount awarded nor did he award any interest on that amount to the claimant. Against the award made by the Civil Judge, the claimant has preferred appeal No. 505 of 1956 and has claimed that out of the total area of 273 acres and 35 gunthas, even if it be assumed that only 2 per cent. of the area be taken to be developed and assessed to non-agricultural use, at the rate of Rs. 49-8-0 per acre the Inamdars will be entitled to 30 times Rs. 287-12-0 and that the claimant's six anna share out of the same will be Rs. 3,374-3-0.

By another notification published on December 2, 1948, 5 acres and 19 gunthas, an area of land in village Aundh in the possession of occupants, was notified for acquisition for the Fruit Experimental Station. Compensation was awarded to the occupants who were in occupation of the land on the footing that the land was agricultural land and had no building potentiality. The claimant was awarded Rs. 222-3-0 by the Land Acquisition Officer as his six anna share in the capitalized value of the agricultural assessment. The claimant feeling dissatisfied with the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer applied for a reference to the District Court at Poona. A reference was accordingly made and was numbered 72 of 1953. In this reference also the claimant demanded the capitalized value of non-agricultural assessment of the land. The trial Judge negatived the claim and dismissed the reference. It may be observed that in this case the Land Acquisition Officer had awarded to the claimant 15 per cent. solatium on the capitalized value of his share of the assessment and the right of the claimant to that compensation was though somewhat reluctantly affirmed. Aggrieved by the award made by the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Appeal No. 506 of 1956 is preferred to this Court by the claimant.

By a third notification published on May 11, 1950, the Government of Bombay notified for acquisition 29 acres and 26 gunthas out of the village Aundh for a Serum Institute. The land was in the possession of occupants who were awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer compensation on the footing that the land was capable of agricultural use and had no building potentiality. The claimant was awarded Rs. 599-1-0 for his six anna share of the capitalized value of the agricultural assessment. The claimant was dissatisfied with the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer and applied for a reference to the District Court and a reference was accordingly made and transferred to the Civil Judge, Senior Division, for trial. That reference was No. 26 of 1953. Before the Civil Judge, Senior Division, the claimant demanded a six anna share in the capitalized value of the non-agricultural assessment at the rate of Rs. 50 per acre. The Civil Judge, Senior Division, rejected that claim and confirmed the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer and dismissed the reference. It may be noticed that in this case the Land Acquisition Officer did not award to the claimant 15 per cent. solatium on the claimant's share of compensation and the learned Judge affirmed that order. Against this award Appeal No. 507 of 1956 has been filed in this Court.

In Appeal No. 506 of 1956 the claim is restricted to Rs. 163-2-0 on the plea that out of the total area of 5 acres and 19 gunthas a minimum area of 2 per cent. had a building potentiality and the claimant claimed an additional amount of Rs. 163-2-0 being his share in the capitalized value of the non-agricultural assessment.

In Appeal No. 507 of 1956 the claim is restricted to Rs. 330 on the plea that out of the total area of 29 acres and 26 gunthas, 2 per cent. of the area had a building potentiality and capitalizing the non-agricultural assessment of that area the claimant claimed for his share an additional amount of Rs. 330.

In these three appeals Mr. Gharpure, who appears on behalf of the claimant, has contended that the trial Court erred in holding that the lands under acquisition had no immediate building potentiality. Mr. Gharpure has invited our attention to the fact that a substantial area out of the land of the village Aundh covered by Survey No. 25 is occupied by the Government House, Poona, and that in the year 1941 an Institute known as Spicer College was constructed in a part of the land of this village. Mr. Gharpure has also pointed out that the lands, which have been notified for acquisition for the National Chemical Laboratory, were requisitioned by the Government of Bombay for the use of the Defence forces and buildings had been constructed thereon. Mr. Gharpure says that the village of Aundh is in the vicinity of the developed area of the Town of Poona and is included within the limits of the Corporation of Poona, and having regard to the extensive building activity in the town, contends Mr. Gharpure, there was a reasonable possibility of the lands of the village of Aundh being converted to non-agricultural use in the near future and that the claimant was, therefore, entitled to the capitalized value of non-agricultural assessment on 2 per cent. of the total area acquired. Mr. Gharpure submits that because the lands have been acquired by the State of Bombay for non-agricultural use the market value of the interest of the claimant in the lands should be capitalized on the basis that his right to non-agricultural use is extinguished. As we have stated earlier, value of all the lands have been assessed in arriving at the compensation payable to the occupants of the lands on the footing that they were agricultural lands having no building potentiality. It is difficult to hold that the lands, which are assessed to land revenue as agricultural land and which are valued in assessing compensation payable to the occupants as land fit only for agricultural use, should in valuing the interest of the Inamdar therein be treated as fit for non-agricultural use. The claimant is, it appears, seeking to take advantage of the somewhat unusual method of valuation adopted by the Land Acquisition Officer of separately valuing the interest of the occupants and of the Inamdars. Normally when land is acquired, all the interests of the owners of the land but not the interest of the State are notified for acquisition and after the composite value for all those interests is assessed the compensation is distributed amongst the owners of the diverse interests in the land in apportionment proceedings. We are of the view that in this case the interest of the occupants in that land and the interest of Inamdars should have been valued in one proceeding for a consolidated amount and thereafter the amount of compensation should have been apportioned between the occupants and the Inamdars. But the Land Acquisition Officer proceeded to assess the compensation payable to the occupants in one proceeding and the compensation payable to the Inamdar in a separate procedure. This, in our judgment, was irregular. As however, the Land Acquisition Officer has separately valued the claim of the Inamdar in the land and separate references have been made to the District Court on the assumption that the Inamdars are entitled to claim compensation apart from the compensation, which is payable to the occupants, we do not think that sitting in appeal we will be justified in discarding the laborious enquiry, which has been made for assessing the compensation payable to the Inamdars. However irregular the procedure may be, we are of the view that the assessment of the value of the interest of the claimant as owner of a share in the Inamdar's rights may not at this late stage be interfered with.

It is conceded by the claimant, who have been examined in the Courts below, that in respect of the land which has been occupied by the Government House non-agricultural assessment is not received by the Inamdars. It is also conceded by him that the lands, acquired for the National Chemical Laboratory, which were originally requisitioned by the Government of Bombay for the Defence forces and on which hutments were constructed, had to be returned to the owners in their original condition, i.e. as agricultural lands. The circumstance, therefore, that some temporary hutments had during the period of requisition been constructed on this land will not, in our judgment, attribute to this land a building potentiality at the date of acquisition. The land at the date of the notification must be regarded as agricultural land. It is true that after the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act was enacted the limits of the Poona Corporation were extended and the village of Aundh is included therein. There is no clear evidence on the record to show that under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act this area was included within the Poona Municipal area. Even assuming that these lands were so included, in our view, every piece of land within the Municipal area may not be assumed to have an immediate building potentiality. It is conceded by the claimant in his evidence that the building development of the Poona Town had extended upto the boundary of the village Bopodi, which is to the East of the Government House. The village Bopodi is separated from the remaining lands of the Aundh village by an extensive area, which is covered by the Government House. It cannot be said that because upto the village Bopodi the building activity had extended at the date of the notification for acquisition, it was in the near future likely to reach the area under acquisition.

Strong reliance was placed by Mr. Gharpure on the evidence relating to construction of the Spicer College in the years 1941-42 in support of the plea that the claimants' lands have an immediate building potentiality. But these lands of the Spicer College are at a considerable distance from the lands which are acquired for the National Chemical Laboratory. Again it appears from the order passed by the Mamlatdar that the lands on which the Spicer College stands were converted to non-agricultural use without the sanction of the Collector, and fine and non-agricultural assessment were levied for unauthorised conversion. It was admitted by the claimant Deo in his evidence that without the order of the Collector he was not entitled to receive the altered assessment. Agricultural lands within the Inam village can normally be converted to non-agricultural use with the sanction of the Collector, and in the present case, on the admission made by the claimant, it cannot be said that he could have claimed non-agricultural assessment merely because the land was intended to be used for non-agricultural purpose by some one. Unless the conversion was sanctioned by the Collector, the non-agricultural user could not be made and assessment on that basis could not be claimed by the claimant. There is on the record no evidence to show that the Collector was approached for conversion of the land which it is alleged the intending purchaser or purchasers had a desire to convert to non-agricultural use. Even if we accept the evidence of the claimant which is not supported by any documentary evidence, that some Sindhi refugees had purchased lands in the village of Aundh for a co-operative society and some other persons had also purchased plots of land in that village for the same purpose, unless the sanction of the Collector was obtained permitting conversion, the assessment could not be regarded as altered. Admittedly in respect of the lands under acquisition, there has not been an attempted conversion to non-agricultural use and no part of that land was transferred or attempted to be transferred for non-agricultural purposes. The circumstance that the land under acquisition may be put to non-agricultural use after it is acquired by the State has to be ignored under s. 24 and compensation cannot be awarded to the claimant on that account. In our view, the Land Acquisition Officer and the learned trial Judge were right in holding that the lands under acquisition for the National Chemical Laboratory were agricultural lands and compensation payable to the claimant can only be assessed by capitalizing the agricultural assessment.

It is true that the lands, which are notified for acquisition for the Fruit Experimental Station and the Serum Institute, are adjacent to the Government House and that the Spicer College has been constructed in the vicinity of these lands. But, in our judgment, for reasons already stated while dealing with the lands acquired for the National Chemical Laboratory, these lands also cannot be regarded as having acquired any building potentiality and must be valued in awarding compensation to the claimants on the footing that only agricultural assessment is receivable in respect thereof.

The claimant is, therefore, not entitled in the three appeals to the capitalized value of non-agricultural assessment. It is urged by Mr. Gharpure that the Land Acquisition Officer and the trial Judge were in any event in error in not awarding to the claimant in references Nos. 132 of 1953 and 26 of 1953, the 15 per cent. solatium. In our view, that contention is correct and must be upheld. The trial Judge in the course of his judgment observed in para. 9 that he had to find out the "present value" of the loss suffered by the Inamdars due to acquisition of the lands and not the market value of their lands and he thought that the 15 per cent. solatium could not be awarded to the claimant on the loss suffered by the claimant. In our view, the learned trial Judge was in error in so holding. Under s. 3 of the Land Acquisition Act the expression "land" is defined as inclusive of benefits to arise out of land. When the Land Acquisition Officer assessed compensation to be paid to the claimant for the acquisition of their interest in the land he proceeded in substance to value land. Under s. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, the Court in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under the Act has to take into consideration the market-value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under s. 4, sub-s. (1) and certain other specified heads on which compensation for damage may be awarded. Compensation payable to the claimant for extinction of his interest as Inamdar of the land can, in our judgment, be awarded as the market value of that interest and not as compensation for damage. If the view taken by the learned trial Judge is correct the claimant will not be entitled to any compensation whatever. But a benefit to arise out of land is "land" within the meaning of s. 23 and evidently by the acquisition of that interest, the claimant became entitled to the market value thereof on the date of the publication of the notification. This view is supported by the form of the award prescribed by s. 26, which requires the Judge making an award to specify the amount awarded under clause first of sub-s. (1) of s. 23 and also the amounts, if any, respectively awarded under each of the other clauses of the same sub-section. It is evident that the Legislature has not contemplated any compensation to be awarded which does not fall within the six clauses of s. 23.

We are, therefore, of the view that the claimant was entitled to the 15 per cent. solatium on the amount awarded to him. The learned Judge in the Court below also has not awarded interest to which the claimant is in law entitled. The claimant will, therefore, be entitled to interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on the amount awarded. The award made by the Civil Judge, Senior Division, in reference No. 132 of 1953 is modified by awarding to the claimant 15 per cent. solatium on Rs. 2,430-0-0 and interest thereon at 4 per cent. per annum from November 6, 1949, and in reference No. 26 of 1953, i.e. Appeal No. 507 of 1956, the claimant is awarded 15 per cent. solatium on Rs. 599-1-0 and interest at the rate of 4 per cent. from the date on which possession was taken. In reference No. 72 of 1953 i.e. Appeal No. 506 of 1956, the claimant is awarded interest on Rs. 222-3-0 at the rate of 4 per cent. from the date on which possession was taken till payment. There will be no order as to costs in all the three appeals.

Order accordingly.

KANAKMAL LALCHAND MUNOT v. THE STATE.*

Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act (Bom. LIX of 1949), Sec. 313†—Machinery of printing press completely destroyed except treadle machines—Printing press started again in newly constructed shed after electric installation and purchase of new machinery—Applicability of s. 313(1)—Whether a factory newly established or old factory re-opened or renewed.

Section 313(1) of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act, 1949, comes into operation if the facts disclose that a particular factory is completely destroyed

*Decided, April 18, 1958. Criminal Revision Application No. 205 of 1958, against the decision of N. D. Kamat, Additional Sessions Judge, Poona, in Criminal Appeal No. 125 of 1957, confirming the order of conviction and sentence passed by R. K. Pujari, Special Magistrate, First Class, Poona (Municipal Corporation), in Criminal Case S. T. No. 9280 of 1956.

†The relevant section runs thus :

313. No person shall—

- (i) newly establish in any premises,
- (ii) remove from one place to another,
- (iii) re-open or renew after discontinuance for a period of not less than three years, or
- (iv) enlarge or extend the area or dimensions of,

any factory, workshop or workplace in which it is intended to employ steam, water, electrical or other mechanical power or any bakery except with the previous written permission of the Commissioner nor shall any person work or allow to be worked any such factory, workshop, workplace or bakery without such permission :

Provided that for the purpose of clause (iii) no such permission shall be required if during the period of discontinuance the machinery has not been removed from the place where the factory, workshop or bakery was originally established.

and that, in substance, a new factory has been brought into existence. If, on the other hand, the facts establish that the factory was not completely destroyed, but that there was only discontinuance of the factory, then, if the factory comes to be re-opened or renewed, the offence will not be committed unless the prosecution shows that discontinuance was for more than three years, or unless the case comes within the proviso to s. 313 of the Act. The test to be applied in each case is to discover whether the functions performed or capable of being performed by the undestroyed parts are such that the factory cannot efficiently function as a unit and can perform the task of producing the final result or product for the production of which it was erected and for which alone it was intended to exist. The substance of the matter has got to be considered. If, on the evidence, the substance of the matter turns out to be that the old factory has come to be destroyed in the sense that the old factory cannot, in substance, perform its function, then, it would come within the purview of s. 313(i). On the contrary, if the substance of the whole matter is that the factory has not come to be destroyed but it has only come to be discontinued, then, in that case, s. 313(ii) would apply.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. A. Bame, for the applicant-accused.

Y. V. Chandrachud, for the complainant.

V. H. Gumaste, Additional Assistant Government Pleader, for the State.

MIABHOY J. The petitioner has been convicted for the offence under s. 392 of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1949, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. The conviction is based on the finding that the petitioner committed a breach of s. 313, cl. (i), of the aforesaid Act. The facts which are not in dispute are as follows: The petitioner, before March 30, 1956, was conducting a printing press in the name and style of "Prakash Printing Press" in house No. 1461-62, Raviwar Peth, Poona City, since the year 1934. On March 30, 1956, there was a big fire in that locality and many houses, shops and other establishments, situated in that locality including the printing press of the petitioner, were completely destroyed. The finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Poona, is that, in the aforesaid fire, the building in which the press was housed fell down completely and that the machinery was completely destroyed, except two treadle machines which escaped the blaze. The further finding is that, thereafter, on or about April 23, 1956, the petitioner constructed a new shed, installed electric installation, purchased some machinery and started the printing press. On the aforesaid facts, both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that the petitioner had committed a breach of s. 313 of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1949. The clause which the petitioner is found to have contravened is cl. (i). In effect, that clause states that no person shall "newly establish, in any premises, any factory". The contention of the prosecution is that, by the aforesaid acts, which the petitioner has done, he has newly established a factory in the premises. On the other hand, the contention of the petitioner is that his case comes within the purview of cl. (ii) of s. 313. Under that clause, a person is prohibited from re-opening or renewing a factory after discontinuance thereof for a period of not less than three years. Therefore, the contention of the petitioner is that he has only re-opened or renewed his old factory, and that, as he has done this, within a period of three years, he is not liable under s. 313 of the Act. In my opinion, this is a mixed question of law and fact. If the facts disclose that a particular factory is completely destroyed and that, in substance, a new factory has been brought into existence, then, cl. (i) of the Act comes into operation. If, on the other hand, the facts establish that the factory was not completely destroyed, but that there was only discontinuance of the factory, then, if the factory comes to be re-opened or renewed, the offence will not be committed unless the prosecution shows that discontinuance was for more than three years, or unless the case comes within the proviso to s. 313 of the Act.

The argument which was advanced by Mr. Rane was that, in spite of the fact that the building and the machinery had been completely destroyed, the factory continued to be in existence. His argument was that the lands on which the factory-building was situated had remained intact, that, at least, two treadle machines had survived, and that the workers of the factory had not been discharged. In support of his argument, Mr. Rane drew my attention to the definition of the word "factory" as given in the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1940. That definition refers to the definition of the word "factory" as given in the Indian Factories Act. In order that there may be a factory, it is necessary that there should be premises, that there should be ten or more persons working on those premises; and that, in any part thereof, manufacturing process must be carried on with the aid of power. The word "premises" has been defined in the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act also, and the definition includes a "land". Therefore, the argument of Mr. Rane was that a factory does not merely mean a building in which the business of manufacturing is being carried on. He contended that, in order that a thing may be a factory, it is necessary that there should be premises, workers and mechanical power, and inasmuch as in the present case the workers had not been discharged, the land had remained intact, and two machines were saved, the old factory was there and, therefore, it cannot be said that a new factory had come to be established. In my opinion, it would not be proper to look at the matter piecemeal in the manner urged by Mr. Rane. A factory is not merely a juxtaposition or a conglomeration of premises, power and workmen, so that if some of these only disappear and one or the other of them happens to survive, a factory is still in existence; but a factory is an organism, an independent unit performing various functions, and in discharge of these functions a part or a function may be so vital in a given case that the question for consideration in each case would be whether, in the circumstances, the parts destroyed are such that the factory must be deemed to be dead or whether the undestroyed parts keep the thing alive in spite of the loss of some of the parts. The test to be applied in each case is to discover, whether the functions performed or capable of being performed by the undestroyed parts are such that the factory can efficiently function as a unit and can perform the task of producing the final result or product for the production of which it was erected and for which alone it was intended to exist. In my opinion, the substance of the matter has got to be considered. If, on the evidence, the substance of the matter turns out to be that the old factory has come to be destroyed in the sense that the old factory cannot, in substance, perform its function, then, it would come within the purview of cl. (i) aforesaid. On the contrary, if the substance of the whole matter is that the factory has not come to be destroyed but it has only come to be discontinued, then, in that case, cl. (ii) would apply, and, unless the prosecution establishes that the factory was discontinued for more than three years, a conviction cannot be recorded. In the present case, in my opinion, having regard to all the circumstances, the learned Judges below were justified in holding that what had taken place was that the old factory had substantially disappeared and that it did not remain in existence, and, therefore, when the petitioner erected a new shed, and brought new machinery on the premises, a factory had come to be newly established.

A distinction was sought to be made between the establishment of a new factory and newly establishing a factory. It was contended that cl. (i) applies only to those cases where a fresh factory, which was never in existence, is brought into existence for the first time, and that clause is inapplicable to cases where there was a factory once in existence and a new factory is brought into existence in place of old. I am not in agreement with this submission. In my opinion, that would be putting an unnatural construction upon the aforesaid clauses. Reading cl. (i) and (ii) together, the substance of the whole matter appears to be that the task in each case is to determine whether the old factory is completely destroyed or whether the old factory has only been discontinued. If the old factory is discontinued, cl. (iii) applies; and, if the old factory is completely destroyed, and a new factory has come into existence, then cl. (i) applies. Therefore, in my opinion, the conviction which has been recorded against the petitioner is correct.

[The rest of the judgment is not material to this report.]

THE STATE OF BOMBAY v. GAYA DEEPCHAND.*

Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act (CIV of 1956), Sec. 3(1)

—Women and girls used for immoral traffic in houses of prostitution whether can be charged under s. 3(1).

Section 3(1) of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956, penalises persons who establish and maintain houses of prostitution or act or assist in keeping or managing them. But women or girls who are used for immoral traffic in such houses of prostitution are not liable to punishment under this section.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for the State.

D. L. Jayavant, for opponents Nos. 1 to 4.

KOTVAL J. This is a reference by the Sessions Judge, West Berar Division, Akola, recommending that a charge under s. 3 of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956 (No. 104 of 1956), framed against the four opponents Gaya, Saru, Subhadra and Bani by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, in Criminal Case No. 82 of 1958 should be quashed. The prosecution case was that on the outskirts of Akola town near the temple of Kala Maroti there is a house of prostitution being run by one Janabai, accused No. 1, who is the mistress of one Brahmanand. On August 20, 1958, the Sub-Divisional Police Officer, City Division, Akola, decided to send a customer into this house. He was Sheikh Kasam. He was given five currency notes of Re. 1 each in the presence of panchas and ordered to go to the brothel and have sexual intercourse with one of the girls in that brothel on payment. It was the prosecution case that accordingly Sheikh Kasam went to the brothel, talked to Janabai, accused No. 1, and asked for a girl or woman for sexual intercourse. Accused No. 1 showed him four girls, the opponents before this Court, and Sheikh Kasam selected the opponent Saru, wife of Vikram. He agreed to pay Rs. 3 which accused No. 1 accepted. She then allowed Sheikh Kasam to have sexual intercourse with Saru in one of the rooms in the brothel. The Sub-Divisional Officer and the panchas were hiding themselves in the darkness round about the brothel waiting for Sheikh Kasam to come out. It was the prosecution case that Sheikh Kasam, after having sexual intercourse, came out of the brothel and lighted a cigarette which was a pre-arranged signal that he had done his job. Thereupon the police officers and the panchas raided the brothel and the house of accused No. 1. Three currency notes of Re. 1 each were seized from the possession of accused No. 1 and they were attached under a seizure memo.

It was upon these facts that the four opponents along with Janabai were put up for trial before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who framed charges under s. 3 of the Act against all of them.

I am not concerned here with sub-s. (2) of s. 3 of the Act but only with sub-s. (1) thereof which runs as follows:—

"Any person who keeps or manages, or acts or assists in the keeping or management of, a brothel shall be punishable on first conviction with rigorous imprisonment for a term of not less than one year and not more than three years and also with fine which may extend to two thousands rupees and in the event of a second or subsequent conviction, with rigorous imprisonment for a term of not less than two years and not more than five years and also with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees."

The sub-section penalises the keeper or manager or the person who acts or assists in the keeping or managing of a brothel. It is clear that it is intended to hit at persons who establish and maintain houses of prostitution or act or assist in keeping or managing them. There is absolutely nothing in the complaint so far as the four opponents are concerned, from which it can be held that they were either keeping or managing or acting or assisting in the "keeping or management" of a brothel. On the other hand, it appears that these four girls were the unfortunate victims and were the persons who were being used by those who kept or managed the brothel or acted or assisted in keeping or managing it.

The Act was passed in pursuance of the International Convention signed at New York for the suppression of immoral traffic in women and girls. It was never intended that the women or girls used for such traffic should be liable to punishment. In this case the accused Janabai was alleged to be keeping or managing the brothel and was, therefore, rightly charged; but I am unable to see what was the offence which the four opponents had committed. I accept the reference and quash the charge framed against the four opponents by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on November 5, 1958. The Magistrate will decide for himself whether or not to take action in respect of these girls under any of the other provisions of the Act. As to that I express no opinion.

I cannot part with this case without a word as to the nature of the investigation undertaken by the police and by an officer of the rank of Sub-Divisional Police Officer. The averments in the challan itself are that the police officer asked Sheikh Kasam to go into the brothel, ask for a girl on payment, make payment and have sexual intercourse with her. It is further admitted that under the very auspices of the police, this Sheikh Kasam did enter the brothel and have sexual intercourse with the youngest of the four girls, namely, Saru, wife of Vikram. While all this was happening under the guise of lawful investigation, the Sub-Divisional Police Officer and the panchas stood in the darkness roundabout the brothel and after some time, Sheikh Kasam came out and announced by a pre-arranged signal that he had had sexual intercourse with the girl.

To my mind, nothing can be more reprehensible than the conduct of this investigation. Under the very auspices of the officers charged with the duty of suppressing immoral traffic in women and girls, Sk. Kasam had sexual intercourse with Saru. Rather than suppress such traffic, the investigation encouraged it. If investigations under this Act are to proceed in this manner, in conceivable cases it will be difficult to determine whether a person was committing an offence under the Act or carrying on an investigation. Such investigations also will not have any salubrious effect upon the public mind and will not achieve the object for which the Act was passed. I think it my duty to bring the facts of this case to the notice of the State Government for such action as they may choose to take in regard to investigations under the Act.

seeks to get quashed order dated May 7, 1958, made by the State Industrial Court, Nagpur, respondent No. 2 hereto.

Facts in brief are that respondent No. 1 Kundanmal Sardarmal Jain was employed as a clerk in the petitioner mills and at the material time he was drawing Rs. 130 inclusive of all allowances. It appears that certain disputes relating to the Textile Mills between the employers and the employees of the Textile Mills in Berar were referred to an arbitration of Mr. Justice Mangal-murti and the award was made by him sometime in the year 1949. In pursuance of that award Standing Orders were framed for different mills. We are here concerned with sub-cl. (1) of cl. 14 of the Standing Orders. It reads:

"Sick leave on full average pay shall be granted to clerks upto a maximum of eight days in a completed period of one year's service. This leave is cumulative upto a maximum of eight months in the whole service of 30 years on the certificate, each time, either of Doctor attached to the establishment or any Registered Medical Practitioner. If the clerk is under the treatment of any Registered Medical Practitioner other than the Doctor attached to the establishment, he shall send intimation of his illness to the management at once by registered post. If such intimation is delayed without reasonable cause, he shall forfeit the right to medical leave on that occasion. It shall be open to the Manager to get the condition of the employee certified by the Doctor attached to the establishment. A clerk shall be entitled to the balance of any sick leave due to him on his retirement either before or after completion of 30 years' service or 55 years of age or on termination of his services before the expiry of 30 years' service or 55 years of age on any grounds except that of misconduct under Standing Order No. 24."

On January 11, 1956, the petitioner mills served a notice on respondent No. 1 informing him that he (respondent) would be 55 years of age on January 12, 1956, and, therefore, under the aforesaid Standing Order his services would stand terminated and that he would be paid one month's salary. The Standing Order is not before us, but Mr. Mudholkar, learned counsel for the petitioner, says that these were roughly the contents of the notice dated January 11, 1956.

On June 22, 1956, respondent No. 1 made an application in the District Industrial Court purporting to be one under s. 23 read with r. 36 of the C.P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947, wherein he contended that the termination of his services was wrong and in the alternative he claimed that termination of his services without payment of money compensation in lieu of 4 months 6 days accumulated sick leave was wrongful.

This application of respondent No. 1 was contested by the petitioner mills. It was contended by the mills that respondent No. 1 was not entitled to claim money compensation for the accumulated sick leave after the date of retirement. He had completed the age of 55 and was, therefore, validly retired as and from January 12, 1956. The District Industrial Court did not accept the contention of respondent No. 1 that he was wrongfully retired but accepted his contention negating that of the petitioner that he was entitled to money compensation for the accumulated sick leave and consistently with this finding it ordered that Rs. 585 be paid by the mills to respondent No. 1 as money compensation in lieu of the accumulated sick leave of respondent No. 1. Feeling aggrieved by this order both the petitioner mills as well as respondent No. 1 took appeals to the State Industrial Court. Respondent No. 1 challenged the correctness of the finding of the District Industrial Court that the termination of the services was not wrongful. The petitioner in their appeal challenged the finding of the District Industrial Court that respondent No. 1 was entitled to money compensation in lieu of the accumulated sick leave. The appeal filed by respondent No. 1 was dismissed. The appeal of the petitioner partly succeeded. The State Industrial Court held that respondent No. 1 was entitled to get money compensation for the accumulated sick leave but in its view the District Industrial Court could not order payment of the compensation. The State Industrial Court to that extent modified the order of the District Industrial Court. It is necessary to mention that though the question of jurisdiction was not raised before the District Industrial Court the petitioner raised that question at the appellate stage before the State Industrial Court. The contention of the petitioner was that respondent No. 1 not being an employee on the date he moved the District Industrial Court, the District Industrial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. The State Industrial Court in its order appears to have allowed the question to be raised before it and has decided it against the petitioner. The petitioner, therefore, has preferred this petition.

Mr. G. R. Mudholkar, learned counsel for the petitioner, has raised two questions before us. In the first instance he contends that respondent No. 1 not being an employee on the date he moved the District Industrial Court, the District Industrial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under s. 23 read with r. 36 or s. 41 of the Act and in the alternative Mr. Mudholkar contended that respondent No. 1 was not entitled to claim money compensation for the period of accumulated sick leave after the date of his retirement. In our opinion both the contentions have no force and are covered by two authorities of this Court.

As regards the first contention regarding jurisdiction of the District Industrial Court, it is true that respondent No. 1 was not an employee on the date he moved the District Industrial Court but then that is not a condition precedent for moving the Industrial Court. On the language of s. 41 which authorises certain persons to move the Industrial Court an employee is entitled to move it in respect of an industrial dispute. The definition of employee is contained in s. 2(10) of the Act. It reads:

“‘employee’ means any person employed by an employer to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work for contract or hire or reward in any industry (and includes an employee dismissed, discharged or removed on account of any industrial dispute).”

This definition of employee is in pari materia with the definition of ‘workman’ contained in s. 2(s) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. Under the Act, i.e. the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, matter was taken to this Court in P. L. Mayekar v. Amichand.¹ A certain dispute between dismissed employees and an employer arose. The employees were dismissed prior to September 16, 1952. The State Government on September 16, 1952, made a reference about an industrial dispute to the Industrial Tribunal. Consequent thereon the Tribunal made an award and directed the employer to reinstate the dismissed employees. An appeal against that order failed. This Court was then moved and the contention raised by Mr. Gupte, learned counsel on behalf of the employer, was that looking to the definition of workman contained in s. 2(s) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and inasmuch as the workmen were dismissed prior to the date of reference by the State Government, they did not fall within the definition of workman and, therefore, no industrial dispute could be raised with regard to them. Repelling this contention of Mr. Gupte, the learned Chief Justice observed (p. 1004):

“...There is no reason whatever, looking to the definition of ‘workman’, to restrict the expression ‘employed’ to the point of time which Mr. Gupte suggested it should be restricted. So long as the workman was employed by the employer against whom he wishes to raise the industrial dispute and the dispute is of the nature required by the definition of ‘industrial dispute’, he is a workman falling within the definition of s. 2(s).”

We are in respectful agreement with the aforesaid observations. They however will have to be read with slight modification in view of the fact that the field covered by the expression ‘industrial dispute’ used in the Industrial Disputes Act is included in the expressions ‘an industrial dispute’ and ‘an industrial matter’ used in the C. P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947. The ratio of the said decision so far as the C. P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act is concerned, in our opinion, should be:—

“There is no reason whatever, looking to the definition of an ‘employee’ to hold that he must in fact be an employee on the date he moves the Industrial Court. So long as the employee was employed by the employer against whom he wishes to raise the industrial dispute or a dispute relating to an industrial matter and the dispute raised by him is of the nature required by the definition of 'industrial dispute' and 'industrial matter', he is an employee falling within the definition of section 2(10) of the C.P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act."

Section 23(1) provides that the State Government may constitute a District Industrial Court for any local area to determine such industrial disputes and to deal with such other industrial matters under the provisions of this Act as may be prescribed, and these matters are prescribed by r. 36 of the rules framed under the Act. We are here concerned with cls. (b) and (c) of r. 36. Under these clauses, the District Industrial Court is empowered to interpret a Standing Order and adjudicate upon the propriety or legality of an order passed by an employer under the Standing Order. The dispute raised in the instant case by respondent No. 1 relates to the interpretation of cl. 14 of the Standing Order and the legality of the order made by the petitioner mills on January 11, 1956, under that clause, whereunder the petitioner mills had ordered that respondent No. 1 should be retired from January 12, 1956, on payment of one-month's salary only. In these circumstances, in our opinion, there is no substance in the contention of Mr. Mudholkar that the District Industrial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application.

The second question that respondent No. 1 is not entitled to money compensation in lieu of the accumulated sick leave after the date of retirement is also covered by a decision of a division Bench of this Court reported in *B. S. Rekhandani v. Mohammad Kasam*² to which one of us (Tambe J.) was a party. The Standing Order which fell for construction in that case was in identical terms with the Standing Order in the present case and though the dispute raised in that case was under the Payment of Wages Act one of the questions raised in that case was the same as is raised before us and it was held therein that an employee was entitled to receive after retirement money compensation in lieu of the accumulated sick leave under the aforesaid Standing Order. We see no reason to take a different view.

In the result, therefore, the petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

M/S SULTAN BROTHERS PRIVATE LTD. v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY II, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 12(4)—Applicability of s. 12(4)—Whether section applies where there is letting of building for running hotel and furniture and fixtures installed therein for such purpose.

Section 12(4) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, will apply only if the primary letting is of machinery, plant or furniture and the secondary letting is of the buildings and the two lettings are inseparable.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. A. Palkhivala, with B. J. Kolah, for the petitioner.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee, who are a limited company, obtained on lease a plot of land at the Backbay Reclamation in Bombay and put up a residential building which could be adapted for use as a hotel, and furnished the same by installing furniture and fixtures and let it out to a tenant under a deed dated

*Decided, July 2, 1959. Income-tax Reference No. 69 of 1958.

August 30, 1943, for six years for using it as a hotel. After the expiry of the period of the lease another deed of lease was executed on August 13, 1949. By that lease the lessee agreed to pay a net monthly rental of Rs. 5,950 for the lease of the building and Rs. 5,000 for the hire of furniture and fixtures. Initially, the Income-tax Officer assessed the rental income under s. 12 of the Income-tax Act. For the assessment year 1952-53, the assessment proceedings were brought before the Tribunal and the Tribunal observed in the course of its judgment, though that question did not arise in that case, that "the question whether income from that property should be computed under Section 9 or under Section 12 deserves further scrutiny". The Income-tax Officer then computed for the assessment year 1953-54 the income out of the building under s. 9 of the Income-tax Act and the income derived from hiring of the furniture and fixtures under s. 12 of the Act. Against the order passed by the Income-tax Officer, the assessee appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. That Officer substantially confirmed the order passed by the Income-tax Officer. There was an appeal by the assessee to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal and the Tribunal affirmed the view of the taxing authorities. At the instance of the assessee, the Tribunal has referred the following question:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case, the income derived from letting of the building constructed on Plot No. 7 is property to be computed under section 9, 10 or under section 12 of the Income-tax Act?"

The question whether the income derived from the letting of the building and the furniture can be assessed under s. 10 is easily answered. Neither before the Income-tax Officer nor before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was the contention ever advanced that the assessee was letting out the building as a business venture. This contention was advanced for the first time before the Appellate Tribunal and the Tribunal negatived it holding that there were no materials which justified it. It was urged that from the ownership of the property used as an asset of a business concern income was being obtained. In our view, there is nothing in the deed of lease which supports the contention of the assessee, nor are there any materials on the record which justify that view. The income derived from the letting of the building and the furniture and fixtures cannot therefore be computed under s. 10 of the Act.

Section 9 of the Income-tax Act makes provision for computation of income under the head "Property". Section 10 makes provision for computation of income received from business and s. 12 for computation of income received from other sources. By cl. (3) of s. 12 which was added by Act VII of 1939 it was enacted that where an assessee lets on hire machinery, plant or furniture belonging to him, he shall be entitled to allowances in accordance with the provisions of cls. (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10. Evidently by enacting this clause, the Legislature intended to give the benefit of those four clauses of s. 10(2) to an assessee who was not carrying on a business of letting out on hire machinery, plant or furniture but who had as an owner of the property let out the same. By cl. (4), which was added by Act XXIII of 1941, an additional provision was made granting the benefit of the provisions of cls. (iv), (v), (vi), and (vii) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10 to the owner of the building when he had let on hire machinery, plant or furniture belonging to him, and also the building, and the letting out of the building was inseparable from the letting of the machinery, plant or furniture. For computation of income received from buildings under s. 9, a provision for granting allowances in accordance with cls. (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10 has not been made. Evidently by cl. (4) of s. 12, a different category was sought to be created in respect of which the prescribed allowances were to be given to the owner of certain buildings in the computation of his income. Clause (3) and (4) of s. 12 have, in our judgment, to be read together. By cl. (3) an assessee becomes entitled to the prescribed allowances before the income received from letting out of machinery, plant or furniture is included in his total income and to a similar allowance in respect of certain buildings under cl. (4). But that benefit can only be given in respect of buildings, provided the conditions prescribed by sub-s. (4) of s. 12 are fulfilled; and those conditions are that there is a letting on hire of machinery, plant or furniture belonging to the assessee, that along with that letting the buildings are let out and that the letting of the buildings is inseparable from the letting of the said machinery, plant or furniture. In our judgment, it was intended by the Legislature that the primary letting must be of the machinery, plant or furniture and that together with or along with such letting there is a letting of buildings, the two lettings being inseparable from each other. It is only if these conditions are fulfilled that the taxable income of the buildings will be computed under sub-s. (4) of s. 12. We are unable to accept the argument of Mr. Palkhivala that if there is a letting on hire of machinery, plant or furniture and there is also a letting of a building and that the two lettings are inseparable, in computing the income from the building, the lessor will be entitled to the allowances under cls. (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-s. (2) of s. 10. The condition of inseparability of the lettings is not the only condition prescribed by the Legislature to enable the lessor of the building to qualify for the benefits of the allowances under the specified clauses of s. 10(2). We are, therefore, of the view that if the primary letting is of machinery, plant, or furniture and the secondary letting is of the buildings, and the two lettings are inseparable, then only will the provisions of sub-s. (4) of s. 12 apply.

Mr. Palkhivala contends that even if that be the true interpretation of sub-s. (4) of s. 12, in the present case, the primary letting is of the furniture and fixtures and the letting of the building is incidental thereto. He invites our attention to the fact that a substantial sum has been spent for providing furniture and fixtures, and the monthly rental of the furniture and fixtures alone is Rs. 5,000 whereas the rental of the building is Rs. 5,950. Mr. Palkhivala contends that under the terms of the lease no special importance having been given to the letting of the building on the one hand or furniture and fixtures on the other, the Court must have regard to the fact that the entire unit was intended to be let for the purpose of a hotel and was in fact let out for the purpose of running a hotel, boarding and lodging house or a restaurant, and that the intention was to let out the unit in which the primary letting was of the furniture or fittings or fixtures. We are unable on the plain words used in the document to accept that contention. What has been let out is the building constructed by the assessee, and for making the building fit for running a hotel or a boarding and lodging house or a restaurant, furniture and fixtures have been installed. It cannot be said in the case of such a lease that the lease was primarily of furniture and not of the building.

Mr. Palkhivala says that in para. 7 of the judgment of the Tribunal, an erroneous statement was made as to the true effect of s. 10(2)(vi) and (v), but we do not think that anything turns in this case upon the alleged erroneous statement relating to the true effect of these clauses.

On the view taken by us, the question will be answered as follows:

"the income from the building will be computed under Section 9; income from furniture and fixtures under Section 12(3); and that no part of the income is taxable under Section 10."

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Tambe and Mr. Justice Raju.

RAISAHEB SETH GOPIKISAN AGARWAL MINE OWNERS AND EXPORTERS v. SALES TAX OFFICER, GONDIA CIRCLE, GONDIA.*

Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Rules, 1947, Rr. 67, 19—Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act (XXI of 1947), Sec. 11(2)—Whether Sales Tax Officer can transfer case to Assistant Commissioner—Validity of issue of notice under s. 11(2) by Sales Tax Officer when case transferred by him to Assistant Commissioner.

Under the relevant rules framed under the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, the Sales Tax Officer or the Assistant Commissioner has jurisdiction in the first instance to deal with all the cases of registered dealers in the Vidarbha region and scrutinize their returns, and it is only when he finds from the material on record or it is established that the gross turnover or taxable turnover of the assessee in the year preceding the year of assessment exceeds the pecuniary limit, he has to transfer the case to the Assistant Commissioner. The Act has by necessary implication conferred jurisdiction on the Sales Tax Officer to determine what are the cases which fall within his jurisdiction. Therefore, whatever he does upto that stage e.g. issue of a notice under s. 11(2) of the Act, is done by him within his jurisdiction, even if he thereafter reaches a conclusion that the case is triable by an Assistant Commissioner.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

S. W. Dhabe, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for the respondents.

TAMBE J. This judgment in Special Civil Application No. 401 of 1958 shall also govern the decision of Special Civil Application No. 402 of 1958. Both these petitions arise out of the matter arising out of the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947. Petition No. 402 relates to the year 1952-53 and petition No. 401 relates to the year 1953-54.

Rai Saheb Seth Gopikisan Agarwal, petitioner in both the cases, was a registered dealer at the material time within the meaning of the Sales Tax Act. The petitioner is a proprietor of the business known as Rai Saheb Gopikisan Agarwal Mine Owners and Exporters, having his office at Tumsar, a place in Vidarbha region. The petitioner's firm, according to him, carries on business of extracting manganese and exporting the ore outside India. The petitioner's accounting year is from Diwali to Diwali. The petitioner, therefore, has chosen this year for the purpose of the sales tax. Accordingly the year 1952-53 was for purposes of accounting from October 19, 1952, to November 6, 1953, and the year 1953-54 was from November 7, 1953, to October 26, 1954. During both these years the petitioner filed before the Sales Tax Officer, Gondia Circle, (respondent No. 1 in both the petitions) quarterly returns, but those returns were blank, as according to the petitioner no sale having taken place within the Vidarbha region he was not liable to pay any amount by way of sales tax under the Act. It appears that both these cases were taken together by the Sales Tax Officer though separate orders in each case were passed. On July 20, 1955, the Sales Tax Officer issued two notices in respect of the two years under sub-s. (2) of s. 11 of the Act to the petitioner calling upon him to:—

"(i) to produce evidence or have it produced in support of the returns;

(ii) to produce or cause to be produced accounts, registers, cash memoranda, or other documents out of those shown in the appended list."

The cases were then heard and it appears that on December 23, 1955, Mr. S. N.

*Decided, July 3, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 402 of 1958).
Application No. 401 of 1958 (with Special Civil

Agarwal, agent of the petitioner, made a statement before the Sales Tax Officer, in the case relating to the year 1953-54, that for the year under assessment the gross turnover was more than Rs. 20,00,000. On the basis of the statement it appears the Sales Tax Officer transferred both the cases to the Assistant Commissioner, Sales Tax, for necessary action. The Assistant Commissioner later on gave notice on September 25, 1957, to the petitioner. A copy of the notice filed by the petitioner in Special Civil Application No. 401 of 1958 (Annexure B) shows that it was a notice under sub-s. (3) of s. 10 of the Act. It appears that the Assistant Commissioner treated the blank returns filed by the petitioner as failure on his part to furnish the returns. By this notice, therefore, the Assistant Commissioner called upon the petitioner to show cause why action should not be taken against him. The proceedings continued before the Sales Tax Commissioner for some time and under the order of the Commissioner of date May 23, 1958, both these cases were transferred back to the Sales Tax Officer. On July 4, 1958, the Sales Tax Officer issued a notice under sub-s. (2) of s. 11 against the petitioner in respect of the year 1952-53, and he issued another notice on the same day, purported to be one under sub-s. (3) of s. 10, sub-ss. (4)(a) and (5) of s. 11, and sub-s. (1) of s. 22-C of the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947. By both these notices the petitioner was called upon to appear on July 24, 1958, in both the cases.

The petitioner appeared in response to the notices and it appears that the cases were not taken up on July 24, 1958, but were taken up on August 26, 1958. On behalf of the petitioner an objection was raised that the notices dated July 4, 1958, having been issued after the expiry of a period of three years for which it was proposed to make the assessment, were bad in law and, therefore, no action could be taken against the petitioner. This objection of the petitioner was overruled by the Sales Tax Officer by his order dated August 27, 1958, on the ground that the notice under s. 11(2) of the Act was first issued to the petitioner on July 20, 1955. This notice was within the period of three years and hence the proceedings against the petitioner were tenable. It is these two orders of August 27, 1958, against which these two petitions are filed.

Mr. Dhabe, learned counsel for the petitioner, contends that the notices of date July 20, 1955, have no validity in the eye of law. Admittedly, the Sales Tax Officer himself held that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the cases and has transferred the cases to the Assistant Commissioner on December 23, 1955. The notices of July 20, 1955, given by the Sales Tax Officer have, therefore, no legal validity and no proceedings could be founded on the basis of those notices. The only notices which are legal and valid, according to Mr. Dhabe, are the notices of July 4, 1958. Those notices were given after a period of three years, are therefore bad in law and no proceedings could be founded on the strength of those notices. Reliance is placed in support of this contention on a Full Bench decision of this Court reported in Bisesar House v. State of Bombay.¹

Mr. Abhyankar for the respondents contends that the notices of date July 20, 1955, are valid. The Sales Tax Officer had jurisdiction to deal with the cases. It has not been shown by the petitioner that the Sales Tax Officer was incompetent on July 20, 1955, to deal with the cases. The action and the proceedings could be founded, therefore, on the basis of those notices. The proceedings commenced on the basis of those notices are, therefore, valid. In the alternative Mr. Abhyankar contends that even if it is held that the only valid notices in these cases are of date July 4, 1958, then the effect of the aforesaid decision of this Court is taken away by virtue of s. 6 of the Bombay Sales Tax Laws (Validating Provisions and Amendment) Act, 1959 (Act XXII of 1959) which came into force on April 18, 1959.

The first question that arises is whether the notices issued by the Sales Tax Officer under sub-s. (2) of s. 11 of the Sales Tax Act on July 20, 1955, were valid notices. As already stated, the petitioner is a registered dealer. The petitioner had in fact filed returns for both the years 1952-53 and 1953-54 though the returns were blank. Section 11 reads:—

"11. (1) If the Commissioner is satisfied that the return furnished by a dealer in respect of any period are correct and complete, he shall assess the dealer on them.

(2) If the Commissioner is not satisfied he shall serve the dealer with a notice appointing a place and day and directing him—

(i) to appear in person or by an agent entitled to appear in accordance with the provisions of section 11B;

(ii) to produce evidence or have it produced in support of the returns; or

(iii) to produce or cause to be produced any accounts, registers, cash memoranda or other documents as may be considered necessary by the Commissioner for the purpose."

Sub-section (3) of s. 11 provides that after hearing the dealer or his agent and examining the evidence produced in compliance with the requirements of cl. (ii) or cl. (iii) of sub-s. (2) and such further evidence as the Commissioner may require, the Commissioner shall assess him to tax. Section 11 when read together with the provisions of s. 3 and the rules makes it clear that the powers conferred by s. 11 could also be exercised by other Sales Tax Officers to the extent they are conferred on them by the State Government. It is not in dispute that the Sales Tax Officer is one of such persons appointed under the Sales Tax Act. It is to be seen whether on July 20, 1955, the Sales Tax Officer was an authority competent to deal with the cases of the petitioner and issue the notices of that date. Sub-section (2) of s. 3 provides that persons appointed under sub-s. (1) (the Sales Tax Officer is one of such persons), shall, within such areas as the State Government may specify, exercise such powers as may be conferred and perform such duties as may be imposed, by or under the Act.

In exercise of these powers certain rules have been framed. Clause (1) of r. 19 provides that every registered dealer shall furnish to the appropriate Sales Tax Officer quarterly returns in the prescribed form within one calendar month from the expiry of the quarter to which the return relates. Rule 67 prescribes the powers which could be exercised by the various persons appointed by the State Government under sub-s. (1) of s. 3. The entry relevant to this case is entry No. 8. The relevant part thereof, as it then stood, reads as follows:—

Sr. No.	Section	Description of power	Designation of officer and conditions of delegation.
8.	11, 11-A, 12 and 12A	To make an assessment or reassessment of tax or penalty or to fix a date for payment or to extend the date for payment of such tax or penalty or to allow the payment of tax or penalty by instalments and to exercise all other powers under these sections—
		(a) in respect of a dealer other than a dealer having no place of business in Vidarbha region whose gross turnover of the year preceding the period of assessment exceeds 20 lakhs or taxable turnover of the year preceding the period of assessment exceeds Rs. 4 lakhs.	Assistant Commissioner (with the previous approval of the Commissioner for imposition of penalty).
		(b) In respect of a dealer other than a dealer having no place of business in Vidarbha region whose gross turnover of the year preceding the period of assessment does not exceed Rs. 20 lakhs or whose taxable turnover of the year preceding the period of assessment does not exceed Rs. 4 lakhs or in respect of a dealer who has no "year" preceding the period of assessment or in respect of any other dealer not falling in clause (a) or (c).	Sales Tax Officer (with the previous approval of the Assistant Commissioner for imposition of penalty).

Under the provisions of r. 19 the Sales Tax Officer was competent to receive the returns filed by the petitioner before him, and looking to the 8th entry in r. 67 it is clear that the Sales Tax Officer had jurisdiction to deal with all cases of the assessee in Vidarbha whose gross turnover of the year preceding the year of assessment did not exceed Rs. 20 lakhs or whose taxable turnover of the year preceding the period of assessment did not exceed Rs. 4 lakhs. Now, on July 20, 1955, two notices were issued by the Sales Tax Officer under s. 11(2) to the petitioner, one relating to the year 1952-53 and another relating to the year 1953-54. It has not been shown that there was any material on record to show that the gross turnover of the year preceding these relevant years exceeded Rs. 20 lakhs. It has also not been averred that there was any material before the Sales Tax Officer at the time he issued notices, from which it was possible for him to ascertain that the gross turnover or the taxable turnover of the year preceding exceeded Rs. 20 lakhs or Rs. 4 lakhs respectively. It is no doubt true that on December 23, 1955, the agent of the petitioner for the first time stated before the Sales Tax Officer that the sales during the year 1953-54 were more than Rs. 20 lakhs, but this statement can hardly have any bearing in considering the position obtaining on the material on record on July 20, 1955. Further, this is only a statement of an agent made in the case. It does not mean that it is true. In these circumstances and on these facts, in our opinion, the Sales Tax Officer had jurisdiction to deal with the petitioner's case and issue notices under s. 11(2) to him on July 20, 1955. Proceedings initiated on those notices were, therefore, validly started. These notices were issued within a period of three years. The petitioner was made aware within a period of three years that the Sales Tax Officer was not satisfied with the returns filed by him and that he would have to satisfy the Sales Tax Officer about the correctness of the returns or otherwise would have to pay tax in respect of the taxable turnover during those years. The petitioner was thus proceeded against within three years of the expiry of the periods for which he is being assessed. The Full Bench decision, in our opinion, has therefore no application to the facts of the case.

Mr. Dhabe then argues that the Sales Tax Officer having transferred the cases to the Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax on December 23, 1955, on the basis of the petitioner's agent's statement that the sales during the year under assessment were more than Rs. 20 lakhs, all what was done by the Sales Tax Officer prior to the date was wiped out and, therefore, the notices issued by the Sales Tax Officer on July 20, 1955, lapsed.

We find it difficult to accept this contention. The Sales Tax Officer on the view he took transferred these two cases pending before him to the Assistant Commissioner. True, there is no express provision enabling the Sales Tax Officer to transfer a case to the Assistant Commissioner, but it is inherent in the relevant provisions of the rules made under the Act. The relevant provisions are that all the returns filed by registered dealers are received first by the Sales Tax Officer, but the cases of registered dealers in the Vidarbha region get dealt with either by the Sales Tax Officer or the Assistant Commissioner depending on the amount of gross turnover or taxable turnover of the assessee in the year preceding the year of assessment. By necessary implication it follows that the Sales Tax Officer has jurisdiction in the first instance to deal with all the cases of registered dealers in the Vidarbha region and scrutinize their returns, and it is only when he finds from the material on record or it is established that the gross turnover or taxable turnover of the assessee in the year preceding the year of assessment exceeds the pecuniary limit, he has to transfer the case to the Assistant Commissioner. As already stated, it has not been established or even pleaded that there was any material on record before the Sales Tax Officer on July 20, 1955, when he issued notices under s. 11(2) from which he could infer that the petitioner's gross turnover or taxable turnover in the respective preceding years was above the aforesaid pecuniary limit. He was, therefore, acting within his powers in issuing the said notices dated July 20, 1955.

The Sales Tax Officer is an officer appointed under the Act and owes existence to the Act. The Act has by necessary implications conferred jurisdiction on him to determine what are the cases which fall within his jurisdiction. It, therefore, cannot be said that whatever he does up to that stage is done by him without jurisdiction, even when he reaches a conclusion that the case is triable by an Assistant Commissioner. In our opinion, therefore, the fact that the Sales Tax Officer transferred the cases of the petitioner to the Assistant Commissioner on December 23, 1955, cannot have the effect of rendering invalid what had been previously done by the Sales Tax Officer. The contention of Mr. Dhabe that the notices issued by the Sales Tax Officer on July 20, 1955, under s. 11(2) of the Act lapsed on December 23, 1955, must fail. In view of our finding on this question it is not necessary for us to consider the validity or otherwise of the notices of July 4, 1958, in view of s. 6 of the Bombay Sales Tax Laws (Validating Provisions and Amendment) Act, 1959, which came into force on April 18, 1959.

The position then that emerges is that the notices dated July 20, 1955, under s. 11(2) of the Act were validly given and they had at no time lapsed. The proceedings that are being taken against the petitioner were thus initiated under the said notices within three years of the expiry of the assessment periods. It, therefore, cannot be said that the proceedings that are being taken against the petitioner are bad in law or that the Sales Tax Officer has no jurisdiction to deal with them. Subsequent notices given on July 4, 1958, cannot affect this position. They are not notices initiating the proceedings against the petitioner and, therefore, are not liable to be quashed.

In the result, both the petitions fail and are dismissed with costs. Only one set of costs is allowed.

Petitions dismissed.

INCOME-TAX REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

v.

PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 18A(6), 18—Dividend income of resident assessee whether falls within s. 18—Whether penal interest can be levied on such income under s. 18A(6).

Dividend income of an assessee who is a resident is not exempt from the operation of s. 18A(6) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and, therefore, penal interest can be levied under that section in case of such income.

S. T. Desai J. The words "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" in s. 18A(6) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, read contextually can only mean that while determining the amount of penal interest under s. 18A(6) and applying the ratio of eighty per cent to the amount of tax paid in advance and the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment, the Income-tax Officer must exclude from the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment the amount of tax for which provision is made under s. 18, that is the amount of tax which is deducted at source under sub-s. (2) to (3D) and the amount of tax which is to be treated as paid by the assessee under sub-s. (5) of s. 18.

THE facts appear in the judgment of Shah J.

*Decided, July 3, 1959. Income-tax Reference No. 45 of 1958.

G. N. Joshi, with R. J. Joshi, for the applicant.
N. A. Palkhivala, for the respondent.

SHAH J. The assessee has a large dividend income beside income from securities, property, business and other sources. By notice under s. 18A(1) of the Income-tax Act the assessee was called upon to make advance payment of tax on so much of his income from which tax was not deducted at source as was included in his total income of his latest previous year in respect of which he had been assessed. The assessee submitted a statement of his income for S.Y. 2002 and estimated his total income including foreign income at Rs. 4,64,000. He claimed that to Rs. 3,64,000 out of his total income s. 18 of the Income-tax Act applied and the income to which s. 18A applied was Rs. 1,00,000. He estimated that Rs. 32,940 were payable as income-tax on the income to which s. 18A applied and Rs. 2,44,812 were payable as super-tax on the total income of Rs. 4,64,000. After claiming credit for Rs. 10,000 for double income-tax relief, the assessee estimated Rs. 2,67,752 as payable by him as advance tax. The Income-tax Officer holding that the assessee had paid tax under sub-s. (2) of s. 18A, on the basis of his estimated income, which was less than 80 per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of regular assessment, ordered him to pay penal interest under s. 18A(6). Against that order an appeal was preferred to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, and that Officer held that to the dividend income received by the assessee s. 18 did not apply and that the assessee was bound to include his dividend income in his estimate under s. 18A(2), and he accordingly confirmed the order passed by the Income-tax Officer. The assessee appealed to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, and the Tribunal by its order, which is somewhat cryptic, appeared to take the view that dividend income was income to which the provisions of s. 18 applied and, therefore, in assessing liability to pay penal interest on the estimate made by the assessee dividend income was not liable to be taken into account; and as s. 18A(6) of the Income-tax Act did not apply to dividend income, the assessee was "not liable to pay penal interest in respect of the dividend income". At the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax this reference has been made, and the question which falls to be determined is whether dividend income of an assessee who is a resident falls within s. 18 of the Income-tax Act.

Under the Indian Income-tax Act, tax is assessed and paid in the succeeding year upon the result of the previous year of account. This makes a departure from the scheme of the English Income-tax Act under which the subject of assessment is the income of the year of assessment though the amount is computed by reference to the income of the preceding year. But the Legislature has by enacting s. 18A made a provision for imposing liability upon tax-payers who have been previously assessed and even upon those who have not been assessed to make advance payment of tax in respect of income for which provision is not made under s. 18 for deduction of tax at the time of payment. Sections 18 and 18A between themselves exhaust all the categories of taxable income. At the relevant time, by sub-s. (2) of s. 18 the person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head "salaries" was required to make deduction of income-tax and super-tax on the amount payable at a rate representing the average of the rates applicable to the estimated total income of the assessee under that head. By sub-s. (3) the person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head "interest on securities" was, unless otherwise prescribed in the case of any security of the Central Government, required at the time of payment to deduct income-tax but not super-tax on the amount of interest payable at the maximum rate. By sub-s. (3A) income-tax at the maximum rate was required to be deducted by the person responsible for paying interest, not being interest on securities, to any person not being a resident in British India. By sub-ss. (3B) and (3C) super-tax was to be deducted at the time of payment by the person responsible for payment of interest not being interest on securities payable to a person not resident in British India. The tax was liable to be paid on the amount by which the amount of interest exceeded the maximum amount chargeable with super-tax, unless the rate was determined by order of the Income-tax Officer. Similarly, under sub-ss. (3D) and (3E) super-tax was liable to be deducted at the time of payment out of dividends payable to a shareholder who was not a resident in British India. The tax was to be deducted at the appropriate rate applicable to the total dividend income, unless the rate was determined by order of the Income-tax Officer. The provisions relating to deduction at the time of payment of tax under s. 18, at the material time, accordingly applied to the head of salaries from which income-tax and super-tax were required to be deducted at source, the head of interest on securities from which income-tax but not super-tax was liable to be deducted at source and the head of interest other than interest on securities payable to non-residents from which income-tax and super-tax were liable to be deducted at source, and to the head of dividend on shares payable to non-residents from which super-tax was liable to be deducted. Section 18A, which was incorporated for the first time by Act XI of 1944, provides for advance payment of tax. By the first sub-section it is provided that the Income-tax Officer may require an assessee to pay advance tax in specified instalments in the case of so much of his income, in respect of which provision is not made under s. 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment, as is included in the total income of the latest previous year in respect of which he is assessed. By sub-s. (2) it is provided that if the assessee ordered to pay advance tax, estimates that the part of his income to which sub-s. (1) applies for the next following year is less than the income on which he is ordered to pay tax, and he wishes to pay an amount less than the amount ordered, he may submit his own estimate of the tax payable by him calculated in the manner prescribed by sub-s. (1). Sub-sections (1) and (2), however, provide for advance payment of tax in the case of income in respect of which provision is not made under s. 18 for deduction of tax at the time of payment, and provision for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment is made under s. 18 only in respect of the categories of income set out hereinbefore, dividend income payable to a resident being not one of such categories.

Mr. Palkhivala for the assessee conceded that in the assessment of income for the assessment year 1947-48 the assessee's dividend income was computed at Rs. 3,11,376, and that even the assessee had returned a gross amount of Rs. 3,24,275 under the head dividends. If s. 18 did not apply to the dividend income, evidently the estimate made by the assessee on September 13, 1946, of his dividend income was grossly inadequate. Dividend income being not income in respect of which provision is made in s. 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment, the assessee was bound in estimating his income to include the entire income in the estimate and to pay appropriate tax thereon.

There is nothing in s. 18(5), on which reliance was placed by Mr. Palkhivala, which supports the view that dividend income received by a shareholder is income in respect of which provision is made for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment. Section 18(5) of the Income-tax Act provides inter alia that any sum by which dividend has been increased under sub-s. (2) of s. 16 is to be treated as payment of income-tax on behalf of the shareholder and that credit shall be given to him for that amount in the assessment of the following year. By s. 49B, where any dividend has been paid, credited or distributed or is deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed to any person who is a shareholder of a company which is assessed to income-tax in the taxable territories, such person shall, if the dividend is included in his total income, be deemed in respect of such dividend himself to have paid income-tax (exclusive of super-tax) of an amount equal to the sum by which the dividend has been increased under sub-s. (2) of s. 16. It is evident that a company pays tax on its own profits, but when dividend is distributed out of those profits, with a view to avoid double taxation, income-tax which has been paid by the company on that dividend is deemed to have been paid by the shareholder if the dividend income grossed up under s. 16B by the addition of the tax paid is included by the assessee in his total income. There is in truth in the case of dividend income no deduction of income-tax at the time of payment, but by a fiction the Legislature regards the income-tax paid by the company as paid on behalf of the assessee on the latter's dividend income. Section 18(5) of the Income-tax Act undoubtedly provides that the sum by which dividend has been increased under s. 16(2) shall be treated as a payment of income-tax on behalf of the shareholder; but provision is not made under s. 18 in respect of dividend for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment. Under s. 18A(2), therefore, when the assessee estimated his income in respect of which provision was not made for deduction of income-tax under s. 18, he was bound to include therein all his dividend income and to pay tax thereon computed in the manner prescribed by sub-s. (1) of s. 18A.

Mr. Palkhivala submits that even if that view be correct, the assessee could not, for failure to pay tax on dividend income, be ordered to pay penal interest under s. 18A(6). Counsel invites our attention in support of his argument to the difference in the phraseology used in sub-s. (1) and in sub-s. (6), and submits that liability to pay penal interest may, by virtue of s. 18A(6), be incurred if the tax paid is less than 80 per cent. of the tax payable under the regular assessment on income which does not include dividend income. By sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 18A the Legislature has imposed an obligation upon assesseees to pay advance tax "in the case of income in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment", and by sub-s. (6) an assessee may be ordered to pay penal interest when the tax paid by him on his own estimate is less than 80 per cent. of the tax determined, so far as such tax relates to "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply". Mr. Palkhivala submits that the Legislature having included in sub-s. (6) a wider category of income, if there is some provision in s. 18 relating to a head of income even though that provision does not provide for deduction of tax at the time of payment, failure to pay advance tax on that head of income will not attract the penal provisions of s. 18A(6). In my judgment, the expression "income in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment" in sub-s. (1) of s. 18A and the expression "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" in sub-s. (6) of s. 18A have substantially the same connotation. If in the total income on which advance tax may be ordered to be paid under sub-s. (1), or in the estimate whereof made under sub-s. (2), the dividend income must be included, it is difficult to hold that in making a provision for imposing a penalty for not paying adequate advance tax the Legislature intended that the ratio of 80 per cent. was to be applied between tax on an estimated income which included dividend income and tax on regular assessment on income which did not include dividend income. It is expressly provided that if the assessee pays tax on his own estimate under sub-s. (2), and the tax paid is less than 80 per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of regular assessment on income to which the provisions of s. 18 do not apply, the assessee is exposed to the liability to pay penal interest. The Legislature having imposed an obligation to pay advance tax on the estimated income on which tax is not deducted at source, and also having prescribed a penalty for making on an erroneous estimate, payment of tax which is less than 80 per cent. of the tax determined on regular assessment, I am unable, in the absence of compelling reasons, to make a distinction between dividend income and other heads of income on which by s. 18A(2) advance tax is required to be paid.

Mr. Palkhivala invited our attention to sub-s. (3) of s. 18A in which also the Legislature has used the expression, "that part of his income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply". Sub-section (3) applies to assesseees who have not been previously assessed. If the argument of Mr. Palkhivala that the expressions used in sub-s. (1) on the one hand and in sub-ss. (3) and (6) on the other have not the same meaning has any substance, it would lead to the rather incongruous result that assesses, who had been previously assessed, are liable to estimate for the purpose of the sub-section income inclusive of dividend income and pay tax thereon, while assesses who were being assessed for the first time will be exempt from that liability in respect of their dividend income. No rational ground is suggested which may support the distinction that an assessee who has been previously assessed shall include in his estimate dividend income and pay advance tax thereon, but an assessee newly assessed may not include dividend income in the estimate of his income for payment of advance tax.

Sub-sections (2) and (3) of s. 18A impose an obligation on the assessee to pay advance tax on the estimated income in respect of which no provision for deduction of tax at source is made. Under s. 18(5) the amount by which the tax is grossed up under s. 16(2) which is equivalent to the income-tax paid by the company on the dividend is alone treated as made on behalf of the shareholder: but the penalty prescribed by s. 18A(6) is attracted when the tax paid on income estimated under sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) is less than 80 per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment in so far as it relates to income to which the provisions of s. 18 do not apply. If the argument of Mr. Palkhivala that in computing the tax on income to which the provisions of s. 18 do not apply, dividend income is to be excluded is accepted, there can be no basis for comparison of the tax paid on the income assessed and the tax paid on the income estimated. When in making payment of tax on the estimated income under sub-ss. (2) and (3) dividend income is to be included, comparison will be impossible if, in computing whether the advance tax paid directly or treated as paid on the estimated income is less than 80 per cent. of the tax on regular assessment, the income on which that tax is computed does not include dividends.

For reasons afore-mentioned, I am unable to agree with the view of the Tribunal that the assessee was not liable to pay penal interest for failing to include in the estimate his dividend income.

The question framed by the Tribunal may, however, be reframed. We are not concerned in this case with the total income of the assessee under the various heads, nor with the correctness of the estimate made by him. The only question which we were called upon to decide is "whether in the circumstances of the case the assessee is liable to pay penal interest in respect of his dividend income under section 18A(6) of the Income-tax Act." We answer the question in the affirmative. The assessee to pay the costs of the Commissioner.

S. T. DESAI J. I have arrived at the same conclusion but by a different path. A question of importance and some nicety arises for our determination on this Reference. Learned counsel both for the Revenue and the assessee are agreed that the statement of the case does not give a complete idea of the relevant facts. They are also agreed that the point of controversy turns wholly on the construction of certain provisions of law and it is whether an assessee, who is required to make payment of tax by an order under sub-s. (1) of s. 18A but chooses to send an estimate of his income under sub-s. (2) of that section on the ground that on his own estimate the income would be less than that on which he is required to make such advance payment, is liable to pay interest in respect of dividend income under s. 18A(6) of the Act. The contention of the assessee was that he was not liable to pay such interest and his reason in support of that contention was that s. 18A(6) did not apply to dividend income. Section 18A(6), the provisions of which I shall presently state, so far as it affects the case before us, lays down that an assessee, who has paid advance tax on the basis of his own estimate and the tax so paid is less than eighty per cent. of the tax ultimately determined on regular assessment "so, far as such tax relates to income to which provisions of section 18 do not apply", is liable to pay interest upon the amount by which the tax so paid falls short of that eighty per cent. The Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner negated that contention of the assessee about income from dividends and levied penal interest as provided in the section. An appeal carried by him to the Tribunal was, however, allowed and the Commissioner of Income-tax has come before us on this Reference.

It has been argued before us by Mr. G. N. Joshi, learned counsel for the Revenue, that the provisions of s. 18A(6) apply to dividend income for both income-tax and super-tax. It has also been argued that in any case that section must apply to dividend income for purpose of super-tax since there is no reference whatever to super-tax on dividend income of a resident in any of the provisions of s. 18. The argument of Mr. Palkhivala, learned counsel for the assessee, is that no penalty interest can be levied under s. 18A(6) in case of dividend income because s. 18(5) does in terms apply to such income. The point of the argument is that dividend income is wholly exempt from the operation of s. 18A(6), that is both as to income-tax and super-tax.

Before examining the arguments strongly pressed for our acceptance on either side, it is necessary at the outset to turn to the relevant provisions of ss. 18A and 18 and to examine the scheme of those sections. We have to view the scheme of ss. 18A and 18 only in the context of their correlative aspects. Section 18A deals with advance payment of tax. Obviously it could not be ruled that an assessee should be ordered to make advance payment of tax under s. 18A in respect of any part of his income if tax on such income had already been deducted at its source or had already been paid by him or he is in law to be deemed to have paid the same. Section 18 inter alia provides for levy by deduction of tax at the source in certain specified cases, to mention only one, 'salaries'. It is as I have already said in the aspect of their correlation that the scheme of the two sections particularly requires to be examined by us. I shall do so as succinctly as possible.

Section 18A, a comparatively recent innovation in taxation law, lays down a series of rules relating to advance payment of tax. Charge of income-tax under our Act is on actual income of the previous year and the subject of assessment is not the income of the assessment year but that of the 'previous year'. For reasons which it is unnecessary to consider the Legislature has in this section ruled for advance payment of tax in respect of the income of the 'previous year' in stated instalments to be made before the completion of the actual assessment. Sub-section (1) of the section authorises the Income-tax Officer to pass an order in any financial year requiring the assessee to make advance payment in accordance with the provisions of the sub-section relating to quantum and instalments. The initial part of the sub-section confines its operation to "income in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment", that is at the source. It is open to the assessee called upon to make advance payment to submit his own estimate at any time before the last of such instalments is due if he wishes to pay an amount less than the amount which he is required to pay and he may pay such amount (instalments) as accords with his own estimate. Sub-section (2) enables him to make his own estimate if, in his opinion, the income of the year is likely to be less than that on which he has been asked to make advance payment of tax in accordance with the machinery for assessment of advance tax contained in sub-s. (1). Then sub-s. (3) rules for the case of a new assessee. In his case he has to make an estimate himself if his income exceeds the amount there mentioned. He has to make the estimate, send a return voluntarily and pay advance tax in the manner there laid down. For the purpose of examination of the scheme, it is not necessary to refer to sub-ss. (4) and (5). Sub-section (6), which is material, provides for cases where the assessee's estimate turns out to be too low and it lays down that where an assessee has paid advance tax under sub-ss. (2) or (3) and the amount so paid is less than 80 per cent. of the final assessment of his income for the particular year he is liable to pay interest of 6 per cent. There is the necessary qualification that this is in the context of "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply". Sub-sections (7) and (8) relate to cognate matters affecting cases where there is a failure to make advance payment of tax. These and the subsequent sub-sections are not material for the present purpose.

Section 18 contains a fasciculus of rules which are exceptions to the general mode or method of direct collection of tax, that is from the assessee himself, and they provide in the main for what is generally referred to in tax parlance as levy by deduction at source of income. This levy is confined to cases expressly stated in the section. Deduction at source is made: Of both income-tax and super-tax on salaries (sub-ss. (2), (2A) and (2B)): Of income-tax only on interest on securities (sub-ss. (3) and (3A)): Of income-tax and super-tax in case of non-residents in respect of interest on securities, dividends and other sums chargeable under the Act and paid to a non-resident. There is now no sub-s. (1) in s. 18 as the original sub-s. (1) has been repealed. It is abundantly clear that incomes of various types in respect of which tax is to be deducted at source are dealt with categorically in sub-ss. (2) to (3D) of the section. It is equally clear that they do not include 'dividends' of companies for the purpose of deduction of tax at source except in case of a non-resident. Sub-section (5) so far as it is relevant lays down that any sum by which a dividend has been increased under sub-s. (2) of s. 16 shall be treated as payment of income-tax or super-tax on behalf of the person from whose income the deduction was made. For the purpose of inclusion in the total income of an assessee the amount of actual dividend received by him is to be 'grossed up', as laid down in s. 16(2). Speaking generally a company when it pays tax does not do so on behalf of its shareholders. It is chargeable to tax on its profits as a distinct entity and not as an agent or on behalf of its shareholders. But by a fictio juris introduced in tax law by s. 49B, in case of dividend paid to a shareholder of a company which is assessed to income-tax, the shareholder is deemed in respect of such dividend himself to have paid income-tax (but not super-tax) of an amount equal to the sum by which the dividend is increased for the purpose of 'grossing up' under s. 16(2). It is not necessary to go into the arithmetic of grossing up and it will suffice to observe that income-tax in respect of dividend income is deemed to have been paid by the shareholder although in fact it is the company which has paid tax to which it was assessed. But be it noted that it is only the income-tax in respect of the dividend and not super-tax to which the fiction of law applies. Therefore, it is only income-tax in respect of his dividend income that the assessee is to be deemed to have himself paid the same.

Now a plain reading of the language of s. 18A(1) under which the assessee was required to make advance payment of tax on his income "in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment" that is at the source, clearly shows that the advance payment which an assessee can be called upon to make in accordance with the express provisions of that sub-section embraces all income save that expressly dealt with in s. 18 for the purpose of deduction at the source. The language of the sub-section also makes it clear that the advance payment of tax is to be made in respect not only of income-tax but both income-tax and super-tax. The assessee furnished an estimate of his income under sub-s. (2) as he was entitled to do for the purpose of showing that in his opinion the income would be less than that on which he was required to pay tax and one aspect of his contention was that in submitting his estimate of income under sub-s. (2) of this section he was not bound to include in it for the purpose of ascertainment of the quantum of advance payment, his income from dividends either for income-tax or super-tax, because the provisions of s. 18 applied to dividend income. As I shall presently point out there is nothing in sub-s. (2) to support this contention. But the argument has been that it is sub-s. (6) of s. 18A which is material as it was under sub-s. (6) of s. 18A that the assessee was charged with levy of penal interest and that sub-section speaks merely of "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply". The crux of the argument is that s. 18(5) does apply to dividend income of a resident and, therefore, sub-s. (6) of s. 18A does not apply to the case of the assessee and that he was in effect exempt from making any advance payment—even of super-tax—on his dividend income. Since the argument is founded on the language of sub-s. (6) of s. 18A it will be convenient to set out the relevant part of that sub-section. But sub-s. (6) cannot be read in any manner divorced from its context and must be read with other relevant provisions of s. 18A. I have already stated the initial words of sub-s. (1) of this section and referred to its provisions and need not set out sub-s. (1). Sub-section (2) is material and has to be read with sub-s. (6). Indeed sub-s. (6) begins with a reference to it. The relevant and material part of the two sub-sections is as under:

“(2) If any assessee who is required to pay tax by an order under sub-section (1) estimates at any time before the last instalment is due that part of his income to which that sub-section applies for the period which would be the previous year for an assessment for the year next following is less than the income on which he is required to pay tax and accordingly wishes to pay an amount less than the amount which he is so required to pay, he may send to the Income-tax Officer an estimate of the tax payable by him calculated in the manner laid down in sub-section (1) on that part of his income for such period; and shall pay such amount as accords with his estimate...

(6) Where in any year an assessee has paid tax under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) on the basis of his own estimate, and the tax so paid is less than eighty per cent. of the tax determined on basis of the regular assessment, so far as such tax relates to income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply...simple interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum...shall be payable by the assessee upon the amount by which the tax so paid falls short of the said eighty per cent.”:

The crucial question relates to the extent of exclusion in the computation to be made for the purpose of applying the ratio of eighty per cent. under the provisions of sub-s. (6) quoted above. Sub-section (6) of s. 18A, it was argued by Mr. Palkhivala, excludes from its operation all categories of income to which the provisions of s. 18 apply, and relying on sub-s. (5) of s. 18 the argument proceeded that provisions of that sub-section do apply to the category of dividend income and, therefore, the case of the assessee does not fall within the operation of s. 18A(6). I have already pointed out that incomes of various types in respect of which tax is to be deducted at source are dealt with categorically in sub-ss. (2) to (3D) of s. 18 and they do not include dividend income of a resident assessee. I have in examining the scheme of the two sections made some reference to sub-s. (5) of s. 18 but for convenience I shall set out here the relevant and material part of it:

“...any sum by which a dividend has been increased under sub-section (2) of section 18 shall be treated as a payment of income-tax or super-tax on behalf of the person from whose income the deduction was made, or of the owner of the security or of the shareholder as the case may be, and credit shall be given to him therefor on the production of the certificate furnished under sub-section (9) of section 20, as the case may be, in the assessment, if any, made for the following year under this Act.”

The greatest reliance was placed on behalf of the assessee on this sub-s. (5) of s. 18 and it was urged that in this sub-section provision is made for income arising from dividend. It was said that the sub-section in terms provides for giving credit to the assessee in respect of tax on the assessee's income from dividend deemed to have been paid by him. It was said that this is all that is relevant and it is immaterial to examine the nature of the provisions in s. 18(5) or the object and effect of that sub-section. ‘Dividend’ has been mentioned in this sub-section and credit is to be given to the assessee shareholder for a proportionate amount of the tax paid by the company and, therefore, so the argument ran, it must be said that since provision is made in this sub-section for income from dividend all income from dividend is excluded from operation of s. 18A(6). It was urged that any category of income for which any provision is made in any part of s. 18 is to be excluded from the operation of sub-ss. (2) and (6) of s. 18A. At first blush it may seem that the words “income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply” in s. 18A(6) have the effect of excluding from its ambit any category of income for which provision is made in any part of s. 18 because in a sense it can be said that some provision is made in s. 18(5) for income arising from dividend. But indubitably these words "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" have to be read in their context and proper setting. Section 18A(6) as the initial words of it state in unmistakable manner, deals with the case of an assessee who has paid tax under sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3). Now we are dealing with a case in which estimate of income and advance payment of tax had been made by the assessee under sub-s. (2). Confining, therefore, the examination of the language of sub-s. (6) to a case of tax paid under sub-s. (2), I read sub-s. (6) as laying down that where an assessee has paid tax under sub-s. (2) on the basis of his own estimate the Income-tax Officer has to see whether the amount of advance tax paid by the assessee is less than eighty per cent. of the amount of tax ultimately determined at the regular assessment but after excluding from the computation the amount of tax on any income already deducted at the source and the amount of tax on any income which the assessee is to be deemed to have already paid by operation of any of the provisions of s. 18. If on such computation he finds that there is a shortfall he can hold that penalty interest is payable by the assessee. The tax ultimately determined at the time of the regular assessment would include both income-tax and super-tax and would be computed on the whole income of the assessee under the charging sections and would be in respect of all the heads of income mentioned in s. 6 and that would include income from dividends. But the ratio of eighty per cent. is to be applied not to the entire amount of tax determined on such regular assessment for that would be arrived at after having regard to the total income of the assessee under all the heads of income and the tax would include both income-tax and super-tax. The ratio is to apply to the amount of advance payment of tax actually made and the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment but excluding from the latter the amount of tax which relates to income to which the provisions of s. 18 apply. These considerations, in my opinion, lead to the conclusion that the words "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" read contextually can only mean that while determining the amount of penal interest under s. 18A(6) and applying the ratio of eighty per cent. to the amount of tax paid in advance and the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment, the Income-tax Officer must exclude from the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment the amount of tax for which provision is made under s. 18, that is the amount of tax which is deducted at source under sub-ss. (2) to (3D) and the amount of tax which is to be treated as paid by the assessee under sub-s. (5) of s. 18. According, however, to learned counsel for the assessee the question to be considered, on a proper reading of s. 18A(6), should be not whether any income-tax or super-tax was deducted at the source or is to be deemed to have been paid by the assessee but simply: 'Is any provision made in section 18(5) for income from dividend?' and according to him this would be regardless of any content of that provision. It is impossible to read s. 18A(6) and the words under discussion in the manner urged by counsel. No words in a statute can be construed effectively without reference to their context and for the obvious reason that even the grammatical meaning of words must largely depend on their collocation. The argument of learned counsel wholly ignores the words in s. 18A(6) which immediately precede "income to which the provisions of section 18 apply" and they are "eighty per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment, so far as such tax relates to...". Obviously effect must be given to the words "so far as such tax relates to...". They are crucial. We have here a rule which lays down a ratio between two amounts of tax, the estimated amount of tax and the amount of tax ultimately arrived at on the basis of regular assessment. The question, therefore, that we have to put to ourselves is not baldly and simply whether there is any provision relating to income from the category of dividend in s. 18(5) but whether under the provisions of s. 18(5) there was any deduction of tax made at the source in respect of the dividend income and whether there was any tax in respect of dividend income the amount of which "shall be treated as a payment of income-tax or super-tax on behalf of the person from whose income the deduction was made, or of...the shareholder as the case may be". I have reproduced here the language of s. 18(5) itself as in my judgment the solution to the question raised for our determination becomes easier if due regard is had to the content of sub-s. (5) itself on which sub-section counsel for the assessee so heavily leaned.

Reference to the provisions of s. 18 in s. 18A(6) is in terms and evidently in the context of tax determined on the basis of regular assessment and for the purpose of exclusion. It is equally evident that the exclusion is from the amount of tax so determined. The exclusion is not of one category or head of income from all the categories or heads of income on which the regular assessment is made but of an amount of tax from the total amount of tax ultimately determined on the basis of the regular assessment. This to my mind is the focal point and indeed the substance of the whole matter. If this be the real point, and I have no doubt that it is so, it seems extremely difficult to read into this sub-section the bald exclusion of any category as we are asked to do. The exclusion can only be of the amount of tax. It may be of the amount of income-tax or super-tax or of both as the case may be. But it is such tax and not the entire category of income to which it relates that is to be excluded. It is in the context of the ratio of the two amounts of tax after giving proper effect to the words "so far as such tax (determined at the regular assessment) relates to income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" that the matter has to be decided. It does not need to be stressed that in construing this sub-section we cannot isolate words or give them their abstract meaning or consider any part of the sub-section separately and independently of what has gone before. The words so strongly relied on by learned counsel for the assessee can be read only as an integral part of the whole sub-section and if this be done, as indeed we must do so, it is not possible to see how in applying the ratio of eighty per cent., the exclusion from the amount of tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment can mean anything more than the amount of tax on income for which provision is made in s. 18 and for the purpose of the present contention of the assessee anything more than the amount of income-tax for which credit had to be given to him as a shareholder by operation of sub-s. (5) of s. 18. It is not the entire amount of tax—which would include both income-tax and super-tax—on the income of the assessee from dividends to which the exclusion can reach but only the amount of income-tax for which credit is to be given to him by operation of s. 18(5). The assessee was only entitled to credit as a shareholder for a proportionate amount of the income-tax paid by the companies and not any amount of super-tax on his dividend income and in my judgment he was not justified in his contention that the entire category of dividend was to be excluded from computation in the determination of the question of liability to pay interest under the relevant provision of s. 18A(6).

The view I take on this question of construction derives some support from the scheme and the correlation of the two ss. 18A and 18 which I have already considered and also some support from the provisions of sub-s. (3) of s. 18 which rules for deduction of "income-tax but not super-tax" on the amount of interest on securities. In the course of the arguments at the Bar I put it to learned counsel for the assessee whether advance payment of super-tax would or would not have to be paid by an assessee in respect of such income and the answer was that provision having been made for the category of "interest on securities" in that sub-section of s. 18 there would be no question of penalty interest under s. 18A(6) in his case and for the identical reasons pressed for our acceptance in support of the case of the assessee before us relating to income from dividends. Having regard to the language of the provisions of sub-ss. (1), (2), (3) and (6) of s. 18A and s. 18(3) it is not possible for me to accede to this submission. I need not, however, discuss the point any further since I have already examined the relevant provisions and particularly the meaning and effect of s. 18A(6) at some length.

For all these reasons I have reached the conclusion that on a proper construction of s. 18(6) an assessee is liable to pay interest in respect of tax on dividend income to the extent that s. 18(5) does not apply to the same. That section only applies to income-tax and not to super-tax. An assessee who is called upon to make advance payment of tax under s. 18A(1) may under sub-s. (2) of that section pay such amount as accords with his own estimate. If he excludes the amount of super-tax on dividend income from his estimate he takes the risk of the application of the ratio of eighty per cent. resulting in a short fall and he would have to pay interest "upon the amount by which the tax so paid falls short of the said eighty per cent." The eighty per cent. would be of the amount of tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment so far as such tax relates to income to which the provisions of s. 18 do not apply. The provisions of s. 18(5), as I have already pointed out, do not apply to super-tax and the amount of super-tax on the dividend income must be included and taken into consideration in the computation necessary for the purpose of fixing the quantum of tax to which the ratio of eighty per cent. is to be applied. I would, therefore, answer the question as reframed by us in the affirmative.

Before Mr. Justice Tambe and Mr. Justice Raju.

MESSRS. "JAISWAL MEDICAL STORES", NAGPUR

v.

ASSISTANT DRUGS CONTROLLER, NAGPUR.*

Drugs Rules, 1945, Rr. 64, 59(2)—Drugs Act (XXIII of 1940)—Whether r. 64(1) governs application for renewal of licence—Licensing authority whether can refuse renewal of licence on ground that licensee has committed breach of Act or Rules.

Rule 64(1) of the Drugs Rules, 1945, governs both an application for initial grant of licence as well as an application for renewal of licence.

*Jayantilal Sampatlal Jayaswal v. The State of Bombay,*¹ agreed with.

The opinion of the licensing authority that the licensee has contravened any of the provisions of the Drugs Act, 1940, or any of the Drugs Rules framed under the Act, by itself, is not a ground under r. 64 of the Rules for refusing renewal of a licence. The grounds on which renewal of a licence could be refused are the inability of the licensee to fulfil the conditions mentioned in r. 64(1) to the satisfaction of the authority concerned and the conviction of the applicant of an offence under the Act or rules or previous cancellation or suspension of his licence.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

P. G. Phadke, for the petitioner.

N. L. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, for respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

TAMBE J. This is a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India wherein the petitioner prays that (1) a writ of certiorari be issued quashing the order dated December 26, 1958, made by the Assistant Drugs Controller, respondent No. 1 hereto, and quashing the appellate order dated of 1958, decided by Vyas and Tambe JJ., on August 8, 1958 (Unrep.).

*Decided, July 8, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 126 of 1959.

April 27, 1959, made by the State of Bombay, respondent No. 2 hereto; (2) a writ of mandamus directing the respondents to renew the licences of the petitioner and (3) any other suitable writ or order.

It is not in dispute that since about the year 1952 the petitioner has been granted licences in Forms 20 and 21 under the Drugs Act, 1940, to sell, stock or exhibit for sale or distribute drugs by retail other than those specified in Schedules C and C(1), as well as those mentioned in Schedules C and C(1). In other words, the petitioner has been granted licences to sell, stock or exhibit for sale or distribute drugs which are both biological and special products as well as those which are not biological and special products. It is not in dispute that these licences are to be renewed every two years. The last licence granted to the petitioner in Form 21 was on November 25, 1955, and the last licence issued to the petitioner in Form 20 was on August 20, 1956. On November 24, 1957, the petitioner made an application to respondent No. 1 for the renewal of the licence in Form 21. Subsequent to the date of this application, respondent No. 1 paid an inspection visit to the shop of the petitioner on January 21, 1958. He then by his letter (Annexure I) dated February 14, 1958, pointed out various defaults noticed by him in the inspection, one of the things noted by him was that the refrigerator in the shop was out of order and that the petitioner had not provided necessary cold storage facilities for the drugs requiring cold storage, many liver extract injectible preparations requiring cold storage were kept outside in day temperature. By this letter respondent No. 1 further pointed out that in view of the various things found by him it will not be in the public interest and in the interest of public health to grant to the petitioner a licence to stock and sell drugs. Respondent No. 1 further called upon the petitioner to explain and show cause why the application made by him on November 24, 1957, should not be rejected and why licence in Form 20 which at that time was in force should not be cancelled.

The petitioner by his letter (Annexure II) dated February 24, 1958, showed cause and gave his explanation in respect of the various defects found by respondent No. 1. The explanation given by the petitioner regarding the refrigerator was that it had gone out of order and the unit was sent to the Bombay Garage for repairs and its return was awaited. It was further stated by the petitioner that he had made arrangements to keep an ice box for storage of medicines requiring cold storage and that he is keeping all liver extract and injectible preparations in it. On August 18, 1958, as two years' period of the licence in Form 20 was also coming to an end, the petitioner applied for the renewal of the licence in Form 20. On August 29, 1958, the petitioner applied for the grant of fresh licences in Forms 20B and 21B to sell, stock or exhibit for sale or distribute by wholesale the drugs relating to which he had licences to sell them by retail. On October 22, 1958, respondent No. 1 again visited the shop of the petitioner and again found that various things were not in order. On October 24/25, 1958, respondent No. 1 wrote a letter to the petitioner pointing out the various defects noted by him in his inspection and by this letter the petitioner was informed that unless satisfactory explanation is received by him within 7 days all the four applications would be rejected.

It will be pertinent to note that in this letter it was also observed that the refrigerator has still remained unrepaired, there was no ice in the ice box and drugs like Whooping Cough Vaccine and Liver Extract Injections requiring cold storage were lying in a room in ordinary temperature. The petitioner by his letter dated November 8, 1958, submitted his explanation with regard to the various points raised by respondent No. 1. Regarding the refrigerator, the explanation given by the petitioner was that it was out of order and could not be repaired and that the petitioner was unable to get a new refrigerator in the market either in Nagpur or in Bombay. As regards the ice box, the explanation given was that ice in the ice box had melted just before the time the officer came for inspection. It was, however, promised that ice would be continuously kept in the ice box and thus cold storage secured for the medicines requiring cold storage. The petitioner's premises were again inspected on December 11, 1958, and again certain defects were noticed by respondent No. 1, one of them being that there was no ice in the ice box and certain drugs requiring cold storage were kept at ordinary room temperature. Respondent No. 1 by his order made on December 26, 1958, in the interest of public health, rejected all the four applications of the petitioner, i.e. applications for renewal of licences in Forms 20 and 21 and applications for the grant of fresh licences in Forms 20B and 21B. Material part of the order reads as follows:

"Now, therefore, I, S. R. Telang, Assistant Drugs Controller, Nagpur, in exercise of the powers delegated to me by r. 60 of the Drugs Rules, 1945, hereby order that for the reasons mentioned in this office letter No. ADCN/sI/L-830 of 1958, dated 23/24-10-1958, the said applications for licences to stock and sell drugs are rejected."

The petitioner took an appeal from the said order of respondent No. 1 to the State Government which was dismissed by it, vide order dated April 27, 1959. The petitioner has, therefore, preferred this petition seeking the reliefs mentioned above.

The arguments advanced by Mr. P. G. Phadke, learned counsel for the petitioner, were restricted only in respect of the grant of renewal of licences in Forms 20 and 21. No arguments were advanced by him before us regarding the rejection of applications for licences in Forms 20B and 21B.

As regards the rejection of applications for renewal of licences in Forms 20 and 21, Mr. Phadke, relying on the proviso to sub-r. (2) of r. 64, in the first instance contended that an application for initial grant of a licence and an application for renewal of a licence have to be treated on a different footing and the only ground on which an application for renewal of the licence could be rejected is when the licensee has been convicted of an offence under the Act or the Rules framed under the Act or when the licence granted to the licensee has been previously cancelled or suspended and on no other ground an application for renewal could be rejected. It is not possible for us to sustain this contention raised by Mr. Phadke. We are here dealing with the topic of a licence to sell, stock or exhibit for sale or distribute drugs by retail. The relevant provisions are contained in rr. 59 to 67 of the Rules framed under the Drugs Act, 1940. The relevant rule which relates to applications for the grant or renewal of a licence is sub-r. (2) of r. 59, and it provides that applications for the grant or renewal of a licence to sell, stock, exhibit for sale, or distribute drugs shall be made in Form 19 or Form 19A, as the case may be, to the licensing authority and shall be accompanied by a fee of rupees twenty. It is necessary to mention that for obtaining a licence in Form 20 or Form 21, or its renewal an application is to be made in Form 19. Looking to this sub-rule it is clear that the form of application provided for initial grant of a licence as well as renewal of a licence is the same. The fee prescribed for an application for initial grant of a licence as well as renewal of a licence is also the same though, no doubt, if the application for renewal is made beyond the period of duration of the subsisting licence, penalty also is imposed. These applications are to be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of r. 64. Rule 63 provides that licences to sell drugs shall, unless sooner suspended or cancelled, be in force for two years from the date of issue provided that if application for a fresh licence is made before the expiry of the period of validity of the licence, the licence shall continue to be in force until orders are passed on the application. It is obvious that the application referred to in the proviso to r. 63 is the application for renewal of the licence. The rule in terms mentions it as an application for a fresh licence. It is thus clear that on the language of the rule as well as that of the provisions of sub-r. (2) of r. 59 the rule-making authorities have treated an application for a licence and an application for the renewal of a licence on the same footing. The conditions required to be fulfilled by the applicant for the grant of licence are contained in r. 64(1). We will advert to them later. There can be no doubt that they are in the interest of public health and must be satisfied by him to the satisfaction of the licensing authority. There is then no good reason to assume that these conditions need not be fulfilled to the satisfaction of the licensing authority by the licensee at the time of the renewal of his licence. We also see nothing in the language of the proviso to sub-r. (2) of r. 64 to sustain the argument that an application for renewal has to be treated on a different footing than an application for initial grant of licence or that renewal of licence could be refused only when conditions mentioned in the proviso exist. The proviso in terms has application both to the initial grant as well as to the renewal of a licence.

This question previously arose for decision before a Division Bench of this Court in *Jayantilal Sampatlal Jayaswal v. The State of Bombay*¹ to which one of us (Tambe J) was a party. In the judgment it was observed:

"...In our view, r. 64 relates both to the initial grant of licence as well as to the renewal of the licence. The words of the proviso itself 'may refuse to grant or renew', on which reliance was placed, show that the whole r. 64 relates to the initial grant of the licence as well as renewal of the licence. To interpret otherwise would mean that though a person may not be entitled to an initial grant of licence on account of his failure to satisfy the conditions of r. 64, yet he would be entitled to get his licence renewed."

We see no reason to take a view different from that taken in that case.

It is, therefore, not possible for us to accept the contention of Mr. Phadke that the application for renewal of licence could only be rejected if the conditions mentioned in the proviso to sub-r. (2) of r. 64 exist and not otherwise. In our opinion, r. 64(1) governs both application for initial grant of licence as well as application for renewal of licence. It is not the case of either party that the case falls under sub-r. (2) of r. 64. The case falls according to the respondents within sub-r. (1) of r. 64. Material part thereof reads as follows:

"Conditions to be satisfied before a licence in Form 20, 20B, 21 or 21B is granted:

(1) A licence in Form 20, 20B, 21 or 21B to sell stock or exhibit for sale or distribute drugs shall not be granted to any person unless the authority empowered to grant the licence is satisfied that the premises in respect of which the licence is to be granted are adequate, equipped with proper storage accommodation for preserving the properties of the drugs to which the licence applies and are in charge of a person competent in the opinion of the licensing authority to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs."

It is very strenuously contended on behalf of the respondents that on the facts found the case falls within sub-r. (1) of r. 64. On behalf of the petitioner it is equally strongly contended that even assuming that it was open to respondent No. 1 to reject the application for renewal of licence on account of non-compliance of the conditions mentioned in sub-r. (1) of r. 64, yet the rejection of the applications of the petitioner had not been on that ground. The rejection had been on account of non-compliance of the provisions of the Drugs Act, 1940, and rules framed thereunder and also on account of non-compliance of the conditions of the licence granted. It is the contention of Mr. Phadke that on this ground the application for renewal cannot be rejected. It must be conceded that the order made in this case is not happily worded. We have already reproduced the operative part of the order made on December 26, 1958. This order does not specifically mention the reasons for rejection of the application for renewal. It is stated there that for reasons mentioned in the letter of October 24, 1958, the applications of the petitioner are rejected.

This brings us to the letter of October 24, 1958. The facts found by respondent No. 1 and mentioned in that letter are:

"(1) Schedule E and H drugs i.e. Poisons are not stored by you in a separate cupboard under lock and key. Some drugs which are not poisons have also been kept in the cupboard in which poisons are kept."

¹ (1958) Special Civil Application No. 1160 of 1958, decided by Vyasa and Tambe, JJ. on August 8, 1958 (Unrep.).

(2) Refrigerator which as informed by you on December 12, 1957 was sent for repairs, has not been received back by you.

(3) There was no ice in the ice-box and you were stocking for sale drugs like Whooping Cough Vaccine and Liver Extract Injections at ordinary room temperature in that ice-box without providing any cold storage facilities for the drugs.

(4) Records and registers required to be maintained under Drugs Rules, 1945, have not been maintained by you at all. Statement made by you in this connection in your reply dated February 24, 1958 is not correct. No record has been maintained of the retail sales of spirituous medicines containing 3 per cent. or more of alcohol.

(5) Qualified person Shri Motilal Mohanlal Jaiswal was absent. He came later and the premises were in the meantime in charge of other persons who have not been approved as qualified persons. In this connection, I have to state that your statement as made in your letter dated February 24, 1958 that your Shri Jayantilal Shah is a qualified person is not correct. Name of Shri Motilal Mohanlal Jaiswal alone appears in the space for names of qualified persons in your licences in Forms 20 and 21."

It is urged by Mr. Abhyankar, Special Government Pleader, that the facts found in items 2 and 3 are that the refrigerator was out of order and that there was no proper arrangement made for keeping medicines requiring cold storage in the ice-box. It thus shows that there was no adequate and proper storage arrangement for preserving the properties of the drugs made by the petitioner. Respondent No. 1 was, therefore, entitled to reject the applications in terms of sub-r. (1) of r. 64. It is also contended by Mr. Abhyankar that other facts found show that the petitioner was contravening provisions of certain rules in the conduct of his business and he was, therefore, not a competent person in the opinion of respondent No. 1 to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs. It is true that the facts found relating to the conditions of the refrigerator and the ice-box show that the petitioner was not in a position or was unable to satisfy one of the requisite conditions mentioned in sub-r. (1) of r. 64 at the time he appealed for renewal of his licence. But it is not possible for us to accept the argument of Mr. Abhyankar that from the other facts found we should hold that the petitioner is not a competent person to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs. Contravention of rules may in certain cases be deliberate, in certain other cases it may arise out of incompetence or negligent supervision. It is not the question of the satisfaction of this Court. What is really material under sub-r. (1) of r. 64 is the satisfaction of the authority granting the licence. It may have been open to respondent No. 1 to reach a conclusion on those facts that the petitioner was not a competent person to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs, but he has not found so. We are, therefore, not inclined to accept Mr. Abhyankar's contention that respondent No. 1 has rejected the application on the ground that the petitioner is not a competent person to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs.

The tenor of the letter dated October 24, 1958, shows that in the opinion of respondent No. 1 reasons for refusing the licence were (1) inadequate arrangements for storing drugs requiring cold storage (items 2 and 3) and (2) certain other contraventions on the part of the petitioner of the provisions of the Act and rules framed thereunder (items 1, 4 and 5).

Now, on the language of r. 64, the opinion of the licensing authority that the licensee has contravened any of the provisions of the Act or the rules does not afford a ground to refuse renewal of a licence. The grounds on which renewal of licence could be refused are the inability of the licensee to fulfil the conditions mentioned in r. 64(1) to the satisfaction of the authority concerned and the conviction of the applicant of an offence under the Act or rules or previous cancellation or suspension of his licence. The difference between the two is of a substantial nature. In case a person is prosecuted for having contravened any of the provisions of the Act or rules he has an opportunity of defending himself in a Court of law and in case his licence is cancelled or suspended he has again a remedy in a Court of law by way of an appeal to the District Court. These provisions thus afford him safeguards before he is deprived of his business. There would be no such safeguard if the licensing authority refuses renewal of the licence on the ground that in his opinion the licensee has contravened the provisions of the Act or the rules. It must be kept in view that art. 19(1)(g) of the Constitution guarantees to the citizen of India the right to practise any profession, or to carry on any occupation, trade or business. Exercise of this right can of course be subjected to certain restrictions but only to the extent and in the manner provided in cl. (6) of the article. And when we turn to the material part of the said cl. (6) we find that restrictions on the exercise of this right could only be imposed by enacting a law in the interests of public and further that the restrictions imposed by law are reasonable. It cannot be disputed that the Drugs Act imposes restrictions on the exercise of a citizen's right to carry on trade or business in drugs. The authorities appointed under the Act, therefore, would not be justified in imposing any restrictions on the exercise of the aforesaid right by a citizen which are not authorised by the provisions of the Act or the rules made thereunder. As already stated the opinion of the licensing authority that the licensee has committed a breach of any of the provisions of the Act or any of the rules framed under the Act by itself is not a ground under r. 64 for refusing renewal of a licence. In our opinion, therefore, respondent No. 1 was in error in taking into consideration the alleged breaches of the provisions of the Act and the rules mentioned in items 1, 4 and 5 of his letter dated October 24, 1958, in rejecting the two applications of the petitioner for renewal of licences in Forms 20 and 21.

It is next to be seen whether the order of respondent No. 1 refusing to grant licence is thereby vitiated. From the facts stated above refusal to renew the licence is not solely founded on the ground of alleged contravention on the part of the petitioner of the provisions of the Act or rules made thereunder mentioned in items 1, 4 and 5 of letter dated October 24, 1958. The refusal is also founded on the ground that the refrigerator was not in order, that there had been no proper arrangement made for keeping in cold storage drugs required to be kept in cold storage for the preservation of their properties. Looking to the language of sub-r. (1) of r. 64 it would be seen that two conditions are required to be satisfied by the applicant before a licence could be granted to him and those conditions are that the licensing authority must be satisfied that the premises are adequate, equipped with proper storage accommodation for preserving the properties of the drugs to which the licence applies and that the premises must be in charge of a person competent in the opinion of the licensing authority to supervise and control the sale, distribution and preservation of drugs. In the instant case, respondent No. 1 was not satisfied that the petitioner's premises were equipped with proper storage accommodation for preserving the properties of the drugs to which the licence applies on account of the failure on the part of the petitioner to provide a refrigerator or an ice-box for storing the drugs required to be kept in cold storage. In the circumstances of the case, it cannot be said that the aforesaid conclusion reached by respondent No. 1 is capricious. The premises of the petitioner were visited by respondent No. 1 on January 21, 1958. It was found that the refrigerator was out of order. The premises were again inspected on October 22, 1958. The refrigerator remained unrepaired. The petitioner had promised to make adequate arrangements to keep certain drugs in cold storage by providing an ice-box. The undertaking given by the petitioner was found not to have been fulfilled. The premises were again visited on December 11, 1958. The conditions remained just the same. For a period of nearly 12 months there were no satisfactory arrangements made by the petitioner to keep in cold storage drugs required to be kept in cold storage for preservation of their properties. In these circumstances, in our opinion, it cannot be said that respondent No. 1 acted in any capricious manner in reaching the conclusion that the premises were not equipped with proper storage accommodation for preserving the properties of the drugs to which the licence applies. This being the position, on the language of sub-r. (1) of r. 64, which is mandatory in form, no option was left to respondent No. 1 but to reject the aforesaid two applications of the petitioner for renewal of licences in Forms 20 and 21. In our opinion, therefore, it cannot be said that respondent No. 1 was in error in rejecting the aforesaid applications of the petitioner. For reasons stated above, in our judgment, the petitioner is not entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by him.

In the result, the petition fails. The rule is, therefore, discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

MADHOSINGH DAULATSINGH v. THE STATE OF BOMBAY.*

Master and servant—Disciplinary action—Whether misconduct of servant must arise within his employment to enable master to take disciplinary action—Public servants—Whether disciplinary action can be taken against them for their misconduct outside their employment—Central Provinces and Berar Police Regulations, Rr. 64(11), 214, 217, 226—Police Act (V of 1861), Sec. 7.

In order to enable a master to take disciplinary action against his servant it is not a condition precedent that the misconduct on the part of the servant must arise within his employment and not outside his employment. The test in each case will be whether the servant is conducting himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his obligations undertaken by him either expressly or impliedly in accepting the service. The inconsistency may arise on account of any act of the servant, either in the course of his employment or outside it, which injures or has the tendency to injure his master's business or interests or reputation. In the case of a private servant it is the master who in his own discretion decides the question of the disciplinary action to be taken against his servant. In the case of a public servant it is not the master but certain officers of the common master who decide this question, but their powers in that respect are regulated by the Act or rules framed thereunder.

On a Departmental Inquiry being held by the District Superintendent of Police, Wardha, on the conduct of a police constable, it was found that he had behaved very rudely with a member of the public, outside his employment. The District Superintendent of Police passed an order whereunder the police constable was reduced in pay by a certain amount per month for a period of two years and it was further ordered that the reduction would postpone his future increments. On the questions whether it was open to the Police authorities to take any disciplinary action against the police constable as the misconduct as found was committed by him not during the course of employment but was outside the employment and whether the District Superintendent of Police had acted within his authority in awarding the punishment which he had awarded for the misconduct found:—

Held, that the police constable had conducted himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his service inasmuch as he had acted contrary to the discipline prescribed for a police officer in cl. (11) of Regulation 64 of the Central Provinces and Berar Police Regulations, and as his conduct was likely to bring disrepute to the police force, he had exposed himself to a disciplinary action, but, that the punishment awarded by the District Superintendent of Police was in excess of the authority and powers conferred on him under the provisions of Regulation 226, and that the punishment awarded contravened the specific provisions of cl. (a) of Regulation 217.

*Decided, July 13, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 39 of 1959.

There is no provision either in the Police Act, 1861, or Regulations to restrict recourse to taking disciplinary action against a police officer's action to acts done by him during the course of employment only.

*Pearce v. Foster,*¹ referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

B. B. Ranade, for the petitioner.

G. R. Mudholkar, Assistant Special Government Pleader, for opponents, Nos. 1 to 4.

TAMBE J. This is a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India, by police constable Madhosingh. It is directed against the order of the District Superintendent of Police, Wardha, respondent No. 2 hereto, made on May 8, 1958, whereunder the petitioner is reduced in pay by Rs. 2 per month for a period of two years beginning with the month of May 1958 and with a further order that this reduction will have the effect of postponing his future increments, and the affirming orders in appeal and revision made on July 29, 1958, and January 17, 1959, by the Deputy Inspector General of Police and the Inspector General of Police respondents Nos. 3 and 4 respectively.

Facts in brief are that the petitioner at the material time was posted as police constable in Wardha, a district place in the Vidarbha region. The petitioner was residing on the ground floor of a house. In the same house on the upper floor Shri Desai, Company Commandant of the Home Guards, Wardha, and one Bhagwansingh were residing. This house had no pacca latrine. A temporary latrine was, therefore, put up by the said Bhagwansingh and it was used by Bhagwansingh and Shri Desai. They also did not raise any objection to the use of that latrine by the petitioner. It appears that on February 9, 1958, the petitioner was trying to prevent Shri Desai's children from using the latrine and there was some altercation in this respect between the petitioner and Dashrath, peon of Shri Desai. Shri Desai who was nearabout, getting ready to go out, intervened and asked the petitioner as to what the matter was. The petitioner then lost his temper and replied "Have you no eyes, the latrine is full, it is smelling and who is going to clean it." Shri Desai told him that there was a sweeperess and that she would clean it. The petitioner then advanced towards Shri Desai in a threatening attitude and talked to him rudely in the first person singular. Shri Desai then went to the Police Lines and reported the matter to the Lines Officer. Later Shri Desai also reported the incident to the District Superintendent of Police, who asked the Station House Officer to inquire into the matter. The Station House Officer submitted his report on February 10, 1958, and the petitioner was suspended on that very day by the District Superintendent of Police, Wardha. On February 11, 1958, a charge sheet was served on the petitioner and the charge the petitioner was called upon to answer was "rude and improper behaviour with Shri Desai, Company Commandant, Home Guards, Wardha, on 9-2-1958 over the use of common latrine in the house of one Bhandekar of Gandhi Nagar." A Departmental Inquiry was then held by the District Superintendent of Police, Wardha. It was inter alia contended by the petitioner that the misbehaviour, even if any, being outside the employment, disciplinary action could not be taken against him. The District Superintendent of Police held that there was no proper justification for the petitioner to behave as he did with Shri Desai, Company Commandant, Home Guards. He further took the view that the default on the part of the petitioner was of a very serious nature. He negatived the contention of the petitioner that no disciplinary action could be taken against him for misconduct outside the employment. The District Superintendent of Police, therefore, issued a notice on April 17, 1958, calling upon the petitioner to show cause why he should not be dismissed from the police force. The petitioner by his reply showed cause. Respondent No. 2 then made the following order on May 8, 1958:

"Constable Mahadevsing No. 125 of Lines is reduced in pay by Rs. 2 p.m. for a period of two years beginning with the month of May 1958. The reduction will have the effect of postponing his future increments. The constable is reinstated in service but his period of suspension so far will be treated as such."

The petitioner then took an appeal to the Deputy Inspector General of Police and the same contention was again reiterated by the petitioner in appeal. The contention was negatived by the Deputy Inspector General of Police and he dismissed the appeal on July 29, 1958. In the course of the order he observed:

"It is true that there is an appreciable distinction between the two capacities of a Police Officer, one as a member of the public and the other as police officer. At the same time, these cannot be regarded as watertight compartments. The appellant's acts as a member of the public do have a bearing on his character as a Police Officer and being a police officer the appellant should have acted with unfailing patience, courtesy and tact and refrained from losing his temper."

The petitioner then filed a revision application before the Inspector General of Police. This application was dismissed by the Inspector General of Police on January 17, 1959. The petitioner has, therefore, preferred this petition in this Court.

Mr. Ranade, learned counsel for the petitioner, in the first instance, contends that the misconduct as found was committed by the petitioner not during the course of the employment but was outside the employment and, therefore, it was not open to the Police authorities to take any disciplinary action against the petitioner in that respect. We find it difficult to accept this contention. It is true that the misconduct in respect of which disciplinary action is taken against a servant must have reasonable relation to the nature of the service, but it need not necessarily arise in the course of employment. When a person accepts an employment by necessary implications he agrees to so conduct and behave himself as would not be inconsistent with the nature of his service. If he behaves and conducts himself in a manner which would be inconsistent with the nature of his service then that would affect or at any rate would be likely to affect the interests or good name of his employer. If and when it happens it is reasonable to hold that it would entitle the employer to take such disciplinary action against his employee as the nature and degree of misconduct would require and law would permit. It is not that interests or good name of an employer is likely to be adversely affected only by an act of an employee during the course of an employment. We also do not find any provision either in the Police Act or Regulations to restrict recourse to taking disciplinary action against a police officer's action to acts done by him during the course of employment only.

Regulation 64 of the Police Regulations deals with general conditions of service of a police officer and cl. (11) thereof provides that the police officer shall act with respect and deference towards all officers of Government, and with forbearance, kindness and civility towards private persons of all ranks. In a private life he shall set an example of peaceful behaviour and shall avoid all partisanship. This clause makes it clear that it is one of the conditions of his service that a police officer conducts himself both during the course of his employment as well as outside his employment with civility and courteousness. It necessarily follows that his acting otherwise, though in private life, would be inconsistent with the general conditions of his service. The law relating to the disciplinary action which could be taken by a private individual against his servant is not that no disciplinary action can be taken by his master against the servant for any misconduct of his servant outside the employment. In considering the case of dismissal of a private servant Lord Esher M. R. in *Pearce v. Foster*¹ observed (p. 539):

"The rule of law is, that where a person has entered into the position of servant, if he does anything incompatible with the due or faithful discharge of his duty to his master, the latter has a right to dismiss him. The relation of master and servant implies necessarily that the servant shall be in a position to perform his duty duly and faithfully, and if by his own act he prevents himself from doing so, the master may dismiss him....What circumstances will put a servant into the position of not being able to perform, in a due manner, his duties, or of not being able to perform his duty in a faithful manner, it is impossible to enumerate. Innumerable circumstances have actually occurred which fall within that proposition, and innumerable other circumstances which never have yet occurred, will occur, which also will fall within the proposition. But if a servant is guilty of such a crime outside his service as to make it unsafe for a master to keep him in his employ, the servant may be dismissed by his master; and if the servant's conduct is so grossly immoral that all reasonable men would say that he cannot be trusted, the master may dismiss him."

Dealing with the same question in the same case Lord Justice Lopes observed (p. 542):

"If a servant conducts himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his duty in the service, it is misconduct which justifies immediate dismissal. That misconduct, according to my view, need not be misconduct in the carrying on of the service or the business. It is sufficient if it is conduct which is prejudicial or is likely to be prejudicial to the interests or to the reputation of the master."

We are not aware of any decision taking a contrary view, and none is shown to us.

The ratio deducible then is that in order to enable a master to take disciplinary action against his servant it is not a condition precedent that the misconduct on the part of the servant must arise within his employment and not outside his employment. The test in each case will be whether the servant is conducting himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his obligations undertaken by him either expressly or impliedly in accepting the service. The inconsistency may arise on account of any act of the servant, either in the course of his employment or outside it, which injures or has the tendency to injure his master's business or interests or reputation. There is no reason why this principle should not apply to public servants. There is however one very material difference between the two and that must be kept in view. In case of a private servant it is the master who in his own discretion decides the question of the disciplinary action to be taken against his servant. In the case of a public servant it is not the master but certain officers of the common master who decide this question, but their powers in that respect are regulated by the Act or rules framed thereunder.

In the instant case, as we have already shown, it was expected of the petitioner, being a police officer, to behave with civility and courteousness with a member of the public even in his private life. It has been found that he has very rudely behaved with Shri Desai. There is no doubt that the petitioner has conducted himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his service inasmuch as he acted contrary to the discipline prescribed for a police officer in cl. (11) of Regulation 64. Such a conduct is likely to bring disrepute to the police force. He has, therefore, exposed himself to a disciplinary action.

The second contention raised relates to the jurisdiction or powers of respondent No. 2 to impose the punishment he has imposed for the offence of which the petitioner has been found guilty. It has, therefore, to be seen whether respondent No. 2 has acted within his authority in awarding the punishment which he awarded for the misconduct found. If he has, we are not concerned with its quantum.

Section 7 of the Police Act provides that subject to such rules as the Provincial Government may from time to time make the Inspector General of Police, Deputy Inspector General of Police, Assistant Inspector General and District Superintendent of Police may impose on police officers certain punishments mentioned therein. In exercise of the powers conferred by this section the Provincial Government has made certain rules (referred to as Regulations). They are contained in Chapter VIII of the book 'C. P. & Berar Police Regulations' published under the authority of the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar. Regulation 214 enumerates the various kinds of punishments which could be imposed on police officers belonging to the Subordinate Police Service. The punishment imposed on the petitioner is twofold: (1) there is reduction in his pay by Rs. 2 p.m. for a period of two years beginning with the month of May 1958 and (ii) this reduction is to have the effect of postponing his future increments. On the language of regulation 214 the punishment imposed falls within cl. (ii) and (iii) of Regulation 214, that is, withholding of increments and reduction to a lower stage in a time scale. Regulation 215 deals with certain additional penalties which could be imposed on non-gazetted officers. We are, however, not concerned with those punishments in the instant case. Regulation 216 enumerates certain additional punishments which could also be imposed on Head Constables and Constables. Regulation 217 enumerates some more punishments which could also be imposed on Constables. In the instant case, the petitioner is a constable. Clause (a) of this regulation provides that a constable may also be punished with deprivation or withholding of increment (for a period not exceeding one year at any one time). In the instant case, the punishing authority, i.e. respondent No. 2, has at one time withheld the increment of the petitioner for a period of two years, which is contrary to the provisions of cl. (a) of regulation 217. Regulations 219 to 223 deal with the powers of punishment conferred on various officers. Regulations 224 and 225 contain general instructions relating to award of punishment. Regulation 226 lays down rules to be observed by the disciplinary authority in determining what penalty should be awarded for any particular offence.

It would thus be seen that the power of the disciplinary authority to impose a penalty is regulated and controlled by the provisions of the aforesaid regulation which is a complete Code by itself. It would therefore, be not open to it to impose a penalty which it deems proper, unless it is authorised by the regulation.

The offence of which the petitioner has been found guilty by respondent No. 2 is that his (petitioner's) behaviour was rude and improper towards Shri R. B. Desai, Company Commandant of the Home Guards, and in the words of respondent No. 3 the appellant (petitioner) being a police officer he should have acted with unfailing patience, courtesy and tact and refrained from losing his temper. It has to be seen whether the penalty imposed by respondent No. 2 on the petitioner and confirmed by respondents Nos. 3 and 4 is warranted under any one or more clauses of regulation 226.

It will be convenient at this stage to refer to certain other facts that weighed with respondent No. 2 in awarding the punishment which he has awarded. From paras. 21 and 22 of the preliminary order dated April 17, 1958, it appears that respondent No. 2 after coming to the conclusion that the petitioner was guilty of the aforesaid offence, looked into his service record and from it he found that during his 12 years' service he had received two major punishments and 11 minor punishments and had received 18 rewards. Miscellaneous remark in his service record was that the petitioner was a constable of an average calibre. One of the previous major punishments which was awarded in 1950 related to misbehaviour with a member of the public and for disciplinary conduct in the presence of his Station Officer. The punishment imposed was reduction in pay from Rs. 31 to Rs. 30 p.m. for a period of six months. Second default occurred in 1952 when he was reduced from Rs. 32 to Rs. 31 p.m. for a period of 12 months for conniving at a breach of Motor Vehicle Rules committed in his presence and for insolently refusing to submit his explanation to the Station Officer. Two of the minor punishments related to quarrelling and disciplinary behaviour towards the Station Officer (years not mentioned). On account of this previous record respondent No. 2 thought that the previous punishments have not deterred the petitioner from improper, rude and indisciplinary behaviour towards others and in his opinion it was not likely that he would improve thereby. He further was of opinion that the present default was of a very serious nature and he did not see any case for showing any leniency to the petitioner. He, therefore, issued a notice to the petitioner to show cause why he should not be dismissed from the police force. In the final order in awarding the punishment respondent No. 2 observed:

"I, however, feel that the punishment of dismissal stated in my show cause notice is a little too severe especially in view of the fact that in Vidarbha area constables have not yet become fully used to the idea of police behaviour towards the members of the public. I, therefore, feel that one more chance may be given to the accused constable to mend his ways. If such behaviour is repeated in future, it will be necessary to dismiss him from service."

And in this view of the matter, respondent No. 2 imposed on the petitioner the aforesaid punishment. It, therefore, appears that the punishment imposed by respondent No. 2 is not merely on account of the offence of which the petitioner has been found guilty but also on account of the previous record which, in the opinion of respondent No. 2, merited dismissal but on second thought he thought it too severe and, therefore, imposed the aforesaid punishment.

Now, turning to the provisions of Regulation 226, rude or discourteous behaviour towards a member of the public in private life outside employment, even if repeated, does not afford a ground for even imposing any penalty under cl. (ii) to (iv) of Regulation 226 much less of dismissal under cl. (i) of Regulation 226. Reading first and second clauses together it appears that the punishment of dismissal or reduction in rank is awarded or could be awarded for incompetence, or cases of serious dereliction of duty. Clause (iii) provides that punishment of withholding of increment, either temporary or permanent, can be imposed only in the case of serious dereliction of duty or for culpable ignorance of police procedure, laziness or apathy in conducting the work of the station-house, and the like. Clause (iv) provides that an increment which has fallen due may be withheld for a definite period for inefficiency or unsatisfactory service. It, however, specifically prohibits withholding of increments of constables for a period more than one year in the first instance. Discourteous or rude behaviour towards a member of the public in private life can hardly be termed as incompetence in the discharge of his duty as police constable or serious dereliction of duty, or culpable ignorance of police procedure or other offences mentioned in clauses (iii) and (iv). Clause (v) relates to imposition of fines. It, however, prohibits fining of constables.

After going through the entire Regulation 226 we do not find any clause under which the instant case would fall, except clause (vi). We have no advantage of knowing from the orders of any of the respondents the clause or clauses of the Regulation 226 under which respondent No. 2 purported to act in imposing the punishment on the petitioner. We asked the learned counsel for the respondents to point out to us the clause which would be attracted to the facts of the present case. He frankly conceded that there is no clause in Regulation 226 which would get attracted to the facts of the case except clause (vi). It reads:

"(vi) In the case of head constables and constables, minor offences against discipline should be dealt with, firstly, by warning, and if this proves ineffectual, by the infliction of the minor punishments specified in Regulations 216 and 217(b), or by detaching the offender to a course of more irksome and unpopular duties."

Now, punishments specified in Regulations 216 and 217(b) are not withholding of increment or reduction to a lower stage in a time scale, but, on the other hand, they are (i) confinement to quarters for a term not exceeding 15 days, (ii) punishment drill, (iii) extra guard duty, (iv) tent pitching, (v) drain digging, (vi) cutting grass, clearing jungle and cleaning parade grounds, (vii) repairing huts and butts and similar work in the lines, (viii) cleaning arms.

In our opinion, therefore, though the conduct on the part of the petitioner entitled respondent No. 2 to take a disciplinary action against him the punishment awarded by him to the petitioner is in excess of his authority and powers conferred on him under the provisions of Regulation 226, and further the punishment awarded contravenes the specific provisions of cl. (a) of Regulation 217. The orders of respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4, therefore, cannot be sustained.

In the result, the petition is allowed, and the aforesaid orders of May 8, 1958, July 29, 1958, and January 17, 1959, are quashed. We want to make it clear that we should not be understood to have said that it is no more open to the respondents to take such disciplinary action against the petitioner as could be taken against him under the regulations.

We make no order as to costs as, in our opinion, the petitioner is not free from blame.

Petition allowed.

INCOME-TAX REFERENCE

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX (CENTRAL), BOMBAY

MULRAJ KARSONDAS.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 60, Notification No. 878F of March 21, 1922 and Notification No. 8 of March 24, 1928—Managing Director receiving monthly salary from company—Certain amount out of salary disallowed in assessment of company—Whether such amount liable to be taxed in hands of assessee managing director—Applicability of Notifications.

The assessee, who was the managing director of a private limited company, received a certain amount per month as salary from the company. In the relevant assessment year the Taxing Authorities disallowed the claim of the company for a certain amount out of the salary paid to the assessee, as in their view, it was not an expenditure laid out or expended wholly or exclusively for the company's business within the meaning of s. 10(2)(xx) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In the hands of the assessee, his entire remuneration received from the company was sought to be taxed and it was contended by the assessee that the salary paid to him in excess of the amount allowed as deduction in the assessment of the company having already been taxed in the hands of the employers was not liable to be taxed over again in his hands. In support of his contention the assessee relied upon Notification No. 878F dated March 21, 1922, as amended by Notification No. 8 of March 24, 1928:—

Held, that under the Notification it is only where the sum paid is out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business and that by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the sum paid, the same has not been allowed as a deduction but has been included in the profits of the business, that the benefit of the Notification may be given to the assessee, that, in the instant case, the salary was paid at a stipulated rate per month to the assessee and was not paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business, and the disallowance of the amount was not by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the salary out of the profits of the business, and that as these conditions under the Notification were not fulfilled, the assessee could not have the benefit of the Notification and the amount in question could be taxed in the hands of the assessee.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

G. N. Joshi, for the applicant.

S. P. Mehta, for the respondent.

SHAH J. This Reference relates to two assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49. A private limited company known as "Chidambaram Mulraj & Co.", which will hereafter be referred to as the company, was incorporated on April 30, 1943, with the object of acquiring the managing agency of the Elphinstone Spinning & Weaving Mills Co. Ltd. The company appointed the assessee Mulraj Karsondas as its managing director and agreed to pay him 25 per cent. of the annual managing agency commission and also a salary of Rs. 1,000 per month. The salary was later increased to Rs. 2,000 per month because Chidambaram, who was the Director-Chairman of the company, retired from active management and the assessee was "saddled with higher burden and responsibilities". In completing the assessment of the company for the assessment year 1946-47, the Taxing Authorities disallowed the salary paid to the assessee in excess of Rs. 1,100 as a business deduction. In the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 the Taxing Authorities disallowed the claim of the company for Rs. 8,700 and Rs. 7,500 respectively out of the salary paid to the assessee, as in their view, it was not an expenditure laid out or expended wholly or exclusively for the company's business within the meaning of s. 10(2)(zv). In the hands of the assessee, his entire remuneration received from the company was, however, sought to be taxed. The assessee contended that the salary paid to him in excess of the amount allowed as deduction in the assessment of the company having already been taxed in the hands of his employers was not liable to be taxed over again in his hands, and in support of that contention he relied upon Notification No. 878F, dated March 21, 1922, as amended by Notification No. 8 of March 24, 1928, issued by the Central Government in exercise of the powers under s. 60 of the Income-tax Act. The Income-tax Tribunal was of the view following the judgment of this Court in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. R. B. Jacques*⁴ and *M. K. Kirtikar v. Commr. of Inc.-tax*⁵ that on the amounts which were disallowed in the assessment of the company, tax could not be levied over again in the hands of the assessee. At the instance of the Commissioner, the Tribunal has referred the following question:

"Whether the sums of Rs. 8,700 and Rs. 7,500 were exempt from tax in the hands of the assessee for the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 respectively, the claim for exemption being based upon the Notification No. 878F dated 21-3-1922, as amended by Notification No. 8 of 24-3-1928 issued by the Central Government under section 60 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922?"

Mr. Joshi for the Department contends that the view taken by this Court in M. K. Kirtikar's case has now been overruled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court and, therefore, the judgments in Commissioner of Income-tax v. R. B. Jacques and M. K. Kirtikar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax are overruled and no reliance can be placed upon the principle of those cases in support of the view that the two amounts referred to in the question are not liable to be taxed in the hands of the assessee.

The Notification issued by the Government of India on March 21, 1922, as amended on March 24, 1928, in so far as it is material stands as follows:

"The following classes of income shall be exempt from the tax payable under the said Act, but shall be taken into account in determining the total income of an assessee for the purpose of the said Act:

(1) Sums received by an assessee on account of salary, bonus, commission or other remuneration for services rendered or in lieu of interest on money advanced to a person for purposes of his business, where such sums have been paid out of, or determined with reference to, the profits of such business and by reason of such mode of payment or determination, have not been allowed as a deduction but have been included in the profits of the business on which income-tax has been assessed and charged under the head 'business'".

As observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Commr. of Inc.-tax v. M. K. Kirtikar,⁶ exemption from taxation in respect of the sum received by an assessee from a business on account of commission etc. could be claimed under the Notifications only on fulfilment of the following three cumulative conditions:

"(1) Where such sum has been paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business;

(2) Where by reason of such mode of payment or determination the sum paid has not been allowed as a deduction but has been included in the profits of the business; and

(3) Where on the sum so disallowed in the computation of the profits of the business, income-tax has been assessed and charged under the head 'business'".

The purpose of the Notification was undoubtedly to avoid double taxation of the same profits. If the amount was paid out of or determined with reference to profits, and was assessed and charged in the hands of the employer, the same was not to be assessed and charged over again in the hands of the assessee.

There can be no dispute that the two amounts referred to in the question have been disallowed as permissible deductions in the computation of the profits of the company and income-tax has been assessed and charged thereon from the company. On the scheme of the Notification, it is evident that it is only where the sum paid is out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business and that by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the sum paid, the same has not been allowed as a deduction but has been included in the profits of the business, that the benefit of the notification may be given to the assessee. The two amounts have admittedly not been allowed as deductions and have been included in the profits of the business of the company, but the amounts disallowed have not been paid out of the profits nor determined with reference to the profits of the business, nor is the reason for the disallowance the mode of payment or determination of the amounts. The profits of the business may normally be ascertained only after deducting therefrom the outgoings for the purpose of earning the profits. The gross receipts of a businessman are not his profits: from the gross receipts deductions of necessity are to be made of the various outgoings which contributed to the earning of the profits. Salary paid to an employee for conducting the business in which the profits are earned if it bears no direct relation thereto must be deducted in ascertaining the profits. It is true that in cases when it is so stipulated the quantum of salary may be determined by reference to the quantum of profits made by an employer. In such cases, the salary may be held to be paid out of profits or determined with reference to the profits of the business. But, in this case, the salary is paid at a fixed rate per month and is not paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business. Nor is it that by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the salary so paid that the deductions have not been permitted. The three conditions under the Notification being cumulative, if one or more of the conditions are not fulfilled, evidently, the assessee cannot claim the benefit of the notification.

But Mr. Mehta, who appears on behalf of the assessee, contends that their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Commr. of Inc.-tax v. M. K. Kirtikar did not decide the question whether salary paid at a stipulated rate to an assessee can be regarded as a sum paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business; and we are bound by the decision in Commissioner of Income-tax v. R. R. Jacques in which it was held that payment of bonus to an employee is by virtue of the notification of the Government of India exempt from tax if the same or a part thereof has been taxed in the hands of his employer.

In M. K. Kirtikar v. Commr. of Inc.-tax, this Court was called upon to consider whether certain amounts paid to an employee as commission which were disallowed as permissible deductions under s. 10(2)(xv) in assessing the tax payable by the employer, were liable to be taxed in the hands of the employee. In that case, the employers of the assessee had paid certain commission to their employees beside the stipulated monthly salary. In the assessment proceeding of the employers of the assessee, a part of this commission was disallowed. Thereafter, the employers ceased doing business and the business was transferred to a limited company and by reason of s. 25(4) of the Income-tax Act, the business having been charged to income-tax, though the tax was not paid, it was held that the employees were entitled to claim exemption on the commission received by them under the Notification. It was held by this Court that the commission was paid out of the profits and the tax was charged to the employer, though they were exempted from paying the same. In appeal, their Lordships of the Supreme Court referred to the three component conditions for the application of the Notification, and observed that on the view that they took it was not necessary to express any opinion on the question whether the commission had been paid out of the profits and it was also unnecessary to consider whether the second condition was fulfilled, but, in their view, the third condition not having been fulfilled, the assessee could not claim relief under the Notification. Evidently, this case does not decide the question whether the salary paid to an assessee by his employer, which is disallowed in the assessment of the employer by the Income-tax Department, exemption granted by the Notification will be attracted.

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. R. R. Jacques, Chagla C.J. in delivering the judgment of the Court observed that "... 'profits' in this notification is not used in the sense of taxable profits, but is used in the commercial sense. If a company makes profits and then out of those profits decides to pay a certain amount to his employee for the work done by him, the employer is undoubtedly paying the bonus out of the profits of the business".

Relying upon these observations, Mr. Mehta contends that in this case also the salary was part of the commercial profits of the company and tax having been levied on the company, the Notifications relied upon are attracted. Undoubtedly, exemption from payment of tax under the Notification is claimable in respect of sums paid out of or determined with reference to the commercial profits, but in computing even the commercial profits, the salaries paid to the employees must be taken into account. It is only after the expenses incurred for earning the profits are deducted that the commercial profits of a business can be ascertained, and if for ascertaining the commercial profits, the salary paid to the employee is deducted, the salary will not be a sum paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business. In Jacques's case, the Court came to the conclusion that the amount paid to the assessee was not liable to be taxed in his hands; but in that case the amount sought to be taxed was received by the employee as bonus and not as salary. Payment by the employer of a sum of money to his employee as bonus is in its very nature gratuitous. It is made as a payment ex gratia having regard to the profits earned by him in his business and the services rendered by the employee, and in its very nature bonus is a payment out of the profits or determined with reference to the profits and is related directly to profits and is not deducted before ascertainment of the profits. R. R. Jacques's case is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In the present case, if the salary paid to the assessee is to be deducted from the gross earnings of the company before ascertaining the commercial profits, the payment to the assessee is not out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business. Again, the disallowance is not by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the salary out of the profits of the business; it is disallowed because it is not an expenditure laid out or expended wholly or exclusively for the purpose of the business. In that view of the case, the second condition is also not fulfilled. We are, therefore, of the view that the principle of the case of R. R. Jacques is not applicable to the facts of the present case.

On that view of the case, the answer to the question will be in the negative: Assessee to pay the costs of the Commissioner.

Indian Passport Act (XXXIV of 1920), Sec. 3—Indian Passport Rules, 1950, Rr. 3, 4—Whether s. 3 of Act and rr. 3 and 4 of Rules apply to Indian citizens.

The provisions of s. 3 of the Indian Passport Act, 1920, and rr. 3 and 4 of the Indian Passport Rules, 1950, apply to all persons including Indian citizens.

THE facts are stated in 59 Bombay Law Reporter 857.

O. N. Srivastava and J. B. Dadachanji, for the appellant.

G. C. Mathur and R. H. Dhebar, for the respondent.

IMAM J. The appellant was convicted under r. 6(a) of the Indian Passport Rules, 1950, hereinafter referred to as the Rules, made under s. 3 of the Indian Passport Act, (XXXIV of 1920), hereinafter referred to as the Act, and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. The High Court in exercising its revisional jurisdiction upheld the conviction but reduced the sentence to a fine of Rs. 25. It granted a certificate to the appellant that the case was a fit one for appeal to this Court.

It is beyond dispute now that the appellant is a citizen of India. Admittedly he entered the territories of India without a passport. The sole question for determination is whether his act in so entering the territories of India amounted to an offence punishable under r. 6(a) of the Rules.

The Act was passed in 1920 and has been the subject of amendment and modification thereafter. Its preamble states "whereas it is expedient to take power to require passports of persons entering India, it is hereby enacted as follows." "Passport" has been defined as a passport for the time being in force, issued or renewed by the prescribed authority and satisfying the conditions prescribed relating to the class of passports to which it belongs. Section 3 states:

(1) The Central Government may make rules requiring that persons entering India shall be in possession of passports, and for all matters ancillary or incidental to that purpose.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power such rules may—

*Decided, May 14, 1959. Criminal Appeal No. 182 of 1957.

(a) prohibit the entry into India or any part thereof of any person who has not in his possession a passport issued to him;

(b) prescribe the authorities by whom passports must have been issued or renewed, and the conditions with which they must comply, for the purposes of this Act; and

(c) provide for the exemption, either absolutely or on any condition, of any person or class of persons from any provision of such rules.

(3) Rules made under this section may provide that any contravention thereof or of any order issued under the authority of any such rule shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine or with both.

(4) All rules made under this section shall be published in the Official Gazette, and shall thereupon have effect as if enacted in this Act.

Rule 3 of the Rules states:

"Save as provided in rule 4, no person, proceeding from any place outside India, shall enter, or attempt to enter, India by water, land or air unless he is in possession of a valid passport conforming to the conditions prescribed in rule 5."

Rule 4 specifies the persons who shall be exempted from the provisions of r. 3. Clause (b) of r. 4 exempts members of the Naval, Military or Air Forces of India on duty, and members of the family of any such person when accompanying such person to India on a Government transport. Clause (c) exempts persons domiciled in India proceeding from any of the French establishments in India (other than Pondicherry in Karaikal) or from any of the Portuguese establishments in India or Pakistan. Clause (f) exempts persons domiciled in India entering India by land or by air over the Nepalese or Tibetan frontier. Clause (h) exempts bona fide Mahomedan pilgrims returning from Jeddah or Basra and cl. (i) exempts other persons or classes of persons specified by general or special orders of the Central Government.

The date of the appellant's entry into India is not known. He was certainly arrested on February 26, 1955, and it is his case that he entered India sometime after the decision of this Court in the case of *Ebrahim Vazir Mavat v. The State of Bombay*¹. The judgment of this Court in that case was delivered on February 15, 1954. On that basis the appellant entered India sometime after February 15, 1954, and before February 26, 1955. It is unnecessary to specify in great detail the movements of the appellant between November 19, 1948, when he went to Karachi for the first time, and his arrest on February 26, 1955, as his movements during this period are not relevant in determining whether the appellant has committed an offence punishable under r. 6(a) of the Rules. The case must be decided on the footing that sometime before his arrest on February 26, 1955, the appellant entered India without a passport.

Two contentions were raised on behalf of the appellant: (1) that r. 3 of the Rules and s. 3 of the Act were ultra vires the Constitution in so far as they purported to affect the right of an Indian citizen to enter India without a passport and (2) that on a proper interpretation of the provisions of s. 3 of the Act and r. 3 of the Rules, these provisions did not apply to an Indian citizen. They applied only to non-Indian citizens.

As to the first contention it was urged that s. 3 of the Act and r. 3 of the Rules in so far as they purported to relate to an Indian citizen were ultra vires the Constitution, as they offended against the provisions of art. 19(1)(d) and (e). Article 19(1)(d) confers the fundamental right on all Indian citizens "to move freely throughout the territory of India" and art. 19(1)(e) "to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India." This fundamental right, however, is subject to reasonable restrictions under cl. (5) of art. 19. In the case of Ebrahim Vazir Mavat v. The State of Bombay (supra) the majority judgment of this Court held that an Indian citizen visiting Pakistan for any purpose whatsoever and returning to India may be required to produce a permit or a passport as the case may be before he can be allowed to enter India, and this requirement may well be regarded as a proper restriction upon entry. This Court, however, held that it was quite a different matter to say that if he enters India without a permit he may on conviction for such offence be ordered to be removed from India. It was the order directing his removal from India which was held by this Court to be tantamount to taking away his fundamental right guaranteed under art. 10(1)(e), "to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India". It is clear, therefore, that so far as this Court is concerned it has already decided that to require an Indian citizen to produce a passport before he can be allowed to enter India may be regarded as a proper restriction upon entering India. This decision is binding on us and we must follow the decision of this Court in the case referred to. It was, however, urged that as a constitutional question has been raised this matter cannot be decided by Judges less than five in number. Therefore, the case should be referred to what is described as the Constitution Bench. Article 145(3) of the Constitution states that the minimum number of Judges who are to sit for the purpose of deciding any case involving a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution or for the purpose of hearing any reference under art. 143 shall be five. It is clear that no substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution arises in the present case as the very question raised has been decided by a Bench of this Court consisting of five Judges. As the question raised before us has been already decided by this Court it cannot be said that any substantial question of law arises regarding the interpretation of the Constitution.

As to the second submission made we have no hesitation in saying that the words used in s. 3 of the Act and rr. 3 and 4 of the Rules make it quite clear that they apply to every person including an Indian citizen. Under s. 3(1) of the Act the word "Persons" has been stated without any qualification. Under s. 3(2)(a) the words employed are "any person" and in r. 3 the words employed are "no person". Clause (b) of r. 4 obviously applies to Indian citizens but those mentioned in that clause have been specifically exempted from the operation of r. 3. Clause (h) of r. 4(1) can apply to Indian citizens who are by religion Mahomedan. They have been exempted. Therefore, on a reasonable interpretation of s. 3 of the Act and rr. 3 and 4 of the Rules there can be no manner of doubt that these provisions apply to all persons including Indian citizens.

In our opinion, there can be no manner of doubt that the appellant's entry into India without a passport was in contravention of r. 3 of the Rules and, therefore, punishable under r. 6(a) and the appellant was rightly convicted. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

MEENA alias MOTA LACHMAN UTAMCHAND KIRPALANI

v.

LACHMAN UTAMCHAND KIRPALANI.*

Hindu Marriage Act (XXV of 1955), Secs. 10, 23(1)—Desertion—Essential ingredients of,—Wilful neglect, what amounts to—Whether animus deserendi necessary where offence charged is wilful neglect—Reasonable excuse or just cause as answer to charge of desertion.

Under s. 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, proof of the requisite animus deserendi is necessary where the matrimonial offence charged is wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage.

*Decided, July 15, 1959. First Appeal No. 802 of 1957, from the decision of G. A. Thakkar, Judge, City Civil Court, Bombay, in Matrimonial Petition No. 2129 of 1956.

Conduct of a spouse to amount to wilful neglect must be deliberate and intentional failure to perform the obligations of married life indicative of a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage. Mere neglect of opportunities of consorting or every indifference or want of proper solicitude for the other spouse is not wilful neglect within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 10(1) of the Act.

The burden of proving desertion is upon the spouse who alleges desertion.

In order to establish a plea of desertion there must be a separation in fact between the two spouses and there must also be, on the part of the deserting spouse, an intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. From the point of time when it is claimed that desertion has commenced, the two conditions must co-exist, though it is not necessary that when separation commenced there must be animus deserendi, i.e. intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. But it is not merely on proof of separation and the existence of the requisite animus deserendi that a decree for judicial separation will be passed. There must be two other elements on the co-existence of which alone the deserted spouse will be entitled to a decree for judicial separation, and those elements are (i) the absence of consent on the part of the deserted spouse and (ii) the absence of conduct on the part of the deserted spouse giving reasonable cause to the spouse leaving the matrimonial home to form the necessary intention.

Bipin Chander Jaisinghbhai Shah v. Prabhawati,¹ referred to.

In a matrimonial dispute, the matrimonial offence must be established to the satisfaction of the Court beyond reasonable doubt, and, though not as a matter of law, as a rule of prudence, independent corroboration of the version of the parties is sought. Such corroboration, however, need not be by direct testimony: it may be obtained from the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances.

Per S. T. Desai J.: Wilful neglect, in the context of the matrimonial offence of desertion, must be such neglect as can be regarded as the "withdrawal from a state of things." The neglect, wilful neglect, must be in the discharge of matrimonial obligations, and there must be such a failure of the fulfilment of those obligations—the common obligations of the marital state—as would amount to a total forsaking or abandonment of those obligations. Therefore, this failure, this total forsaking or abandonment of consortium evidences the factum of separation and the wilful manner of inflicting it evidences the requisite animus deserendi. It would not be appropriate to dissociate animus deserendi, which is the essence of desertion even when one speaks of desertion by wilful neglect. It is implicit in the concept of desertion, and it is implicit in wilful neglect. Animus deserendi is not merely an attribute or an incidence of the matrimonial offence of desertion. It is of the very nature of that offence and of the essence of it. Therefore, it would be fallacious to say that there need be no proof of animus deserendi in a case of desertion founded on the plea of wilful neglect.

A petition founded on the charge of desertion can be resisted by the opponent-spouse if she or he is able to show that there was reasonable excuse or just cause for the separation. The "just cause" must be "grave and weighty" or "grave and convincing". But it can be something which falls short of a matrimonial offence.

The facts are stated in the judgment of Shah J.

Sir Noshirwan Engineer, with H. G. Advani, instructed by Gagrat & Co., for the appellant.

B. Jethmalani, B. K. Hirani and M. G. Mirchandani, for the respondent.

SHAH J. In Matrimonial Petition No. 2129 of 1956 of the file of the Bombay City Civil Court the learned trial Judge passed a decree in favour of the petitioner for judicial separation. Against that decree this appeal has been preferred.

The petitioner and the opponent were married according to Hindu rites on November 10, 1946, at Hyderabad (Sind). At the time of his marriage, the petitioner was residing as a member of a joint Hindu family with his parents, brothers and sisters. After the marriage the opponent lived with the petitioner. On July 19, 1947, the opponent gave birth to a male child who was named Ashok. In October 1947 the parties, on account of the Partition of India, migrated to Bombay. As they were unable to obtain suitable accommodation in Bombay, the petitioner took his mother, his sisters and one of his brothers as also the opponent and the child Ashok to Ceylon and left them in the care of one Narain—his maternal uncle. The petitioner and his mother stayed in Colombo for some time and thereafter returned to Bombay. On January 17, 1948, the opponent left Colombo with her son Ashok in company of one Khubchand—a cousin of hers—and arrived on January 21, 1948, at Lonavala, where her mother was residing. About the month of April 1948 the petitioner and his mother went to Lonavala and fetched the opponent to Bombay. The opponent stayed at Bombay with the petitioner for about fifteen days and again returned to Lonavala. Sometime in the month of September 1948, the opponent came to Bombay and lived with the petitioner for about three months, but in the month of December 1948, the opponent again left for Poona to live with her father. At that time, it is undisputed, the opponent went to Poona with the consent of the petitioner. Sometime in the month of February 1949 the opponent returned to the petitioner and continued to live with him till February 26, 1954. During this interval, the opponent visited her parents at Poona occasionally, but on the frequency of these visits there is dispute between the parties. On February 26, 1954, the opponent left the matrimonial home and went to Poona and continued to reside with her parents till July 7, 1954. On July 7, 1954, without informing the petitioner, the opponent left for Hongkong where her father was conducting his business, and till sometime in the month of April 1956 she continued to live at different places—Hongkong, Singapore, Manila and Djakarta. On April 8, 1956, the opponent returned to Bombay and after some time she left for Kashmir. No attempt was made on either side, after the opponent returned to Bombay, to make a rapprochement and the opponent even did not try to meet her minor son Ashok who was then about nine years old and living with the petitioner. On September 20, 1956, the petitioner filed a petition in the City Civil Court at Bombay for a decree for judicial separation alleging that the opponent had deserted him for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately before the presentation of the petition, that the desertion was without reasonable cause and without the consent and against the wishes of the petitioner and that he—the petitioner—was accordingly entitled to a decree for judicial separation.

The petitioner's claim was resisted by the opponent. She contended that she had left the matrimonial home on account of harassment from her parents-in-law and also on account of the conduct of the petitioner, that after going to Poona she accompanied her father to Hongkong, but she had at all material times a desire to return to the matrimonial home which she could not put into effect on account of her ill-health. She stated that the petitioner had shown "gross and complete indifference" to her and that was why she did not go to reside with him after she returned to India and that the rupture between her and the petitioner was on account of the latter's refusal to live with her. She also stated that during the time she was out of India the petitioner had made "undignified allegations" against her in the correspondence stating that she was living "a life of guilt and degradation". She submitted that in view of the conduct of the petitioner and her intention evidenced by her conduct at all material times to return to the matrimonial home and live with the petitioner, a decree for judicial separation could not be passed against her.

The learned trial Judge, in an elaborate judgment wherein he has dealt with the incidents in the married life of the parties since the commencement and has considered the material evidence and the arguments advanced before him, came to the conclusion that for many years before she left the matrimonial home on February 26, 1954, the opponent entertained animus deserendi, that when she left the matrimonial home on February 26, 1954, she did so without the consent of the petitioner, that she left India and failed to return ignoring the letters and cables from the petitioner and that the protestations made by the opponent in her letters and at the time of giving evidence that she was at all material times ready and willing to live with the petitioner were not made bona fide. The learned Judge was not willing, on points of conflict between the testimony of the petitioner and the testimony of the opponent, to accept the testimony of the opponent in preference to that of the petitioner. Referring to the correspondence, on which reliance was placed on behalf of the opponent, the learned Judge observed that the petitioner had not charged the opponent with immoral conduct and, therefore, it was unnecessary to consider whether the opponent was entitled to live apart from the petitioner on that ground. He further observed that it was not even the case of the opponent in her written statement that because she had been charged by the petitioner with immoral conduct she was entitled to live apart from him and that the petitioner was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation on that account. Holding, therefore, that there was no reasonable cause for the opponent to leave the matrimonial home and to continue to remain away from the matrimonial home for a continuous period of more than two years contrary to the expressed wishes of the petitioner, the learned Judge passed a decree in favour of the petitioner for judicial separation from the opponent.

Section 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, enables either party to a marriage, whether solemnized before or after the commencement of the Act, to present a petition praying for a decree for judicial separation on the ground that the other party has deserted the petitioner for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition. By the Explanation to sub-s. (1) of s. 10 of the Act the expression "desertion" is defined to mean desertion of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage without reasonable cause and without the consent or against the wish of such party, and to include the "wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage." Mr. Jethmalani for the petitioner submits that by this Explanation it was intended to extend what he calls the "traditional connotation of desertion", and that by the inclusion in the expression "desertion" of "wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage" it was intended that animus deserendi, which is otherwise an essential element of desertion, need not be proved by the petitioner before qualifying for a decree for judicial separation. The submission is that if on the part of either party to the marriage there has been wilful neglect to perform the marital obligations, even if such neglect is not accompanied by the animus to forsake or abandon cohabitation, the Court will be justified in granting to the aggrieved spouse a decree for judicial separation. By the Explanation to sub-s. (1) of s. 10, within the connotation of the expression "desertion", "wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage" is undoubtedly included: but on that account proof of the requisite animus to establish desertion is, in my judgment, not dispensed with. Neglect to amount to desertion must be wilful neglect of the other party to the marriage: i.e., there must be a failure to perform the essential obligations of marriage. Conduct of a spouse to amount to wilful neglect must, in my judgment, be deliberate and intentional failure to perform the obligations of married life indicative of a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage. Mere neglect of opportunities of consorting or every indifference or want of proper solicitude for the other spouse is not wilful neglect within the meaning of the Explanation. By the Explanation the connotation of the expression "desertion" was somewhat extended; but thereby the basic concept of desertion, viz., intentional and permanent abandonment of one spouse by the other without reasonable cause and without the consent of such spouse, is not altered.

The burden of proving desertion is upon the spouse who alleges desertion. In a recent judgment of the Supreme Court, *Bipin Chander Jaisinghbhai Shah v. Prabhawati*¹ their Lordships examined in detail the conditions which go to make "desertion" in the matrimonial law. At p. 850 of the Report, their Lordships quoted with approval a passage from Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd edn.), Vol. XII, (pp. 242-243). It is necessary before dealing with the evidence in this case to bear in mind the following principles which have been set out by their Lordships of the Supreme Court:

"In its essence desertion means the intentional permanent forsaking and abandonment of one spouse by the other without that other's consent, and without reasonable cause. It is a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage. In view of the large variety of circumstances and of modes of life involved, the Court has discouraged attempts at defining desertion: there being no general principle applicable to all cases.

Desertion is not the withdrawal from a place but from a state of things, for what the law seeks to enforce is the recognition and discharge of the common obligations of the married state; the state of things may usually be termed, for short, 'the home'...

The person who actually withdraws from cohabitation is not necessarily the deserting party....

The offence of desertion is a course of conduct which exists independently of its duration... Desertion is a continuing offence."

Their Lordships then observed (p. 850):

"Thus the quality of permanence is one of the essential elements which differentiates desertion from wilful separation. If a spouse abandon the other spouse in a state of temporary passion, for example, anger or disgust, without intending permanently to cease cohabitation, it will not amount to desertion. For the offence of desertion, so far as the deserting spouse is concerned, two essential conditions must be there, namely, (1) the factum of separation, and (2) the intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end (animus deserendi). Similarly two elements are essential so far as the deserted spouse is concerned: (1) the absence of consent, and (2) absence of conduct giving reasonable cause to the spouse leaving the matrimonial home to form the necessary intention aforesaid... If, in fact, there has been a separation, the essential question always is whether that act could be attributable to an animus deserendi. The offence of desertion commences when the fact of separation and the animus deserendi co-exist. But it is not necessary that they should commence at the same time. The de facto separation may have commenced without the necessary animus or it may be that the separation and the animus deserendi coincide in point of time; for example, when the separating spouse abandons the marital home with the intention, express or implied, of bringing cohabitation permanently to a close."

In order to establish a plea of desertion there must be separation in fact between the two spouses and there must also be, on the part of the deserting spouse, an intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. From the point of time when it is claimed that desertion has commenced, the two conditions must co-exist, though it is not necessary that when separation commenced there must be animus deserendi, i.e., intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. This elaboration is necessary because Mr. Jethmalani has strenuously contended that on February 26, 1954, when the opponent left the petitioner, there was not only separation of the two spouses in fact but there was also on the part of the opponent animus deserendi, and, therefore, desertion commenced on that date. Alternatively, as we understood Mr. Jethmalani, he contended that the conduct of the opponent subsequent to February 26, 1954, showed that she had entertained a desire to terminate cohabitation, and the separation having taken place on February 26, 1954, the subsequent intention entertained by the opponent enabled the petitioner to obtain a decree for judicial separation. But it is not merely on proof of separation and the existence of the requisite animus deserendi that a decree for judicial separation will be passed. There must be two other elements on the co-existence of which alone the deserted spouse will be entitled to a decree for judicial separation, and those elements are (i) the absence of consent on the part of the deserted spouse and (ii) the absence of conduct on the part of the deserted spouse giving reasonable cause to the spouse leaving the matrimonial home to form the necessary intention.

We may now briefly set out the case of the respective parties. It was the case of the opponent that since the commencement of her married life she was ill-treated in the petitioner's house because her mother-in-law was dissatisfied with the dowry given by her parents and that at the instigation of her mother-in-law even the petitioner ill-treated her. She further alleged that the petitioner had "little individuality of his own" and that he was, in his relation and attitude towards her, guided by his mother and his sisters. On the other hand, it was the case of the petitioner that the opponent was a daughter of a rich family accustomed to unorthodox ways of life and that she was given to drinking, to ball-room dancing, to playing cards at stakes and to otherwise living "a gay life", and having regard to the orthodox mode of living of the members of his family the opponent found herself in an atmosphere which was not congenial to her and, therefore, she could not adapt herself to the life in the marital home and was dissatisfied with her marriage with the petitioner. Says the petitioner, the opponent was rude, insulting and indifferent in her behaviour towards himself and his parents, that she did not pay any attention to his comforts or to the comforts of the child and spent her days reading magazines and novels and "lazily lying down" and that she used to go out at any time of the day and absent herself for hours from home without informing him or any other members of his family and did diverse things deliberately to irritate him. He also alleged that she used to insult him and tell him that he should mind his own business and that in order to win the sympathy of the guests who visited his place she picked up quarrels with him on petty grounds and shouted and wept before them. He also stated that she had an aversion to sexual intercourse because she did not desire to be "burdened with another child".

Evidently, in a matrimonial dispute, when the relations between the spouses have become bitter, in their respective versions by the spouses there is bound to be some exaggeration. It is, therefore, a settled rule of law that the matrimonial offence must be established to the satisfaction of the Court beyond reasonable doubt, and, though not as a matter of law, as a rule of prudence, independent corroboration of the version of the parties is sought. Such corroboration, however, need not be by direct testimony: it may be obtained from the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances.

S. T. DESAI J. I agree with my learned brother that this appeal must succeed. I also agree with him on the conclusions on facts reached by him and the reasons given by him for the same. The evidence—and particularly the documentary evidence—on the record of this case has been examined by him in some detail and I need not rehearse the same.

A rather ingenious contention has been raised before us by Mr. Jethmalani, learned counsel for the petitioner, as to the essential ingredients of the matrimonial offence of desertion, and I shall permit myself some observations on the point. But before I do so I shall examine one or two other legal submissions made by him. It was argued that the learned Judge below had before him the evidence of a number of witnesses and had the opportunity of watching their demeanour. It was said that having regard to all that oral testimony before him he reached his findings of fact and this Court would not readily disturb those findings. I wholly agree that this Court would not readily disturb the findings of fact arrived at by the trial Court. It has often been said, and I have myself said it on more than one occasion, that where a case turns entirely on questions of fact and the credibility of witnesses, the Court of Appeal will hesitate a good deal before it disturbs the findings of the trial Judge based on verbal testimony of conflicting witnesses whom he has seen and heard. In such a case, a heavy burden of necessity is thrown upon those who challenge those findings. On the other hand, as has so often been said, where findings as regards facts have been drawn from argumentative inferences drawn from the testimony—oral and documentary—and depend upon the weight of the evidence, and the inherent probability of the story, and not merely on credibility of witnesses induced by their demeanour or the manner in which they answer questions, and where the documentary evidence has to be taken into consideration and weighed, the trial Court is in no better position than the Court of Appeal in discovering the truth. Two principal reasons have weighed with me in this case in deciding that this is one of those appeals in which the ordinary practice followed by this Court should not apply. Firstly, I am convinced that the approach of the learned trial Judge to this question of desertion and that essential ingredient of it—animus deserendi—was erroneous. After examining certain facts relating to the married life of the spouses from the date of the marriage till February 26, 1951—which he undoubtedly was entitled to bear in mind and have on record for certain purposes—he stated his conclusion as follows:

"From the facts and circumstances aforesaid and from the acts and conduct on the part of the respondent prior to the date of the actual act of separation, I am of the opinion that there was animus deserendi on the part of the respondent."

Now, in the case before us, there was no dispute that separation did exist. But the crucial question for the determination of the Court was whether there co-existed with that separation the ingredient of animus deserendi on the part of the opponent-wife. That animus deserendi could obviously not be prior to the factum of separation. Animus deserendi may co-exist with the factum of separation, or, as it happens in some cases, it may be subsequent to the factum of separation. But it appears that the learned trial Judge misdirected himself in law when he took the view that it was open to him to reach the conclusion that the acts and conduct of the opponent prior to the date of the actual act of separation could lead him directly to the determination of the question relating to animus deserendi. Secondly, in this case it is not as if the evidence consists of oral testimony alone. The oral testimony, I may observe, is indeed very conflicting. When there is a mass of conflicting oral testimony, it is always desirable—and indeed safe—to let the documents speak for themselves: and in this case there is documentary evidence which throws a flood of light on the vital question of animus deserendi. That documentary evidence consists of certain correspondence which took place between the contesting spouses. It has been carefully examined by my learned brother and I have nothing to add to the observations made by him while examining that evidence. I am in agreement with him on the interpretation and effect of that correspondence.

I may make one or two observations on the question of the standard of proof required in matrimonial cases. It is a firmly established rule that the ground for relief in a matrimonial cause should be strictly proved. The standard of proof in cases arising under the Hindu Marriage Act is that the Court must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the ground for relief is proved, and normally the Court requires that the evidence of a spouse, who charges the other spouse with a matrimonial offence, should be corroborated. This expression "satisfied" is to be found in s. 23(1) of the Act which deals with decree in proceedings and contains some vital clauses of considerable importance and consequences relating to the power and duty of the Court in the matter of granting any of the reliefs recognised under the Act. It is true that in some decisions of Courts, both in England and in India, analogies have been drawn and precedents of criminal law referred to; but it is now wholly recognised that the standard of proof in matrimonial cases cannot be the same as is required in criminal cases. While such analogy is not permissible, the Court does, in matrimonial causes, ordinarily require—not as a matter of law but as a rule of prudence—that where possible corroborative evidence should be led in order to satisfy the Court that the allegations made are well-founded. It is in this sense that it is said that the ground for relief in a matrimonial case should be strictly established. The oral evidence in the case and the documentary evidence to which I prefer to attach greater importance does show to my mind that the petitioner has failed to discharge the burden of proof which rested on him.

It has been strenuously argued before us by learned counsel for the petitioner that we have to decide this question of desertion having regard to the provisions of s. 10(1)(a) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and the Explanation to that sub-section. I wholly agree that such is the position. It will be convenient here to set out the relevant provisions of that section and the Explanation.

Sec. 10. (1) "Either party to a marriage, whether solemnized before or after the commencement of this Act, may present a petition to the district Court praying for a decree for judicial separation on the ground that the other party—

(a) has deserted the petitioner for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition...

Explanation.—In this section, the expression "desertion", with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, means the desertion of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage without reasonable cause and without the consent or against the wish of such party, and includes the wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage."

Argument of learned counsel proceeded that the Explanation to sub-s. (1) of s. 10 has widened the definition, described by counsel as the traditional definition, of "desertion". Sub-section (1)(a) of s. 10 states that a decree for judicial separation may be granted inter alia on the ground that the other party to the marriage has deserted the petitioner for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition. The Explanation states that to amount to a matrimonial offence, desertion must be without reasonable cause and without the consent and against the wish of the petitioner and that wilful neglect of one spouse by the other is desertion within the meaning of that section. It will be seen that the meaning given is somewhat tautological but the Explanation has the merit of making it abundantly clear that the Legislature intended to give to the expression "desertion" wide import which includes wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage. So far, I find myself in agreement with the submission made by learned counsel for the petitioner.

But the argument ran that though ordinarily one of the essential ingredients of desertion is animus deserendi the position in law is different where the matrimonial offence charged is wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage. In the latter case, it was urged, there need be no proof whatever of animus deserendi. It was argued that this was the only manner in which the Explanation to sub-s. (1) of s. 10 could be read. That, it was said, was the material language of the section. The material language of the section has, of course, in these matters to be always borne in mind, for if a Court is prone too much to indulge in exposition and attempted definition, there will be substituted for the language chosen by Parliament some other form of words and in an attempt at wide survey some essential factor be omitted or some inessential factor be substituted or added. This seems peculiarly applicable to the matrimonial offences of desertion and cruelty, cases relating to which are by far the most common of the matrimonial causes contested before the Courts. The circumstances vary infinitely from case to case and the modes of life involved at times present sharp contrasts. The importance, therefore, of satisfying the language of the section cannot be overstressed in a branch of the law which has been predominantly Judge-made. In view of the observations which I have already made, I shall refer only to one decision on the subject in a case which was carried to the Supreme Court.

In Bipin Chander Jaisinghbhai Shah v. Prabhawati,¹ their Lordships of the Supreme Court made some general observations and summed up some important principles which afford considerable guidance in deciding cases arising under the Hindu Marriage Act. It was observed by their Lordships (p. 851):

"...Desertion is a matter of inference to be drawn from the facts and circumstances of each case. The inference may be drawn from certain facts which may not in another case be capable of leading to the same inference; that is to say, the facts have to be viewed as to the purpose which is revealed by those acts or by conduct and expression of intention, both anterior and subsequent to the actual acts of separation. If, in fact, there has been a separation, the essential question always is whether that act could be attributable to an animus deserendi. The offence of desertion commences when the fact of separation and the animus deserendi co-exist. But it is not necessary that they should commence at the same time. The de facto separation may have commenced without the necessary animus or it may be that the separation and the animus deserendi coincide in point of time; for example, when the separating spouse abandons the marital home with the intention, express or implied, of bringing cohabitation permanently to a close."

To turn to the argument of Mr. Jethmalani. I am prepared to read s. 10(1)(a) and the Explanation to that sub-section as he asked me to do, as laying down the rule, that wilful neglect of the petitioner by the opponent without reasonable cause and without the consent or against the wish of the petitioner for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition is tantamount to desertion.

When the allegation is desertion by wilful neglect, two requirements must be satisfied: (i) the conduct must amount to neglect of the petitioner by the opponent, and (ii) the conduct complained of must be wilful. What is neglect need not present any difficulty, but difficulty sometimes arises in determining what neglect can be said to be wilful. The expression "wilful neglect" has not been defined in the Act. An act or omission done by accident or inadvertence is not wilful; nor is it on the other hand absolutely necessary in the present context that to be wilful, the act or omission which constitutes neglect should be deliberate and intentional. In the context of matrimonial law, wilful neglect seems to me to mean that the person charged with it is consciously acting in a reprehensible manner in the discharge of his marital obligations or is consciously failing in a reprehensible manner in the discharge of those obligations; and connotes that degree of neglect which is shown by an abstention from an obvious duty, attended by a knowledge of the likely results of the abstention. Breach of every tie of marriage or failure to discharge every marital obligation cannot be regarded as wilful neglect. The neglect to become desertion must be such as amounts to forsaking or abandonment of one spouse by the other by a conscious disregard of the duties and obligations of the married state considered as a whole. I had occasion to state these principles in another place, and have here recapitulated the same.

Wilful neglect, in the context of the matrimonial offence of desertion, must be such neglect as can be regarded as the "withdrawal from a state of things". The neglect, wilful neglect, must be in the discharge of matrimonial obligations, and there must be such a failure of the fulfilment of those obligations—the common obligations of the marital state—as would amount to a total forsaking or abandonment of those obligations. Therefore, this failure, this total forsaking or abandonment of consortium evidences the factum of separation and the wilful manner of inflicting it evidences the requisite animus deserendi. In my judgment, it would not be appropriate to dissociate animus deserendi, which is the essence of desertion even when one speaks of desertion by wilful neglect. It is implicit in the concept of desertion, and it is implicit in wilful neglect. Animus deserendi is not merely an attribute or an incidence of the matrimonial offence of desertion. It is of the very nature of that offence and of the essence of it. Therefore, it would be fallacious to say that there need be no proof of animus deserendi in a case of desertion founded on the plea of wilful neglect.

There remains for consideration one more legal aspect of the matter. Referring to the conduct of the opponent, learned counsel for the petitioner argued that even if there was no animus deserendi on the part of the opponent when she left the petitioner's home on February 26, 1954, there was such animus deserendi sometime later when she left Poona for Singapore and other foreign places and, in any event, so the argument ran, there was animus deserendi when she refused to return to the matrimonial home and hearth after the cables sent by the petitioner which were of a peremptory nature. Learned counsel in this context found himself faced with the petitioner's letter dated April 1/2, 1955, in which the petitioner had made the most serious allegations against the character of the opponent. The contents of that letter have been fully dealt with by my brother and I do not propose to refer to any part of that letter in this discussion. The argument of learned counsel was that assuming that there were serious allegations made by the petitioner against the character of the opponent, that did not per se entitle the opponent to keep away from the matrimonial home, and her conduct in doing so was tantamount to evidence of animus deserendi. Now, a reference to s. 23(1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, which as I have already mentioned, contains some vital clauses of considerable importance and consequence, will clearly show that the Court, before granting relief, must be satisfied that the ground for granting relief exists and the petitioner is not in any way taking advantage of his or her wrong or disability for the purpose of such relief, and there is no other legal ground why relief should not be granted. If a husband makes serious allegations of unchastity against his wife and the allegations are unfounded, and if the wife in consequence of such allegations refuses to cohabit with the husband and goes away from him, can it be said that she has committed the matrimonial offence of desertion? Can it be said, in such a case, that the husband, who is himself the cause of the conduct on the part of the wife complained of by him, is not taking advantage of his own wrong when he seeks relief? The answers to these seem to me to be against the contention of learned counsel for the petitioner. The way I read the relevant sections, it seems to me that a petition founded on the charge of desertion can be resisted by the opponent-spouse if she or he is able to show that there was reasonable excuse or just cause for the separation. It has sometimes been said that nothing short of a matrimonial offence such as cruelty would suffice in such cases. This question has been much debated in England and judicial opinion on the question is not wholly uniform. But the more recent and acceptable view seems to be that a just cause should suffice. Of course, the "just cause" must be "grave and weighty" or, as it is sometimes said, "grave and convincing". But it can be something which falls short of a matrimonial offence. It may be distinguished from cruelty to the extent that it falls short of what is legal cruelty, but nonetheless the reasons for withdrawal from the society of the petitioner must be "grave and weighty". Therefore, one important question that we have to consider in this case is whether there were "grave and weighty" reasons on which the opponent-spouse can rely in resisting the charge of desertion levelled against her. As I have already stated, I do not propose in this judgment to examine again the evidence of allegations made against the respondent and I have expressed my agreement with the reasons given by my learned brother for the conclusions reached by him. Being wholly in agreement with him on those points, I need only add that, in my judgment, in this case the wife had "grave and weighty" reasons for living apart from the husband after he levelled those serious and unfounded allegations against her character.

In the result, I am satisfied that the petitioner has failed to establish the case of desertion.

Appeal allowed.

PHIRDOSH SAROSH KOTHAWALLA v. THE STATE OF BOMBAY.*

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (Bom. LXVII of 1948), Sec. 76A—Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Second Amendment) Act (Bom. XXXVIII of 1957), Secs. 25, 34—Orders made by Mamlatdar or Tribunal before coming into force of s. 76A whether can be revised under that section.

Orders made by a Mamlatdar or Tribunal before the coming into force of s. 76A of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, cannot be revised under this section.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

Vithalbhai B. Patel, with J. B. Patel, for the petitioner.

M. A. Bane, Assistant Government Pleader, for the State.

CHANNANI C.J. The petitioner is the owner of several lands situate at Changanodar. These lands had been leased by him to eleven tenants. On March 19, 1957, the petitioner made 11 applications to the Tenancy Avval Karkun, Sanand, in which he stated that his tenants were willing to surrender their tenancy rights and that orders for possession should be passed in his favour. The Tenancy Avval Karkun inquired into the applications made by the petitioner. He examined the tenants and came to the conclusion that the tenants had voluntarily surrendered their tenancy rights. He also found that the petitioner did not own lands in excess of the ceiling area. He then passed orders for possession of the lands being handed over to the petitioner. In his orders he has stated that he was satisfied that the surrenders of tenancy rights had been made voluntarily and that the petitioner's attorney had deposed that the lands would be taken under personal cultivation. These orders were passed by the Tenancy Avval Karkun in March-April 1957, except in one case, in which it was passed on August 5, 1957. The petitioner subsequently obtained possession of the lands. On November 22, 1957, the Assistant Collector, purporting to act under s. 76A of the Act, passed an order, by which he remanded the above cases to the Tenancy Avval Karkun for deciding them "after taking into consideration the conditions for termination of tenancies mentioned in s. 31A of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act". This order was challenged by the petitioner before the Bombay Revenue Tribunal. The Revenue Tribunal set aside the order passed by the Assistant Collector on the ground that the petitioner had not been heard and remanded the cases to the Assistant Collector for issuing notices to the parties and thereafter passing final orders in them. Against this order passed by the Revenue Tribunal, the present Special Civil Application has been filed.

The first question, which arises for consideration, is whether s. 76A can be used so as to revise orders, which were passed before this section was enacted. The section is in the following terms:—

"Where no appeal has been filed within the period provided for it, the Collector may, suo moto or on a reference made in this behalf by the Divisional Officer or the State Government, at any time,—

(a) call for the record of any inquiry or the proceedings of any Mamlatdar or Tribunal for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the legality or propriety of any order passed by, and as to the regularity of the proceedings of such Mamlatdar or Tribunal, as the case may be, and

(b) pass such order thereon as he deems fit."

A proviso was added to this section in 1958, but we are not concerned with it in this case. The well-settled rule of construction is that unless the Legislature has manifested a clear intention to the contrary, every statute is presumed to be prospective in its effect and is to be so construed as to respect vested rights (see Nilkanth Ramchandra v. Basikhal.¹) In Sudhya Ramji v. Mahammed Isak,² which was a case under the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1939, it was observed that no statute should be construed so as to have a retrospective operation unless its language is such as plainly to require that construction, and that when the effect of the adoption of what may be called the literal construction would be to take away a vested right, the Court will be slow to accept such a construction and insist upon its being satisfied that that was the intention of the Legislature. Section 76A was inserted in the Act by s. 25 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Second Amendment) Act, Bombay Act XXXVIII of 1957. Section 34 of the amending Act provides that the amendments made in the principal Act by certain sections of the amending Act shall be deemed to have been made and to have come into force on the date on which the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1955, came into force. This section, therefore, gave retrospective effect to certain amendments made in the principal Act by the amending Act of 1957. Section 25 of the amending Act, by which s. 76A was inserted in the principal Act, was, however, not given retrospective effect. It is, therefore, clear that the Legislature did not intend that this section should operate retrospectively. There are also no words in the section, which would indicate an intention on the part of the Legislature to give retrospective operation to this section.

*Decided, July 23, 1959. Special Civil Application No. 75 of 1959.

Mr. Rane, who appears on behalf of the State, has relied on the words "order passed by" used in cl. (a). These words are capable of meaning "an order passed after the section came into force". The words are not such as would justify an inference that the Legislature intended to reopen cases in which final orders had been already made. On the other hand, as I have pointed out, the fact that s. 25 is not included amongst the sections, which were given retrospective effect by s. 34 of the Amending Act of 1957, would indicate that the section was intended to provide for the future. It cannot, therefore, be used in respect of orders made before the enactment of this section.

We are accordingly of the opinion that orders made before the coming into force of s. 76A cannot be revised under this section.

In ten applications made by the petitioner, the orders of the Tenancy Avval Karkun were passed in March/April, 1957. In the remaining case it was made in August 1957. All the cases had been disposed of before s. 76A came into force on September 28, 1957. By virtue of these orders, the petitioner had acquired vested rights to the possession of the lands, before s. 76A was enacted. Consequently no action could be taken in respect of these orders under this section.

Bombay Sales Tax Act (Bom. III of 1953), Secs. 15, 31—Bombay Sales Tax Laws (Validating Provisions and Amendment) Act (Bom. XXII of 1959), Sec. 3—Power of revision under s. 31 whether can be exercised beyond period prescribed under s. 15.

The widest retrospective operation is given to the provisions made in s. 15(2)(a)(i) of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, by the Bombay Sales Tax Laws (Validating Provisions and Amendment) Act, 1959. The retrospective operation is given to all proceedings and notices and even to proceedings which have been concluded by judgments, decrees or orders of Courts or Tribunals. Therefore, in construing the provisions of s. 31 of the Act, the obligation to initiate proceedings within the period not longer than the period prescribed by s. 15 will be implied.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. J. Mistree, with B. A. Palkhivala, for the petitioner.

H. D. Banaji, for the respondents.

SHAH J. Messrs. Manordas Kalidas, who will hereafter be referred to as "the assessee"; carry on business in cloth in Bombay, and are registered dealers under the Bombay Sales Tax Act. For the assessment years 1948-49 and 1949-50 corresponding to the assessment period from October 7, 1948, to March 31, 1950, the Sales Tax Officer, C-I-J Ward, Bombay, assessed the assessee on May 4, 1951, under s. 11 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1946. The Sales Tax Officer accepted the gross turnover returned by the assessee at Rs. 1,15,50,858-10-3 and determined sales-tax payable thereon. On June 13, 1958, the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax issued a notice to the assessee informing them that they had suppressed sales of Rs. 20,00,000 from their regular books of account for the year 1948-49 and it was proposed to revise the order passed by the Sales Tax Officer for the said year by incorporating and adding sales of Rs. 20,00,000 to the turnover, and subject the same to sales-tax at the rate of one anna in a rupee. A similar notice was also issued on the same day in respect of the year 1949-50. The assessee then applied under art. 226 of the Constitution of India claiming a writ in the nature of certiorari or other writ, direction or order against the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax calling for the records relating to the assessment, re-assessment or revision of assessment of the assessee for the assessment years 1947-48, 1948-49 and 1949-50, and, after making enquiries and looking into the matter, setting aside the notices issued by the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax. The assessee also claimed a writ in the nature of prohibition or mandamus or other writ or direction prohibiting or restraining the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax and his successors in office from taking any action or proceeding for assessment, re-assessment or revision of assessment of the assessee in respect of the assessment years 1947-48, 1948-49 and 1949-50 and from enforcing the notices. The Assistant Collector of Sales Tax, who has appeared before us in pursuance of the notice, has challenged the right of the assessee to obtain the writ or writs claimed by them.

Mr. Mistree on behalf of the assessee has raised two contentions: (i) that whereas the assessment proceedings for the years in question against the assessee for assessment of sales-tax were taken under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1946, the notices to revise the assessment were issued under the provisions of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, and as such the notices were illegal and could not form the basis of proceedings for revising the assessments made under the Act of 1946, and (ii) that the notices for revision of assessment were issued more than eight years after the expiry of the period of assessment and in view of the provisions contained in s. 15 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, and the corresponding provisions contained in s. 14 of the Sales Tax Act, 1946, they are barred by limitation, and that, in any event, the notices are issued after an unreasonable lapse of time.

The two impugned notices were issued in form No. XXIV prescribed under the Sales Tax Act of 1953: and in terms it is stated that it is a "notice to a person when it is proposed to pass an order which affects him adversely under section 31 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953," and reference is made to r. 41 of the Bombay Sales Tax (Procedure) Rules, 1954. In the notice itself there is no reference to the provisions of the Act of 1953. The two notices which are substantially in identical terms state that whereas it was proposed to pass an order to the effect "mentioned below" the assessee was informed that if they wished to prefer any objection against such order they should attend either personally or by a legal practitioner or by an agent duly authorised for the purpose at the time and place mentioned in the notice: and the gist of the order proposed to be passed was stated as follows:

"You have suppressed sales of Rs.... from the regular books of accounts for the year... and as such it is proposed to revise the orders passed by the Sales Tax Officer for the said year by incorporating and adding sales of Rs.... subject to sales tax at the rate of one-anna in the rupee."

The mere heading or the use of the form prescribed for issuing a notice for taking action under s. 31 of the Sales Tax Act, 1953, will not, in our judgment, alter the true character of the notices issued by the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax. The Assistant Collector of Sales Tax had authority under the Act of 1946 to issue notices of the nature of the impugned notices. Even assuming that the notices had to be issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the Act of 1946, in the absence of any indication in the body of the notices that they were intended to be issued under the Act of 1953 and not under the Act of 1946, the notices were not unauthorised.

By sub-s. (1) of s. 48 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1946, was repealed. By sub-s. (2) it is provided that the repeal does not affect or will not be deemed to affect any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred, and also the recovery of any tax or penalty which may have become payable under the Act of 1946; and that such taxes or penalties or arrears thereof shall be assessed, imposed and recovered, so far as they may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1953. Evidently by virtue of the provisions contained in the Sales Tax Act, 1946, the assesses, for any evasion of tax, incurred an obligation to pay that tax, liability to pay which had arisen by reason of the sales effected but of which the particulars were concealed. The repeal of that Act does not, by virtue of the provision contained in s. 48(2), affect that obligation; and the recovery of that tax which was payable under the Act of 1946 is, by the express provision made in s. 48(2), not affected by the repeal of the Act of 1946, and all such taxes are to be assessed, imposed and recovered in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1953. The Assistant Collector of Sales Tax had, therefore, authority to issue the notices and to conduct the proceedings for re-assessment of the liability, if any, of the assesses under the Act of 1953.

To appreciate the second contention, it is necessary to set out certain provisions of the Sales Tax Acts of 1946 and 1953. By s. 10 of the Act of 1946 it was provided that every dealer who may be required so to do by the Commissioner by notice served in the prescribed manner and every registered dealer shall furnish such returns by such dates and to such authority as may be prescribed. By s. 11 the procedure for assessment of taxes was prescribed. Authority was given under that section to the Commissioner to make "best judgment assessment" in certain specified cases. There was no provision enacted by the Sales Tax Act, 1946, about the period within which the notice requiring a dealer or a registered dealer to make a return was to be issued. By s. 11A, which was added by Act I of 1949, authority was given to the Collector to issue a notice within the period prescribed, where that Officer was satisfied that any turnover in respect of sales or supplies of any goods chargeable to tax under the Act had escaped assessment in any year or had been under-assessed or assessed at a lower rate or any deductions had been made wrongly therefrom and in any case where the Collector had reason to believe that the dealer had concealed the particulars of such sales or supplies or deliberately furnished incorrect returns. By that section authority was also conferred upon the Collector to proceed to assess or re-assess the tax due by such dealer and the provisions of the Act were to apply as if the notice were one served under s. 11. Even though no period was prescribed for issue of a notice under s. 11, re-assessment under s. 11A could be made within the period of five years or three years as prescribed. By s. 22 power was conferred upon the Collector, subject to the rules which may be prescribed and for reasons to be recorded in writing, either upon application or of his own motion, to revise any order passed under the Act or the rules made thereunder by a person appointed under s. 3 to assist him. By this provision authority was evidently conferred upon the Collector to revise the orders of his subordinates who were authorised to act as Sales Tax Officers, but the Legislature did not prescribe any period for revising the orders of the subordinate authorities when the Collector proceeded suo motu. Under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1958, the corresponding provision relating to the making of returns was s. 13; the provision relating to the assessment of taxes was s. 14 and the provision relating to the issue of notice and re-assessment of dealers in respect of turnover escaping assessment was s. 15. By s. 31 authority was conferred upon the Collector, subject to the rules prescribed and for reasons to be recorded in writing, to revise the orders passed under the Act or the rules made thereunder by a person appointed under s. 8 to assist him.

This Court has taken the view in Comr. I.T. v. Narsee Nagsee & Co.,¹ in dealing with provisions which are analogous to those of the Sales Tax Act, that a notice calling for a return from a tax-payer under the Business Profits Tax Act may not issue after the expiry of the period prescribed by the Legislature for re-assessment. It was held in that case that even though the Legislature had not prescribed any period for issuing a notice calling for a return, inasmuch as the Legislature had prescribed a period of four years from the close of the accounting period for re-assessment, the notice issued more than four years after the close of the accounting period was beyond the time mentioned in s. 14 of the Business Profits Tax Act and hence the notice was not a valid notice under s. 11 of that Act. Chagla C.J. observed (at p. 954 of the report):

"...although the Legislature has not imposed any limitation of time with regard to the issue of a notice under s. 11 and although as a canon of construction it may be said that if the Legislature has not imposed any limitation it is not for the Court to restrict the power conferred by the Legislature upon the Income-tax Officer, it is well settled that if statutory powers are conferred upon an authority, the Court must hold that those statutory powers must be exercised reasonably, and, in our opinion, if statutory power is conferred upon the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice for the purpose of assessment under s. 11, that power must be exercised reasonably, and looking to the provisions of s. 14 it could not be said that when the Income-tax Officer issued this notice four years after the close of the chargeable accounting period he was exercising his statutory authority in a reasonable manner."

In the view of the learned Chief Justice eventhough the Legislature had not prescribed any period for issuing a notice calling for return, a notice issued after the expiry of the period prescribed for re-assessment was a notice issued beyond a reasonable period and, therefore, unauthorised. This view, which was expressed in considering the scheme of the Business Profits Tax Act, was adopted by the learned Chief Justice in dealing with a case under the Sales Tax Act. In Biscar House v. State of Bombay,² a full bench of this Court held that eventhough no period of limitation was prescribed for issue of a notice under s. 11(2) of the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, calling for a return from a dealer, because an order for re-assessment under s. 11A may not be made after the expiry of three years, the notice under s. 11(2) issued more than three years after the expiry of the period for which it was proposed to make the assessment was incompetent. Chagla C.J., who delivered the judgment of the Court in that case, applied the principle of the case in Comr. I.T. v. Narsee Nagsee & Co., to the interpretation of s. 11 of the Central Provinces & Berar Sales Tax Act. In both the aforesaid cases the Court took the view that eventhough not expressly prescribed, a period of limitation for the issue of a notice calling for a return must be regarded as implied when the Legislature has prescribed a period of limitation for re-assessment of escaped income. In neither of those two cases revisional powers were sought to be exercised, but the principle of those cases must, in our judgment, apply for the same reasons to the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, and that jurisdiction must be exercised within a reasonable period, and the yardstick of reasonableness will be the period prescribed for re-assessment.

If the Legislature had not intervened, we might have held that the notices issued beyond the period prescribed by s. 11A of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1946, or by s. 15 of the Act of 1953, were invalid and no proceeding for review or revision could lie at the instance of the Assistant Collector of Sales Tax. But the Legislature has by Act XXII of 1959 amended the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953. By s. 3 of Act XXII of 1959 it is provided that—

"Section 15 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act shall be renumbered as sub-section (1) of that section, and in that section after sub-section (1), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

'(2) (a) Nothing in sub-section (1),—

(i) shall apply to any proceeding (including any notice issued) under section 14 or 31, and

(ii) notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of a Court or Tribunal, shall be deemed ever to have been applicable to such proceeding or notice.

(b) The validity of any such proceeding or notice shall not be called in question merely on the ground that such proceeding or notice was inconsistent with the provisions of sub-section (1)."

On the principle of the two cases, to which we have referred, the taxing authority was obliged to issue a notice requiring a dealer to make a return within the period prescribed by s. 15 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act before it was amended, but the Legislature has now expressly provided by sub-s. (2) of s. 15 that nothing in s. 15 as it originally stood shall apply to any proceeding under s. 14. Evidently since the enactment of Act XXII of 1959, the principle applied by this Court in the interpretation of provisions relating to calling for a return, even though no period of limitation has been prescribed in that behalf by a taxing statute, must be regarded as superseded. The Legislature has also referred to s. 31 in sub-s. (2)(a)(i) of s. 15 as amended, and by that reference evidently the view which we have taken, viz., that the power of revision has to be exercised within a reasonable period and such period is not to exceed the period prescribed by s. 15 as it originally stood, must also be regarded as superseded. Clause (a)(i) of sub-s. (2) of s. 15 is undoubtedly prospective in terms, but by cl. (b) of sub-s. (2) the validity of any such proceeding or notice is not liable to be called in question merely on the ground that such proceeding or notice was inconsistent with sub-s. (1). It is again provided by cl. (a)(ii) of sub-s. (2) that notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of a Court or Tribunal, nothing in sub-s. (1) shall be deemed ever to have been applicable to such proceeding or notice. The widest retrospective operation is, therefore, given to cl. (a)(i) of sub-s. (2) of s. 15. The retrospective operation is given to all proceedings and notices and even to proceedings which have been concluded by judgments, decrees or orders of Courts or Tribunals. It is evident that the Legislature intended by the amendment that in construing the provisions of s. 31 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, the obligation to initiate proceedings within the period not longer than the period prescribed by s. 15 will not be implied.

Mr. Mistree for the assesses contends that even on that view, the rule that revisional jurisdiction will be exercised within a reasonable period is not abrogated by legislation. But by s. 31 no period has been prescribed for the exercise suo motu of the jurisdiction of the Collector to revise the order of authorities appointed under s. 3: and by Act XXII of 1959 the rule of interpretation adopted by this Court in Narses Nagsee's case and applied in cases under the Sales Tax Act has been expressly superseded.

We are, therefore, of the view that the petitioners have made out no case for the issue of a writ. The petition fails and is dismissed. Having regard to the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs of this application.

SUMATIBEN v. JASVANT BHOGILAL SUTARIA.*

Bombay Hindu Divorce Act (Bom. XXII of 1947), Secs. 15, 8(1)—Hindu Marriage Act (XXV of 1955), Secs. 29(3), 30, 26, 25—Decree for dissolution of marriage passed before coming into operation of Central Act—Petition under s. 15 of Bombay Act for custody of minor filed after coming into operation of Central Act—Prayer for custody of minor not made in suit for dissolution of marriage—Maintainability of petition.

Where in a proceeding under the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947, the relief in respect of the marriage itself had already been decreed before the coming into operation of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and there was no prayer for custody of children in the plaint as originally filed, a subsequent petition under s. 15 of the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947, for custody of children is maintainable after the coming into operation of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. V. Desai, with Sir Noshirwanji Engineer and M. B. Parpia, for the petitioner.

M. P. Amin, with Arun H. Mehta, for the respondent.

MODY J. The petitioner in this case is the wife, the respondent being her former husband, her marriage with whom has been dissolved. The petitioner was married to the respondent in 1942 and of that marriage a son since named Tarang was born to the petitioner on August 10, 1948. On or about March 11, 1955, the petitioner filed Suit No. 116 of 1955, being the suit in which this petition has been filed, against the respondent for divorce and dissolution of the said marriage on the ground of desertion under the provisions of the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947, which was then in force. In the suit there was a prayer for dissolution of marriage but there was no prayer for the custody of the son Tarang, although since prior to the filing of the suit Tarang was in the custody of the respondent. A decree for dissolution of marriage was passed in the suit on April 12, 1955. The petitioner in November 1958, filed the present petition praying inter alia for the custody of Tarang, and in the alternative, for an order directing the respondent to allow the petitioner access to Tarang and to allow the petitioner to take away her minor son Tarang to live with her at Bombay during the school vacation and/or during suitable school holidays.

The respondent is resisting this petition on several grounds one of which is by way of a preliminary objection. That preliminary objection is that the petition in so many words states that the same has been filed under s. 15 of the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947, (which I will hereafter refer to as "the Bombay Act"), that the Bombay Act stands repealed by s. 30 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (which I will hereafter refer to as "the Central Act") and that, therefore, this petition is misconceived and must be dismissed.

Section 15 of the Bombay Act provided as follows:

"In any suit under this Act, the Court may from time to time pass such interim orders and make such provisions in the decree as it may deem just and proper with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of minor children, the marriage of whose parents is the subject of such suit, and may, after the decree, upon application by petition for the purpose, make, revoke, suspend or vary from time to time all such orders and provisions with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of such children as might have been made by such decree or interim orders in case the suit for obtaining such decree were still pending."

It is this section under which the present petition has been made. The Central Act, however, came into operation on May 18, 1955, that is, prior to the filing of this petition.

*Decided, August 17, 1959. M. J. Petition in O.C.J. Suit No. 116 of 1955.

Section 30 of the Central Act provides as follows:

"The Hindu Marriage Disabilities Removal Act, 1946 (XXVIII of 1946), the Hindu Marriage Validity Act, 1949 (XXI of 1949), the Bombay Prevention of Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act, 1946 (Bombay Act XXV of 1946), the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947 (Bombay Act XXII of 1947), the Madras Hindu (Bigamy Prevention and Divorce) Act, 1949 (Madras Act VI of 1949), the Saurashtra Prevention of Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act, 1950 (Saurashtra Act V of 1950) and the Saurashtra Hindu Divorce Act, 1952 (Saurashtra Act XXX of 1952) are hereby repealed."

Only sub-s. (3) of s. 29 of the Central Act is relevant for the purposes of this petition and the same provides as follows:

"Nothing contained in this Act shall affect any proceeding under any law for the time being in force for declaring any marriage to be null and void or for annulling or dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation pending at the commencement of this Act, and any such proceeding may be continued and determined as if this Act had not been passed."

On a simple reading of the said s. 30, it is quite clear that the Bombay Act stood repealed at the date of the filing of this petition and that, therefore, this petition would be incompetent under s. 15 of the Bombay Act unless such a petition is saved under the provisions of sub-s. (3) of s. 29 of the Central Act.

What Mr. Amin, the learned counsel for the respondent, contended was that what are saved by the said sub-s. (3) are proceedings under the Bombay Act for declaring any marriage to be null and void or for annulling or dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation pending at the commencement of the Central Act and that only such proceedings may, by virtue of the provisions contained in the said sub-s. (3), be continued and determined as if the Central Act had not been passed. What Mr. Amin contended was that under sub-s. (3) of s. 29 a proceeding under the Bombay Act would be saved only if that proceeding was for seeking relief for declaring any marriage to be null and void or for annulling or for dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation—which reliefs, may it be noticed, are in respect of the marriage itself—and if such a proceeding was pending at the commencement of the Central Act. Mr. Amin further contended that what must be pending at the commencement of the Central Act must be the adjudication as to such a relief in respect of the marriage itself and what would be saved would be only that part of such a proceeding which sought such a relief in respect of the marriage itself but not any other part of such proceeding which sought any other relief, e.g., for custody of children. In order to test Mr. Amin's argument I put a hypothetical case to him, viz., if a suit under the Bombay Act was filed before May 18, 1955, praying for dissolution of marriage and for custody of children and was pending in respect of both these reliefs at the commencement of the Central Act, would the suit in respect of the relief for custody of children be saved? Mr. Amin thereupon made a concession that it would be saved. I thereupon put a further hypothetical case to Mr. Amin that if in a suit of the nature mentioned in the first hypothetical case a decree for the dissolution of the marriage had already been passed before May 18, 1955, but the suit stood over in respect of the other relief for custody of children—and I may state from my experience that it was not infrequent that in such suits decrees for dissolution of marriage used to be passed first and the suit in respect of the relief for custody of children used to be adjourned for some time—and the suit in respect of that other relief reached hearing after May 18, 1955, would the suit for that relief be saved? Mr. Amin stated that it would be saved because the relief for custody of children had been asked for in the plaint itself along with the relief for dissolution of marriage. Mr. Amin's final argument narrowed down to a contention that if in a proceeding under the Bombay Act the relief in respect of the marriage itself had already been decreed before May 18, 1955, and there was no prayer for custody of children in the plaint itself, a subsequent petition could not be made for the first time after May 18, 1955.

although such a subsequent petition would have been permissible under s. 15 of the Bombay Act before its repeal. With respect to Mr. Amin, the said concessions made by Mr. Amin later in his argument are, in my opinion, not logical and I must ascertain the correct position in law and see whether Mr. Amin had to make such concessions because of his very first contention not being justifiable in law.

For a clearer understanding of the position it is necessary to consider first the provisions of s. 15 of the Bombay Act. In respect of that section, in the initial stages, Mr. Amin contended that even when the Bombay Act was in force no orders in respect of the custody, maintenance or education of children could for the first time be passed after a decree was passed in respect of the marriage of the parents of such children. What he contended was that in a suit for dissolution of marriage, an order in respect of the custody, maintenance and education of children could be made only by way of an interim order or by way of a provision in the decree dissolving the marriage, but that once a decree was passed in respect of the marriage but that decree did not contain any provision for the custody, maintenance and education of children, no order for such custody, maintenance and education of children could be made after the passing of such decree. In other words, according to Mr. Amin's contention, once a decree for the dissolution of the marriage was passed the only power which the Court would have under s. 15 in respect of the custody, maintenance and education of children would be a power in the nature of varying or altering such provision in that behalf as may already be contained in the decree. The words in s. 15, however, are:

"may, after the decree, upon application by petition for the purpose, make, revoke, suspend or vary from time to time all such orders and provisions with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of such children as might have been made by such decree or interim orders in case the suit for obtaining such decree were still pending."

The words "revoke, suspend or vary" would support Mr. Amin's contention, because in their grammatical sense they presuppose an existing order in that behalf, but the word "make", however, implies that a power is given to make such an order for the first time even after the decree, although there may be no such order already existing in the decree which has already been passed. Similarly, the words "as might have been made by such decree or interim orders in case the suit for obtaining such decree were still pending" suggest that even after passing of a decree which does not contain any provision with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children the Court has still the same powers in that behalf as it had before the passing of the decree. The effect of these words is that even after the passing of the decree the suit is, as it were, notionally to be deemed to be still pending and the Court can exercise the same powers even after the decree as it could exercise before or at the time of the passing of such decree. Having realised the force of these provisions in s. 15, Mr. Amin later on did not press his point that a fresh order could not be made by a Court under s. 15 with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children even after the decree was passed dissolving the marriage of the parents.

But Mr. Amin maintained that the last portion of s. 15 indicates that it applied only in those cases in which there was in the plaint not only a prayer for dissolution of marriage but also a prayer with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children. In other words, his contention was that in those cases where in the plaint there was only a prayer for dissolution of marriage and thereafter a decree was passed granting that prayer, because there was no prayer with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children in the original plaint the Court would have no jurisdiction under s. 15, after the passing of the decree for dissolution, to make any order with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children. In my opinion, there is no justification for reading s. 15 in the manner contended for by Mr. Amin. As noted earlier, in my opinion, on its proper interpretation, s. 15 provides, as it were, for a notional pendency of the suit even after the passing of the decree for dissolution of marriage. Even though the plaint contained a prayer only for dissolution of marriage and even if a decree is passed granting that prayer, by reason of the provisions of s. 15 the suit is notionally deemed to be still pending with a view to enable either of the parents to make an application, at any time after the passing of such decree, in that very suit for obtaining an order with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children. If there was in the original plaint a prayer with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children, then normally when the Court granted a decree for dissolution of marriage, it would have made some order in connection with that other prayer also, either granting it or rejecting it or ordering the same to stand over to be dealt with in future. In the latter eventuality, if that prayer was stood over, there would be no necessity for a fresh petition for an order with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children as provided for in s. 15. Section 15, however, does provide for an application to be made by a petition and that provision in s. 15 indicates that such a petition could be made even when there was originally no prayer in that behalf in the plaint. If full effect is given to these words in s. 15: "upon application by petition for the purpose", "make" and "as might have been made by such decree or interim orders in case the suit for obtaining such decree were still pending", it is clear that it is open under s. 15 to a Court to make an order with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of children even after the passing of the decree for the dissolution of the marriage and even though in the plaint as originally filed there was no prayer for such custody, maintenance and education of children.

I will now turn to sub-s. (3) of s. 29 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and for a proper appreciation of the same, it is necessary to bear in mind certain other provisions of the Bombay Act and the Central Act. Under the Bombay Act, when it was in force, there could have been filed a suit for dissolution of marriage. Even after a decree was passed dissolving the marriage an application could have been made under s. 15 in respect of the custody, education and maintenance of the children of the marriage and under s. 8(1) for permanent alimony. I have already stated that the language of s. 15 shows that an application for custody, education and maintenance of children could be made, even for the first time, after the passing of the decree for dissolution of marriage. Similarly, it is quite clear, that an application for permanent alimony also could be made even for the first time after the passing of the decree for dissolution of marriage, because the material words of s. 8(1) are: "at the time of passing any decree under this Act or subsequent thereto". The provision in the Central Act in respect of applications for custody, education and maintenance of children is contained in s. 26 and in respect of applications for permanent alimony is contained in s. 25 and for the purposes of the present consideration the language of ss. 26 and 25 of the Central Act is similar, though not absolutely identical, to that of ss. 15 and 8 respectively of the Bombay Act. The intention of the Bombay Legislature as gathered from the language of ss. 15 and 8 of the Bombay Act appears to be that applications for custody, education and maintenance of children and for permanent alimony could and should be made in the very suit or proceeding for dissolution of marriage even after the passing of the decree for dissolution of marriage. The same appears to be the intention of the Central Legislature as gathered from the provision enacted in ss. 28 and 25 of the Central Act. The reason for that intention of the two Legislatures and the scheme of the two enactments is also natural, because the very necessity to provide for the custody, education and maintenance of children and for permanent alimony arises because a decree for the dissolution of the marriage has been granted and is but consequential upon and incidental to such decree. When that intention and that scheme of the Bombay Act has been adopted and continued in the Central Act can it be said that the Central Act in enacting the repealing provision in s. 30 and the saving provision in s. 29(3)—which two provisions must be read together—intended that after the repeal of the Bombay Act no application should be made for custody, education or maintenance of children or for permanent alimony after the repeal of the Bombay Act in suits under the Bombay Act in which decrees for dissolution of marriage had already been passed before the repeal of the Bombay Act? It can be argued that after the repeal of the Bombay Act, it was not intended that applications for custody, maintenance and education of children should be made in the very suits in which decrees for dissolution of marriage had already been passed before the repeal of the Bombay Act because it is possible to make such applications, though not under the repealed Bombay Act, but under other provisions of law, e.g., the Guardians and Wards Act. But what about applications for permanent alimony? If a decree for dissolution of marriage had already been passed, but no application for permanent alimony had been made before the repeal of the Bombay Act, was the right to subsequently apply for alimony completely taken away by repealing the Bombay Act? If by reason of the repeal of the Bombay Act the right to apply under s. 8 for permanent alimony was taken away, it appears to me that the inevitable result would be that the right to apply for permanent alimony would completely disappear, as there appears to be no other provision of law which would enable an application being made in such a case for permanent alimony. Such an unreasonable intention to take away that right to permanent alimony cannot be ascribed to the Legislature. And if the right to make such a subsequent application for permanent alimony cannot have been intended to be taken away, why should there have been a different intention in respect of a subsequent application for custody, education or maintenance of children although it may be possible to obtain such latter relief under some other law?

In my opinion, all these difficulties would arise if too narrow a construction is placed on the language of sub-s. (3) of s. 29 of the Central Act. That subsection provides:

The Bombay Act was a "law for the time being in force" within the meaning of that phrase in sub-s. (3). Now what would be saved would be a proceeding under the Bombay Act "for declaring any marriage to be null and void or for annulling or dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation pending at the commencement of the Central Act". The Bombay Act did not provide for "declaring any marriage to be null and void", nor did it provide for "annulling any marriage" and these phrases would, therefore, not be applicable to the Bombay Act. The presence of those two phrases in the said sub-s. (3) is due to the other enactments repealed by s. 30 of the Central Act. The phrase "dissolving any marriage" is tantamount to "divorce", which is the word used in the Bombay Act. Therefore the relevant words in the said sub-s. (3) are "any proceeding" under the Bombay Act "for dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation" and "pending at the commencement of this Act". It is clear that in order to be saved, it must be a proceeding for dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation pending at the commencement of the Central Act. But what is the interpretation of these words? It is clear that the said sub-s. (3) would save all proceedings in which the relief was for dissolving any marriage or for judicial separation and the adjudication as to such relief had not yet been made and was still pending at the commencement of the Central Act. But would that sub-s. (3) also save a second category of proceedings which were initially for dissolving a marriage or for judicial separation and in which that relief had been granted before the commencement of the Central Act, but which were at the commencement of the Central Act still pending because a relief already prayed for therein for custody, education or maintenance of children, or for permanent alimony had remained to be adjudicated upon? And would that sub-s. (3) also save a third category of proceedings in which even though there was no such relief originally prayed for and could not therefore be said to have remained unadjudicated upon, but yet, from the very nature of the original proceeding, it was notionally to be deemed to be pending for any subsequent application for and adjudication of the necessary relief or reliefs in respect of custody, education and maintenance of children or permanent alimony as and when occasion for the same arises. In my opinion, on a correct interpretation, even the said second and third categories of proceedings would also be saved. Sub-section (3) of s. 29 saves all proceedings which were initially for dissolution of marriage or for judicial separation under the Bombay Act. It is not that they would be saved only if the relief for dissolving the marriage or for judicial separation was still pending at the commencement of the Central Act. If in a proceeding a relief for custody of children or for permanent alimony was asked for but remained unadjudicated upon at the commencement of the Central Act, or even if no such relief was in fact asked for before the commencement of the Central Act, the proceeding must be deemed to be pending at the commencement of the Central Act and even such a proceeding having initially been "for dissolving a marriage" or "for judicial separation" is also saved. The reason why even the said second and third categories of proceedings would be saved is that all the said three categories of proceedings would essentially be for dissolving a marriage or for judicial separation, and the granting of relief in respect of custody, education or maintenance of children or for permanent alimony would be merely incidental thereto and by reason of the provisions of ss. 15 and 8 such incidental relief was capable of being granted at any time even after a decree for the essential relief was passed and the proceeding must even thereafter be deemed to be pending for such incidental relief being granted therein. The present petition, even though it falls within the said third category, is therefore competent and maintainable although it has been filed after the Bombay Act stood repealed.

Under the circumstances, the respondent fails in the preliminary point taken by him.

NURJEHAN v. SULTAN AHMED.*

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), Secs. 25, 3—Petition under s. 25 by Muslim woman for custody of her minor child—Whether Court can make order for such custody under its general and inherent jurisdiction—Circumstances under which such order can be made.

In a case where the Court has no jurisdiction to make an order under s. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Court can exercise its general and inherent jurisdiction where an order for custody is necessary for the welfare and in the interest of the minor.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

A. K. Dharama Raj, for the petitioner.

M. B. Chitre, for the respondent.

*Decided, January 19, 1959. O. C. J. Miscellaneous Application No. 420 of 1958.

K. K. DESAI J. This is an application of one Nurjehan, the mother of the minor mentioned in the petition, for delivery of the custody of the minor to her. It appears that prior to the petitioner Nurjehan's marriage with the respondent he was married to another lady who was at the time of Nurjehan's marriage absent from the house of the respondent. Nurjehan discovered the existence of the first marriage of the respondent subsequent to her marriage with the respondent. The parties appear to have lived together for some time and it is alleged in para. 5 of the petition that on July 31, 1957, the respondent drove the petitioner out of the house though she was pregnant at that time after snatching away the minor child from the petitioner's hands.

The minor is 3 years old. Prima facie it must be for the welfare and in the interest of any minor that it should be with the natural mother during tender age and I have therefore requested Mr. Chitre who appears for the respondent to tell me how it is for the welfare and in the interest of the minor that the child should not be delivered over to the petitioner. Mr. Chitre made only the following points:

1. Nurjehan has no means of maintenance.
2. Nurjehan is staying with her two brothers Dadamiya and Abdul Hamid in a small hut and there are altogether five persons residing in the hut.
3. It is alleged in the affidavit in reply that Nurjehan left shelter of the respondent on her own accord leaving the child behind and she was moving with others.

As regards the question of income of the respondent, Mr. Chitre pointed out that he is earning Rs. 145 per month and some times extra for extra work. As against that Mr. Dharmaraj has pointed out that Dadamiya is earning about Rs. 5 per day and Abdul Hamid is earning about Rs. 100 per month. Both of them are willing to give an undertaking to the Court that they will during the child's residence with Nurjehan make provisions for the maintenance of the child in the usual way.

As regards this contention made by Mr. Chitre, it appears to me that both the sides appearing before me are poor and there is no question of a very rich existence for the child with either of the parties. Since the mother wants the child to be with her and since both her brothers are willing to give an undertaking as mentioned above, I do not see how the child being left with the father is to be more benefited than its being with the mother.

As regards the allegations against Nurjehan, they seem to be frivolous and I am informed even by Mr. Chitre that it would certainly be very difficult to prove any such allegations. Mr. Dharmaraj has rightly pointed out that if left with the respondent the minor will receive the usual treatment from its stepmother.

In my view it is for the benefit and welfare of the child that the child must remain with the mother and I should make an order as asked for in the petition.

Mr. Chitre has, however, argued that the petition is made under s. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act and that a Muslim woman is only entitled to custody and is not a natural guardian within the meaning of the Act and the petition is, therefore, misconceived. Since it is in the interest and for the welfare of the child that the custody of the child must be given to the mother I will treat this application as an application under the general and inherent jurisdiction of this Court in matters relating to minors. (Under s. 3 of the Act that jurisdiction has continued to vest in the Court.) It cannot be that the Court is powerless where an order is necessary for the welfare and in the interest of a minor and the application is of the kind as in this petition. I am of the view that if the Court has no jurisdiction to make this order under s. 25 of the Act, the Court should exercise its general and inherent jurisdiction for the purpose and make the order as prayed for.

There will, therefore, be an order in terms of the prayer in the petition. The respondent will pay costs of the petitioner fixed at Rs. 100. This order is made on the basis of the undertaking given to the Court by Dadamiya and Abdul Hamid being the brothers of the petitioner that they undertake to provide for the maintenance of the minor Mahomed Rafiq during his stay with Nurjehan, the petitioner. There will be liberty to apply if it becomes necessary to change the custody of the minor for any other circumstances.

THE PARBHANI TRANSPORT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LIMITED
v.

G. V. BEDEKAR.*

Motor Vehicles Act (IV of 1939), Secs. 47, Chap. IVA, 68B, 68C, 68F(2)(a), 68, 64—Constitution of India, Art. 19(6)—Road Transport Corporations Act (LXIV of 1950), Secs. 3, 19—Whether State Transport Undertaking can apply under s. 47 for grant of permit—Regional Transport Authority whether can grant permit to State Transport Undertaking and refuse it to private undertaking solely on ground of giving effect to policy of nationalisation of Government—Construction of statute—General and special provisions relating to public matter—How effect to be given to.

It is open to a State Transport Undertaking to make an application for grant of a stage carriage permit under s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939.

Section 68C of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, contemplates the preparation of a scheme by the Corporation, and it is only when such a scheme is decided upon that the provisions of that section apply. Where the Corporation does not prepare a scheme, the provisions of s. 68C cannot be availed of. In those circumstances, the provisions of s. 47 which are wide and general in their terms can be availed of by the Corporation.

It is not open to the Regional Transport Authority in exercising its powers under Chapter IV of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, to grant a permit to a State Transport Undertaking and to refuse it to a private undertaking solely with the object of giving effect to the policy of nationalisation of road transport which has been decided upon by the Government. The comparative merits of both must be considered and the applications for grant of permit must be decided bearing the respective merits in mind.

Where there are two sets of provisions dealing with some public matter, one section being unqualified and the other containing a qualification, effect must be given to those provisions containing qualifications. But for this principle to apply, the general and special provisions must be applicable to the same set of circumstances. Where the general principles deal with one set of circumstance and the special provisions deal with another set of circumstance, the latter provisions will apply only where those other circumstances exist.

MUDHOLKAR J. This is a petition under art. 226 of the Constitution, and is directed against the order of the Appellate Committee of the State Transport Authority. The relevant facts are as follows: The petitioner is a co-operative society registered under the Hyderabad Co-operative Societies Act XVI of 1952, and is carrying on the business of plying Stage Carriage Bus Service in the Parbhani District (Marathwada) of Bombay State, since December 1954. From October 2, 1955, the petitioner has been plying the stage carriage service on four routes: (1) Parbhani to Jintoor, (2) Jintoor to Sailu via Mantha, (3) Aundh to Hingoli, (4) Jintoor to Aundh, under substantive permits granted to it by the State Transport Authority of the former Hyderabad State. These permits were for a period of three years and expired on October 1, 1958.

On or about May 19, 1958, the Divisional Controller of the State Transport, Marathwada, who is respondent No. 14 to this petition, made an application to the Regional Transport Authority, Marathwada, for the grant of fresh stage carriage permits for the following three routes: (1) Jintur to Parbhani, (2) Jintur to Sailu, and (3) Aundh to Hingoli, that is, over the routes where the petitioner is already operating its stage carriage service on substantive permits. The application of respondent No. 14 was published on May 29, 1958, in the manner provided under the Act. The petitioner, after coming to know of this, filed its objections on June 26, 1958, to the grant of the application of respondent No. 14.

On May 27, 1958, the petitioner also filed an application for renewal of its permits, which were due to expire on October 1, 1958. This application was published by the Regional Transport Authority on July 8, 1958.

The application of respondent No. 14 came up for consideration before the Regional Transport Authority along with the petitioner's objections, on July 4, 1958. At that meeting it was brought to the notice of the Regional Transport Authority that the petitioner had filed an application for renewal of its permits and that that application should be heard along with that of respondent No. 14. The Regional Transport Authority, however, proceeded with the hearing of the application made by respondent No. 14, but deferred its decision thereon till such time as the petitioner's application became ready for being considered. Both the applications came up for hearing on August 13, 1958. Some of the members of the Regional Transport Authority who were present at the earlier meeting were not present at the second meeting. One person, respondent No. 9, who was not present at the meeting of July 4, 1958, was present at the meeting of August 13, 1958, and took part in the deliberations. According to the petitioner, the Regional Transport Authority granted the application of respondent No. 14 without hearing any fresh arguments. Thereafter the petitioner's application was taken up for consideration, but it was rejected because the Regional Transport Authority had decided to grant permit to respondent No. 14. No other ground was stated by the Regional Transport Authority in this connection.

The petitioner thereupon preferred an appeal before the Appellate Committee of the State Transport Authority. The Appellate Committee observed that the Regional Transport Authority decided the question in the light of the provisions of s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act; that the Regional Transport Authority had further come to the conclusion that permits should be granted to respondent No. 14 in preference to the petitioner, because it was in the public interest to so order, and that the Appellate Committee did not see any reason to interfere with the decision of the Regional Transport Authority. Thereupon the petitioner has come to this Court under art. 226 of the Constitution.

A large number of contentions have been raised by the petitioner in the.

petition before us; but the contentions which were pressed before us in argument by Mr. Jaisingani on behalf of the petitioner are as follows: (1) That the provisions of Chap. IVA could alone be resorted to by a State Transport Undertaking, if it was desirous of operating a stage carriage service in any area, and that it was not open to the State Transport to make an application for grant of a permit under s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, which section falls in Chap. IV of the Act. (2) While deciding the question as to who should be granted a permit, the Regional Transport Authority and the Appellate Committee of the State Transport Authority must confine themselves to the considerations set out in s. 47 of the Act, and that it is not open to any authority exercising its powers under the Motor Vehicles Act to grant a permit to a State Transport because of the policy of nationalisation, which is accepted by the State, or because of any instructions given to it by circulars received from the Government. (3) That the Regional Transport Authority erred in dealing with the applications of the petitioner and that of respondent No. 14 separately, even though at its earlier meeting it had decided to hear both the applications simultaneously.

Along with this petition we also heard two others: Spl. C.A. 3673/58 and Spl. C.A. 15/59. In both these petitions permits have been granted to the B.E.S.T. Undertaking for establishing its services along certain routes within the limits of Greater Bombay. The petitioners in these two petitions had also applied for permits to operate the services along the same routes. It may be mentioned that each of the petitioners was operating these services at the date of his application and that each of them is operating those services even now, by virtue of an injunction issued by this Court. The only point raised in these petitions by Mr. Hegde is that the B.E.S.T. Undertaking was incompetent to apply for permits under s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, and that unless it prepared a scheme under the provisions of Chap. IVA of the Act and such scheme had been approved by the Government, it could not seek to obtain permits nor could it be granted permits by the Regional Transport Authority.

The argument that State Transport as well as the B.E.S.T. Undertaking will be incompetent to make an application under s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act is based on the fact that by Act 100 of 1956 the Motor Vehicles Act was considerably amended. Amongst other things, special provisions relating to State Transport Undertakings were incorporated therein by the addition of Chap. IVA. Mr. Jaisingani contended strenuously that the Legislature has clearly excluded the operation of the provisions of Chap. IV of the Act in so far as the State Transport and Municipal Undertakings are concerned, and, in this connection, he relied upon the provisions of s. 68B of the Act. He also relied upon the general principle that where a statute makes a special provision regarding a particular matter, then the general provisions contained therein must give way to those special provisions.

Mr. Hegde contended that where only one object is intended to be secured to a person by any law, the provisions of that law must not be construed in such a way as to entitle that person to achieve that object in two ways. He further contended that the word 'otherwise' occurring in s. 68C after the words "whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of other persons or" clearly shows that an application of the State Transport Corporation for a permit, even in circumstances not involving the creation of a monopoly, must conform to the provisions of s. 68C. Further, according to him, the provisions of s. 68F(2) would be meaningless, if where a State Transport Corporation merely wants to establish a service along a particular route, it can resort to provisions of s. 47, and that it is not necessary for it to obtain such a permit under Chap. IVA of the Act.

We may refer at the outset to the history of the legislation regarding the operation of transport services of the States and nationalisation of transport services. As long ago as in the year 1936 the Government of Bombay had contemplated nationalisation of all transport services. With a view to achieve it, instructions were given to the Regional Transport Authorities, as has been pointed out by Chagla C.J. in Dhulia-Nardhana Motor Owners Union v. The State of Bombay,¹ to intimate all private operators of buses who held regular permits that such permits will not be renewed, but only temporary permits would be issued from time to time. The object of this was to ensure that at a given point of time the whole motor transport in the State of Bombay would be nationalised. That policy was abandoned, and a new policy was formed. That policy was to create a State Corporation, and leave it to that corporation to apply for permits to the Regional Transport Authority in the same manner as other operators. This corporation was to have the backing of the Government, and its function was to co-ordinate all transport services in the State. Such a corporation was set up in the year 1949. But this Court held that the corporation was not validly constituted. That was in October 1950. The corporation was however validated by the enactment of the Road Transport Corporations Act, 1950, which received the assent of the President on December 4, 1950.

After the formation of the corporation, the Regional Transport Authorities in the State started granting what is known as temporary permits for four months to a number of operators on those routes which were intended to be taken over by the State Transport Corporation. Similar things were done in other States. A number of operators in the U.P. had challenged the right of the State to operate its services. It was also contended on their behalf that the Regional Transport Authorities were being used by Government as a machine for giving effect to their policy of nationalisation, and that since the enforcement of that policy infringed the rights of the citizens conferred by art. 19(1)(g) of the Constitution, the actions of the Regional Transport Authority were unconstitutional. The whole question came up for consideration before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in *Moti Lal v. Uttar Pradesh Govt.*² It was pointed out there that the State has a right to carry on a trade or business as an ordinary incident of its Governmental functions but that in exercising that right it could not act contrary to law or infringe the rights of citizens. It was further pointed out that nationalisation has two implications: (1) the State will carry on the business, and (2) that no one else will be allowed to carry it on. Where nationalisation took away from a citizen the right to carry on a business, there was infringement of the right of the citizen guaranteed by art. 19(1)(g) of the Constitution. It was further pointed out that although an executive act of the State Government may not be authorised by a legislative enactment, it will nevertheless be within the executive powers of the State if (1) it is not an act which has been assigned in the Constitution of India to other authorities, (2) it is not contrary to the provisions of any law, and (3) it does not encroach upon or otherwise infringe legal right of any member. The learned Judges also pointed out that the mere fact that the Government launched upon the policy of nationalisation of motor transport services and had put in its own buses in the field to achieve that end is not a valid consideration for the Regional Transport Authority in determining an application under s. 47.

The question as to the extent of rights enjoyed by citizens and the State to ply buses was considered by the Supreme Court in *Veerappa Pillai v. Raman and Raman Ltd.*³ There it was held that no one is entitled to a permit as of right even if he has satisfied all conditions prescribed in the Motor Vehicles Act, and that the grant of a permit is entirely within the discretion of the Transport Authority, and depends upon several other circumstances which should be taken into account.

It may be mentioned that according to the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court the right of a citizen to the use of a highway for running stage carriages for profit, subject of course to his complying with the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act or any other law for the time being in force, cannot be abrogated by an executive action, even though that action was actuated by a desire to nationalise road transport. The Legislature, therefore, stepped in and amended cl. (6) of art. 19. Clause (6) of art. 19 prior to its amendment was as follows:—

1 (1951) Special Civil Application No. 631 of 1951, decided by Chagla C.J. and Gajendragadkar J., on December 5, 1951 (Unrep.).

2 [1951] A.I.R. All. 257, F.B.

"Nothing in sub-clause (g) of the said clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law imposing, in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by the said sub-clause, and, in particular, nothing in the said sub-clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it prescribes or empowers any authority to prescribe, or prevent the State from making any law prescribing or empowering any authority to prescribe, the professional or technical qualifications necessary for practising any profession or carrying on any occupation, trade or business."

This has now been substituted by the following:—

"Nothing in sub-clause (g) of the said clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law imposing, in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by the said sub-clause, and, in particular, nothing in the said sub-clause, shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it relates to, or prevent the State from making any law relating to,—

(4) the professional or technical qualifications necessary for practising any profession or carrying on any occupation, trade or business, or

(4) the carrying on by the State, or by a corporation owned or controlled by the State, of any trade, business, industry or service, whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of citizens or otherwise."

Now, by virtue of this amendment, two things are made clear. One is the right of the State or of a corporation owned or controlled by the State, to carry on a trade, business, industry or service, and the other thing is the right of the State to carry on the said trade, business, industry or service even to the exclusion of the other citizens. In other words, this provision now entitles the Legislature to make an appropriate law for creation of State monopolies. Now, since cl. (6) is a limitation on sub-cl. (g) of art. 19, it follows that the right of a citizen guaranteed by the sub-clause is subordinated to the right of the State to create a monopoly in its own favour.

Finally, we would refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in *Saghir Ahmad v. The State of U.P.*⁴ In that case, their Lordships were dealing with the provisions of the U.P. Road Transport Act of 1951, which was enacted prior to the amendment of cl. (6) of art. 19. Their Lordships laid down the following propositions in that case: (1) All public streets and roads vest in the State, but the State holds them as trustees on behalf of the public. (2) The members of the public are entitled as beneficiaries to use them as a matter of right and this right is limited only by the similar rights possessed by every other citizen to use the pathways. (3) The State as trustees on behalf of the public is entitled to impose all such limitations on the character and extent of the user as may be requisite for protecting the rights of the public generally; but subject to such limitations the right of a citizen to carry on business in transport vehicles on public pathways cannot be denied to him on the ground that the State owns the highways. (4) Within the limits imposed by State regulations any member of the public can ply motor vehicles on a public road. To that extent he can also carry on the business of transporting passengers with the aid of vehicles. (5) The guarantee in art. 19(1)(g) is attracted to the carrying on of the trade or business by the State, and a citizen can legitimately complain if any legislation takes away or curtails that right any more than is permissible under cl. (6) of that article. (6) Article 19(6) as the result of the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, enables the State to carry on any trade or business either by itself or through corporation owned or controlled by the State to the exclusion of private citizens wholly or in part. (7)

This amendment does not, however, affect the validity of the provisions of the U.P. Road Transport Act, 1951, because it was passed prior to the amendment and must, therefore, be regarded as unconstitutional when it was so passed.

It is in the light of this history that we must examine the provisions of Chap. IV(A). The argument on behalf of the respondents is that the sole object of enacting the provisions of Chap. IV(A) was to deal with an application for grant of a permit by a State Corporation in pursuance of the scheme of nationalisation of road transport. Where the State Transport Corporation wants merely to introduce a stage carriage service along a particular route and nothing more, it is not necessary for the Corporation to resort to the provisions of Chap. IV(A) and that it can make its application under s. 47 as it used to prior to the enactment of the provisions contained in Chap. IV(A). It is pointed out on behalf of the respondents that s. 47 is wide in its terms, and enables the State or a State owned corporation to make an application for grant of a permit to the Regional Transport Authority and that if it was the intention of the Legislature, when it enacted the provisions of Chap. IV(A), to restrict the provisions of s. 47 in any way, it would have expressed that intention by making an appropriate amendment to s. 47 when it enacted the provisions of Chap. IV(A). In particular, a reference was made to the fact that s. 47 itself was amended in regard to one matter, and nothing was easier for the Legislature than to further amend s. 47 and say that the provisions contained in it will not apply to a State Transport Corporation.

Where a Legislature amends a statute, it may either abrogate or modify certain provisions therein or may add to them. Whether it has done one or the other must necessarily be ascertained in the first instance from the new provisions in the background of the old ones. If there be some doubt about the matter, the Court will have to resort to the usual canons of construction.

The heading of Chap. IV(A) is: "Special Provisions Relating to State Transport Undertakings." It is contended before us on behalf of the petitioners that the provisions contained in Chap. IV(A) are the only ones which govern the granting of permits to State Transport Undertakings. It seems to us that such an inference does not follow from the title given to the chapter. That title does not indicate that these are the only provisions which govern the grant of permits to State Transport Undertakings. It is true that the provisions of this chapter are limited to State Transport Undertakings, that is to say, they would apply only to State Transport Undertakings and to no other. But it is one thing to say this, and another to say that the Legislature by so describing the provisions intended that these are the only provisions which were to govern the grant of the permits to State Transport Undertakings. These are, as the heading would indicate, only additional provisions which relate to State Transport Undertakings, and are not the only ones which apply to such undertakings. Section 68B clearly supports this conclusion. That section reads thus:

"68B. Chapter IVA to override Chapter IV and other laws. The provisions of this Chapter and the rules and orders made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in Chapter IV of this Act or in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any such law."

Now, if the Legislature had intended that the provisions of Chap. IV(A) could alone govern applications for permits made by State Undertakings, s. 68B would not have been worded in this manner. What it does say is that the provisions in Chap. IV or any other law which are inconsistent with the provisions of Chap. IV(A) will have to give way to the provisions of Chap. IV(A). Therefore, it is clear that the provisions of Chap. IV and also any other law for the time being in force are kept intact, but they are overridden in their application to State Transport Undertakings only to the extent of inconsistency between them and the provisions of Chap. IV-A.

A consideration of the provisions of s. 68C does, in our opinion, indicate that those provisions govern a matter which does not clearly fall within the ambit of s. 47. We may quote that section here in extenso:

"68C. Preparation and publication of scheme of road transport service of a State transport undertaking. Where any State transport undertaking is of opinion that for the purpose of providing an efficient, adequate, economical and properly co-ordinated road transport service, it is necessary in the public interest that road transport services in general or any particular class of such service in relation to any area or route or portion thereof should be run and operated by the State transport undertaking, whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of other persons or otherwise, the State transport undertaking may prepare a scheme giving particulars of the nature of the services proposed to be rendered, the area or route proposed to be covered and such other particulars respecting thereto as may be prescribed, and shall cause every such scheme to be published in the Official Gazette and also in such other manner as the State Government may direct."

The marginal note to this section shows that this section applied only to a scheme prepared by a State Transport Undertaking. Now, a scheme is something quite different from a mere application for grant of permit. Before resorting to the provisions of Chap. IV-A, the State Transport Undertaking has to form an opinion that for the purpose of providing an efficient, adequate, economical and properly co-ordinated road transport service, it is necessary in the public interest that a scheme should be prepared. Now, forming an opinion of this kind is not a pre-requisite for making an application under s. 47 of the Act. This is sufficient to show that ss. 47 and 68C apply to different circumstances and not to identical ones. Mr. Hegde, however, argued that so far as road transport corporation of the State is concerned, it must always form an opinion of the kind which is referred to in s. 68C because of the objects set out in s. 3 of the Road Transport Corporations Act. According to him a State Road Transport Corporation can be constituted only for carrying on the objects which are set out in s. 3 of the Road Transport Corporations Act, 1950. These objects are identical with the matters regarding which an opinion is required to be formed by the terms of s. 68C. He further said that a State Transport Corporation being a creature of a statute can do only that which the statute entitles it to do and no more. Now, the objects with which a State Transport Corporation can be formed as set out in s. 3 are as follows: Section 3 of the Act provides that the State, having regard to—

(a) the advantages offered to the public, trade and industry by the development of road transport;

(b) the desirability of co-ordinating any form of road transport with any other form of transport;

(c) the desirability of extending and improving the facilities for road transport in any area and of providing an efficient and economical system of road transport service therein;

may establish a Road Transport Corporation.

Indeed s. 19 of the Act, which is relevant, makes the point clear. That section deals with the powers of the Corporation. Under that section, the Corporation shall have power—

(a) to operate road transport services in the State and in any extended area;

(b) to provide for any ancillary service;

(c) to provide for its employees suitable conditions of service, etc.

Certain other powers are also conferred on the Corporation, which it is not necessary to refer. This section clearly confers an unrestricted power on the State Transport Corporation to operate road transport services in the State, and that power is exercisable by the Corporation not merely in the limited cases which are dealt with in s. 68C but in all other cases.

It was then contended by Mr. Hegde that the provisions of Chap. IV-A, and in particular those of s. 68C, must by implication be deemed to exclude the provisions of s. 47, because these provisions are special provisions; while those of

s. 47 are general provisions. No doubt, the law is that where there are two sets of provisions dealing with some public matter, one section being unqualified and the other containing a qualification, effect must be given to those provisions containing qualifications. But for this principle to apply, the general and the special provisions must be applicable to the same set of circumstances. Where the general principles deal with one set of circumstance and the special provisions deal with another set of circumstance, the latter provisions will apply only where those other circumstances exist. Now, I have already stated that s. 68C contemplates the preparation of a scheme by the Corporation, and it is only when such a scheme is decided upon that the provisions of that section apply. Where the Corporation does not prepare a scheme, clearly the provisions of s. 68C cannot be availed of. In those circumstances, the provisions of s. 47 which are wide and general in their terms could certainly be availed of by the Corporation.

It is, however, contended that s. 68C makes it obligatory upon the State Corporation, whenever it thinks of establishing a road transport service, to prepare a scheme, and that, therefore, only the provisions of s. 68C are available to the Corporation and not those of s. 47. We cannot, however, lose sight of the fact that for the application of s. 68C a certain opinion has to be formed by the State Transport Undertaking. Now, s. 68C does not in terms make it obligatory upon the Corporation to form the necessary opinion every time it intends to start a bus service. This is clear from the fact that the word used in s. 68C is 'may' and not 'shall'. The section says:

"Where any State transport undertaking is of opinion...the State transport undertaking may prepare a scheme..."

Now, the word 'may' is used in the permissive sense, and not in an imperative one, and therefore we cannot accede to the argument that every time a State Transport Undertaking contemplates starting a road transport service, it is bound to prepare a scheme. After all a scheme is something which is generally elaborate and intricate. It takes time to prepare a scheme, and then the sanction of the Government has to be obtained as referred to. Objections are invited from persons affected by this scheme, and it is only after considering these objections that the Government sanctions the scheme. The procedure prescribed in Chap. IV-A being in itself elaborate, we cannot assume that the Legislature intended that such a procedure had to be followed in each and every case where the State Transport Undertaking desires to start a bus service.

Mr. Hegde then referred us to the use of the word 'otherwise' in s. 68C, after the words "whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of other persons or", and said that the word 'otherwise' is used to cover a case of an application made by a State Transport Undertaking for running a bus service without excluding any other operator. In other words, his argument is that even where the State Transport Undertaking did not seek a monopoly over a route, it had to comply with the provisions of s. 68C. In our opinion, the word 'otherwise' was used to cover a case which did not seek the exclusion of any other person either completely or partially as a result of the operation of the scheme prepared by the State Road Transport Undertaking and that it was not intended to cover a case of the kind indicated by Mr. Hegde. We can conceive of a case where a State Transport Undertaking has prepared a scheme for co-ordinated road transport service in a territory where no road transport service at all exists. In such a case, the scheme may seek to exclude other persons, either wholly or partly, or it may not want to exclude them at all. Now, a case of the latter kind could not be covered by the expression "whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of other persons". To cover such a case it was necessary to add the word 'otherwise'. As we have pointed out, this expression is similar to that which has been used by the Legislature in the amended cl. (6) of art. 19, and has probably been copied therefrom by the Legislature by way of caution.

It was contended by Mr. Hegde that the fact that s. 68F(2)(a) confers a discretion on the Regional Transport Authority to refuse to entertain any application for renewal of any other permit, or to cancel the existing permit or to modify the terms of any existing permit, clearly shows that even an ordinary application by the State Transport Undertaking for grant of a permit to run its buses on a particular route must be made under Chap. IV-A. In our opinion, no such inference can be drawn from this provision. In the first place, as the opening words of the sub-s. (2) show, the Regional Transport Authority is required to give effect to the approved scheme in respect of a notified area or a notified route. The powers given by cls. (a), (b) and (c) of that sub-section are intended to be used only in that connection. Sub-section (1) of s. 68F provides that after a scheme made by the State Transport Undertaking is approved by the State Government, the Regional Transport Authority has no option but to issue a stage carriage permit to the State Transport Undertaking. The opening words of sub-s. (2) show that the Regional Transport Authority is required to give effect to the approved scheme. Now, in the scheme as approved by the Government, there may be a provision regarding the exclusion of other operators from the notified area or along a notified route. In such a case, the Regional Transport Authority, which is bound to give full effect to the scheme, must refuse to entertain any application for renewal of any other permit, or cancel an existing permit, as the provisions of the scheme may require. Where, on the other hand, the scheme does not seek to exclude any other person, either wholly or partially, the Regional Transport Authority may entertain other applications for renewal of permit or may modify the terms of an existing permit. It is to be borne in mind that this sub-section does not refer to a new application made by any person for grant of a permit, and it, at least in this respect, does not overlap the provisions of s. 47.

For all these reasons, we are of opinion that the provisions of Chap. IV-A do not touch the same matter as is dealt with in s. 47.

Now, under s. 47 the State Transport Undertaking used to be granted permits before the enactment of Chap. IV-A, because the language of that section is wide enough to enable a State Transport Undertaking to make an application thereunder. This section does not deal with schemes at all, whereas Chap. IV-A does. It would follow therefrom that the amendment made by the Legislature in the Motor Vehicles Act by enacting the provisions of Chap. IV-A merely added to the rights of a State Transport Undertaking. The right conferred by this chapter is to run bus services by excluding wholly or partially other operators. This right is quite distinct from the right of the State Transport Undertaking to institute its bus service in competition with other operators.

It is argued by Mr. Hegde that if after the amendment of the Motor Vehicles Act it was intended that s. 47 should also apply to a State Transport Undertaking, a provision would have been made therein for according preferential treatment to such an undertaking, vis-a-vis an individual owner, as has been done in respect of co-operative societies. It is true that the proviso to sub-s. (1) of s. 47 does accord a preferential treatment to the co-operative society over an individual owner; but that may be because the Legislature thought it fit to give encouragement to a co-operative endeavour. It seems that the Legislature did not think that in view of the provisions of Chap. IV-A, whereunder a State Transport Undertaking was enabled to secure a partial monopoly, there was any need to give it any further preferential treatment where it entered the field along with individual owners.

Upon this view, we hold that the application for a permit made by the State Transport Undertaking was maintainable. What we have said would also apply to the applications made by the B.E.S.T. Undertaking, because that undertaking falls within the definition of State Transport Undertaking contained in s. 68A of the Motor Vehicles Act.

Though the petitions fail on this point, there are other grounds on which we must allow these petitions. Now, in regard to Special C.A. No. 33 of 1959, we have already said that Mr. Jaisingani had contended that the application of the petitioner was rejected on a ground which does not arise out of the circumstances set out in s. 47 of the Act and that, therefore, his application for a permit should be granted and the permit granted to respondent No. 14 should be cancelled. It may be remembered that the Regional Transport Authority had decided at the meeting held on July 4, 1958, to deal with the applications of the petitioner and of respondent No. 14 together. Though both those applications were considered at the same meeting, they were not taken up simultaneously but one after the other. This was itself improper, because the comparative merits of the petitioners, and respondent No. 14, were not considered, and indeed could not be considered, by the Regional Transport Authority. Fresh permits were granted to respondent No. 14 on the following grounds:

"Having regard to clauses (a), (b), (d) and (e) of sec. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, it was decided unanimously to grant fresh permits to the State Transport, Marathwada, to operate Stage Carriage services on the following routes valid from 2-10-1958..."

Now, it does not appear that when the Regional Transport Authority came to this conclusion it had considered the question as to whether the petitioner was also in a position to satisfy the requirements of this very clause, and whether what the petitioner was able to do was something better or inferior to that which respondent No. 14 was able to do. The petitioner's application was dismissed on the following grounds:

"The application of the Parbhani Transport Co-operative Society Ltd., for renewal of the permits held by them was rejected by a majority vote because it has been decided to grant permits to the State Transport. Two of the members did not agree with the majority decision and desired it should be recorded that they were in favour of renewal of the permits held by the Parbhani Transport Co-operative Society, on the following grounds:—

(1) As the Co-operative transport Societies in Saurashtra were being excluded from the scope of nationalisation of bus transport there should not be any discrimination against the Parbhani Transport Co-operative Society in Marathwada, which like Saurashtra, had recently integrated with Bombay State.

(2) The Parbhani Transport Co-operative Society was established with the encouragement of Government; their operation has so far been quite successful, satisfactory and in accordance with the requirements of law.

(3) The Society was rendering public service and it was therefore desirable that they should be afforded an opportunity to render greater public service."

It would thus appear that what was on the top of the mind of the Regional Transport Authority when he preferred the application of respondent No. 14 to that of the petitioner was the policy of nationalisation of road transport which has been decided upon by the Government, and that it was for this reason that the Regional Transport Authority followed this peculiar procedure. The petitioner has stated in para. 7 of the petition:

"In the said meeting (meeting of 4-7-58) the Divisional Controller on behalf of the said State Transport Authority submitted that the permit be granted to the said State Transport 'in pursuance of the policy of extension of nationalised services'. In the said meeting the Divisional Controller on behalf of the said Transport further submitted that it was the policy of the Government of Bombay that the State Transport undertaking may 'take over routes operated by co-operative societies from the date of expiry of the permit.' The said Controller further submitted that 'in the pre-organised State of Bombay, the Regional Transport Authorities had cancelled permits to similar co-operative societies and issued the same to the State Transport.'"

This statement has been accepted by Mr. Deshmukh in para. 8 of his affidavit. We further find the following in Part II of the proceedings of the meeting of the Regional Transport Authority dated July 4, 1958:

"In arguing his case Shri Deshmukh stated that in pursuance of the policy of extension of nationalised services to areas not served by the State Transport, the application for the grant of permits on the above routes, had been submitted... He further argued that the fact that the respondent in this case happens to be a co-operative society should not be a bar to the grant of permits to the State Transport in the pre-organised State of Bombay, the Regional Transport Authorities had cancelled permits issued to similar co-operative societies and issued the same to the State Transport."

From all this and also from the fact that the application for permit made by the petitioner was rejected on the ground that the permit has already been granted to respondent No. 14 only one conclusion emerges and that is that the petitioner's application was rejected and that of respondent No. 14 was granted solely with the object of giving effect to the policy of nationalisation. Now, that is an object which is foreign to the provisions of Chap. IV of the Motor Vehicles Act, and, therefore, that cannot be a ground for granting a permit to a State Transport Undertaking and refusing one to a private undertaking. The comparative merits of both had to be considered and the applications for grant of permit had to be decided bearing the respective merits in mind.

The Appellate Committee which confirmed the decision of the Regional Transport Authority did no better. Before the Appellate Committee the argument based on the State policy of nationalisation was also advanced. There is nothing in the proceeding before us to show that this argument did not weigh with the Appellate Committee. The Appellate Committee has given no reasons for its decision, but has come to the following conclusion only:

"The Appellate Committee observed that the R.T.A. decided the question in the light of the provisions of sec. 47 of the M. V. Act. The R.T.A. came to the conclusion to grant permits to the S.T. Marathwada, unanimously and preferred the S.T. to the Society, for the operation of services on the routes in question in the public interest. The Appellate Committee, therefore, did not see any reason to interfere with the decision of the R.T.A. and were pleased to pass the following decision:— Decision:—Heard both the parties. The stay order is vacated and the appeal is rejected."

Now, in coming to this conclusion the Appellate Committee has made two mistakes. In the first place, the decision of the Regional Transport Authority was not unanimous with respect to the petitioner's application. In the second place, the Regional Transport Authority has not said that for any particular reasons it preferred the State Transport Undertaking to the petitioner.

The petitioners in Spl. C.A. 3673/58 and 15/59 preferred Second Appeals to the State Government, but they were rejected by it. In our opinion, a second appeal did not at all lie to the State Government. These appeals were preferred by virtue of the provisions of r. 76(1A) of the rules framed by the Bombay Government and notified on August 26, 1949. That rule no doubt provides that a second appeal shall lie to the State Government against any order made by the Appellate Committee under sub-r. (1) of r. 76 framed under the rule making power conferred on the State Government by s. 68 of the Motor Vehicles Act. Under s. 68(2)(b) a State Government is empowered to make rules for the conduct and hearing of appeals that may be preferred under Chap. IV. The right of appeal is conferred by s. 64, which section as it stood at the date of the amendment read thus:

"64. Appeals.

Any person—

- (a) aggrieved by the refusal of the State or a Regional Transport Authority to grant a permit, or by any condition attached to a permit granted to him, or
- (b) aggrieved by the revocation or suspension of the permit or by any variation of the conditions thereof, or
- (c) aggrieved by the refusal to transfer the permit to the person succeeding on the death of the holder of a permit, or
- (d) aggrieved by the refusal of the State or a Regional Transport Authority to countersign a permit or by any condition attached to such countersignature, or

- (e) aggrieved by the refusal of renewal of a permit, or
- (f) being a local authority or police authority or an association which; or a person providing transport facilities, who, having opposed the grant of a permit, is aggrieved by the grant thereof or by any condition attached thereto, or
- (g) aggrieved by the refusal to grant permission under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of section 59, or
- (h) aggrieved by a reduction under sub-section (1A) of section 60 in the number of vehicles or routes or are covered by a permit, or
- (i) aggrieved by any other order which may be prescribed, may, within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, appeal to the prescribed authority who shall give such person and the original authority an opportunity of being heard."

It would appear from the section that only one appeal is contemplated by it, and that appeal is from the original order made by any authority referred to in s. 47. Therefore, the rules framed by the State Government under s. 68 had to confine themselves to the appeals contemplated by s. 64. It was clearly beyond the powers of the State Government to make a rule providing for a second appeal when the Act itself provided for one appeal only. Section 68 has since been amended, but since sub-r. (1A) of r. 76 was made prior to the amendment, it is not necessary for us to consider whether a second appeal can be provided by the rules now. The addition of sub-r. (1A) when it was made was beyond the powers of the State Government, and, therefore, it never had any validity in law. What was invalid when made cannot be validated subsequently unless the Legislature intends to do so expressly or by necessary implication. There is nothing to show that the Legislature intended to do anything of the kind in regard to r. (1A). We, therefore, hold that the appeal to the State Government was incompetent. However, that makes no difference to the case of the petitioner.

The position, therefore, would be; In Spl. C.A. 33/59 we quash the orders of the Regional Transport Authority and the Appellate Committee and send the matter back to the Regional Transport Authority with the direction that it should consider the applications of the petitioner as well as respondent No. 14 simultaneously and decide them on merits.

Now, as regards the other two petitions, the position is that by virtue of the facts referred to by the petitioner before the State Government, the matters are directed to go back to the Regional Transport Authority. Since in our opinion no appeals lay to the State Government, the orders made in appeal against both the petitioners in second appeal are in effect bad. We, however, agree with the petitioners that the comparative merits of the petitioner's claims and those of the B.E.S.T. Undertaking have not been considered by the Regional Transport Authority and that it is necessary for the Regional Transport Authority to apply its mind to them. It may be mentioned that the petitioners' applications were rejected by the Regional Transport Authority and the petitioners' complaint is that the rejection of those applications was based on certain information which the Regional Transport Authority had obtained from certain sources. Now, the petitioners' petitions were not heard with respect to this matter at all, when the Regional Transport Authority decided to take that information into consideration. The petitioners' appeals from the decision of the Regional Transport Authority were rejected by the Appellate Committee. Second Appeals preferred by the petitioners against the decision of the Regional Transport Authority rejecting their applications are still pending with the State Government. It is rather strange that though these second appeals were preferred by the petitioners long before their appeals against the order granting a permit to the B.E.S.T., the latter have been decided but the former have not been decided yet. It is, however, not necessary for us to make any directions regarding this as these appeals are not competent. We leave it open to the petitioners to make appropriate applications to this Court, if so advised, by February 23. If the petitioners move this Court within this time, we would consider the issue of further directions to the Regional Transport Authority. We quash the orders of the State Government, the Appellate Committee and also the Regional Transport Authority. The costs of these petitions will be borne by the respondents.

Order accordingly.

INCOME TAX REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice S. T. Desai.

P. H. DIVECHA v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY, BOMBAY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 4(3)(vii)—Manufacturing company agreeing to sell certain electrical goods only to firm doing business in electrical goods and firm undertaking not to deal in any competing business in such goods—Agreement determined by notice served by company and firm continuing its original business in electrical goods—Compensation paid by company to partners of firm for apprehended loss to firm by determination of agreement—Amount of such compensation received by partners, capital receipt or revenue receipt—Whether monopoly rights under agreement constitute asset of firm—Such amount whether exempted under s. 4(3)(vii).

Under an agreement a manufacturing company agreed to sell their electric lamps only through a partnership firm, which was doing business in electrical goods and as commission agents, in a specified territory and the firm in its turn undertook not to sell the lamps sold to it to any one outside the territory nor to deal in any competing business in electric lamps. This agreement was determined by notice served by the company on the firm. The firm continued to carry on its original business in electric goods including electric lamps and could sell the company's lamps as regular lamp dealers. The company "as a gesture of goodwill" offered to compensate for the loss which it was apprehended would be caused to the firm by agreeing to pay a certain amount per annum to each of the partners for a period of three years and this compensation was expressly designated "three years remuneration". On the questions whether the amount so received by each of the partners was a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and if so, whether it was liable to be not included in the total income of the recipient by reason of s. 4(3)(vii) of the Act:—

Held, that as the monopoly rights under the agreement did not constitute an asset, the extinction of those rights did not affect the conduct of the business of the firm and, therefore, the compensation paid for extinguishing the rights cannot be regarded as a capital asset, and the receipt of the amount was a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Act, and arguments have been advanced before us by Mr. Palkhivala for the assessee in support of the plea that the amounts received by the assessee were capital receipts and not liable to tax and he has invited our attention to several decisions of the Supreme Court as well as of other Courts. Before we refer to the arguments advanced at the Bar, we may set out the facts which give rise to this Reference.

Prior to the year 1938, three persons, Jehangir A. Irani, Pirojsha H. Divecha and Khurshed A. Irani were conducting in partnership a business in "electrical goods" and as commission agents and merchants in the name and style of "Precious Electric Co." The duration of the partnership was initially limited to a certain period but was from time to time renewed. Jehangir A. Irani died on August 22, 1942, and in his place his son Noshir J. Irani was admitted to the partnership. In June 1938, the three partners of Precious Electric Co. entered into an agreement with Philips Electrical Co. (India) Ltd. (which will hereafter be referred to as "Philips"). Under that agreement, the Precious Electric Co. (which will be hereafter referred to as "the firm") was given the monopoly rights to sell electric lamps manufactured by Philips in the Bombay Presidency, Rajputana, Central India, Central Provinces and the Berars. By cl. 2 of the agreement, Philips undertook to deliver lamps of their manufacture, for sale in that territory exclusively to the firm. If any buyer refused to purchase lamps from the firm, Philips had the right to supply such buyers directly allowing compensation to the firm at the rate of 5 per cent. on the net amount of invoice. By cl. 3, the firm undertook only to sell lamps as were supplied to them by Philips and to sell the lamps supplied to them only in that territory and to do "everything possible to prevent their re-exportation by third parties". By cl. 7, the firm undertook to promote the sales of lamps in the territory always according to the directions given by Philips and in no way whatever to act against their interests and not to sell during the continuance of the agreement either directly or indirectly lamps other than Philips lamps and to refrain from doing any business, "either directly or indirectly", in articles competing with Philips articles and "not to support and/or to participate in, either directly or indirectly, competing firms in any way". By cl. 4, the firm undertook in reselling lamps purchased from Philips, not to deviate under any circumstances, either directly or indirectly from the prices, rebates, selling terms and/or conditions as established by Philips. By cl. 6 right was reserved to Philips to refuse orders and/or cancel or to suspend deliveries for any reason whatsoever and in case of such cancellation, cessation or suspension of deliveries the firm was not to receive any compensation. By cl. 8, it was provided that the firm was to buy and sell Philips lamps on their own account and at their own risk and that the lamps were to be purchased by the firm at prices and on conditions which from time to time may be communicated to them by Philips. Authority was reserved to Philips to refuse delivery or to cancel orders in the event of the firm being in arrears. By cl. 12, the agreement was deemed to have come in force from July 1, 1938, and was to "continue unless determined by either party giving to the other 3 months' prior notice...of such party's intention to determine the agreement on the 30th of June, 1939 or any subsequent 30th of June".

Under this agreement, till August 21, 1942, the three original partners carried on the business of the firm. After the death of Jehangir A. Irani, his son Noshir was admitted as a partner in the firm. Early in the year 1954, Philips decided to reorganise its selling organisation in India and to open a branch in Bombay with a view to taking over the distribution of lamps. On March 8, 1954, Philips served a notice upon the firm terminating the agreement of June 28, 1938, as from June 30, 1954. By that notice, the firm was informed that it was intended to terminate the agreement as from June 30, 1954, and that the notice shall be considered as the official notice of termination of the existing agreement in accordance with cl. 12 thereof, and that it was intended to substitute a new agreement to be called the "New Lamp Agreement" a draft whereof was appended to the letter. After this notice was received by the firm, meetings were held on May 28, 1954, and May 29, 1954, between their representatives and the representatives of Philips. It was agreed at the meetings that after June 28, 1954—the date on which the existing agreement expired—there will be no substitution of a new agreement about distribution of lamps and that with effect from that date, Philips Bombay branch will take over the distribution of lamps. There were negotiations then about the period of transition and certain terms were agreed upon, which are not material. Arrangement was also made about the disposal of the stocks held by the firm. The question of compensation was then discussed and the terms finally agreed upon were recorded as follows:

"Miscellaneous: As a gesture of goodwill, Messrs Philips are prepared to pay in quarterly instalments to each of the three partners during a period of three years, Rs. 40,000 per annum from the date of the expiry of the existing contract. The three partners referred to above as far as Messrs Philips Electrical Co. understand are:—

1. Mr. Phirojsha H. Divecha.
2. Mr. Khurshedji A. Irani.
3. Mr. Noshir J. Irani.

Finally, Mr. Van Rijn stated that Messrs Philips are quite willing to continue Messrs Precious as regular lamp dealers and the profit they realise therefrom will be in addition to the three years' remuneration referred to above."

The minutes of the meeting which recorded the terms of the settlement were signed on behalf of Philips and they were seen and approved on behalf of the firm.

In the account year 1954-55 each partner received Rs. 20,000 in two quarterly instalments under the terms of the settlement whereby the original agreement of the year 1938 was terminated. The Income-tax Officer brought to tax the amounts of Rs. 20,000 received by each of the three partners. Separate appeals were preferred by the three partners to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the order passed by the Income-tax Officer. The order of assessment was then taken in appeal at the instance of two partners—P. M. Divecha and K. A. Irani—to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. The Tribunal held that the amount of Rs. 20,000 received by each of the assesseees was taxable as revenue receipt. The Tribunal negatived the contention raised for the assesseees that the payment was compensation paid for termination of the agreement which constituted the "frame work of the company's business". They observed that the payment was not an ex gratia payment "by way of testimonial" and that it was unnecessary to express their opinion upon the question whether payments made to individual partners did not represent receipt in the course of the company's business.

In this Reference, the Tribunal have, at the instance of the assesseees, referred the following three questions:

(i) Whether the receipt of Rs. 20,000 is a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Indian Income-tax Act?

(ii) If so, is it liable to be not included in the total income of the recipient by reason of s. 4(3)(vi)?

(iii) Does the said receipt fall within the mischief of s. 10(5A)(d) and as such liable to tax accordingly?

The agreement of the year 1938 brought into existence what may loosely be called a right of monopoly purchase. Under this agreement, Philips undertook to sell to the firm (and to no other person) lamps for sale in the territory specified in the agreement and the firm in its turn undertook to advance the business of Philips in electric lamps and not to sell during the subsistence of the agreement either directly or indirectly any lamps other than Philips lamps and not to sell those lamps outside the territory assigned. The relation between Philips and the company was evidently of principal and principal and not of principal and agent. The substance of the agreement was that Philips agreed to sell their electric lamps only through the firm in the assigned territory and the firm in its turn undertook not to sell the lamps sold to them to any one outside the territory nor to deal in any competing business in electric lamps. This agreement was determined by notice served on March 8, 1954. Even before the date of the agreement, the partners of the firm were carrying on business in electric lamps and other electric goods, and that business was continued after the agreement, but the firm acquired their stock-in-trade under a special agreement on favourable terms which ruled out competition in respect of one of the lines of their business. In the territory assigned to the firm, by the termination of the agreement in the year 1954, the business of the firm was not destroyed. The firm continued to carry on its original business in electric goods including electric lamps, and even Philips lamps could be sold by the firm as "regular lamp dealers". In substance the alteration made by the agreement of May 29, 1954, was that the firm lost its rights as monopoly purchasers for the assigned territory and became regular dealers in lamps without any obligation not to deal in any other competing brand of lamps and "as a gesture of goodwill" Philips offered to compensate for the loss, which it was apprehended may be caused to the firm, by agreeing to pay them Rs. 40,000 per annum to each of the partners for a period of three years and this compensation was expressly designated "three years' remuneration".

It is urged by Mr. Palkhivala that this amount was in the nature of capital payment to the partners of the firm. It is urged that the monopoly rights conferred by the agreement of the year 1938 were, by the notice and the subsequent agreement of May 29, 1954, withdrawn. That is, by the notice the very source of the business of the firm was extinguished, the profit making apparatus of the firm was destroyed, their assets became sterilised, and any payment made, to compensate for the loss of the rights, must be regarded as capital payment. We are unable to agree with the contention raised by Mr. Palkhivala that, by the notice dated March 8, 1954, and the subsequent agreement between Philips and the firm on May 29, 1954, any attempt either to sterilise the assets of the firm or to destroy the profit making apparatus of the firm's business was intended. The firm's original business before the year 1938 was in electrical goods including electric lamps, and even after the agreement dated June 28, 1938, the same business was continued. There is also no doubt that after May 29, 1954, the same business and in the same line was carried on by the firm. Whereas under the agreement dated June 28, 1938, the firm was obtaining a part of its stock-in-trade on specially favourable terms which simultaneously ruled out competition in the territory assigned by the agreement, after May 29, 1954, the favourable terms on which the lamps were obtained ceased to be available to the firm and the firm without any obligation not to carry on any competing line of business in lamps became a regular lamp dealer. By such an arrangement, we are unable to hold that the "profit making apparatus" of the assessee's business was destroyed. We are of the view that by the agreement which created monopoly rights a specially favourable method of acquiring stock-in-trade of the firm was designed, and if that method was substituted by an agreement less favourable, thereby the compensation paid could not be regarded as a capital asset.

Mr. Palkhivala has strongly relied upon the judgment of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Commr. of Inc.-tax v. Vazir Sultan & Sons.¹ We have carefully considered the facts of that case and the observation made by their Lordships and we have no doubt that the principle of that case has no application to the facts of the present case. In that case, originally the assessee company was appointed the sole selling agent and sole distributor of a brand of cigarettes for the Hyderabad State and was allowed a discount of 2 per cent. on the gross selling price. In 1939 another arrangement was made between the assessee and the manufacturers whereby the assessee was allowed a discount of 2 per cent.

not only on the goods sold in the Hyderabad State but also on all goods sold outside the Hyderabad State. In 1950, the assessee and the company by mutual agreement reverted to the old arrangement in force prior to the year 1939 and the manufacturing company paid to the assessee a sum of Rs. 2,19,343 "by way of compensation" for the loss of agency for the territory outside the Hyderabad State. A question then arose whether the amount paid was a revenue receipt assessable to income-tax. In delivering his judgment Mr. Justice Bhagwati (with whom Mr. Justice Sinha agreed) held that the agency agreement in respect of the territory outside the Hyderabad State was as much an asset of the assessee's business as the agency business within the Hyderabad State and though the expansion of the territory of the agency in 1939 and the restriction thereof in 1950 could be treated as grant of additional territory in 1939 and withdrawal thereof in 1950, both those agency agreements constituted but one employment of the assessee as the sole selling agent of the manufacturers and, therefore, the agency agreements were not in the conduct of their business by the assessee but formed the capital assets of the assessee's business which was exploited by entering into contracts with various customers and dealers in the respective territories. In the view of their Lordships, it formed part of the fixed capital of the assessee's business and was not the circulating capital or stock-in-trade of their business and payment made by the company as and by way of compensation for terminating or cancelling the agreement was a capital receipt. With this view Mr. Justice Kapoor disagreed. It is pertinent to note that, in the majority view, the sole selling agents' rights before the year 1939 and after the year 1939 were an asset of the assessee, in the nature of a fixed capital of the assessee's business and for loss of a part thereof, the compensation received was a capital receipt. At p. 185 of the report, after considering cases cited at the bar, their Lordships observed:

"The position as it emerges on a consideration of these authorities may now be summarised. The first question to consider would be whether the agency agreement in question for cancellation of which the payment was received by the assessee was a capital asset of the assessee's business, constituted its profit-making apparatus and was in the nature of its fixed capital or was a trading asset or circulating capital or stock-in-trade of his business. If it was the former the payment received would be undoubtedly a capital receipt; if, however, the same was entered into by the assessee in the ordinary course of business and for the purpose of carrying on that business, it would fall into the latter category and the compensation or payment received for its cancellation would merely be an adjustment made in the ordinary course of business of the relation between the parties and would constitute a trading or a revenue receipt and not a capital receipt."

Applying the test set out, we have no doubt that on the facts of the present case the contract of the year 1938 between the firm and Philips and the modification thereof in the year 1954 were made in the ordinary course of business of the assessee as dealers in electric goods and for the purpose of carrying on their business; and compensation paid for withdrawing the benefits conferred by the agreement of the year 1938 constituted a trading or revenue receipt and not a capital receipt. In truth the benefit conferred upon the firm by the agreement of the year 1938 did not constitute a trading asset and the modification thereof did not extinguish the whole or a part of the trading assets. The initial contract was one in the ordinary course of business and the modification of the same was also in the ordinary course of business of the firm as dealers in electric goods. The circumstance that the contract of the year 1938 was one which enabled the firm to purchase its requirements of electric lamps on favourable terms does not, in our judgment, make that contract anyhow a contract made in the ordinary course of business nor does the modification of that contract amount to one otherwise than in the ordinary course of business.

We may refer to the cases cited at the Bar in which the Courts were called upon to ascertain whether a certain payment made was in truth a capital receipt or revenue receipt. We may at once observe that no definite tests of universal application can be evolved or have been attempted to be evolved nor any infallible criterion can be or has been laid down which can be helpful in indicating the considerations which may relevantly be borne in mind in approaching the problem. The cases, which we shall presently refer to, abundantly show that no criterion or test is of universal or general application.

In Bush, Beach & Gent, Ltd. v. Road (H. M. Inspector of Taxes),² the assessee was an incorporated company which carried on its business in industrial chemicals. In 1933 the assessee company entered into a contract for purchasing certain agricultural chemicals. The contract whereby the right to deal in agricultural chemicals was acquired conferred monopoly rights, i.e. the assessee was to sell the chemicals in certain specified areas and the suppliers undertook to debar their other customers from selling the same in those areas. For the purpose of these contracts, the assessee set up a new and independent sales organisation. Thereafter, the contract was terminated by agreement in the year 1935 and the assessee company received £4,750 out of which £3,000 were attributable to the year of assessment as compensation for termination of the agreement. It was held that the cancellation of the contract did not affect the structure of the company's business of chemical merchants and that the contract was made in the ordinary course of business and that the payment was made in consideration of the loss of profits which would have been earned under the contract. It was observed in that case that the sum paid to the assessee represented not the price of the contract itself, but profits which they might have made under the contract, and that the contract was made in the ordinary course of the company's business, although in a new field and the exclusion of competition was an ordinary incident of such contracts. The arrangement whereby the contract was terminated being in the ordinary course of the company's business, compensation paid as consideration for agreeing to that arrangement was revenue payment.

In John Smith & Son v. Moore (H. M. Inspector of Taxes),³ the question which fell to be determined was whether the amount paid for purchasing the rights from the executors of the assessee's father's will under certain unexpired "coal contracts" was an admissible deduction in computing the profits for the purpose of Excess Profits Tax and it was held by the House of Lords (Viscount Finlay L.J. dissenting) that the expenditure was a capital expenditure. In that case, the question was decided on the view that the contracts for purchasing coal were the assets of the estate of the deceased and the price paid for purchasing the unexpired contracts was capital expenditure. There is nothing in this judgment which supports the view that the contract of the year 1938 in this case between the firm and Philips could be regarded as an asset, the consideration for extinguishing which may make the consideration a capital receipt.

Our attention was also invited to Comr. I.T. v. Asiatic Textile Co., Ltd.,⁴ where to the assessee compensation was paid for termination of the managing agency agreement for a period of 20 years, and it was held by this Court that the amount received by the managing agents as solatium for the termination of the managing agency could not be profits arising out of their business but constituted only a capital receipt. But even in that case, the Court regarded the managing agency as an asset and the compensation paid for extinction of that asset a capital payment. Mr. Palkhivala placed great reliance upon the fact that beside being managing agents, the assessees were brokers, muddadams and selling agents of the company and by the termination of the managing agency agreement, their authority as brokers, muddadams and selling agents was not extinguished. We fail to see how that circumstance may alter the nature of the managing agency agreement. If the benefit of the managing agency was an asset, the circumstance that quoad the company, of which the assesseees were the managing agents, the assessee had certain other contractual rights which were not extinguished by the termination of the managing agency will not make the benefit under the managing agency anytheless an asset.

The case in H. S. Captain v. Commr. of Inc.-tax,⁵ on which reliance was also sought to be placed by Mr. Palkhivala has in our judgment no application. The question in that case which fell to be determined was whether an amount of money paid to the assessee for termination of his employment was covered by the terms of s. 7(1), Explanation 2, of the Income-tax Act and the Court held that the amount received by the assessee as compensation for loss of employment fell within Explanation 2 of s. 7(1) and was not, therefore, taxable.

Nor does the case of Van Den Berghs Limited v. Clark, (H. M. Inspector of Taxes),⁶ on which reliance was sought to be placed by Mr. Palkhivala, affect our conclusion. That was a case in which two companies, which were competitors, entered into an arrangement for a certain number of years for pooling and sharing profits under an elaborate scheme to promote their mutual commercial, pecuniary and other interests. One of the companies then agreed to a premature termination of the agreement as desired by the other company on receiving a sum of £450,000 as compensation: and it was held that this sum was a capital receipt and not income. The agreement far from being one made in the ordinary course of business provided a fundamental organization of the company's activities and affected the entire conduct of the assessee's business and, therefore, the receipt under the agreement terminating the arrangement was a capital receipt. If, however, we are of the view that the monopoly rights under the contract of the year 1938 do not constitute an asset, the extinction of those rights does not affect the conduct of the business of the assessee, or as it was called by Mr. Palkhivala, the "profit-making apparatus of the assessee's business" and if it is merely a contract entered into in the ordinary course of business, Van Den Bergh's case will have no application.

On the view taken by us, the first question will be answered as follows:

"The receipt of Rs. 20,000 is a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922."

As we have already held that the amount is a taxable receipt, being receipt arising from business, s. 4(3)(vi) does not exempt it from liability to tax. We are in the view we have taken not called upon to consider whether even if the receipt of Rs. 20,000 is a capital receipt, by operation of s. 10(5A)(d) the amount can be regarded as a revenue receipt. We answer the second question as follows:

It is liable to be included in the total income notwithstanding s. 4 because it arose from business.

The third question does not fall to be answered.

Bombay Money-lenders Act (Bom. XXXI of 1947), Sec. 24—Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, item 17(vii)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Secs. 2(2), 47, 104; O. XLIII, O. XX, rr. 12, 11(2)—Whether order under s. 24 of Bom. Act XXXI of 1947 appealable—Proper Court-fee leviable on memorandum of appeal from such order.

An order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act, 1946, granting or refusing to grant instalments for the payment of the amount decreed, is appealable as a decree. The proper Court-fee to be levied on a memorandum of appeal from such an order would be the Court-fee mentioned in Sch. II, item 17(vii), of the Court-fees Act, 1870, as amended in the Bombay State.

The subject-matter in dispute in such an appeal is not the amount of the decree, but the mode in which the amount is to be paid. As such, it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute.

TARKUNDE J. This reference has been made by the Taxing Officer under s. 5 of the Court-fees Act, and the learned Chief Justice has directed us to decide the question so raised. The question relates to the Court-fees chargeable on four appeals, each arising from an order passed under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act, 1946. In three of the four cases, applications filed by judgment-debtors under s. 24 of the Act for making the decretal amounts payable by instalments were rejected by the Courts below. In the fourth case, the application of the judgment-debtor was partially granted and the judgment-debtor has come in appeal on the ground that the relief granted to him was inadequate. The Taxing Officer was of the view that no appeal could be filed from a decision under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act and that the appellants in the four appeals may, if they so desired, convert the appeals into civil revision applications and that Court-fees may then be levied on that basis. The Taxing Officer, however, felt that the question involved was of general importance and hence he made this reference.

The question raised by the Taxing Officer is not free from difficulty. Section 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act, 1946, is in the following terms:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Court may, at any time, on application of a judgment-debtor, after notice to the decree-holder, direct that the amount of any decree passed against him, whether before or after the date on which this Act comes into force, in respect of a loan, shall be paid in such number of instalments and subject to such conditions, and payable on such dates, as, having regard to the circumstances of the judgment-debtor and the amount of the decree, it considers fit."

The Bombay Money-lenders Act does not provide any appeal from an order granting or rejecting an application under s. 24. If the order is one not amounting to a decree, it is obviously not appealable, as it is not covered by s. 104 and O. XLIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. An appeal from the order can be maintained only if the order is a "decree" as defined by s. 2(2) of the Code. That definition is in two parts. The first part defines "decree" as

"...the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final."

The second part of the definition includes in the term "decree" orders which may otherwise not be decrees. This part, so far as it is material, says that the term "decree" "shall be deemed to include...the determination of any question within section 47..." An order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act can be held to be a decree either if it determines a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree under s. 47 of the Code, or if it comes within the first part of the definition of the word "decree". On behalf of the appellants in the four appeals, Mr. Paranjape and Mr. Adik urged that an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act is a determination of a question within s. 47 of the Code and, alternatively, that it amounts to a decree according to the first part of the definition of that term.

We will deal first with the first of these alternative arguments. The Taxing Officer was of the view that a judgment-debtor seeking a direction under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act seeks in effect a partial modification of the decree passed against him, and that, therefore, an order passed by the Court either allowing or rejecting his application cannot be regarded as an order relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of that decree. This view of the Taxing Officer assumes what undoubtedly is the general rule, namely, that an executing Court will execute a decree as it is, without any modification or qualification. Nothing, however, prevents the Legislature from modifying or qualifying the rights of decree-holders in executing the decrees passed in their favour. If the Legislature passes an enactment which limits the decretal rights of a decree-holder, the executing Court is bound to execute the decree subject to the limitations so placed by the Legislature. The Legislature may prevent decrees from being executed against certain classes of property (e.g. s. 10, Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, 1874); it may provide that no process shall be issued against certain classes of judgment-debtors for a specified period (e.g. the Bombay Small Holders Relief Act, 1938). Instances of this type are not few. An executing Court is required to execute the decree in accordance with the prevailing law, and an order passed by the executing Court on whether the decree under execution is limited or otherwise qualified by a legislative enactment does not cease on that account to be an order under s. 47 of the Code. It was argued before us by Mr. Paranjape that an order which is passed by the Court under s. 24 is an order of this nature. The Legislature, according to him, provided a qualification to the rights of the decree-holder in the case of decrees passed on loans, and it is well within the function of the executing Court to decide whether the qualification imposed by the Legislature was available in favour of a particular judgment-debtor. We might have accepted this argument if s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act were merely declaratory of the rights of judgment-debtors in the execution of decrees to which that section applies. In that case it would have been the duty of an executing Court to consider the rights of the judgment-debtor so declared by the Legislature and to execute the decree accordingly. The wording of s. 24, however, shows that it is not merely declaratory. It empowers the Court to "direct that the amount of any decree...shall be paid in such number of instalments and subject to such conditions and payable on such dates, as...it considers fit."

Section 24 enables the Court to give a direction, and the direction so given may itself be executable. It must, therefore, follow that the Court, while exercising the powers under s. 24, does not merely act as an executing Court, does not merely consider the prevailing law as it applies to the execution of decrees already passed, but decides whether positive directions should be given in partial supersession of the terms of decrees previously passed. Such an order cannot, therefore, be regarded as a determination of a question within s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Turning next to the second alternative argument, an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act would be a decree according to the definition of the term "decree" in the first part of s. 2(2) of the Code, if it amounts to an adjudication of "the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit". The definition makes it clear that the adjudication need not be of all the matters in controversy in the suit in order that it may be a decree. Now, in a suit based on a "loan" as defined by the Bombay Money-lenders Act, one of the matters in controversy between the parties is the time before which and the manner in which the amount which may be found due to the plaintiff shall be paid by the defendant. An order under s. 24 is an adjudication which determines this matter in controversy between the parties to the suit. It is true that an application under s. 24 is necessarily filed after a decree in such a suit has already been passed by the Court, and as a rule the decree provides, expressly or by implication, the time within which the judgment-debtor must satisfy it. There is, however, no difficulty in treating an application subsequently filed by the judgment-debtor under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act as an application filed in the suit itself. This is because the finality of the original decree, in so far as the decree relates to the time of payment of the decretal amount, is qualified by the Legislature and made dependent on an order which may subsequently be passed by the Court under s. 24. In this connection, it would be legitimate to compare an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act with an order on an application of the decree-holder for ascertainment of mesne profits filed after the passing of a decree under O. XX, r. 12, of the Code. The application of the decree-holder in the latter case is regarded as an application in the suit, and the order of the Court awarding a specific amount of mesne profits to the decree-holder is deemed to be a decree and is appealable as such. The only substantial difference between such an order and an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act is that, whereas a direction for the ascertainment of mesne profits is contained in the very decree passed under O. XX, r. 12, a direction for determining the time of payment is given by the Legislature in s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act. We do not think that this difference can justify the view that an order under s. 24 is any-the-less a decree than an order awarding a specific amount of mesne profits made after a decree passed under O. XX, r. 12.

It may be added that, in our view, an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act is a decree even if it is an order rejecting the application, so that the order leaves the original decree unaffected. This is because, in our view, an application under s. 24 is not an application for the amendment of the original decree. The application seeks a fresh decision of the Court on the question whether the decretal amount should or should not be made payable by instalments and whether its payment should be subject to any conditions. Being a fresh decision on one of the matters in controversy in the suit, the order is appealable whether the application is rejected or allowed.

None of the cases cited before us deals directly with the question which we have to decide. In Zaverchand Panaji v. Mayadevi,¹ Bavdekar J. held that an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act can be made only by the Court which passed the decree and not by the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution. This decision does not necessarily support the conclusion, to which we have reached on other grounds, that such an order is not a determination of a question under s. 47 of the Code. This is because even in matters which clearly relate to the execution, discharge and satisfaction of a decree, some orders can be made only by the Court which passed the decree and not by a Court to which the decree is transferred for execution.

A similar decision was given by a Full Bench of the Nagpur High Court in Bilimoria v. Central Bank of India Ltd., Bombay.² That case arose under s. 11 of the Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, which is in pari materia with s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act. The Full Bench held that the word "Court" used in s. 11 of the Central Provinces Act refers to the Court which passed the decree, and not to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution. It may be noted that s. 11 of the said Act specifically provides that an order passed thereunder "shall be deemed to have been passed under s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

In Promode Nath Singha Ray v. Rasheswari Dasi,³ a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that an order under s. 36, sub-s. (6), of the Bengal Money-lenders Act, 1940, either granting or refusing a prayer for reopening a decree, does not come under s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is not appealable as such. It was unfortunately not possible for us to see the provisions of the Bengal Act, and particularly the wording of s. 36 thereof. It appears from the judgment in the above case, however, that s. 36 of the Bengal Act is materially different from s. 24 of the Bombay Act. Section 36 of the Bengal Act apparently provides for the formal reopening of a former decree and the passing of a new decree. The Division Bench held that, if an application under s. 36 of the Bengal Act results in the passing of a new decree, an appeal lies from the new decree, but that no appeal lies directly from the order passed on the application under s. 36. The judgment shows that the only argument which was advanced before the Court in favour of the appealability of an order under s. 36 was that the order determines a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree within s. 47 of the Code. The Court did not consider the question whether such an order determines the rights of the parties with regard to a matter in controversy in the suit itself and is a decree within the first part of the definition of that term in s. 2(2) of the Code.

The decision in Dhanukdhari Singh v. Ramratan Singh,⁴ proceeds on a different basis. The case arose under s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, which it appears empowers an executing Court to grant instalments for the payment of amounts previously decreed. A Division Bench of the Patna High Court held in that case that an order under s. 11 of the Bihar Act is not a decree within s. 47 read with s. 2(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is not, therefore, appealable. The learned Judges observed that every order passed in the course of execution proceedings is not necessarily a decree so as to be appealable, and that, in order to be a decree, it must in some way finally determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. The main judgment delivered in the case went on to say (p. 866):

"...The right of the decree-holder to be paid the decretal amount and the liability of the judgment-debtor are determined by the decree in the suit. The power conferred on the executing Court by section 11 of the Money-lenders Act is a discretion which the Court may exercise in derogation of the rights of the decree-holder to execute the whole of his decree immediately against the judgment-debtor. In deciding whether it shall or shall not exercise the discretion conferred upon it by this section the Court is not determining any question of the parties' rights, but merely whether an indulgence shall be shown to the judgment-debtor for the purpose of enabling him to meet the just demands of the decree-holder and at the same time avoid the forced sale of his own properties."

On this view, an order granting or refusing to grant instalments would not be appealable as a decree, because it would not be covered by either of the two parts of the definition of "decree" in s. 2(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. With great respect, we do not agree with the view which appears to be implicit in the passage quoted above, that a decision given by the Court in the exercise of its discretion does not amount to a final determination of the rights of the parties with regard to a matter in controversy in the suit. If the time within which the plaintiff's dues shall be paid by the defendant is one of the matters in controversy between the parties to the suit, the fact that the Court exercises a discretion in deciding that question will not prevent the decision from being a decree. In a suit for specific performance, for instance, the decision of the Court is given in the exercise of its discretion, but the decision is a decree nonetheless.

A reference may next be made to certain decisions relating to the appealability of orders passed under O. XX, r. 11(2), of the Code of Civil Procedure. Order XX, r. 11(2), provides that, after the passing of a money decree, the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit. Since an order under O. XX, r. 11(2), requires the consent of the decree-holder, it would normally be not appealable. The rule, however, was amended by the Rangoon and Nagpur High Courts so that an order thereunder could be passed after hearing the parties, but without the consent of the decree-holder. It will be noticed that O. XX, r. 11(2), so amended, is very similar to, though more restricted than, s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act. In Saya Hattie v. Ma Pwon Sa,⁵ a Judge of the Rangoon High Court, sitting singly, held that an order under the above amended provision was one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree and was, therefore, appealable as a decree. While we agree, with great respect, that such an order is a decree and is appealable, we do not think that it determines a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the original decree. The above decision was followed in several subsequent decisions of the Rangoon High Court. In Shree Jagruteshwar Deosthan v. Atmaram,⁶ Bose J., sitting singly, held that an order under the above amended provision, granting or refusing to grant instalments for the payment of the decretal amount, is appealable. The learned Judge observed (p. 457):

"...It seems to me that whether the order be regarded as one under section 47 or as a decree in itself because it affects the decree, it must be appealable."

With great respect, we agree with the second alternative mentioned in this observation.

We, therefore, hold that an order under s. 24 of the Bombay Money-lenders Act, granting or refusing to grant instalments for the payment of the amount decreed, is appealable as a decree. The proper Court-fee to be levied on a memorandum of appeal from such an order would be the Court-fee mentioned in Sch. II, item 17(vii), of the Court-fees Act, as amended in the Bombay State. The subject-matter in dispute in such an appeal is not the amount of the decree, but the mode in which the amount is to be paid. As such, it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute. A similar view on the Court-fee payable in such cases was taken in Sitabai v. R. S. B. R. Abhyankar.⁷

Our decision on the reference, therefore, is that the Court-fee to be charged on the memoranda of appeal in the four appeals will be Rs. 18-12-0 each, as provided in Sch. II, item 17(vii), of the Court-fees Act.

Answer accordingly.

v.

DIVISIONAL SUPERINTENDENT, CENTRAL RAILWAY, NAGPUR DIVISION, NAGPUR.*

Master and Servant—Dismissal from service—Contravention of express or implied conditions of service by servant whether justifies his dismissal—Types of misconduct illustrative of contravention of implied conditions of service—Indian Railway Establishment Code—Discipline and Appeal Rules (Non-Gazetted), Rr. 1702, 1706, 1726.

To justify dismissal of a servant by his master, the servant must contravene the express or implied conditions of his service, irrespective of the fact whether such contravention was during or outside the course of his employment. The following types of misconduct are illustrative of the contravention of the implied conditions of service, viz., (i) where the act or conduct of the servant is prejudicial or likely to be prejudicial to the interests of the master or to the reputation of the master; (ii) where the act or conduct of the servant is inconsistent or incompatible with the due or peaceful discharge of his duty to his master; (iii) where the act or conduct of a servant makes it unsafe for the employer to retain him in service; (iv) where the act or conduct of the servant is so grossly immoral that all reasonable men will say that the employee cannot be trusted; (v) where the act or conduct of the employee is such that the master cannot rely on the faithfulness of his employee; (vi) where the act or conduct of the employee is such as to open before him temptations for not discharging his duties properly; (vii) where the servant is abusive or if he disturbs the peace at the place of his employment; (viii) where the servant is insulting and insubordinate to such a degree as to be incompatible with the continuance of the relation of master and servant; (ix) where the servant is habitually negligent in respect of the duties for which he is engaged and (x) where the neglect of the servant, though isolated, tends to cause serious consequences.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

D. L. Jayawant and S. G. Kukdey, for the petitioners.

K. V. Tambey and W. K. Sheorey, for the respondent.

RAJU J. This is a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution by the three petitioners, who are non-gazetted employees of the Central Railway, for writs of mandamus, certiorari and other appropriate writs, orders or directions in the matter of disciplinary inquiries which are being held against them, by respondent who is the Divisional Superintendent of the Central Railway at Nagpur. Petitioner No. 1 is also the Honorary President of the Co-operative Society called the Central Railway Employees' Consumers Co-operative Society, Limited, Ajni, Nagpur, which will hereinafter be referred to as Society. Petitioner No. 2 is the Honorary Secretary of the Society. In the petition it is averred that petitioner No. 3 was a member of the Society and worked as a Treasurer only for 12 days from June 18, 1956, to June 30, 1956, when he was relieved of his charge as Treasurer by one Ramnarayan, that new office-bearers of the Society were elected on August 31, 1958, and that the new Committee of the Society sought the assistance of the respondent, namely, the Divisional Superintendent of the Central Railway at Nagpur, for getting proper accounts from the outgoing Committee of the Society on the allegation that the outgoing Committee had not handed over cash and accounts to the newly elected Committee. The Assistant Registrar of the Co-operative Societies also complained to the respondent that proper accounts of the Society were not forthcoming. The respondent thereupon ordered the suspension of petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 on February 27, 1958. Petitioner No. 3 was not suspended. Charges were framed against all the three petitioners by the respondent on November 2, 1958, November 8, 1958, and December 5, 1958 respectively. The charge against petitioner No. 1 was that while he was the President of the Society during the period from July 1, 1956 to August 31, 1958, he failed to discharge his duties and responsibilities as prescribed in the bye-laws of the Society, resulting in excess credits being granted to members and the non-recovery of credit dues from members; that he did not check the credit and proper posting of the cash book, stock book and other account books of the Society; that he did not hand over the cash balance as noted in the cash book, to the new Committee which took over charge on August 31, 1958, which was tantamount to embezzlement of the funds of the Society; and generally that the President contributed to the general mismanagement of the Society. The charge against petitioner No. 2 was almost in similar terms. The charge against petitioner No. 3 was that he committed serious misconduct while he was a Treasurer of the Society from July 1, 1956 to July 31, 1958; that he failed to discharge his duties and responsibilities as prescribed in the bye-laws of the Society; and that he did not hand over the cash balance to the new Committee which took over charge on August 31, 1958.

On these charges the respondent started disciplinary enquiry against the three petitioners, and intimated the petitioners that Officer's Enquiry would be held at Ajni on January 30, 1959. Petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 wrote to the respondent objecting to the legality of the proceedings. The respondent rejected these objections by a memorandum dated January 27, 1959. After the objections were rejected, the petitioners have approached the High Court for appropriate writs, challenging the order of suspension dated March 27, 1958, and the charge sheets filed against them on November 8, 1958, and December 5, 1958, as illegal on the grounds that the respondent had no jurisdiction to take any disciplinary action against the petitioners for any act or omission of theirs as members or office-bearers of the Society, that subsidiary rule No. 4, said to have been made under rule 1706 of the Discipline and Appeal Rules (Non-Gazetted) by the General Manager of the Central Railway, on the basis of which the disciplinary action is said to have been taken, had not been made or promulgated by the General Manager, that the action taken by the respondent was outside the scope of subsidiary r. 4 to 1706 of the Discipline and Appeal Rules, and that the subsidiary rule is further beyond the scope of the powers invested in the General Manager by r. 1726 of the Discipline and Appeal Rules. In the petition another ground was urged, that the power given to the General Manager by r. 1726, to make subsidiary rules, is an unlawful delegation of rule-making powers. But this point has not been urged before us by the learned counsel for the petitioners. On these grounds the petitioners pray for appropriate writs, orders and directions.

This is a case where the Central Railway wants to take disciplinary action against three of its servants for alleged serious misconduct. The Governor General has made rules under sub-s. (2) of s. 241 of the Government of India Act, 1935, which are to be found in the Indian Railway Establishment Code. These rules have continued to be in force after the Constitution of India by virtue of art. 313 of the Constitution. Rule 2 of Chapter XVII, which is numbered as 1702 in the Code, enumerates the penalties which may, for good and sufficient reasons, be imposed upon railway servants. The penalties enumerated include dismissal from service. Rule 6 in Chapter XVII, which is rule No. 1706 in the Code, enumerates the circumstances under which a railway servant is liable to be dismissed from service, and these circumstances are:—

- (i) Conviction by a criminal Court, or by a court martial, or
- (ii) serious misconduct, or
- (iii) neglect of duty resulting in, or likely to result in, loss to Government or to a Railway Administration, or danger to the lives of persons using the railway.

It is, therefore, within the competence of the Central Railway to institute a disciplinary proceeding against a railway servant if according to it any of these aforesaid circumstances existed. One of these circumstances is serious misconduct.

The main contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners is that misconduct outside the sphere of duties of railway servant can never amount to a serious misconduct, justifying disciplinary action against the servant under these rules. The learned counsel relies on Laws v. London Chronicle, Ltd.,¹ and *Laxminarayansingh v. Nagpur Corpn.*²

There can be serious misconduct on the part of a railway servant during working hours and during the course of his employment. But that does not necessarily mean that there can be no misconduct or serious misconduct outside the working hours or outside the course of his employment. The act or conduct of a servant may amount to misconduct—

- (i) if the act or conduct is prejudicial or likely to be prejudicial to the interests of the master or to the reputation of the master;
- (ii) if the act or conduct is inconsistent or incompatible with the due or peaceful discharge of his duty to his master;
- (iii) if the act or conduct of a servant makes it unsafe for the employer to retain him in service;
- (iv) if the act or conduct of the servant is so grossly immoral that all reasonable men will say that the employee cannot be trusted;
- (v) if the act or conduct of the employee is such that the master cannot rely on the faithfulness of his employee;
- (vi) if the act or conduct of the employee is such as to open before him temptations for not discharging his duties properly;
- (vii) if the servant is abusive or if he disturbs the peace at the place of his employment;
- (viii) if he is insulting and insubordinate to such a degree as to be incompatible with the continuance of the relation of master and servant;
- (ix) if the servant is habitually negligent in respect of the duties for which he is engaged;
- (x) if the neglect of the servant, though isolated, tends to cause serious consequences.

That such acts do amount to misconduct has been held in Pearce v. Foster.³ Vide also Halsbury's Laws of England, Third edn., Vol. 25, at pages 485 onwards. Vide also judgment of this Court in Madhosingh v. State of Bombay.⁴

The learned counsel for the petitioners however contends that these are not proper tests and that the proper test is that laid down in Laws v. London Chronicle, Ltd. According to the learned counsel, the test there laid down is that the misconduct must be inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service or such as to show that the servant has disregarded the essential conditions of the contract of service. No doubt the expression "whether the conduct complained of is such as to show the servant to have disregarded the essential conditions of the contract of service" is used in this case. This was a case of alleged act of disobedience on the part of an employee Miss Jean Maude who had been employed as an advertisement representative by a company. It was alleged that she left the conference room in defiance of the Manager's request to remain at the conference room, and it was held that wilful disobedience to the lawful and reasonable order of the master justifies summary dismissal. It was also held that the servant can be dismissed if he is habitually negligent in respect of his duties for which he was engaged, but that for a single instance of insolence in the case of a servant in such a position as that of a newspaper critic, dismissal was hardly justified. It was also observed in that case as follows (p. 287):—

“...since a contract of service is but an example of contracts in general, so that the general law of contract will be applicable, it follows that, if summary dismissal is claimed to be justifiable, the question must be whether the conduct complained of is such as to show the servant to have disregarded the essential conditions of the contract of service. It is, no doubt, therefore, generally true that wilful disobedience of an order will justify summary dismissal, since wilful disobedience of a lawful and reasonable order shows a disregard—a complete disregard—of a condition essential to the contract of service, namely, the condition that the servant must obey the proper order of the master and that, unless he does so, the relationship is, so to speak, struck at fundamentally.

In a passage which I have read from 25 HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (3rd Edn.), p. 485, para. 934, there is a statement ‘...there is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal’. That statement is derived from a passage in the judgment of the Privy Council delivered by LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD in Clouston & Co., Ltd. v. Corry,⁵ a case to which counsel for the plaintiff referred. I will read a rather larger passage which provides the context. LORD JAMES said (at p. 129):

Now the sufficiency of the justification depended upon the extent of misconduct. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal. Of course, there may be misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand, misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal.”

After referring to these cases it was held by the Court of Appeal that a single act of disobedience could justify dismissal only if it was such as to show that the servant was repudiating the contract of service or one of its essential conditions, as would an act of wilful disobedience: it was further held that the act of disobedience on the part of Miss Jean in leaving the conference room did not amount to such a wilful disobedience of an order, such a deliberate disregard of the conditions of service as justifying a summary dismissal. It is contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners that this case lays down the only correct test to be applied in regard to misconduct for which an employee can be dismissed by the employer.

No doubt in this case it is observed that if summary dismissal is claimed to be justifiable, the question must be whether the conduct complained of is such as to show the servant to have disregarded the essential conditions of the contract of service. But, in our opinion, there is no real distinction between this test and the ten illustrative types of misconduct enumerated earlier in this judgment as types of misconduct for which a servant can be dismissed. In Laws v. London Chronicle, Ltd. the test laid down is that the misconduct must be inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service in order to justify dismissal. The ten illustrative types of misconduct enumerated earlier are illustrations of implied conditions of service. The implied conditions of service would include conditions that the servant would be trustworthy, that his acts would justify the confidence of the employer, that the employee will not so act as to prejudice or damage the interests of the employer, that the employee would not act or conduct or behave himself in a way, inconsistent or incompatible with the faithful discharge of his duties to the employer, that he would not behave in an insulting or insubordinate manner, that he would not habitually be negligent, etc. These are all implied conditions of employment. In our opinion, the illustrative types of misconduct enumerated earlier are an application of the fundamental principle that to justify dismissal the servant must contravene the express or implied conditions of his service. The case Laws v. London Chronicle, Ltd., however, related to an employee who disobeyed the orders of her employer and the test enunciated in that case related to the case of disobedience by an employee of the orders of her employer.

In Tomlinson v. L.M.S. Ry. Co.,⁸ which was a case where the servant created a disturbance at a canteen committee for setting up a canteen for the use of Railway workers, it was held that conduct which is calculated completely to make impossible the working of the machinery that the railway company was endeavouring to set up for the benefit of the workers and indirectly for the benefit of the company itself, might amount to serious misconduct even if it happened outside the working hours.

In support of his contention that the petitioners joined the Railway before the Society was formed and that, therefore, their duties to the Society are additional duties, learned counsel for the petitioners relied on Lazminarayan-singh v. Nagpur Corpn. where it was observed as follows:—

"It is one of the implied stipulations of a contract of service that the employer will not, by any act of commission or omission, add or suffer to be added to the employment new conditions involving obligations, dangers or inconveniences which were not incident to it and were not within the contemplation of the employee when he was engaged.

Normally, a change of duty may be possible without the consent of the employee if it does not entail any of the above consequences. But where they do, they can only be changed with the concurrence of the employee.

In every case, it will be a question of fact whether such a change of duty is derogatory, inconvenient, dangerous etc...."

But the case is distinguishable because there the employee was asked to do additional duties. Every employee is always expected to be faithful in the discharge of his duties and to justify the trust reposed in him by his employer. Every employee is expected to behave himself so as not to damage or prejudice the interest or reputation of his master, whatever be the sphere of activities of the employee. These principles will be applicable to every employee right from the beginning of his employment up to the termination of his employment. They are not additional duties. The case relied on by the learned counsel for the petitioners does not, therefore, come to his assistance.

As regards the contention that the General Manager of the Central Railway has not framed subsidiary r. No. 4, the learned counsel for the respondent has produced the Central Railway Weekly Gazette dated November 5, 1956, to show that the General Manager has himself framed the subsidiary r. No. 4. We, therefore, reject the contention that the General Manager of the Central Railway has not framed subsidiary r. No. 4.

Rule 1726 provides that the General Manager may, in respect of non-gazetted railway servants employed under his administrative control, make subsidiary rules not inconsistent with the rules in this section for the purpose of giving effect to them. Subsidiary r. 4 reads as follows:—

"Appropriate disciplinary action can be taken by the Administration against railway servants found guilty of charges of misappropriation and other irregularities amounting to serious misconduct in the discharge of their duties in connection with the affairs of institutions like Rly. Co-operative Societies, Rly. Institutes, Clubs and other similar bodies which are established and run by railway servants."

But it is not necessary to further discuss the effect and scope of subsidiary r. 4 or the question whether subsidiary r. 4 is beyond the scope of the powers vested in the General Manager by r. 1726, because r. 1706 itself provides that disciplinary action can be taken against a railway servant for serious misconduct. Rule 1706 is framed by the Governor General, and if serious misconduct is proved, disciplinary action can be taken under r. 1706 irrespective of the provisions of subsidiary r. 4 framed by the General Manager. The subsidiary r. No. 4 does not add anything to the powers of the railway authorities given by the rules framed by the Governor-General, and its purpose must be only to give effect to the main rules.

It is also contended that under subsidiary r. 4 to r. 1706 disciplinary action can be taken against a person who is found guilty of misconduct, and that the expression "found guilty of misconduct" amounts to "found guilty by competent and independent authority, independent of the Railway". Subsidiary r. 4 does not and cannot either abridge or enlarge the scope of r. 1706, under which disciplinary action can be taken for serious misconduct on the part of a railway servant. The real question for determination is, therefore, whether it can be said that the charges framed against the petitioners can be said to amount to misconduct within the meaning of r. 1706. In law even acts done by a servant outside working hours and outside the course of the employment may amount to misconduct justifying dismissal. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal.

The question, therefore, is whether the alleged conduct of the three petitioners amounts to such serious misconduct. That question can be decided only after all the facts are brought on record. At this stage the enquiry has just commenced and all the necessary facts are not yet brought on record. It would be open to the employees (petitioners) at the time of the enquiry to show that there are facts to justify the inference that the alleged misconduct will not amount to serious misconduct within law. That would depend on the relations between the Co-operative Society and the Central Railway, the actual misconduct alleged and proved, and its gravity. Whether the conduct is such as to be prejudicial to the interest of the Central Railway depends on the proof or disproof of certain facts, such as the nature and degree of the interest of the Central Railway in the Society. At this stage, therefore, we are not prepared to hold that in this case facts have been proved to hold that the misconduct alleged against petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 does not amount to serious misconduct.

The petition filed by petitioners No. 1 and 2 will, therefore, have to be rejected. As regards petitioner No. 3, it is averred in the petition that he acted as a Treasurer of the Society only for 12 days from June 18, 1956, to June 30, 1956, and that he was relieved of his duties as Treasurer from July 1, 1956. But the charge sheet against him refers to alleged mismanagement during the period from July 1, 1956, to August 31, 1958, in his capacity as a Treasurer. If really petitioner No. 3 was not acting as a Treasurer during any part of this period, the Railway would not be justified in framing charges against him for conduct as a Treasurer during this period. The averment in the petition has not been controverted in the return made by the respondent which is silent on the point whether petitioner No. 3 acted as a Treasurer of the Society only from June 18, 1956, to June 30, 1956. The learned counsel for the respondent has, however, agreed to state within a week whether the averment in the petition regarding petitioner No. 3 is correct or not. If the averment is not challenged and is undisputed, then the petition of petitioner No. 3 will have to be allowed. We will, therefore, decide this point after a week. The petition of petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 is dismissed with costs.

August 7, 1959.

To day an affidavit has been filed on behalf of the Central Railway, denying the allegation of petitioner No. 3 that he was a Treasurer for only 12 days from June 18, 1956, to June 30, 1956, and also denying the allegation that petitioner No. 3 was relieved of his office as Treasurer on July 1, 1956. As these alleged facts are denied, it is not possible for us to hold that petitioner No. 3 was a Treasurer only for 12 days from June 18, 1956, to June 30, 1956, and that the Central Railway was not justified in framing a charge against him for the period July 1, 1956, to August 31, 1958. The fact whether he was a Treasurer only for 12 days and not during any part of the period which is the subject-matter of the charge against him, will have to be decided in the first instance at the Disciplinary Enquiry. As the main fact on which the petition of petitioner No. 3 is founded, has not been proved or admitted, his petition also will have to be rejected. It is dismissed with costs. It is of course open to petitioner No. 3 to prove these facts at the Enquiry which is being held against him.

Petition dismissed.

SUPREME COURT.

Present: The Hon'ble Mr. S. R. Das, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Bhagwati and Mr. Justice M. Hidayatullah.

MESSRS. GODREJ AND CO. v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY CITY.*

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—Payment made by managed company to managing agent of company for deterioration of the managing agency as a profit making apparatus—Character of such payment—Whether a revenue or capital receipt—Company agreeing to pay to its managing agent, appointed for certain period, commission at certain rate on its annual profits—Subsequent agreement between company and managing agent whereby rate of commission reduced for remaining term of managing agency—Compensation paid by company to managing agent for releasing company from onerous term as to remuneration in previous agreement—Whether such amount of compensation paid by company and received by managing agents a revenue or a capital receipt.

The assessee firm was appointed the managing agent of a company for a period of thirty years from November 9, 1933, and the company agreed to pay to the firm a commission during every year at the rate of twenty per cent. on the net profits of the company. Thereafter a supplementary agreement was made between the firm and the company whereby the remuneration of the firm from September 1, 1946, was reduced to ten per cent. of the net annual profits of the company and in consideration the company agreed to pay Rs. 7,50,000 as compensation, for the remaining term of the managing agency, "for releasing the company from the onerous term as to remuneration contained" in the previous agreement. The sum of Rs. 7,50,000 paid by the company and received by the firm was, for the relevant assessment year, treated by the Income-tax Officer as a revenue receipt in the hands of the firm and taxed as such. On the question whether this sum was a revenue receipt liable to tax:—

Held, that the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 was paid and received not to make up the difference between the higher remuneration and the reduced remuneration but was in reality paid and received as compensation for releasing the company from the onerous terms as to remuneration as it was in terms expressed to be,

that so far as the company was concerned, it was paid for securing immunity from the liability to pay higher remuneration to the firm for the rest of the term of the managing agency and, therefore, a capital expenditure and so far as the firm was concerned, it was received as compensation for the deterioration or injury to the managing agency by reason of the release of its rights to get higher remuneration and, therefore, a capital receipt, and that, therefore, the sum was not a revenue receipt liable to tax.

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India, with K. N. Rajagopal Sastri and D. Gupta, for the respondent.

DAS C.J. This is an appeal from the judgment and order of the High Court of Bombay delivered on September 11, 1953, on a reference made by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal under s. 66(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, whereby the High Court answered the referred question in the affirmative and directed the appellant to pay the costs of the respondent.

The appellant, which is a registered firm and is hereinafter referred to as "the assessee firm", was appointed the managing agent of Godrej Soaps Limited (hereinafter called the "managed company"). It has been working as such managing agent since October 1928 upon the terms and conditions recorded originally in an agreement dated October 28, 1928, which was subsequently substituted by another agreement dated December 8, 1933 (hereinafter referred to as "the Principal Agreement"). Under the Principal Agreement the assessee firm was appointed Managing Agent for a period of thirty years from November 9, 1933. Clause 2 of that Agreement provided as follows:—

"The company shall during the subsistence of this agreement pay to the said firm and the said firm shall receive from the company the following remuneration, that is to say:

(a) A commission during every year at the rate of twenty per cent. on the net profits of the said company after providing for interest on loans, advances and debentures (if any), working expenses, repairs, outgoings and depreciation but without any deduction being made for income-tax and super-tax and for expenditure on capital account or on account of any sum which may be set aside in each year out of profits as reserve fund.

(b) In case such net profits of the company after providing for interest on loans, advances and debentures (if any), working expenses, depreciation, repairs and outgoings and after deduction therefrom the commission provided for by sub-clause (a) shall during any year exceed a sum of rupees one lac the amount of such excess over rupees one lac up to a limit of rupees twenty-four thousand.

(c) In case such net profits of the company after providing for interest on loans, advances and debentures (if any), working expenses, depreciation, repairs and outgoings and after also deducting therefrom the commission provided for by sub-clause (a) shall during any year exceed a sum of rupees one lac and twenty four thousand one half of such excess over rupees one lac and twenty-four thousand shall be paid to the firm and the other half to the shareholders."

Some of the shareholders and directors of the managed company felt that the scale of remuneration paid to the assessee firm under cl. (2) of the Principal Agreement was extraordinarily excessive and unusual and should be modified. Accordingly negotiations were started for a reduction of the remuneration and, after some discussion, the assessee firm and the managed company arrived at certain agreed modifications which were eventually recorded in a special resolution passed at the extraordinary general meeting of the managed company held on October 22, 1946. That resolution was in the following terms:—

"Resolved that the agreement arrived at between the managing agents on the one hand and the directors of your company on the other hand, that the managing agents, in consideration of the company paying Rs. 7,50,000 as compensation, for releasing the company from the onerous term as to remuneration contained in the present managing agency agreement should accept as remuneration for the remaining term of their managing agency ten per cent. of the net annual profits of the company as defined in s. 87C, sub-s. (3) of the Indian Companies Act in lieu of the higher remuneration to which they are now entitled under the provisions of the existing managing agency agreement be and the same is hereby approved and confirmed.

Resolved that the company and the managing agents do execute the necessary document modifying the terms of the original managing agency agreement in accordance with the above agreement arrived at between them. Such document be prepared by the company's solicitors and approved by the managing agents and the directors shall carry the same into effect with or without modification as they shall think fit."

The agreed modifications were thereafter embodied in a Supplementary Agreement made between the assessee firm and the managed company on March 24, 1948. After reciting the appointment of the assessee firm as the Managing Agent upon terms contained in the Principal Agreement and further reciting the agreement arrived at between the parties and the resolution referred to above, it was agreed and declared as follows:

"1. That the remuneration of the managing agents as from the 1st day of September, 1946 shall be ten per cent. of the net annual profits of the company as defined in s. 87C, sub-s. (3) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, in lieu of the higher remuneration as provided in the above recited cl. (2) of the Principal Agreement.

2. Subject only to the variations herein contained and such other alterations as may be necessary to make the Principal Agreement consistent with these presents the principal agreement shall remain in full force and effect and shall be read and construed and be enforceable as if the terms of these presents were inserted therein by way of substitution."

The sum of Rs. 7,50,000 was paid by the managed company and received by the assessee firm in the calendar year 1947 which was the accounting year for the assessment year 1948-49.

In the course of the assessment proceedings for the assessment year 1948-49, it was contended by the departmental representative, (i) that though the payment of Rs. 7,50,000 had been described as compensation, the real object and consideration for the payment was the reduction of remuneration, (ii) that that being the character of payment, it was a lump sum payment in consideration of the variation of the terms of employment and was, therefore, not a capital receipt but was a revenue receipt, and (iii) that there was, in fact, no break in service and the payment was made in course of the continuation of the service and, therefore, represented a revenue receipt of the managing agency business of the assessee firm. The assessee firm, on the other hand, maintained that the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 was a payment made by the managed company to the assessee firm wholly in discharge of its contingent liability to pay the higher remuneration and in order to discharge itself of an onerous contingent obligation to pay higher remuneration and it was, therefore, a capital expenditure incurred by the managed company and a capital receipt obtained by the assessee firm and was as such not liable to tax.

The Income-tax Officer treated the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 as a revenue receipt in the hands of the assessee firm and taxed it as such. On appeal this decision was confirmed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and thereafter, on further appeal, was upheld by the Tribunal by its order dated July 23, 1952. At the instance of the assessee-firm the Tribunal, under s. 66(1) of the Act, made a reference to the High Court raising the following question of law:—

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 is a revenue receipt liable to tax."

The said reference was heard by the High Court, and by its judgment, pronounced on September 11, 1953, the High Court answered the referred question in the affirmative and directed the assessee firm to pay the costs of the reference. The High Court, however, gave to the assessee firm a certificate of fitness for appeal to this Court and that is how the appeal has come before us.

As has been said by this Court in *The Commissioner of Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax, Madras v. The South India Pictures Ltd., Karaikudi*¹,

"It is not always easy to decide whether a particular payment received by a person is his income or whether it is to be regarded as his capital receipt."

Eminent Judges have observed that "income" is a word of the broadest connotation and that it is difficult, and perhaps impossible, to define it by any precise general formula. Though in general the distinction between an income and a capital receipt is well recognised, cases do arise where the item lies on the borderline and the problem has to be solved on the particular facts of each case. No infallible criterion or test has been or can be laid down and the decided cases are only helpful in that they indicate the kind of consideration which may relevantly be borne in mind in approaching the problem. The character of payment received may vary according to the circumstances. Thus, the amount received as consideration for the sale of a plot of land may ordinarily be capital; but if the business of the recipient is to buy and sell lands, it may well be his income. It is, therefore, necessary to approach the problem keeping in view the particular facts and circumstances in which it has arisen.

There can be no doubt that by paying this sum of Rs. 7,50,000 the managed company has secured for itself a release from the obligation to pay a higher remuneration to the assessee firm for the rest of the period of managing agency covered by the Principal Agreement. Prima facie, this release from liability to pay a higher remuneration for over 17 years must be an advantage gained by the managed company for the benefit of its business and the immunity thus obtained by the managed company may well be regarded as the acquisition of an asset of enduring value by means of a capital outlay which will be a capital expenditure according to the test laid down by Viscount Cave, L.C. in *Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd.*² referred to in the judgment of this Court in *Assam Bengal Cement Co. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal*³. If the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 represented a capital expenditure incurred by the managed company, it should, according to learned counsel for the assessee firm, be a capital receipt in the hands of the assessee firm, for the intrinsic characteristics of capital sums and revenue items respectively are essentially the same for receipts as for expenditure. (See Simon's Income-tax, II edn., Vol. I, para. 44, p. 31). But, as pointed out by the learned author in that very paragraph, this cannot be an invariable proposition, for there is always the possibility of a particular sum changing its quality according as the circumstances of the payer or the recipient are in question. Accordingly the learned Attorney-General appearing for the respondent contends that we are not concerned in this appeal with the problem, whether, from the point of view of the managed company, the sum represented a capital expenditure or not but that we are called upon to determine whether this sum represented a capital receipt in the hands of the assessee firm.

In the Resolution adopted by the managed company as well as in the recitals set out in the Supplementary Agreement this sum has been stated to be a payment "as compensation for releasing the company from the onerous term as to remuneration contained" in the Principal Agreement. It is true, as said by the High Court and as reiterated by the learned Attorney-General, that the language used in the document is not decisive and the question has to be determined by a consideration of all the attending circumstances; nevertheless, the language cannot be ignored altogether but must be taken into consideration along with other relevant circumstances.

This sum of Rs. 7,50,000 has undoubtedly not been paid as compensation for the termination or cancellation of an ordinary business contract which is a part of the stock-in-trade of the assessee and cannot, therefore, be regarded as income, as the amounts received by the assessee in The Commissioner of Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax v. The South India Pictures Ltd. (supra) and in *Commr. of Inc.-tax v. Rai Bahadur Jairam Valji*⁴ had been held to be. Nor can this amount be said to have been paid as compensation for the cancellation or cessation of the managing agency of the assessee firm, for the managing agency continued and, therefore, the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in *The Commissioner of Income-tax v. Shaw Wallace and Co.*⁵ cannot be invoked. It is, however, urged that for the purpose of rendering the sum paid as compensation to be regarded as a capital receipt, it is not necessary that the entire managing agency should be acquired. If the amount was paid as the price for the sterilisation of even a part of a capital asset which is the framework or entire structure of the assessee's profit making apparatus, then the amount must also be regarded as a capital receipt, for, as said by Lord Wrenbury in *The Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue*⁶, "what is true of the whole must be equally true of part"—a principle which has been adopted by this Court in *The Commissioner of Income-tax, Hyderabad-Deccan v. Messrs Vazir Sultan and Sons*⁷. The learned Attorney-General, however, contends that this case is not governed by the decisions in Shaw Wallace's case (supra) or Messrs Vazir Sultan and Sons' case (supra) because in the present case there was no acquisition of the entire managing agency business or sterilisation of any part of the capital asset, and the business structure or the profit-making apparatus, namely, the managing agency, remains unaffected. There is no destruction or sterilisation of any part of the business structure. The amount in question was paid in consideration of the assessee firm agreeing to continue to serve as the managing agent on a reduced remuneration and, therefore, it bears the same character as that of remuneration and, therefore, a revenue receipt. We do not accept this contention. If this argument were correct, then, on a parity of reasoning, our decision in Messrs Vazir Sultan and Sons' case (supra) would have been different, for, there also the agency continued as before except that the territories were reduced to their original extent. In that case also the agent agreed to continue to serve with the extent of his field of activity limited to the State of Hyderabad only. To regard such an agreement as a mere variation in the terms of remuneration is only to take a superficial view of the matter and to ignore the effect of such variation on what has been called the profit making apparatus. A managing agency yielding a remuneration calculated at the rate of 20 per cent. of the profits is not the same thing as a managing agency yielding a remuneration calculated at 10 per cent. of the profits. There is a distinct deterioration in the character and quality of the managing agency viewed as a profit-making apparatus and this deterioration is of an enduring kind. The reduced remuneration having been separately provided, the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 must be regarded as having been paid as compensation for this injury to or deterioration of the managing agency just as the amounts paid in The Glenboig's case or Messrs Vazir Sultan's case (supra) were held to be. This case is also very nearly covered by the majority decision of the English House of Lords in *Hunter (H. M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Dewhurst*⁸. It is true that in the later English cases of *Prendergast (H. M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Cameron*⁹ and *Wales (H. M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Tilley*¹⁰, the decision in Hunter v. Dewhurst (supra) was distinguished as being of an exceptional and special nature but those later decisions turned on the words used in r. I of Sch. E to the English Act. Further, they were cases of continuation of personal service on reduced remuneration simpliciter and not of acquisition, wholly or in part, of any managing agency viewed as a profit-making apparatus and consequently the effect of the agreements in question under which the payment was made upon the profit-making apparatus did not come under consideration at all. On a construction of the agreements it was held that the payments made were simply remuneration paid in advance representing the difference between the higher rate of remuneration and the reduced remuneration and as such a revenue receipt. The question of the character of the payment made for compensation for the acquisition, wholly or in part, of any managing agency or injury to or deterioration of the managing agency as a profit-making apparatus is covered by our decisions hereinbefore referred to. In the light of those decisions the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 was paid and received not to make up the difference between the higher remuneration and the reduced remuneration but was in reality paid and received as compensation for releasing the company from the onerous terms as to remuneration as it was in terms expressed to be. In other words, so far as the managed company was concerned, it was paid for securing immunity from the liability to pay higher remuneration to the assessee firm for the rest of the term of the managing agency and, therefore, a capital expenditure and so far as the assessee firm was concerned, it was received as compensation for the deterioration or injury to the managing agency by reason of the release of its rights to get higher remuneration and, therefore, a capital receipt within the decisions of this Court in the earlier cases referred to above.

In the light of the above discussion it follows, therefore, that the answer to the referred question should be in the negative. The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the answer given by the High Court to the question is set aside and the question is answered in the negative. The appellant must get the costs of the reference in the High Court and in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Gokhale.

MADANLAL MULCHAND SONI v. SHAIKH MAHIBUB YAKUB.*

Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (Bom. XXVIII of 1947), Secs. 51-A, 56, 14, 15, 4—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), Sec. 15D—Plaintiff filing applications under s. 4 but not mentioning therein mortgages executed by him and mortgagees as his creditors—General notice issued under s. 14—Plaintiff thereafter filing civil suit under D.A.R. Act for accounts of mortgages and civil Court passing decree—B.A.D.R. Court holding plaintiff debtor and his debts below Rs. 15,000—Plaintiff's suit for declaration that decree passed by civil Court void and not binding on plaintiff—Whether decree without jurisdiction in view of ss. 51A & 56—Civil Court whether had jurisdiction to pass decree—General notice under s. 14(b) whether binding on creditors whose names and debts not included in application under s. 4—Whether such creditors' debts governed by s. 15(1).

The plaintiff filed applications under s. 4 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act for adjustment of his debts, and in these applications he did not mention certain mortgages created by him in favour of the defendants and that the defendants were his creditors. A general notice under s. 14 of the Act was ordered to be issued by the Court. Thereafter the plaintiff filed a civil suit against the defendants under reversing the decree passed by D. L. Bhojawanl, 3rd Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division, Ahmednagar, in Civil Suit No. 222 of 1954.

s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, for taking accounts of the mortgages, and the civil Court decreed that a certain amount was due to one of the defendants from the plaintiff. In the meantime the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court held that the plaintiff was a debtor and his debts were below Rs. 15,000. A final award was then passed but the award did not mention the debts of the defendants nor did it mention the defendants as creditors. The plaintiff filed a suit for a declaration that the mortgage debts of the defendants were extinguished and that the decree in the civil suit was void and not binding on the plaintiff. On the question whether the decree in the civil suit was without jurisdiction in view of s. 51-A and s. 56 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act:—

Held, that the issue of the notice under s. 14 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act did not bring the debts under the mortgage before the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court, as neither the names of the defendants-creditors nor their debts were mentioned in the plaintiff's applications and in the award made, and, therefore, it could not be said that the civil suit was in respect of any matter pending before the Court within s. 51-A of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act; but that, as the plaintiff was held to be a debtor and his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000, the mortgage transactions in suit would be governed by the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act and could not have been made the subject-matter of any proceedings under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and, therefore, the decree passed by the civil Court was without jurisdiction and did not bind the plaintiff.

Where the names of certain creditors and their debts are not mentioned in the application for adjustment of debts under s. 4 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, and a general notice is issued under s. 14(b) of the Act, then the general notice will be binding on the creditors whose names and debts are not included in the application, and their debts would be governed by s. 15(1) of the Act.

Lazman Babaji v. Akharam Sahebram' and *Keshav Ganashyam v. Waman Rangaji,*³ referred to.

ONE Shaikh Mahibub Yakub (plaintiff) mortgaged a house at Ahmednagar on August 2, 1944. That mortgage was with possession and was for a consideration of Rs. 3,000, and therein the plaintiff described himself as a trader. Sometime in 1945, the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1945, came to be applied to Ahmednagar Taluka, and though the plaintiff was himself a resident of Rahuri, he filed two applications to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Ahmednagar for adjustment of his debts. Though the mortgage of Madanlal (defendant No. 1) was shown, defendant No. 1 was not made a party to the applications. These applications were numbered as 4224 of 1945 and 4232 of 1945, and they were decided on April 4, 1949, and therein the plaintiff was held to be a debtor. It was common ground that the plaintiff was a resident of Rahuri, and on that basis, the lower Appellate Court was inclined to doubt whether the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Ahmednagar had jurisdiction to entertain those applications, and held that that Court entertained those applications because of the representation made by the plaintiff that he was a resident both of Rahuri and Ahmednagar.

On February 22, 1947, the plaintiff created a second mortgage on the same house in favour of one Hiralal who was the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 7, again describing himself as a trader. This mortgage was for a consideration of Rs. 5,000, and a part of the consideration was for satisfying the mortgage debt of defendant No. 1. On May 27, 1947, the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act of 1947 was applied to Rahuri Taluka, and under that Act, debtors were required to make applications under s. 4 for adjustment of their debts on or before July 31, 1947. The plaintiff filed two applications under this Act also to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Rahuri for adjustment of his debts, and in both these applications, neither the mortgage created in favour of defendant No. 1 nor the second mortgage created in favour of the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 7 was mentioned; nor were the defendants mentioned in these applications as the creditors of the plaintiff. These two applications were numbered as 528 of 1947 and 1390 of 1947. A general notice as contemplated under s. 14 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act was ordered to be issued by the Court under that Act, and it was ordered to be issued on September 8, 1947.

On May 26, 1950, the plaintiff filed Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 in the Court at Ahmednagar against the defendants under s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, for taking account of the mortgages. On February 26, 1952, the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Rahuri held, on the basis of the purahises given by the other creditors, that the plaintiff was a debtor and his debts were below Rs. 15,000. A final award came to be passed in these Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Applications on April 2, 1952. The suit filed by the plaintiff under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not got transferred by the plaintiff to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court, and it was allowed to proceed, and ultimately on July 30, 1952, the Court held in that Suit No. 691 of 1950 that Rs. 4,630 were due to defendant No. 1 from the plaintiff. No appeal was filed against that decision; nor did the plaintiff file any application for redemption on the basis of this finding. In 1953, defendants Nos. 2 to 7 filed Civil Suit No. 292 of 1953 to enforce the mortgage created in favour of their father on February 22, 1947. On April 21, 1954, the plaintiff filed the present suit being Suit No. 222 of 1954 for a declaration that the mortgage debts of the defendants were extinguished, and for a further declaration that the decree in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was void and not binding on the plaintiff. He further prayed for an injunction restraining the defendants from executing the decree or from recovering the rent of the suit house. Suit No. 292 of 1953 filed by defendants Nos. 2 to 7 resulted in an ex parte decree in their favour on August 23, 1954, but the same was set aside at the instance of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's suit was resisted by the defendants on the ground that the plaintiff was not a debtor, and as the defendants were not parties to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief proceedings, the finding that he was a debtor in those proceedings could not bind the defendants. They also pleaded that the plaintiff's plea was barred by res judicata by virtue of the decision in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950. They further contended that as they were not parties to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief proceedings, their debts were not extinguished. They also urged that the suit as filed by the plaintiff was not maintainable, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declarations and injunctions sought.

The trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not proved that he was a debtor under the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, and that his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000. It also came to the conclusion that the suit debt was not extinguished, and that the decree passed in Regular Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 in the Court at Ahmednagar was not void and illegal. It further held that the suit of the plaintiff was barred by constructive res judicata. On these findings, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff went in appeal, and the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was not void on the ground that the suit was got filed fraudulently through the machinations of the defendants as alleged by the plaintiff, but on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it and proceed with it by reason of s. 51-A of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act. The bar of s. 51-A was not in terms raised by the plaintiff in the trial Court but was raised for the first time in the lower Appellate Court. In view of this finding, the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the decision in Suit No. 691 of 1950 was not a bar to the present suit. It also held that the decision of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court that the plaintiff was a debtor and that his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000 was binding on the defendants. The Appellate Judge also found that in case he had jurisdiction to decide the question, he would have held that the plaintiff's debts exceeded Rs. 15,000. The Judge also gave a finding that in case he had jurisdiction to decide whether the plaintiff was a debtor, he would have held that the plaintiff did not prove that he was a debtor. As regards the defendants' plea that the plaintiff by his declaration, act or omission had intentionally caused or permitted the defendants to believe that the plaintiff was not a debtor, or that no application under s. 4 could be entertained in respect of the mortgage debts, as his debts exceeded Rs. 15,000, he negatived that contention. The defendants had raised a new plea in the lower Appellate Court, and that was that the plaintiff having asked merely a declaration and an injunction without praying for consequential relief of redemption, plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. It was, however, urged on behalf of the plaintiff that he should be given an opportunity to amend his plaint so as to convert the suit into one for redemption in case the Court came to the conclusion that the suit was not properly framed. The lower Court accepted the contention of the defendants that no declaration could be granted as prayed for by the plaintiff as he had failed to seek further consequential relief. It, however, allowed the plaintiff's request for being given an opportunity to amend the plaint. On these findings, the appeal was allowed by the Assistant Judge, Ahmednagar, the decree passed by the trial Court was set aside and the suit was remanded to the trial Court with a direction that it should give the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his plaint so as to convert the suit into one for redemption. It was against this order that the present Revision Application was filed by the defendants.

C. B. Dalvi, for M. A. Rane, for the applicants.

B. A. Jahagirdar, with S. M. Hussein, for the opponent.

GOKHALE J. [His Lordship after stating the facts of the case as above, proceeded.] Now the first point which arises in this revision application is whether the learned Judge's view, that the decree in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was a nullity in view of s. 51-A of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, is right. It has been already mentioned that this point about the bar of s. 51-A was not specifically urged on behalf of the plaintiff in the trial Court but was urged for the first time in the lower Appellate Court. Under s. 51-A of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, which will hereafter be referred to as the Act, in so far as it is material—

“...no civil Court shall entertain or proceed with any suit or proceeding in respect of—

(i) any matter pending before the Court under this Act, or

(ii) the validity of any procedure or the legality of any award, order or decision of the Board established under section 4 of the repealed Act, or of the Court, or

(iii) the recovery of any debt made payable under such award.”

Now the view which prevailed with the lower Appellate Court was that when the plaintiff filed Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, his two applications for adjustment of his debts were already pending in the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Rahuri. It is true that in those applications the mortgage-debts of the petitioners were not mentioned nor were they shown in those two applications as creditors. But since a general notice must be presumed to have been issued under s. 14 of the Act, the question between the petitioners and the plaintiff regarding their mortgage-debts though not directly involved in the applications must be deemed to be pending before the Court when Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was filed, and, therefore, the civil Court had jurisdiction neither to entertain that suit nor to proceed with it.

Now, Mr. Dalvi, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioners, contends that as the mortgage-debts of the petitioners were not mentioned in the applications filed in the Rahuri Court nor were the petitioners made parties to those applications, it could not be said that Suit No. 691 of 1950 was in respect of any matter pending before the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court. As against this, Mr. Jahagirdar, learned counsel appearing on behalf of the opponent, has urged that since a general notice was published under s. 14 of the Act, even though the names of the petitioners were not mentioned in the applications, law will presume that the dispute between the petitioners and the opponent regarding the mortgage-debts was a matter which was pending before the Court under the Act. In support of his argument, Mr. Jahagirdar relied on the ruling in *Keshav Ganashyam v. Waman Rangaji*¹ where it was held that:

"The expression 'all creditors' used in s. 14 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1947, is not limited to the class of creditors referred to in sub-cl. (a) of the section, but refers to all the creditors of the debtor. Therefore, an award made under the Act is not only an award between the debtor and such of the creditors as are mentioned in the application made under s. 4 of the Act or upon whom notice has been served under s. 14(a) of the Act, but it is also an award between the debtor and all his creditors, and the latter are bound by it."

Now, there is no dispute in this Court that a general notice was issued by the Rahuri Court under s. 14 of the Act, and Mr. Jahagirdar produced before me a certified copy of the order dated September 8, 1947, which shows that a general notice as contemplated under s. 14 to all creditors of the opponent was in fact issued. Admittedly, the Rahuri Court held that the opponent-plaintiff was a debtor, and his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000. On the basis of the ruling cited above, the decision of the Rahuri Court would undoubtedly be binding on the petitioners. But it is admitted that the final award does not mention the debts of the petitioners at all nor does it mention the petitioners as creditors. The question is whether the fact that a general notice is issued under s. 14 would create a bar in the way of the Ahmednagar Court in entertaining and proceeding with Suit No. 691 of 1950, which was filed by the opponent-plaintiff himself. Section 51-A of the Act ousts the jurisdiction of the civil Court in certain matters, and, in my judgment, it will have to be strictly construed. Two applications were filed by the opponent in the Rahuri Court for adjustment of his debts, and admittedly he did not make the petitioners parties to those applications nor mention in them the mortgage-debts due to the petitioners. He himself filed Suit No. 691 of 1950 under s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act. He, no doubt, alleged that the suit was got filed fraudulently by the petitioners, but that allegation of his has not been held established by the lower Appellate Court, and no arguments have been addressed to me on that point. It is true that the issue of a general notice under s. 14 would make the award passed in the Rahuri Court on April 2, 1952, binding on the petitioners in the sense that the petitioners would not be able to dispute that the opponent was a debtor and his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000. But, in my judgment, the issue of a general notice by itself would not bring the debts under the mortgages created in favour of the petitioners before the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court since neither the names of these creditors nor their debts were mentioned in the debtor's applications and in the awards that came to be subsequently made and it cannot, therefore, be said that Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was a suit in respect of any matter pending before the Court.

In support of his argument that s. 51-A of the Act ousted the jurisdiction of the civil Court, Mr. Jahagirdar has referred to two cases. In the case of Asaram Bapu Waghmode v. Bhanudas,² the facts were as follows: One Dhondiba, the father of three minor plaintiffs, had passed a possessory mortgage-deed of certain properties in favour of the defendants. Dhondiba then made an application to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court for adjustment of his debts showing the defendants as creditors. Subsequently, he passed a sale-deed in respect of the property in favour of the defendants. During the pendency of the Debt Adjustment Applications, the plaintiffs, through Dhondiba as their guardian, filed a suit inter alia for a declaration that the sale-deed passed by Dhondiba in favour of the defendants was void under s. 40 of the Act. The defendants contended that under s. 51-A of the Act, the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as the suit was filed in respect of a matter pending before the Court under the Act. It was held by Mr. Justice Vyas on these facts that the suit filed by the plaintiffs could be said to be in respect of matters pending before the Court established under the Act, and, therefore, the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under s. 51-A of the Act. This case is clearly distinguishable on facts. The property which was the subject-matter of the suit filed by the plaintiffs through their guardian Dhondiba was the same property that was involved in the application made by Dhondiba for adjustment of his debts under the Act.

The second case relied on by Mr. Jahagirdar is Allemeeya Dadu Sahab v. Hari.³ In that case the question involved was one of limitation and it arose in this way. The decree-holder had made an application under the Act for adjustment of his debts under a money-decree. On the date of the hearing of the application, the defendant was absent, and the Court held that defendant was not a debtor. An application was made by defendant to set aside the order passed in that case, but that application was dismissed. Thereafter plaintiff filed an application for execution, and the question was whether that application for execution was in time. Plaintiff contended that he was entitled to deduct the period occupied by the proceedings pending before the Debt Adjustment Court, when an ex parte order was passed, and also the time occupied during the determination of the application made by the defendant for setting aside the ex parte order, and it was held that he was entitled to exclude both these periods. As regards the period occupied for setting aside the ex parte order on the application of the defendant, that period was allowed to be excluded on the ground that the plaintiff could not have made an application for execution of the decree during that period by virtue of s. 51-A(i) of the Act. Here again, the decree that was sought to be executed by the plaintiff was the subject-matter of pending proceedings under the Act, and, therefore, s. 51-A was held to be applicable. The principle laid down in this case can have no application to the present case. The learned Judge's view that the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was a nullity by virtue of s. 51-A of the Act and was not binding on the plaintiff is, therefore, not correct.

But even though the bar of s. 51-A of the Act does not affect the petitioners, that by itself will not make the decree obtained by them in Suit No. 691 of 1950 binding on the opponent. As I have already indicated, there being a general notice issued to the creditors under s. 14(b) of the Act, the findings of the Debt Adjustment Court that plaintiff was a debtor and his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000 would be binding on the petitioners, and the mortgage transactions in favour of the petitioners would then be governed by the provisions of the Act, and it would not have been open to the petitioners to file a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. A reference has to be made in this connection to s. 56(1) of the Act which, in so far as it is material, provides as follows:—

"Notwithstanding the repeal of the Dekkhan 'Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, by the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1939, the first mentioned Act shall, in so far as it applies to transactions and proceedings to which this Act does not apply, be deemed to have been re-enacted with effect from the date of the coming into operation of this Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as the said date) and shall continue in force for a period of three years from the said date:—"

The effect of this section is that on the date of the coming into operation of the Act, the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, must be deemed to have been re-enacted and would be in force for a period of three years, but it will govern only those transactions and proceedings to which the Act does not apply. Once it is held that the opponent-plaintiff is a debtor and his debts do not exceed Rs. 15,000, then the mortgage transactions in suit would be governed by the Act and could not have been made the subject-matter of any proceedings under Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. In that view of the matter, it must be held that the decree passed by the civil Court in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 on July 30, 1952, was without jurisdiction and will not bind the opponent.

But then it is contended that the view of the learned Appellate Judge that the mortgage debts due to the petitioners were extinguished was not sound, and reliance is placed in this connection on s. 15(2) of the Act. Under s. 15(1), in so far as it is material, it is provided that every debt due from a debtor in respect of which a statement is not submitted to the Court by the creditor in compliance with the provisions of s. 14 shall be extinguished. In Lazman Babaji v. Akharam Sahebaram,⁴ it was held by a division bench of this Court that s. 15(1) of the Act applies in terms to 'every debt' and is not restricted to debts due to creditors, who are named in the application for adjustment of debts and are served with notice under s. 14 (a) of the Act. In the present case, admittedly the petitioners were not named in the applications for adjustment of debts filed by the opponent. But a general notice having been issued under s. 14(b), the debts of the petitioners also would be governed by the provisions of s. 15(1) of the Act. But then Mr. Dalvi contends that in the present case, it could not be said that he would be affected by the publication of the general notice under s. 14(b), because, according to him, the opponent was guilty of contravening some of the mandatory provisions of the Act. The applications for adjustment of debts in the Rahuri Court were filed under s. 4 of the Act. The application that has to be filed has to be in a prescribed form as mentioned in r. 4 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act Rules. The application has to be made in form No. 1 when it is filed by a debtor. Under s. 4(3) of the Act, "Notwithstanding anything contained in section 3 an application made under this section shall contain the amounts and particulars of all debts specified in that section due by the debtor."

Mr. Dalvi contends that though under s. 3 certain debts and liabilities of a debtor mentioned in that section are saved, all those debts and liabilities have to be mentioned by the debtor when he makes an application under that section. Paragraph 5 of Form No. 1, which is the form to be used by a debtor, also provides that the applicant has to declare that all debts which are due or which to his knowledge any person claims to be due from him, and all his properties have been included in the statements contained in the application. Mr. Dalvi's argument is that if s. 4 and r. 4 of the Act require a debtor to submit a statement of all the debts, and if the debtor deliberately suppresses some of his debts in making his application for adjustment of debts, then a general notice issued under s. 14(b) will not be binding on the creditor whose name and debts have not been included in the application. I am not impressed by this argument. It may be that the creditor in certain circumstances may be able to challenge the decision of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court on the ground of fraud, collusion or such other grounds, but merely because the names of certain creditors and their debts were not mentioned in the application for adjustment of debts by the debtor, I do not think, that it will in any way affect the validity of the general notice issued by the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court. By providing for the issue of a general notice under s. 14(b), the Legislature obviously intended that not only all those creditors, mentioned in the application who could not be served or were not served for some reason or other, but also other creditors, who were not mentioned in the application by the debtor, should get an opportunity to come before the Court and prove their debts. See Keshav Ganashyam v. Waman Bangaji.⁵ It has also to be mentioned that the present petitioners did not allege in the written statement that the proceedings before the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court were vitiated by any collusion between the plaintiff and the creditors mentioned in those applications.

But then Mr. Dalvi contends that assuming that the provisions of s. 15(1) apply to the debts of the petitioners, their claim against the debtor would be saved by s. 15(2) of the Act. Section 15(2) provides as follows:—

"Nothing in this section shall apply to any debt due from any person who has by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted his creditor to believe that he is not a debtor for the purposes of this Act or that no application under section 4 can be entertained in respect of any debt owed by such person to such creditor by reason of the provisions of section 11."

Now the learned Appellate Judge held that the claims of the petitioners were not saved under s. 15(2). Undoubtedly, evidence was given on behalf of the petitioners that certain representations were made by the opponent which induced them to believe that he was not a debtor. The lower Appellate Court has not accepted this evidence, and, in revision, I do not think that it would be open to me to re-appreciate that evidence. It is true that the applications were filed under the Act at Rahuri in February 1947, and the opponent himself filed Suit No. 691 of 1950 in the civil Court at Ahmednagar on May 26, 1950, under s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. But the filing of the suit would not amount to any misrepresentation, because the suit was filed long after the last date before which applications could be filed under the Act, and that date was July 31, 1947. Petitioner No. 1 is a pleader, and it is impossible to hold that there were any mis-representations on the part of the opponent which could have induced him to believe that the opponent was not a debtor. Besides, the preliminary issues in Application Nos. 528 of 1947 and 1390 of 1947 were decided on February 26, 1952, and the opponent was held to be a debtor and his debts were held not to exceed Rs. 15,000. The final awards came to be passed on April 2, 1952, and it seems that the awards were produced in Suit No. 691 of 1950. That is what is alleged in the plaint of the present suit, and that does not seem to have been disputed by the written statement filed by the petitioners.

Mr. Dalvi then contends that the suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act should have been got transferred to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court, because it was filed for the purpose of taking accounts, and if the opponent was a debtor and his debts did not exceed Rs. 15,000, then it was incumbent on the part of the civil Court to transfer the proceedings to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court, and it was the opponent whose duty it was to apply for transfer, and he having failed to do so, he cannot now take advantage of the provisions of s. 15(1) of the Act. In support of his argument, Mr. Dalvi relies on the ruling in Mohamad Sadik v. Hussein Miya.⁶ In this case a division bench of this Court held that:—

"The failure on the part of a debtor to make the necessary allegations under s. 19(1) of the Act, which would lead to the transfer of a suit or appeal to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act Court, must incur the penalty laid down in s. 15(2) of the Act and the penalty is that the debtor cannot contend that the debt which is the subject-matter of the suit or appeal is extinguished by reason of s. 15(1) of the Act."

That case again is distinguishable on facts. A partition decree was passed in that case on March 31, 1945, and defendant No. 1 filed an appeal. Ultimately the District Court, by its judgment dated October 18, 1947, modified the decree of the trial Court. Defendant No. 6 then filed two darkhastas, one against defendant No. 1 and the other against defendant No. 2, and the contention of those two defendants was that the judgment-debt was extinguished, and, therefore, a darkhast could not be presented in respect of that judgment-debt. The last date for making application for adjustment of debts in that case was July 31, 1947, that is to say, before the District Court decided the appeal. The proceedings in appeal in that case, therefore, could have been got transferred to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court if they had involved the questions referred to in s. 19(1) of the Act, but as the appeal did not involve any of these questions, the proceedings could not have been so transferred. It was in these circumstances that this Court held that the failure on the part of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to make the relevant allegations before the District Court must have led the creditor to believe that they were not debtors and that the District Court had jurisdiction to dispose of the case.

Now, in the present case, the suit, which was filed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, was filed on May 26, 1950, that is to say, long after the date before which applications to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court could have been filed. Besides, it does appear that the awards passed in the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief proceedings were placed on the record of the Civil Suit by the opponent. I do not think, therefore, that there was any failure on the part of the opponent which could bring into operation the penalty laid down in s. 15(2) of the Act, even assuming that the proceedings in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Suit could have been validly transferred to the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court. I am, therefore, of the view that the finding of the learned Appellate Judge that the petitioners are not entitled to the benefit of s. 15(2) must be upheld.

The trial Court held that the defence of the opponent was barred by the principle of constructive res judicata since the opponent did not contend in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 under the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act that the debts due to the petitioners were extinguished. Mr. Dalvi has fairly, and in my opinion rightly, conceded that in case I hold that the Court trying Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 had no jurisdiction to try the suit under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, that decree would be a nullity, and there would be no question of any constructive res judicata.

The last point that was urged is that the plaintiff brought the suit for certain declarations and an injunction, and he had not prayed for consequential relief of redemption and possession, and, therefore, the suit would be barred by the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. That contention was upheld by the lower Appellate Court, but it decided to give an opportunity to the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to convert the suit into one for redemption. Mr. Dalvi says that this decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous in the circumstances of this case. Now, once it is held that the debts due to the petitioners are extinguished by reason of the provisions of s. 15(1) of the Act, it would be open to the plaintiff to seek redemption and possession. It is true that he could have obtained the same relief through the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court if he had made the petitioners parties to the proceedings before that Court, but there was no adjudication of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court so far as the debts due to the petitioners are concerned, and if those debts are extinguished, the only right to which the plaintiff-opponent will be entitled will be the right of redemption and possession. In my judgment, the lower Appellate Court was right when it exercised its discretion in giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to convert the suit into one for redemption. Unfortunately, the lower Appellate Court instead of allowing the plaintiff to make the necessary application for amendment remanded the suit to the trial Court after setting aside its decree and directed the trial Court to give an opportunity to the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to convert the suit into one for redemption. In doing so, it has made the following curious remark:

"I am following this course not so much with a view to avoid multiplicity of proceedings but to give the defendants an opportunity to challenge the findings recorded by me in this appeal."

It is really difficult to appreciate the implications of this observation. As I have already stated, though both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion on the evidence that the plaintiff was not a debtor and that his debts exceeded Rs. 15,000, the lower Appellate Court held, and in my judgment rightly, that these questions could not be decided by the civil Court. The findings of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court that the plaintiff is a debtor and that his debts do not exceed Rs. 15,000 are binding on the petitioners. The further finding by the lower Appellate Court that the decree in Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 was without jurisdiction has been upheld by me though for a different reason. Another finding of the lower Appellate Court that the debts due to the petitioner are extinguished by virtue of the provisions of s. 15(1) and are not saved under s. 15(2) is also upheld by me. In my view, it would not be open to the petitioners to agitate these questions again in any proceedings subsequent to the amendment of the plaint if that amendment were allowed. Therefore the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the suit was not necessary at the present stage. The lower Appellate Court should have itself allowed the plaintiff to file an application for amendment of the plaint and should have given an opportunity to the defendants to raise their contentions against this amendment. In case, it was then found by the lower Appellate Court that it was necessary to remand the case to the trial Court, then it would have been open to the lower Appellate Court to do so at that stage.

The result is that subject to the findings of the Appellate Court, which have been confirmed by me, I set aside the order remanding the suit and send down the case to the Appellate Court to entertain the application, if any, to be filed by the plaintiff for converting the present suit into one for redemption after payment of the necessary Court-fees. In case the application is allowed and the suit is converted into one for redemption, an opportunity will be given to the present petitioners to amend their written-statement and to take such defences as may be open to them in the light of the present judgment. In case the lower Appellate Court finds thereafter that it is necessary to remand the suit to the trial Court, then it would be open to the Appellate Court to do so. Otherwise, it will dispose of the appeal in accordance with law.

As regards the costs, it is quite apparent that the opponent has been largely responsible for the present proceedings. He filed the applications for adjustment of the mortgage-debts in the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court at Ahmednagar though he was a resident of Rahuri. He filed fresh applications for adjustment of debts in the Court at Rahuri without impleading the present petitioners and without mentioning their mortgage debts. He was himself responsible for filing Civil Suit No. 691 of 1950 for accounts under s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturist's Relief Act, and in allowing it to proceed which resulted in a decree under which Rs. 4,630 were found due to petitioner No. 1. Though the awards of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court were filed in that suit, the attention of the civil Court was not drawn, it appears, to those awards. In 1952, petitioners Nos. 2 to 7 filed Civil Suit No. 292 of 1953 to enforce their second mortgage, and in that suit an ex parte decree was passed in their favour but it ultimately came to be set aside at the instance of the opponent and it was only in April 1954 that he filed the present suit. In my view the equities are wholly in favour of the present petitioners. Besides they are mortgagees. I, therefore, direct that the costs of the entire proceedings in the present suit and in the appeal below so far as well as the costs of this revision application will be borne by the respective contending parties.

Order accordingly.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE.

Before Mr. Justice Mudholkar and Mr. Justice Naik.

STATE v. M. M. PINTO.*

Factories Act (LXIII of 1948), Secs. 2(1), 2(k)(1), 2(m)(1), 7(1), 85—Partners of concern where manufacturing process going on working in such factory—Whether such persons workers within s. 2(1).

The factory inspector visited the premises of a saw mill where certain manufacturing process was going on with the aid of power and found thirty workers engaged in some job or other. The accused produced a register containing nineteen names in one place and nine additional names at another place. The factory inspector finding that all the thirty persons engaged in the factory were workers within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1948, lodged a complaint for the violation of s. 7(1) read with s. 92 of the Act and also of r. 4 of the Bombay Factories Rules, 1950. The accused contended that the mill was a partnership concern and the nineteen names mentioned in the register were the names of the partners, that the nine additional names appearing in it were the names of workers who were working on wages in the mill and that the remaining persons were partners of another concern which was situated on the same premises as the mill. It was contended for the prosecution that as the partners in the mill had engaged themselves in doing the work on the premises of the factory, they fell within the definition of the word 'worker' in s. 2(1) of the Act, and inasmuch as the number of such workers exceeded ten, the provisions of the Act were violated:—

Held, that the partners of the mill who were found working in the factory could not be considered as employees, because so far as they were concerned, there was neither any employer nor any contract of employment, and that, therefore, they were not workers within the meaning of s. 2(1) of the Act.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

NAIK J. This is an appeal by the State against the order of acquittal passed by the learned Presidency Magistrate, 6th Court, Mazagaon, Bombay. The material facts may, briefly, be stated as follows: On January 4, 1958, Factory Inspector Shinde visited the premises of a concern known as Western India Saw Mills situate at Reay Road, Bombay-10. His object was to inspect the factory under the Factories Act. He found that thirty workers were actually engaged in doing some job or the other on the premises of the factory. He also noticed that the manufacturing process of cutting, planing and shaping of wood was going on with the aid of power. The accused-respondent produced a register, exh. A, which contained 19 names in one place and additional nine names at another place. According to the Inspector, all the thirty persons, who were engaged in the factory were workers within the meaning of that word in the Factories Act, 1948. He, therefore, lodged a complaint in the learned Presidency Magistrate's Court, Mazagaon, Bombay, for the violation of the provisions of s. 7(1) read with s. 92 of the Factories Act, 1948, and also of r. 4 of the Bombay Factories Rules, 1950.

*Decided, August 14, 1959. Criminal Appeal No. 391 of 1959, against the order of acquittal passed by A. A. Shellim, Presidency Magistrate, 6th Court, Mazagaon, Bombay, in Case No. 180/S of 1958.

3 (1952) Criminal Revision Application No. 685 of 1952, with Criminal Revision Applications Nos. 686 and 687 of 1952, decided by Bavdekar J., on October 6, 1952 (Unrep.).

4 [1953] Nag. 67.

5 [1954] A.I.R. All. 44.

The defence of the respondent was simple. He contended that the Western India Saw Mills was a partnership concern and there were nineteen partners in this concern including himself. According to him, the nineteen names that are mentioned in exh. A are the names of the partners. He further stated that on the day in question eighteen persons were actually working. He asserted that, as a matter of fact, the nine names appearing in exh. A are the names of workers who were working on wages in the concern. He also explained that the remaining three persons, who are shown at serial Nos. 20, 25 and 30 in the register, exh. B, prepared by the Inspector, were partners of another concern known as Western India Joinery Works and that they had come there on the day in question, because some of the partners in the two concerns are common. He also pointed out that the premises for Western India Saw Mills, Western India Joinery Works and Western India Spray Painting and Polishing Works are the same.

The learned Presidency Magistrate accepted the contentions of the defence and acquitted the respondent. It is from that decision that the State has come up in appeal.

The respondent produced two partnership deeds in support of his contention that in all there were nineteen partners in the concern known as Western India Saw Mills and also in the other concern known as Western India Joinery Works. The defence has also examined two witnesses viz., Laxman Ramchandra, D.W. 2 and Ramchandra Hari, D.W. 3 in support of its contention that there were nineteen partners in the two concerns. Ramchandra Patil, D.W. 3, stated that, as a matter of fact, there were five such concerns including the Western India Saw Mills and the Western India Joinery Works and that he was looking after the work of attendance of the workers in all these concerns. He also asserted that he was one of the partners in these concerns. The trying Magistrate accepted the evidence of these two witnesses and also relied upon the terms of the two deeds of partnership and came to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, there were nineteen partners including the respondent in the concern known as Western India Saw Mills.

The learned Assistant Government Pleader frankly conceded that he is not in a position to assail this finding of fact arrived at by the learned Magistrate on the basis of oral and documentary evidence led before him. He, however, contended that even assuming that there were nineteen partners in the concern, still if these partners or any of them engage themselves in doing the work on the premises of the factory, then everyone of them could fall within the definition of the word "worker" given in s. 2(l) of the Act, and inasmuch as the number of such workers exceeded ten, the provisions of the Factories Act are obviously violated.

In order to appreciate this line of argument, it is necessary to refer to a few provisions of the Factories Act. Section 2(l) defines the word "worker" to mean

"a person employed, directly or through any agency, whether for wages or not, in any manufacturing process, or..."

The term "manufacturing process" has been defined in s. 2(k)(i) as any process for

"making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, packing, oiling, washing, cleaning, breaking up, demolishing or otherwise treating or adapting any article or substance with a view to its use, sale, transport, delivery or disposal, or..."

The definition of the word "factory" is contained in s. 2(m)(i) and it means any premises including the precincts thereof

"whereon ten or more workers are working, or were working on any day of the preceding twelve months, and in any part of which a manufacturing process is being carried on with the aid of power, or is ordinarily so carried on."

Clause (ii) of this sub-section is not relevant for our purpose in this case.

It is not disputed that manufacturing process with the aid of power was going on in the premises of the Saw Mills. The only point to be considered is whether the number of workers engaged in that process exceeded ten, and for this purpose we have to consider the meaning and scope of the definition of the word "worker" contained in s. 2(1) of the Act. The learned Assistant Government Pleader emphasised the expression "whether for wages or not" in sub-s. (1) and argued that the essence of the matter consisted in the fact that a person is actually engaged in the work and the purpose for which he is engaged in that work is entirely immaterial. The worker may receive wages or may even work free or he may have an interest in the factory proprietary or otherwise. In support of this argument, he drew our attention to the decision of a Division Bench of this Court reported in State v. Allisahab Kashim Tambohi.¹ That decision overruled the previous decision of Mr. Justice Bavdekar sitting as a single Judge in Ramnath Shankarlal Chandak v. State.² In the unreported case decided by Mr. Justice Bavdekar, the view taken was that the word "employment" presupposes the relationship of master and servant. This view did not find favour with the Division Bench in State v. Allisahab Kashim and it came to the conclusion that whether the relationship of master and servant prevailed or not, what is necessary is that the person is actually engaged in carrying on the manufacturing process in a particular factory. The following observations of Mr. Justice Vyas at p. 147 are apposite:

"...The definition of a worker in cl. (1) is clearly enacted in terms of a person who is 'employed in' and not in terms of a person who is employed by. Under the definition, it is immaterial how or by whom he is employed so long as he is actually employed in a manufacturing process."

The logical corollary of the above view is that there can be an employee without an employer and all that is necessary is that there should be some employment in the sense of engagement. There need not even be a contract of employment.

Mr. Justice Dixit, who also took the same view of the definition of the term "worker" as that taken by his colleague, Mr. Justice Vyas, however, emphasised the expression "for wages or not". The words "or not" have apparently been used with a view to include apprentices and honorary workers within the definition of the term "worker". Mr. Justice Dixit, however, took the view that the words "or not" suggest that the idea of relationship of master and servant is not of the essence of the matter. A similar view was taken by the Nagpur High Court in the The State v. Jiwabhai,³ giving a wider connotation to the word "employed" under s. 66(1)(b) of the Factories Act. The learned Judges observed that the word "employed" in their opinion, did not only connote employed on wages but also being occupied or engaged in some form of activity. On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court took a contrary view in State v. Shri Krishna Pd.,⁴ holding that there must be a relationship of master and servant before a person engaged in carrying on a particular process can be considered to be a worker.

The meaning and scope of the definition of the term "worker" contained in s. 2(1) of the Act came up for consideration before the Supreme Court in *Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P.*⁵ The Supreme Court held that the concept of employment involves three ingredients: (1) employer, (2) employee and (3) the contract of employment. The employer is one who employs, i.e., one who engages the services of other persons. The employee is one who works for another for hire. The employment is the contract of service between the employer and the employee whereunder the employee agrees to serve the employer subject to his control and supervision. It follows from the above that the term "employed" is a relative term and always has relation on the one hand to the employer and on the other to the contract of employment. In the course of the judgment of the Court which was delivered by Mr. Justice Subba Rao, emphasis was laid on the presence of the circumstance viz., whether the workers are amenable to the control and supervision of the manager or not. Mr. Justice Subba Rao pointed out that if it is found that the workers are carrying on the work under the management and supervision of the manager of the factory then it can be safely concluded that each of them is a worker within the meaning of that term in the Factories Act. The decision of the Supreme Court is directly on the point and is, therefore, binding on us. Although the decision in State v. Allisahab Kashim was not referred to before the Supreme Court, nor was it considered, still the former must be deemed to have been over-ruled, by necessary implication, inasmuch as the Nagpur decision, in which a similar view was taken, was expressly over-ruled.

The position, therefore, boils down to this that the eighteen persons who were found working in the factory on the date of inspection were not workers within the meaning of s. 2(1) of the Factories Act, although they were actually carrying on the work on the premises of the factory. They were partners of the concern and as such cannot be considered as the employees, because so far as they were concerned, there was neither any employer nor any contract of employment. They were doing the work in their capacity as partners. The same view holds good in the case of three other persons who were partners in another concern whose premises are the same as the premises of the offending concern. The learned Assistant Government Pleader contended that if the term "worker" is narrowly interpreted as suggested above, then that will leave a loophole by having recourse to which the provisions of a social legislation like the Factories Act could be successfully violated. We are unable to accept this line of reasoning. Section 85 of the Act gives ample powers to the State Government to declare that all or any of the provisions of the Act shall apply to any place wherein a manufacturing process is carried on in spite of the fact that the number of persons employed therein is less than ten in one case and less than 20 in the other and also in spite of the fact that the persons working therein are not employed by the owner, but are working with the permission of or under an agreement with the owner. In a given case if the Government is satisfied that a partnership agreement has been entered into with a view to avoid the application of the provisions of the Factories Act, it can step in and declare the concern to be 'a factory' within the meaning of the Factories Act. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLIJAN MUNSHI v. STATE.*

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Secs. 32(1), 8—Written complaint by deceased expressing apprehension of death at hands of accused who is subsequently charged with murder of such complainant—Whether complaint inadmissible under s. 32(1)—Admissibility of such complaint under s. 8—Statement made by person since deceased admissible under a provision other than s. 32—Whether such statement inadmissible because it does not fall under s. 32.

A complaint in writing made by a person who dies sometime thereafter, expressing apprehension of death at the hands of a person is admissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, when the person whose conduct is the source of the apprehension is charged with the offence of murder of the person making the complaint.

If the fact to be proved is a statement made by a person since deceased, and it is admissible under a provision other than s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, its admissibility cannot be denied because it does not fall within the provisions contained in s. 32 of the Act.

The deceased had submitted a written complaint against her husband on August 15, 1958, to the Commissioner of Police which inter alia stated: "As this concerns with my whole life, I am afraid, if no prompt action is taken, a poor life would be destroyed." At the trial of the husband for the murder of his wife, which was committed on October 27, 1958, it was contended that the complaint submitted by the deceased was inadmissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act:—

Held, that the statement showing apprehension of death on account of the conduct of the husband was admissible as a statement relating to the circumstances of the transaction under s. 32(1) of the Act:

E. Venkatasubba Reddi, In re.,¹ Pakala Narayana Swami v. The King-Emperor² and Gokul Chandra v. The State,³ referred to; and that the fact that the deceased had made a complaint against her husband, which may have constituted a motive for the husband to commit the offence charged, was a fact, which could be proved under s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act, and production of the original complaint would be probative of that fact:

Golak Biharee Takal v. Emperor⁴ and Emperor v. Manchankhan,⁵ referred to.

ONE Rashida, who was aged about 18 years, was the wife of Allijan (accused) and the daughter of one Mohamed Natha by his wife Sakina. Mohamed Natha died about 17 years ago and Sakina contracted a marriage with one Mohamed Suleman who was a resident of the former state of Patiala. Mohamed Suleman and Sakina migrated to Bombay and took up residence in Bombay. The accused was the brother's son of Mohamed Suleman and he came to live with Mohamed Suleman sometime in the year 1950 and continued to do so till Rashida died. The accused was married to the daughter of one Jannat Bi, but he divorced her some six years before the date of the offence charged against him. On May 26, 1958, the accused married Rashida. Rashida was unwilling to marry the accused, but she was persuaded by her mother and step-father to marry the accused. The marriage proved unhappy and Rashida left her home at least on four occasions between May 26, 1958, and October 26, 1958. Rashida had an elder sister, Aziza, with whom she resided for some time. She had on one occasion addressed a petition to the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, on August 15, 1958, stating that she had been compelled to marry the accused, who was a "drunkard, gambler and a man of notoriously bad character". She also stated that "if no prompt action was taken for her protection, her life would be destroyed". After this petition was submitted on August 24, 1958, Rashida was brought home and was beaten by the accused. Thereafter a non-cognizable complaint was filed by Rashida against the accused. Rashida left home again and she was brought back on October 4, 1958. At that time the accused was out of Bombay attending to some business transactions. On October 25, 1958, Rashida went to the house of one Amina Bi Mohamed and on October 26 she was brought home by her mother Sakina. On the morning of October 27, 1958, the accused returned to Bombay at about 9 a.m. and it was the prosecution case that on that day at about 8 p.m. the accused poured kerosene oil over the clothes of Rashida, when she was sitting in the kitchen doing some household work, and set fire to her clothes as a result of which Rashida suffered extensive burns. Rashida was then removed to the Nanavati hospital and she made three dying declarations, one in presence of Dr. Tilak, another in presence of Sub-Inspector Irani and the third in the presence of a Magistrate, stating that the accused had poured kerosene oil on her person and had set fire to her clothes. Rashida died shortly after making these declarations. The accused was then prosecuted for the offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code of murdering Rashida by causing her death by pouring kerosene oil on her and setting fire to her clothes.

At the trial for the offence before the Additional Sessions Judge, Greater Bombay, on behalf of the prosecution, Dr. Koppikar—an Honorary Magistrate before whom a declaration as to the circumstances leading to injuries suffered by her was made by Rashida, Sub-Inspector Irani in whose presence also a similar declaration was made and Dr. Tilak were examined. The prosecution also examined Sakina, mother of Rashida and also Mohamed Suleman, her step-father beside certain other witnesses. The accused denied that he had poured kerosene oil over the person of Rashida or that he had set fire to her clothes. He stated that finding that Rashida's clothes had caught fire he rushed to her aid and rendered assistance to her and got her removed to the hospital. The defence of the accused was that being disgusted of married life, Rashida had committed suicide by pouring kerosene oil on her person and by setting fire to her clothes. The jury did not accept the defence of the accused, and brought in a unanimous verdict of guilty against the accused. The Additional Sessions Judge accepted that verdict and convicted the accused and sentenced him to suffer imprisonment for life.

The accused appealed to the High Court.

A. S. R. Chari, with L. G. Khare and M. S. Mirajkar, for the appellant-accused.

Y. V. Chandrachud, Government Pleader, for the State.

SHAH J. [His Lordship after stating the facts of the case, proceeded.] Then, it was urged by Mr. Chari that the learned Judge allowed inadmissible evidence to be admitted on the record and that evidence must have seriously prejudiced the mind of the jury against the appellant. Reliance was sought to be placed upon the complaint, exh. C, which was submitted by Rashida on August 15, 1958, to the Commissioner of Police. By that complaint the appellant was charged with being a drunkard, a gambler, a man of notoriously bad character and a "white slaver" who desired to dispose of his own wife (Rashida) for the purpose of prostitution and that he had committed rape upon his sister-in-law. The question about the admissibility of this complaint was, in appears, not raised before the trial Court, and the complaint was admitted in evidence. Mr. Chari contends that a statement made by the victim of an offence which is not proximate in time to the death and directly related to its cause is inadmissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act and apart from that provision such a statement made by a person who has since died is inadmissible in evidence, because s. 32 exhaustively deals with the relevance and admissibility of evidence of persons not examined before the Court. In support of his contention Mr. Chari invited our attention to a judgment of the Madras High Court in *Venkatasubba Reddi, In re.*¹ In that case it was held that a statement made by a deceased person which constituted a motive for another to commit a crime could not be proved by the person who heard the deceased make the statement. Such a statement, it was held, was admissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act if it be a statement as to the cause of death or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in death or under explanation (1) to s. 8 of the Act, if it was shown to have accompanied or explained any act of the deceased. But, it was observed, there is nothing in s. 8 to indicate that a relevant fact can be proved by hearsay evidence. In that case, Mr. Justice Sundaram Chetti, who delivered the principal judgment of the Court, observed that at first he thought that if what the victim stated about her intention to cancel her will constituted a motive for the accused to commit murder, that statement could be proved by those who heard it from her, but after considering the provisions of s. 32(1) and s. 8 of the Act, the learned Judge observed that with some hesitation, he was constrained to accede to the contention that the evidence of the witnesses who deposed to the statements made by the victim was inadmissible.

1 (1931) I.L.R. 54 Mad. 931.

Beasley C.J. was, however, emphatic in the view expressed by him. The learned Chief Justice observed that if the intention of a person could be proved by direct evidence, then such evidence was clearly admissible to prove the relevant fact of motive, but there was nothing in the Evidence Act which rendered hearsay evidence of intention admissible. The learned Chief Justice also criticised the trial Court for failing to draw a distinction between the relevancy of evidence and its admissibility and observed that there is nothing in s. 8 of the Act which supports the contention that a relevant fact can be proved by hearsay evidence. The learned Chief Justice held that the statement alleged to have been made by the victim for altering her will was inadmissible in evidence.

Our attention was also invited to a judgment of the Privy Council in *Pakala Narayana Swami v. The King-Emperor*². In that case the victim of the offence, before he started to go to another village, made a statement to his wife that the wife of the accused had written and asked him to go and receive payments due to him. This statement was sought to be proved at the trial and the Privy Council held that such a statement was inadmissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Evidence Act as a circumstance of the transaction, which resulted in death. The Privy Council also observed that the phrase "circumstances of the transaction" in the section conveyed some limitations. It was not as broad as circumstantial evidence which includes evidence of all relevant facts and it is narrower than res gestae, and laid down the test that the circumstances must have some proximate relation to the actual occurrence and must be of the transaction which resulted in the death of the declarant. Both these were cases in which an oral statement, alleged to have been made by the victim sometime before the commission of the offence, which did not relate to the cause of death nor to the transaction which resulted in the death of the victim, was sought to be proved, and it was held in the Madras case that it was inadmissible under ss. 32(1) and 8 of the Evidence Act and in the Privy Council case under s. 32(1) of the Act.

Reliance was also placed upon the judgment in Gokul Chandra v. The State,³ in which Harris C.J. in delivering the judgment of the Court observed that letters written by a woman to members of her family during a period of five to nine months before her death showing that her state of mind was seriously affected by the cruel conduct of the members of her husband's family were not sufficiently nor closely enough connected with the actual transaction even though the statements thereon had some relation to the cause of her suicide, and hence they could not be said to be circumstances of the transaction which resulted in death and were, therefore, inadmissible. In that case the Court did not consider whether under s. 8 of the Evidence Act the statements could be regarded as admissible. Evidently, the statements were made several months before the date on which the woman died and in the view of the Court there was no proximate connection between the death of the woman and the incidents which were related in those letters showing that her mind was seriously affected by the cruel conduct of the members of the family. It is true that in that case the original letters were sought to be proved, but the Court having come to the conclusion that they were not proximate to and connected with the actual transaction which resulted in death, they were inadmissible.

These authorities, however, do not in our judgment support the view that a complaint in writing made by a person who dies sometime thereafter, expressing apprehension of death at the hands of some person is inadmissible in evidence under ss. 32(1) and 8 of the Evidence Act, when the person whose conduct is the source of the apprehension, is charged with the offence of murder of the person making the complaint. In the complaint, exh. C, it is stated: "As this concerns with my whole life, I am afraid, if no prompt action is taken, a poor life would be destroyed etc., etc....". The statement showing apprehension of death on account of the conduct of the appellant was admissible as a statement relating to the circumstances of the transaction. The complaint was, it is true, made nearly two months before the date of the death of Rashida, but, on that ground alone we are unable to hold that there was no proximate connection between the death and the making of this complaint. It appears to us, therefore, that this statement may be admissible under s. 32(1) of the Evidence Act. In any event the fact of the making of the complaint was admissible as explanatory of the conduct of Rashida under s. 8 of the Act. In Golak Biharee Takal v. Emperor,⁴ it was held by a division bench of the Calcutta High Court following a judgment of this Court in Emperor v. Manchankhan,⁵ that a complaint filed by the victim with the police is "conduct" and such conduct may be proved whether the person whose conduct is sought to be proved is alive or dead. In that case a complaint was filed with the Sub-Divisional Officer stating that the petitioner seriously apprehended danger to his life, liberty and reputation at the hands of certain persons. This complaint was filed six days before the day on which the petitioner was found missing and it was held that the complaint was admissible in evidence under s. 8 of the Evidence Act. In Emperor v. Manchankhan, it was held by Mr. Justice Fawcett that a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Police by the victim of the offence asking for protection and stating that he apprehended injury from one of the accused and that he was in fear of his life, was admissible in evidence under s. 8 of the Evidence Act as containing statements which accompanied and explained the conduct of the victim, such conduct having been influenced by a fact in issue and a relevant fact. It was pointed out that under Explanation 1 to s. 8 of the Act, statements that accompany and explain acts other than statements are included in the word "conduct" and so are themselves admissible under this section and that illustrations (j) and (k) to the section show that the terms of a complaint made by the victim of an offence are admissible. If the victim's act in petitioning the Commissioner is "conduct" relevant under s. 8, in the view of Mr. Justice Fawcett the terms of his petition are relevant by virtue of Explanation 1 to that section.

Under s. 8 of the Evidence Act any fact is relevant which shows or constitutes a motive or preparation for any fact in issue or relevant fact. If the motive for the commission of the offence is relevant, we fail to appreciate why the making of a complaint by Rashida against the appellant charging him with serious offences may be regarded as inadmissible. The whole argument of Mr. Chari proceeded upon a fallacious assumption that s. 32 of the Evidence Act is a complete Code relating to admissibility of statements alleged to have been made by persons who could not be examined before the Court, and the admissibility of statements alleged to be made by persons who are not available to give evidence on account of circumstances set out in s. 32 is circumscribed by that section. In our view, if the fact to be proved is a statement made by a person since deceased, and it is admissible under a provision other than s. 32 of the Evidence Act, its admissibility cannot be denied because it does not fall within the provisions contained in s. 32. In B. D. Sethna v. Mirza Mahmood Shirazi,⁶ this Court held that s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act imposes restrictions upon the admissibility of statements made by persons who cannot be brought before the Court for giving evidence: but, if a statement is admissible under any other provision of the Act, it being altogether immaterial whether the person who made the statement was alive or dead, that statement will not become inadmissible because the person who is alleged to have made that statement is dead.

We must observe that by the mere production of a document, the truth of its contents cannot be regarded as established. But the fact that Rashida had made a complaint against the appellant, which may have constituted a motive for the appellant, to commit the offence charged, is a fact, which can be proved under s. 8 of the Evidence Act and production of the original complaint is probative of that fact. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the contention of Mr. Chari that the complaint, exh. C, is inadmissible.

Constitution of India, Arts. 311(2), 20(2)—Government of India Act, 1935, [25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42], Sec. 240(3)—Departmental proceedings duly carried out against plaintiff, a police officer, and order of punishment made against him—Government issuing show cause notice against plaintiff for enhancement of punishment—Plaintiff dismissed from service by Government—Whether necessary for Government to mention and include in show cause notice grounds why it wanted to impose enhanced punishment—Plaintiff whether given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against action proposed to be taken against him—Validity of show cause notice.

A departmental enquiry duly carried out satisfies the provisions of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India so far as opportunity is to be afforded to a Government servant in connection with the investigation of charges levelled against him. After such an enquiry is duly carried out, it is unnecessary under the provisions of art. 311(2) to give a second opportunity to the Government servant (defaulter) to once again reargue the matter as regards the conclusions already reached in the departmental enquiry.

Certain departmental inquiry proceedings were duly carried out against the plaintiff who was a police officer and he was reduced in the pay-scale grade for a period of one year. This punishment was confirmed in appeal and the plaintiff accepted the order of punishment as binding and suffered the punishment. Thereafter, by a show cause notice, the State of Bombay considering that the punishment inflicted upon the plaintiff was inadequate, called upon him to show cause why he should not be dismissed from the police force. In reply to this notice the plaintiff in his representations raised all contentions as regards the merits of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment. The plaintiff was subsequently dismissed from the police force. In a suit filed by the plaintiff against the State it was contended that he was entitled to a show cause notice calling upon him to show cause against the decision arrived at in the departmental inquiry and also that the decision in the departmental inquiry was the ground on which the State had relied for the purpose of enhancement of punishment and that, therefore, he had not been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken against him as required under art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India, and his dismissal was, therefore, invalid.

Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff had reasonable opportunity of showing cause in respect of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment that was intended to be inflicted upon him and that it was not necessary that further grounds regarding the intended punishment of dismissal ought to have been mentioned or included in the notice given by the Government, and that the notice was in conformity with art. 311(2) and the order of dismissal was valid.

*Decided, September 19, 1958. O.C.J. Suit No. 719 of 1958.

*State of Bombay v. Gajanan Mahadev,*¹ *High Commr. for India & Pakistan v. Lall,*² *Khem Chand v. Union of India,*³ *G. B. Koparkar v. The State of Bombay,*⁴ and *Atindra Nath v. G. F. Gillot,*⁵ referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

M. E. Mody, with P. R. Vakil, for the plaintiff.

J. B. Dubash, with Murzbhan Mistry, for the defendant.

K. K. DESAI J. The plaintiff, who was a Sub-Inspector of Police, filed this suit inter alia for declarations that the order dated April 5, 1952, removing him from the police force of the State of Bombay is void and inoperative and that he continues to be a member of the police force and for arrears of salary on that footing.

The main contentions on which the plaintiff prays for the aforesaid declarations are contained in para. 14(a) and 14(b) of the plaint. The plaintiff relies upon the provisions of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India. The plaintiff's case is that he has not been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken against him as required under the article and that the show cause notice tendered to him was not in conformity with the provisions of the article.

The plaintiff contends that the defendant did not give to the plaintiff any opportunity of showing cause against the accuracy of the facts found by the District Superintendent of Police in a departmental inquiry against the plaintiff. The second ground on which the plaintiff relies is that in January 1952 when the show cause notice was tendered to the plaintiff, in fact the plaintiff had already suffered the punishment inflicted upon him by the District Superintendent of Police and it was, therefore, not competent for the defendant to revise the punishment already inflicted after a lapse of two years. The plaintiff contends that the order of dismissal amounted to double punishment for the same offence and infringed fundamental rights of the plaintiff guaranteed under art. 20(2) of the Constitution of India.

There are several other grounds mentioned in para. 14 of the plaint for challenging the validity of the order of dismissal. These other grounds are, however, not pressed before me and it is unnecessary, therefore, to summarise them here.

The facts leading to this suit are shortly as follows: The plaintiff joined the police force of the State of Baroda in 1927. On the merger of the State of Baroda with the State of Bombay, the plaintiff was absorbed in the police force of the State of Bombay and on August 1, 1949, was confirmed as Sub-Inspector of Police and was at material times attached to the Karjan police station in Baroda district. On January 31, 1950, the plaintiff was found in the garden house of one Haribhai Ramdas at village Atali. At that house what is described as a wet party (drinking party) was then in progress. On February 2, 1950, the District Superintendent of Police, Baroda district, placed the plaintiff under suspension with effect from February 1, 1950. Thereafter, departmental inquiry proceedings were proceeded in connection with the said incident. Statements of several persons were taken and ultimately on March 21, 1950, the District Superintendent of Police, Baroda, framed a charge against the plaintiff. A copy of the charge framed was served on the plaintiff. The charge framed was as follows:—

"Serious misconduct in that you...attended a drinking party in the garden house of Mr. Haribhai Ramdas at village Atali on 31-1-1950 in flagrant violation of the policy laid down by Government for rigid observance by all public servants vide Government Circular, Political and Services Department No. 1581/34 dated 13-7-1948."

"Copies of the following documents are sent herewith in support of the charge."

The documents referred to are copies of a panchanama, inquiry report, statements made by several persons, a letter addressed to the Collector by the Mamlatdar, Baroda, and the aforesaid circular dated July 13, 1948. It is admitted that the plaintiff received this charge-sheet and the documents referred to in the charge-sheet. All these documents were also forwarded to the Dy. Superintendent of Police, Dabhoi, for completing the departmental inquiry proceedings and submitting a report to the District Superintendent of Police for final orders.

The Sub-Divisional Police Officer one Shri N. C. Mistry thereafter appears to have proceeded with the departmental inquiry. It is relevant to point out that as regards the procedure in departmental inquiry, Rules have been framed. These Rules appear in Bombay Police Manual. It is admitted by the parties that the Rules provide for an elaborate procedure for departmental inquiry and inter alia provide for (1) giving a defaulter all opportunities to be present at the hearing and to hear the evidence led in proof of the charge and cross-examine the witnesses produced for the purpose, (2) for submitting the case for defence and for producing evidence in defence and for giving complete hearing to the defaulter.

It appears that the Sub-divisional Police Officer Shri N. C. Mistry proceeded with the departmental inquiry in accordance with the aforesaid Rules and provisions and in pursuance of those Rules made his report dated April 25, 1950. In his report he summarised the evidence led before him and also gave his opinion as he was entitled to do. In his opinion the explanations given by the plaintiff were acceptable and according to him, the charge against the plaintiff was not proved. The Sub-Divisional Police Officer appears to have forwarded his report in accordance with the Rules to the District Superintendent of Police who was the competent officer to deal with the matter. By his decision and order dated May 6, 1950, the District Superintendent of Police one Shri B. D. Shah after giving reasons therefor held that the charge against the plaintiff was proved on evidence on record beyond a shadow of any reasonable doubt. He, therefore, passed orders reducing the plaintiff from grade of Rs. 135 to Rs. 130 for a period of one year from May 1, 1950. This decision and order was served on the plaintiff and he was also informed that he had a right to appeal against the order within two months from the date of receipt of the order. The plaintiff was given opportunity to appear before and was heard by Shri B. C. Shah.

The plaintiff went in appeal against the aforesaid order on July 25, 1950. The Dy. Inspector General of Police, Northern Range, dismissed the plaintiff's appeal on September 13, 1950.

The plaintiff thereafter accepted the order of punishment dated May 6, 1950, passed by the District Superintendent of Police as binding and suffered the punishment awarded to him. The punishment which was for one year was completed on May 1, 1951.

By a show cause notice dated January 11, 1952, the defendant (the State of Bombay) referred to the departmental proceedings held against the plaintiff by the District Superintendent of Police, Baroda, and the punishment inflicted upon the plaintiff on May 6, 1950, as also to the appeal filed by the plaintiff and the confirmation of the punishment in the appeal and further stated as follows:

"And whereas the Government of Bombay consider that the punishment inflicted upon you is inadequate you are hereby required to show cause within one month from the date of receipt of this notice why you should not be dismissed from the Police Force; if you fail to show cause within the aforesaid period, Government will inflict such punishment or pass such order as it deems fit."

This is the show cause notice on which the main contentions of the plaintiff are based. It is at this stage necessary to note that in reply to the show cause notice, the plaintiff addressed a letter dated February 19, 1952, to the defendant through the Secretary, Home Department. By his letter the plaintiff dealt in detail with the charge levelled against him and the departmental proceedings which had taken place. The plaintiff made diverse contentions to prove that he had not been guilty and that he had already suffered the punishment awarded to him. The plaintiff referred to his long past service and also that he had been the recipient of diverse awards from the Government of Baroda and of Bombay. The plaintiff prayed that the Government should take a lenient and humane view of the whole situation and use its authority with mercy. By its resolution dated April 5, 1952, the defendant after considering the representations made by the plaintiff by his letter dated February 19, 1952, passed orders dismissing the plaintiff from the police force.

In May 1952 the plaintiff appears to have made a representation to the Government of Bombay in connection with his dismissal. As the plaintiff did not succeed in his representation the plaintiff ultimately filed this suit on July 16, 1953.

The plaintiff's counsel mainly relied on the provisions of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India in support of the plaintiff's contention that the order of dismissal was not valid. Provisions in art. 311(2) run as under:

"311. (2) No such person as aforesaid shall be dismissed or removed or reduced in rank until he has been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken in regard to him:

Provided..."

The provision in art. 311(2) is a repetition of a similar provision in s. 240(3) of the Government of India Act, 1935. Both these provisions have been construed in several decisions of this Court as well as the Supreme Court of India. The provisions of s. 240(3) were the subject-matter of a decision of the Privy Council in what is popularly mentioned as Lall's case. Mr. Mody places reliance on these decisions and submits that "It was obligatory on the State to mention and include the grounds why they wanted to impose the punishment of dismissal in the notice dated 11th January 1952". Mr. Mody elaborated his contention by stating that the notice should have specified the charge against the plaintiff and should have referred to the evidence in support of the charge and should have given all the grounds with particulars as to why the Government (defendant) had tentatively decided upon inflicting the punishment of dismissal. Mr. Mody contended that as all the aforesaid matters had not been in detail specified in the notice dated January 11, 1952, the notice was not "real" but illusory. The notice did not give any reasonable or other opportunity to the plaintiff to make any contentions regarding the charge levelled against him. Nor did it give any information about the evidence available in support of such charge. Mr. Mody contended that the word "inadequate" in the notice was insufficient to convey to the plaintiff any information regarding the grounds of enhancement of punishment.

In connection with his aforesaid contentions, Mr. Mody relied upon the decision of Chagla C.J. in the case of State of Bombay v. Gajanan Mahadev.¹ Mr. Mody substantially relied upon the passage at p. 178 where it is stated as follows:

"...It is well settled law that it is not sufficient under this sub-section for the Government merely to inform the servant that it proposes to pass a particular punishment and to ask him to show cause against that punishment. The opportunity which the State has to furnish has to be a reasonable opportunity, and the Courts have held that a reasonable opportunity is only afforded to the servant when he can show cause not only against the punishment but also against the grounds on which the State proposes to punish him. Therefore, it is not sufficient that the State should call upon the servant to show cause against the quantum of punishment intended to be inflicted upon him; the State must also call upon the servant to show cause against the decision arrived at by a departmental inquiry if that decision constitutes the ground on which the Government proposes to take action against the servant."

Mr. Mody, therefore, says that he was entitled to a show cause notice calling upon him to show cause against the decision arrived at in the departmental inquiry and also that the decision in the departmental enquiry was a ground on which the defendant relied for the purpose of enhancement of punishment.

In furtherance of his contention Mr. Mody relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in the case of High Commr. for India & Pakistan v. Lall.² He referred to the passage in the decision whereby their Lordships agreed with the view taken by the majority of the Federal Court in that particular case. Mr. Mody pointed out, from p. 655 of that report, that the majority of the Federal Court held

"...it seems to us that the section requires not only notification of the action proposed but of the grounds on which the authority is proposing that the action should be taken and that the person concerned must then be given a reasonable time to make his representations against the proposed action and the grounds on which it is proposed to be taken."

Mr. Mody says that no grounds are mentioned in the notice dated January 11, 1952, and the notice is accordingly not in conformity with art. 311(2) and the dismissal of the plaintiff is invalid.

It appears to me that the contention of Mr. Mody is ill founded. As is pointed out in each of the aforesaid decisions it is for the Court to find out from facts of each case as to whether reasonable opportunity has been afforded to the defaulter or the plaintiff within the meaning of the provisions of art. 311(2). In the case of State of Bombay v. Gajanan Mahadev, it is pointed out by the learned Chief Justice as follows (p. 178):—

"...It may also be said that it may not be necessary in every case to issue a notice in terms calling upon the servant to show cause not only against the quantum of punishment but also against the grounds on which the proposed action is based. Even though, as in this case, the notice may be defective, if in fact the servant has been given the opportunity and has availed himself of the opportunity of showing cause against the grounds, then the mere fact that there is an irregularity about the notice may not lead to the Court holding that the Government servant did not have the opportunity required under s. 240(3). But we think that there can be no doubt that the Court must be satisfied on a review of all the facts of a particular case that the statutory obligation cast upon the State has been properly discharged by the State and the statutory obligation is to afford reasonable opportunity to the dismissed servant."

In Lall's case their Lordships of the Privy Council in approving the judgment of the Federal Court accepted the following (p. 655):

"...In our judgment each case will have to turn on its own facts, but the real point of the sub-section is in our judgment that the person who is to be dismissed or reduced must know that that punishment is proposed as the punishment for certain acts or omissions on his part and must be told the grounds on which it is proposed to take such action and must be given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause why such punishment should not be imposed."

Their Lordships further added (p. 655),

"...If the civil servant has been through an enquiry under r. 55, it would not be reasonable that he should ask for a repetition of that stage, if duly carried out, but that would not exhaust his statutory right, and he would still be entitled to represent against the punishment proposed as the result of the findings of the enquiry."

In the case of Khem Chand v. Union of India,³ Lall's case was considered in detail. The learned Chief Justice of India at p. 505 observed that:

"...It is true that the provision [311(2)] does not, in terms, refer to different stages at which opportunity is to be given to the officer concerned. All that it says is that the Government servant must be given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken in regard to him. He must not only be given an opportunity but such opportunity must be a reasonable one. ...If the opportunity to show cause is to be a reasonable one it is clear that he should be informed about the charge or charges levelled against him and the evidence by which it is sought to be established, for it is only then that he will be able to put forward his defence. ...he should be allowed to show that the evidence against him is not worthy of credence or consideration... All this appears to us to be implicit in the language used in the clause, but this does not exhaust his rights. In addition to showing that he has not been guilty of any misconduct so as to merit any punishment, it is reasonable that he should also have an opportunity to contend that the charges proved against him do not necessarily require the particular punishment proposed to be meted out to him."

At p. 507 the learned Chief Justice after quoting the passage from Lall's case as quoted above held as follows:—

"The above passage quite clearly explains that the point on which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee agreed with the majority of the Federal Court is that a further opportunity is to be given to the government servant after the charges have been established against him and a particular punishment is proposed to be meted out to him..., but a close reading of the rest of that passage will indicate that in their Lordships view the substance of the protection of rule 55 is also included in section 240(3) and to that is superadded, by way of further protection, the necessity of giving yet another opportunity to the government servant at the stage where the charges are proved against him and a particular punishment is tentatively proposed to be inflicted on him. Their Lordships referred to 'statutory opportunity being reasonably afforded at more than one stage', that is to say, that the opportunities at more stages than one are comprised within the opportunity contemplated by the statute itself. Of course, if the government servant has been through the enquiry under rule 55, it would not be reasonable that he should ask for a repetition of that stage, if duly carried out, which implies that if no enquiry has been held under rule 55 or any analogous rule applicable to the particular servant then it will be quite reasonable for him to ask for an enquiry."

It appears to me that what is laid down by the decisions in State of Bombay v. Gajanan Mahadev and Khem Chand v. Union of India is that in the event of a departmental enquiry having taken place according to the rules of procedure prescribed for the purpose, it would not be reasonable for any government servant to ask for a repetition of that enquiry at the stage of enquiry as to the nature and quantum of punishment. At that stage, it is only necessary by reason of art. 311(2) to give him an opportunity of showing cause against the punishment proposed to be taken in regard to him.

I read the aforesaid decisions to mean that the departmental enquiry duly carried out satisfies the provisions of art. 311(2) so far as opportunity is to be afforded to a government servant in connection with the investigation of charges levelled against him. After such an enquiry is duly carried out, it is unnecessary under the provisions of art. 311(2) to give a second opportunity to the Government servant (defaulter) to once again reargue the matter as regards the conclusions already reached in the departmental enquiry. In my view it is for that very reason that the learned Chief Justice observed in the case of State of Bombay v. Gajanan Mahadev that even though the notice may be defective, if the government servant has been given an opportunity and has availed himself of the opportunity of showing cause against the grounds then the mere fact that there is an irregularity about the notice may not lead to the Court holding that the government servant did not have the opportunity required under s. 240(3).

In this connection I must refer to the recent decision in G. B. Koparkar v. The State of Bombay.⁴ While dealing with the defective show cause notice in that case Chagla C.J. observed as follows:—

"The last contention urged by Mr. Thakore is that the show cause notice which was issued by the Commissioner of Police called upon him merely to show cause against the quantum of the sentence and not against the merits of the decision given. It is perfectly true that it is now well settled and well established law that a civil servant has a right to show cause both against the sentence and the merits of the decision when the final show cause notice is issued against him, and we would have taken a very serious view of the matter if the appellant had been deprived of the opportunity of showing cause against the findings arrived at both by the inquiry officer and the Commissioner of Police. But unfortunately for Mr. Thakore, the appellant was not deprived of this opportunity because whatever might have been the form of the show cause notice issued by the Commissioner of Police on the 12th December 1955, in fact the appellant showed cause and showed cause very vigorously against the findings both of the inquiry officer and the Commissioner of Police. In face of this, we cannot possibly accept the contention of Mr. Thakore that there was a contravention of article 311 of the Constitution."

It is relevant to point out that the contentions raised by the plaintiff in connection with the show cause notice dated January 11, 1952, appear to be merely technical. In fact in spite of the alleged defective character of the notice the plaintiff by his letter dated February 19, 1952, raised all contentions as regards the merits of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment. The plaintiff not only had reasonable opportunity in the said connection but took opportunity and dealt with the matter on the footing that it was open to the plaintiff to make contentions regarding all details of the charge and the evidence against him as also the quantum of punishment. The plaintiff has not suffered by the alleged defect in the notice. The plaintiff has not made any contentions in the plaint regarding the departmental enquiry and the same must be deemed to have been duly carried out.

Having regard to my reading as aforesaid of the decisions of this Court as well as of the Supreme Court, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had reasonable opportunity of showing cause in respect of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment that was intended to be inflicted upon the plaintiff. I am unable to accept the contention of the plaintiff that further grounds regarding the intended punishment of dismissal ought to have been mentioned or included in the notice given by the defendant. I do not accept the contentions as made in para. 14(a) of the plaint that the plaintiff has not been given any reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken in regard to him as required by art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India or that the notice is defective and not in conformity with art. 311(2). The plaintiff had complete opportunity to meet the charge levelled against him. The plaintiff in fact led evidence in his possession before the proper authority in the said connection and failed to establish that he was not guilty. The plaintiff made all possible contentions regarding the quantum of punishment but failed to succeed.

As regards the contents of the show cause notice dated January 11, 1952, I do not think that the same should have been more elaborate. It is worthy of note that the plaintiff understood the meaning of this notice completely and took opportunity to deal with the whole of the matter. The quantum of punishment which was intended to be inflicted is mentioned in the notice. Prior punishment already inflicted is referred to as inadequate. The departmental enquiry proceedings in which the plaintiff was punished are also mentioned in the notice. The plaintiff was thereby made aware that having regard to its Prohibition Policy the Government took a serious view of defaults of its employees in connection with Prohibition Policy. I am unable to agree with the contention of Mr. Mody that the notice required to mention further grounds for intended enhanced punishment of dismissal.

Mr. Mody contended that he was having regard to delay in revision of punishment entitled to a new trial and investigation of the charge against him. He also contended that I should consider the true meaning and effect of the Government Circular regarding Prohibition Policy mentioned in the charge and hold that the finding in the departmental inquiry was incorrect. I am of the view that the Court is not entitled to go into the facts to find out as to whether the finding is correct or not. I, therefore, do not think that it is necessary for me to go into these matters. I cannot accept these contentions of Mr. Mody.

The second contention of the plaintiff is that he having suffered punishment the State was not entitled to revise or enhance the punishment inflicted upon him. He contends that this case was a case of "double punishment". It is not denied that the State had a right to reconsider the whole of the charge levelled against the plaintiff and to inflict punishment in revision as it deemed necessary. The plaintiff has not raised any contention that the State had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. Mr. Mody did not make any argument in support of such contention. The plaintiff has based all his arguments in support of this contention on art. 20(2) of the Constitution of India. That article runs as follows:—

"No person shall be prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once." This article has been construed on several occasions. In the case of Venkataraman v. Union of India,⁵ following Maqbool Husain v. State of Bombay,⁶ it has been held that:—

"The language of Article 20 and the words actually used in Art. 20(2) afford a clear indication that the proceedings in connection with the prosecution and punishment of a person must be in the nature of a criminal proceeding, before a court of Law or Judicial Tribunal, and not before a Tribunal which entertains a departmental or an administrative inquiry even though set up by a statute, but which is not required by law to try the matter judicially and on legal evidence."

In fact Mr. Mody is unable to carry his arguments further having regard to this judgment of the Supreme Court which was pointed out by Mr. Dubash. There was no question of a criminal prosecution in this case and/or double punishment and I cannot, therefore, accept the contention raised on behalf of the plaintiff.

In this connection Mr. Dubash also relied upon the judgment of Gajendragadkar J. in this Court in Rajaram Narayan Tendulkar v. Inspector General of Police, Bombay, at Poona,⁷ where it was held as follows:—

"It is then contended that this amounts to a double punishment. In our opinion this argument is wholly fallacious. There are not two punishments with which the petitioner is concerned. The petitioner received a minor punishment at the hands of the District Superintendent of Police and in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction the Inspector-General of Police has enhanced that punishment. It is impossible to accede to the argument that enhancement of punishment made in exercise of revisional jurisdiction amounts to a second punishment and that in such a case the party is exposed to the risk of double punishment. Therefore we must reject the argument that in the present case the petitioner has been subject to the risk of double punishment." There is no substance in the contention of the plaintiff that he has suffered double punishment.

After I had delivered in Court this judgment, in another matter I have been referred to the decision in Atindra Nath v. G. F. Gillot.⁸ I have only to record that in that case also it has been held (as I have done in this case) that it is unnecessary to give a second hearing to a defaulter, in a case where departmental enquiries have been duly completed.

In the result the suit is dismissed with costs.

Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), Sec. 188—Appeal filed and disposed of on merits under s. 188—Whether order against which appeal preferred merges in decision of appellate Tribunal—Effect of order of confirmation under s. 188.

Where an appeal is filed and disposed of on merits under the provisions of s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the order of the first tribunal against which the appeal is preferred merges in the decision of the appellate tribunal.

*Collector of Customs v. Rahiman,*¹ distinguished.

The effect of an order of confirmation under s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act is that the operative part of the order of the first tribunal is really the operative part of the order of the appellate tribunal.

IN 1955 the petitioner received an inquiry from some foreign customer for export and sale from India of coarse white goathair or wool. The petitioner had in that connection sent his material which was described as petitioner's type 100AA to that foreign customer. The petitioner was in doubt as to whether he could export his goods as wool waste without any export licence or as raw wool which required export licence. The petitioner's representative interviewed the Deputy Marketing Development Officer in Bombay with a sample. But the officer refused to give any opinion intimating to the petitioner that it was not his function to give opinions to the petitioner.

The petitioner thereafter shipped 25 bales of his goods outside India in the end of January 1956. The petitioner further shipped 10 bales of his goods outside India in May 1956. On October 15, 1956, the petitioner submitted his shipping bill No. 2402 in connection with 15 bales. These bales were described in the shipping bills as 5634 lbs. of Indian wool waste of the value of Rs. 11,000 to be shipped by S. S. Aagtedijk. In connection with these goods of the petitioner there being doubt as to whether it was waste wool, the customs took the opinion of the senior Marketing Development Officer, Wool Bristles and Goat Hair Grading Scheme, Bombay. The opinion of the officer was that the petitioner's goods were not wool waste. By a show cause notice dated October 22, 1956, the Assistant Collector of Customs gave notice to the petitioner that the shipping bill contained a misdeclaration of the description of the goods and involved an attempt to evade restriction on export of the articles in question. The petitioner was called upon to show cause as to why action should not be taken against the petitioner under s. 167, cl. (8), of the Sea Customs Act. The petitioner was informed that his goods were examined by the Officer mentioned above and were found to be "not wool waste". He was also informed that the goods were "Indian Wool Raw" and that they could not be allowed to be exported without a grading certificate from the competent authorities and without the endorsement from the Export Trade Control Authorities for having licensed the goods as "Indian Wool Raw".

By his letter dated October 22, 1956, the petitioner applied for permission to recover back the material from the docks. On October 23, 1956, the Assistant Collector of Customs gave a hearing to the petitioner. On October 27, 1956, the petitioner addressed a letter to the Agricultural and Marketing Adviser, Government of India, for the purpose of obtaining an opinion as regards the question whether the goods of the petitioner were wool waste or raw wool. By his letter dated October 29, 1956, the petitioner offered to execute a bond in terms of the draft annexed to that letter in connection with the return of the goods to the petitioner pending the decision of the question as to whether the petitioner's goods required "grading" and an export licence. On October 31, 1956, a second hearing was given by the Assistant Collector of Customs to the petitioner; and further hearing was fixed for November 6, 1956. By his letter dated November 1, 1956, the petitioner made his written submissions to the Assistant Collector of Customs as regards the facts which had arisen in the case of the petitioner. The petitioner informed the Assistant Collector of Customs that he did not accept the decision of the Senior Marketing Development Officer in Bombay as correct. The petitioner had challenged this decision by his letter addressed to the Agricultural and Marketing Adviser at Delhi and forwarded a copy of the letter to the Assistant Collector of Customs. The petitioner recorded that pending the decision of the question whether the petitioner's goods were or were not wool waste by the Marketing Adviser at Delhi it would not be possible to decide the question that had arisen in respect of the petitioner's goods and that the hearing by the Assistant Collector of Customs on November 5, 1956, should not, therefore, proceed. The petitioner desired that he should be permitted to remove his goods from the docks and that the Assistant Collector of Customs should consider the merits of the case after a final report had been obtained from the Marketing Adviser at Delhi. The petitioner thereafter executed a bond on November 7, 1956, relevant part whereof was as follows:—

"In consideration of the Assistant Collector of Customs allowing us to take the consignment in the schedule below, back into town, we hereby undertake in the event of the samples drawn from the consignment in our presence being found to be 'wool' and not 'wool waste' by the Agricultural and Marketing Adviser, Ministry of Food and Agriculture, Government of India, within three months.

(1) to pay such penalty as may be imposed by the custom authorities

(a) for not having produced the Export Trade Control Licence for the correct description 'Raw Wool',

(b) for not having got the wool graded in accordance with Wool Grading and Marking Rules, 1953,

(c) for having misdescribed the goods as 'wool waste' instead of 'wool raw'.

(2) to bring back the said goods to enable the Customs Authorities to confiscate the same or in default pay such fines in lieu of confiscation as may be adjudged by the Customs Authorities."

By his letter dated December 13, 1956, the Marketing Adviser of the Government of India gave his opinion in respect of the goods of the petitioner. The relevant part of that letter ran as follows:

"...it is found that the consignment is not of wool waste but consists of mixed wool containing pulled wool and skirtings, obtained from hairy type of South Indian sheep. This cannot be allowed for export unless graded under Agmark.

The waste wool known in commerce consists of noils, soft waste, hard waste and finishing wastes, these are obtained during different proceeding operations such as combing, carding, drawing, spinning and finishing.

The Senior Marketing Development Officer, Bombay, has been asked to grade this consignment under Agmark and allow it for export if it fulfils conditions under grade X."

By the first impugned order dated August 23, 1957, the Additional Collector of Customs recited the relevant facts; including the opinion of the Senior Marketing Officer, Bombay, and recited that it was ascertained that an export licence was not produced as necessary and that an offence attracting the provisions of s. 167, cl. (8), read with s. 19 of the Sea Customs Act was thereby established and a show cause memo was accordingly served on the exporter. He relied upon the findings of the Agricultural Marketing Adviser to the Government of India and in the operative part of his order he mentioned:—

"The explanation tendered by the exporters is not at all satisfactory and I am satisfied that Messrs Faiz and Company deliberately misdeclared the description of goods in order to evade grading of bales. Further the licensing policy of raw (Indigenous) wool is stricter than that for wool waste."

He, therefore, imposed a personal penalty of Rs. 1,000 under s. 167, cl. 8, of the Sea Customs Act and ordered payment thereof.

Against that order the petitioner filed an appeal under the provisions of s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act to the Central Board of Revenue contending that the above order was illegal and invalid as passed without giving the petitioner a hearing or an opportunity to give his explanation, that the petitioner did not deliberately misdeclare the description of the goods and acted bona fide and that the Additional Collector of Customs should not have imposed a personal penalty or any penalty in the circumstances of this case even if export of the goods was not allowed.

The petitioner was called upon to appear before the Central Board of Revenue if he so desired. The petitioner, however, failed to appear before the Central Board of Revenue. By its decision dated August 13, 1958, the Central Board of Revenue held as follows:—

“The appellants were given an opportunity to appear for a personal hearing, asked for, but they did not avail of it. The Board has, therefore, considered the appeal with the help of records of the case.”

The Central Board of Revenue decided as follows:—

“All the arguments put forth in the appeal have been carefully considered but the Board sees no reason to interfere with the Order (original) passed by the Additional Collector of Customs, Bombay.”

The petitioner under art. 226 of the Constitution of India challenged the orders passed by the Additional Collector of Customs (respondent No. 1) and the Central Board of Revenue (respondent No. 2).

The petition was heard.

V. Rajgopal, with M. H. Thakkar, for the petitioner.

M. O. Chinoy, with S. J. Sorabjee, for the respondents.

K. K. DESAI J. [His Lordship after stating the facts as above and dealing with points not material to this report, proceeded]. It is well established that where appeal is provided for and is filed the whole of the case is rendered open for arguments before the appellate authority; and the decision in appeal ceases to be final. The order of the first Court would be subject to revision, alteration, variation and setting aside by a decision of the appellate tribunal. Except in the event of the appellate tribunal deciding the appeal on technical questions of law, such as, jurisdiction or limitation or other similar questions the order of the first tribunal would merge in the decision of the appellate tribunal. Technical or other defects existing in the proceedings before the first tribunal would be subject-matter of investigations by the appellate tribunal. The grievance of the petitioner that he had not been given a hearing after the opinion of the Marketing Adviser to the Government of India was received was before the appellate tribunal and I must assume that the same was considered by the appellate tribunal. I must further assume that the appellate tribunal considered the merits of the petitioner's case as appearing in the memo. of appeal as has been mentioned in the operative part of the order of the appellate tribunal, viz., Central Board of Revenue. It is significant that in his memo. of appeal the petitioner has developed in great detail every possible argument which could be advanced for arriving at a conclusion in favour of the petitioner. In spite of the petitioner being absent all these arguments are stated to have been considered by the Central Board of Revenue. The question, therefore, is (that though the Appellate Tribunal considered all the grievances of the petitioner including the grievance that the petitioner has had no hearing and opportunity of being heard before respondent No. 1) whether for the reason that in the proceedings before the first tribunal i.e. respondent No. 1, principles of natural justice were violated the findings of the Central Board of Revenue must be set aside. In my view the question is not of setting aside the order of respondent No. 1. The real question is whether there are any reasons why this Court should set aside the decision of the Central Board of Revenue.

In this connection Mr. Rajgopal had relied upon the decision in *Collector of Customs v. Rahiman*¹ and contended that if the proceedings before respondent

No. 1 are held to be vitiated by reason of violation of principles of natural justice, the decision of respondent No. 1 must be held to be a nullity and that in the event of the decision of respondent No. 1 being held to be nullity, the decision of the Central Board of Revenue must fall altogether and need not be at all considered as regards the validity thereof. Mr. Rajgopal contends that the decision of respondent No. 1 is nullity and therefore does not merge in the decision of the appellate tribunal. The relevant part of the observations in that case are at p. 658 where, relying upon certain observations in the case of Barnard v. National Dock Labour Board,² it is held as follows:—

"We agree with what Rajagopala Ayyangar J., has said in the judgment under appeal, namely,

"If the order of the Collector was one passed with jurisdiction then there might be some basis for the argument that it got merged in the appellate order. But if that order was a nullity in that procedure dictated by natural justice was not followed, there was no order which could be the subject of confirmation by the appellate authority'".

The above observations came to be made because in the case before the Madras High Court it was found as a matter of fact that no notice was issued to the appellant before proceedings were taken to impose penalty and the appellant was not given an opportunity to show cause why the penalty should not be imposed, and even if it should be imposed, the circumstances which should be taken into account in determining the quantum. The contention that was raised was that by reason of failure to give notice the proceedings of the Collector were "void ab initio" and when an order of an inferior tribunal was a nullity by reason of the proceedings being "void ab initio" the order made by the first tribunal would not merge into the order of appellate tribunal. The ratio of that decision appears to me to be that where no notice of any kind is given in respect of the proceedings for imposing penalty the proceedings should be held to be void ab initio and in such a case the decision of the first Court would be entire nullity. Now the facts in this petition are in material particulars different. Admittedly the proceedings were commenced by the show cause notice dated October 22, 1956. The proceedings cannot, therefore, be held to be void ab initio. In fact admittedly the petitioner appeared before the Assistant Collector of Customs and had hearings and entered into correspondence for allowing the petitioner to withdraw the goods on execution of a bond. The petitioner gave an undertaking by the bond to accept the decision as regards penalty and forfeiture of his goods in the event of the opinion of the Marketing Adviser to the Government of India being contrary to the submissions of the petitioner. I cannot, therefore, make a finding that the proceedings which were undertaken in this case were "void ab initio". There is no doubt that at a much subsequent stage having regard to the undertaking given by the petitioner in the bond already referred to by me respondent No. 1 proceeded to levy penalty and make his findings without giving any further notice to the petitioner that respondent No. 1 was about to proceed to make his findings. If the petitioner had not filed an appeal he may have well argued that the decision of respondent No. 1 was vitiated by reason of failure of respondent No. 1 to give to the petitioner a further opportunity to be heard. The getting aside of the order of respondent No. 1 on that ground would not be setting aside the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction or on the ground that the proceedings were "void ab initio." The ground of failure to give a hearing having arisen at a much subsequent stage the proceedings were not "void ab initio." In my view the observations in the Madras case cannot be applicable to the facts in this petition and I would not be justified in accepting the contention of Mr. Rajgopal that the order of respondent No. 1 does not merge in the decision of the Central Board of Revenue.

It is also relevant in this connection to refer to the provisions of s. 188 of the Act. The relevant part of s. 188 runs as follows:—

"Any person deeming himself aggrieved by any decision or order passed by an officer of Customs under this Act may, ... appeal therefrom to the Chief Customs Authority, ...

such authority or officer may thereupon make such further inquiry and pass such order as he thinks fit, confirming, altering or annulling the decision or order appealed against: ...

Every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the power of revision conferred by section 191, be final."

It is patent on the language of this section that once an appeal is filed the whole of the subject-matter of inquiry is open for decision by the appellate tribunal. The decision which the appellate tribunal has to arrive at would be confirming, altering or annulling the decision or order appealed against. The appellate tribunal for the purpose of deciding the subject-matter of inquiry has power to make such further inquiry as it deems fit. In my view this provision makes it abundantly clear that the appellate tribunal takes up the whole of the subject-matter of inquiry as if in original Court and both the parties to the appeal would be entitled to submit all relevant evidence before the appellate tribunal. This being the position in my view where an appeal is filed and disposed of on merits under the provisions of s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act it would not be possible to accept the contention that the order of the first tribunal does not merge in the decision of the appellate tribunal. It is in that connection important to bear in mind that the section provides that it is the order of the appellate tribunal which is final. In this case every grievance of the petitioner was recited as and by way of ground of appeal in his memo. of appeal and was before the appellate tribunal. The appellate tribunal after coming to the conclusion that respondent No. 1 had failed to give an opportunity to the petitioner to be heard was entitled to hear and would have heard every submission which the petitioner wanted to make in connection with the final order that should be passed in the matter of the case of the petitioner. The petitioner by his own conduct failed to appear before the appellate tribunal and his grievance appears to me to arise out of his own negligence. He has no explanation to give why he did not appear before the appellate tribunal. He is not in a position to contend that the appellate tribunal did not consider every aspect of his case which was argued in detail in his memo. of appeal. In my view the order of respondent No. 1 merged in the decision of the Central Board of Revenue. It is not contended that the Central Board of Revenue had no jurisdiction to consider the appeal. It is not possible to contend that the Central Board of Revenue violated any principles of natural justice. The order of the Central Board of Revenue is an order passed by a tribunal with jurisdiction and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law. This is the final order in this case and must be held to be binding on the petitioner.

Mr. Rajgopal has relied upon the phraseology of that order and contended that the only effective order in existence is the order of respondent No. 1 and, therefore, I should set aside the order of respondent No. 1. The wordings of the operative part of the decision of the Central Board of Revenue are as follows:—

"the Board sees no reason to interfere with the Order (original) passed by the Additional Collector of Customs, Bombay."

Now, by reason of the provisions of s. 188 this is the final order. The question is whether I should, therefore, construe this order that there "is no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Additional Collector of Customs" as final, or whether I should hold that on a true construction of this order the effect of it is that the order as made by respondent No. 1 is the final order made by the Central Board of Revenue. The final order in every case must be an effective and operative order. There was authority in the Central Board of Revenue "to confirm" the order of respondent No. 1 or "to alter or to annul" it. When the Central Board of Revenue decided that it saw no reason to interfere with order passed by the Additional Collector of Customs what in effect it decided was to confirm the order of the Additional Collector of Customs.

toms. The effect of an order of confirmation under s. 188 of the Act in my view must be that the operative part of the order of the first tribunal is really the operative part of the order of the Central Board of Revenue. The true construction of the decision of the Central Board of Revenue is that the Board itself has passed the order the terms whereof are to be found in the order of respondent No. 1. In my view there is no outstanding existence of the order of respondent No. 1 in this case and the only subsisting and effective order is the order made by the Central Board of Revenue.

In this connection it is also relevant to point out that whilst granting the rule nisi in this petition on October 10, 1956, I had taken up the view that respondent No. 2 (Central Board of Revenue and the Tribunal) which made the final order being situate in Delhi, this Court had no jurisdiction at all to issue a writ against respondent No. 2. The rule that was given was granted only against respondent No. 1 though in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the petition. I have already held that the final order which must be questioned and set aside for the petitioner to succeed in this petition is the order of the Central Board of Revenue. It is apparent that the rule nisi having not been issued against respondent No. 2 this Court would not proceed to set aside the order of respondent No. 2 and that for that purpose respondent No. 2 would be a necessary party to such a rule. Accordingly the petitioner must fail in this petition for two further reasons. This Court has no jurisdiction to proceed against respondent No. 2 and give relief by way of writ as against respondent No. 2 in respect of the order passed by respondent No. 2. This rule nisi also must fail as respondent No. 2 is not a party to the rule issued by this Court on October 10, 1956, though in the absence of respondent No. 2 relief for setting aside its decision cannot be granted.

Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928—Default in payment of land revenue—Land put up to auction and sold by revenue authorities without notice of sale to defaulter—Necessity of such notice—Whether sale void for want of notice—Applicability of principle of natural justice.

Though the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, do not prescribe that a notice shall be given before the property of a defaulter is sold, it is a principle of natural justice that the defaulter must receive such a notice before his property is sold. In the absence of any notice the sale is liable to be set aside.

N. B. Chandurkar, for the appellant.

D. B. Padhye, for the respondent.

KOTVAL J. This is an appeal under CL 10 of the Letters Patent of the then High Court of Judicature at Nagpur upon leave granted by Mr. Justice P. P. Deo. The appeal comes before this Court pursuant to a certificate issued by the learned Chief Justice of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh under s. 59 of the States Reorganization Act.

The subject-matter in dispute in appeal is a field, survey No. 23, area 29 acres 25 gunthas, situated in the village Walki, tahsil and district Amravati. This field belonged to the respondent Dharamchand who is a resident of Calcutta. The appellant Gangaram was at all material times the working patwari of the village Walki. Under s. 140 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, the Deputy Commissioner, Amravati, having certified that the respondent was in arrears of land revenue amounting to Rs. 58-15-3 in respect of the year 1940-41, the said field was put to auction by the revenue authorities on April 24, 1941, at Badnera. At the auction the appellant patwari bid along with one other person and obtained the field for a sum of Rs. 85. The sale was originally fixed to be held on April 23, 1941, at Badnera, but the Additional Naib Tahsildar sitting at Amravati ordered its postponement to the next day, that is, April 24, 1941, on which day it was sold as stated above. The respondent's application to set aside the sale was rejected by the Sub-divisional Officer, and successive appeals to the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner, and a revision application to the Board of Revenue were dismissed, as a result of which the respondent filed the present suit on March 10, 1950.

The respondent alleged that the sale was for a very inadequate price and the field was worth Rs. 4,500. He also alleged that the appellant who was a patwari played a fraud upon him and upon the revenue authorities in so far as he suppressed his own identity as patwari of the village Walki and kept that fact and the publication of the sale suppressed, with the result that only one other bidder appeared at Badnera and the patwari himself was enabled to purchase it. Moreover, it was alleged that the respondent was a resident of Calcutta and had no notice whatsoever of the sale or that arrears of land revenue were being demanded from him, and that the appellant patwari falsely represented to the revenue authorities that the respondent had knowingly evaded payment of land revenue in spite of demand, though no demand was ever made.

The trial Court rejected these pleas of the plaintiff-respondent and dismissed his suit. But in appeal the Second Additional District Judge, Amravati, reversed this decision. The Second Additional District Judge held that the appellant patwari had incorrectly represented that the full address of the respondent was not known though he knew it, and therefore the Deputy Commissioner decided not to issue notice. The appellate Court also held that the field had fetched an extremely low price and that it was worth more than Rs. 4,000 even in 1941. Lastly, the appellate Court held—and it is this finding with which we are here primarily concerned—that no demand notice was ever issued to the respondent nor a notice of the sale proclamation. The appellate Court, relying upon the decision in *Kanhayalal v. Reginald*¹ applied the maxim audi alteram partem and held that though the Berar Land Revenue Code did not require such notice, that was a rule of natural justice and, therefore, the sale on that ground alone could be set aside. The appellate Court, therefore, did not go into the other questions involved in the suit.

In second appeal Mr. Justice Deo affirmed the decision of the Second Additional District Judge on the short ground that the decisions in *Wasudeo v. Namdeo*² and Kanhayalal v. Reginald (cit. sup.) concluded the main question in appeal before him. He however granted leave to appeal on the following ground:

"Since an appeal is pending before the Supreme Court from the decision in Kan- hayalal v. Reginald, leave is granted to the appellant under clause 10 of the Letters Patent."

2 [1952] Nag. 172.

Now, before we proceed to consider the questions raised by Mr. Chandurkar on behalf of the appellant in this appeal, it is necessary to notice that upon the particular point raised before us, the Supreme Court of India did not give any decision. The judgment of their Lordships of the Supreme Court is reported in Kanhaiyalal v. Dr. D. R. Banaji.³ In Kanhaiyalal's case also the sale was under the Berar Land Revenue Code. In that case, the sale was challenged before the then Nagpur High Court on two grounds, one was that no notice had been given of the sale to the judgment-debtor and, therefore, the sale was void because a principle of natural justice had been infringed. The other point canvassed in that case was whether a sale made without the permission of the Bombay High Court which had appointed a receiver of the properties sold was void. The Division Bench held that a sale without the leave of the Court appointing the receiver was not void but was liable to be set aside by the receiver in appropriate proceedings. On the other point, it held that the sale was void for want of notice.

When the matter went before their Lordships of the Supreme Court, they reversed the decision of the Nagpur High Court on the former question. They held that a sale without leave of the High Court appointing the receiver was altogether void and not merely liable to be set aside at the instance of the receiver in appropriate proceedings. Having so held, their Lordships observed that they were, therefore, not called upon to decide the other question on which the sale was impugned, namely, the question whether a rule of natural justice had been infringed because no notice had been given to the judgment-debtor prior to the sale. In para. 13 of the judgment, Mr. Justice Sinha expressly observed as follows (p. 731):

"...The High Court has also relied upon the well-known rule of natural justice—audi alteram partem—as another reason for holding the sale to be illegal. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to pronounce upon the difficult question of how far a principle of natural justice can override the specific provisions of a statute."

In view of these remarks, in our opinion, the question is open for consideration by us.

Mr. Chandurkar urged that in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Kanhaiyalal v. Dr. D. R. Banaji (cit. sup.), the binding force of the authority of Kanhaiyalal v. Reginald (cit. sup.) has been taken away. It may be that upon the point before us the decision in Kanhaiyalal v. Reginald was not affirmed by the Supreme Court, but neither has the point decided therein been disapproved or reversed.

The principle of law expressed by the maxim audi alteram partem has been uniformly accepted in English Courts for over 150 years. The principle is thus expressed in Craies on Statute Law, fifth ed. (pp. 112-3):

"Again, it being a recognised right that 'no man is to be deprived of his property without his having an opportunity of being heard' [Cooper v. The Wandsworth Board of Works], it was laid down in that case by Byles, J. that, 'although there may be no positive words in a statute requiring that a party shall be heard, yet a long course of decisions, beginning with Dr. Bentley's case (2 Ld. Raymond 1334), established that the Justice of the common law will supply the omission of the Legislature."

In Cooper v. The Wandsworth Board of Works (cit. sup.), the Board of Works gave a notice to the owner of a partly built house to demolish it and when it was not complied with, the Board through its servants got the building demolished themselves without any notice to the builder of the house. The Board of Works sought to justify their action under the provisions of the 76th section of the Metropolitan Local Management Act which empowered them to take such action. In holding that although the words of the statute taken in their literal sense without any qualification at all would create a justification for the act which the Board had done, the Court held that the powers granted by the statute were subject to a qualification which had been repeatedly recognised that no man is to be deprived of his property without his having an opportunity of being heard. Willes J. expressed the rule thus (p. 190):

"...I apprehend that a Tribunal which is by law invested with power to affect the property of one of her Majesty's subjects, is bound to give such subject an opportunity of being heard before it proceeds; and that that rule is of universal application, and founded upon the plainest principles of justice."

The same was the view taken in Painter v. Liverpool Gas Company.⁵ In that case, a gas light company established by statute made a demand for rent due from the appellant Painter for gas supplied to him. By the statute they were given powers in case of non-payment to recover the rent by issue of a warrant and the statute provided that it shall be lawful for the company to levy the sum so due by distress and sale of the goods of the party so neglecting or refusing to pay. After making a demand, the gas light company issued a warrant and without previously summoning or hearing the party to be distrained upon, realized the amount. Here again, the Court read into the provisions of the Act the duty to hear the party before issuing the warrant, founding it upon principles of natural justice. Lord Chief Justice Denman observed (p. 443):

"...But, in the present case, I am of opinion that the warrant ought to have been issued upon summons of the party. The warrant states that the plaintiff, having contracted with the defendants for a supply of gas from them, refused, after demand made in writing, to pay the rent due to them for gas consumed by him, whereof he was duly convicted. The very terms of this warrant, referring to a conviction, make it evident that the party ought to have been summoned to shew either that he had not refused to pay, or that he had an excuse for not paying. Therefore we are called upon by general principles to say that this warrant is illegal, because the party against whom it is issued had no opportunity given him of shewing that he ought not to be convicted."

In the same case, the learned Chief Justice referred with approval to the remarks of Lord Kanyon in *Harper v. Carr*⁶ as follows (p. 275):

"...It is an essential rule in the administration of justice that no man shall be punished without being heard in his defence; the party must be summoned before a warrant of distress is granted, as we decided in R. v. Benn; and on that summons many circumstances may appear to shew that a warrant of distress ought not to be granted."

In the instant case, such circumstances are also found proved. The Courts below found that the respondent was a resident of Calcutta and the field was sold at Badnera; no demand for the arrears was made by the patwari though the latter had falsely represented that he had made such a demand and had also falsely stated to the Tahsildar that he did not know the correct address of the respondent.

Mr. Chandurkar also brought to our notice a decision of the Nagpur High Court in Provincial Government, Central Provinces and Berar v. Ramsing Onkardas,⁷ where Pollock J. has observed that no notice to a defaulter is required by the Code. The observation was made in the peculiar circumstances of that case. There the recorded holder of a field had died but the legal representatives had carelessly not got his name removed from the revenue records nor substituted their own. Therefore, the revenue authorities issued a prohibitory order to the deceased recorded holder but without notice to his heirs and the field was sold. It was under these circumstances that the sale was upheld. In that case a prohibitory order had been served albeit on a dead person and in ignorance of his death and, therefore, that was not a case, as here, where no notice at all was ever served or attempted to be served. Moreover, in that case the want of notice to the legal representatives was not attacked upon the wider principle that it was opposed to natural justice, as it has been before us.

The decision of the learned single Judge was, in our opinion, a correct decision and we say so with respect. We hold that though the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code do not prescribe that a notice shall be given before the property of a defaulter is sold, it is a principle of natural justice that the defaulter shall receive such a notice before his property is sold. Therefore, in the absence of any notice the sale was liable to be set aside. This is sufficient to dispose of this appeal and we need not go into the other questions canvassed on behalf of the appellant by Mr. Chandurkar or any of the other questions which the Courts below left open upon the respective conclusions to which they came. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

KOTVAL J. This is an application for revision directed against an order passed on January 20, 1959, by Mr. G. R. Dewaikar, Magistrate, First Class, Kamptee, dismissing a complaint filed by the applicant Shankarlal against the four opponents.

The complaint was filed on October 6, 1958, and the complainant Shankarlal was examined on October 13, 1958. Thereafter a police challan came to be filed before the same Magistrate on October 21, 1958. The challan alleged substantially the same facts and made out the same offences. The Magistrate, however, for some reason returned the challan. It was re-presented before him on October 27, 1958, when he felt that it was triable by a Second Class Magistrate and therefore ordered it to be sent to such a Magistrate after obtaining orders of the Additional District Magistrate. In consequence of this order, he further ordered on October 28, 1958, that the complaint filed on October 6, 1958, should be stayed to await the decision of the Additional District Magistrate upon the challan.

*Decided, August 7, 1959. Criminal Revision Application No. 171 of 1959, from the order passed by T. L. Jumankar, Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, in Criminal Revision No. 28 of 1959, confirming the order passed by G. R. Diwalkar, Magistrate, First Class, Kamptee, in Criminal Case No. Nil of 1958.

Meanwhile the applicant applied for transfer of his complaint upon the ground, amongst others, that the Magistrate had already pronounced his opinion that the offences complained against in the complaint were triable by a Second Class Magistrate. The transfer application was dismissed by the Additional District Magistrate; but in passing the order the Additional District Magistrate observed that the offences disclosed both in the challan and in the complaint were triable by Mr. Dewaikar himself, that is to say, a First Class Magistrate. Thus both the challan and the complaint went back to the file of Mr. G. R. Dewaikar. Thereafter he passed the impugned order on January 20, 1959, which is as follows:

"Already case No. 1500 of 1958 has been registered on these very facts on the report of the police. There cannot be two proceedings on the same allegations against the same accused by the same parties. This complaint which is redundant is therefore dismissed. File."

Now, it is to be noticed that after the Additional District Magistrate had expressed the view that both the complaint and the challan were triable by Mr. Dewaikar, both of them were before the learned Magistrate. The complaint was filed earlier and if at all the Magistrate had a choice to make he might have exercised his choice in favour of retaining the complaint and dismissing the challan but it seems to me that the Magistrate had no such choice in the instant case.

The complaint could not have been dismissed. Section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure confers a power on the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint "If, after considering the statement on oath (if any) of the complainant...there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding."

The sufficient ground which the Magistrate advanced in the instant case was that there could not be two proceedings against the same accused by the same parties. I do not see how the Magistrate could have come to the conclusion that there would have been two proceedings having regard to the provisions of s. 190(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure to which no reference appears to have been made by the Magistrate.

Under s. 190(1), a Magistrate is empowered to take cognizance of an offence upon three grounds: (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence; (b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer; and (c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion, that such offence has been committed. Therefore, the Magistrate in the instant case could certainly have taken cognizance of the offence upon the complaint filed before him. There is nothing in sub-s. (1) of s. 190 to indicate that the grounds for proceedings are mutually exclusive, and that if one of the grounds is already there, the Magistrate must reject a request to proceed on other grounds as he has done in the instant case. I am fortified in my view by the decision of a Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court reported in *Mukania v. Achalia*¹. Chief Justice Wanchoo delivering the judgment on behalf of the Division Bench, after quoting s. 190(1), laid down (p. 161):

"It is open to a Magistrate to act on any one of these three grounds but these three grounds are not, in our opinion, mutually exclusive and it is possible for a Magistrate to take cognizance of any offence upon two or more of such grounds e.g. both upon receiving a complaint and on a police report. We may, in this connection, refer to BEHARAT KISHORE v. JUDHISTIR MODAK,² which is a full bench decision. In that case it was held that the alternatives upon which a Magistrate might take proceedings could not be treated as mutually exclusive and it was not correct to say that a magistrate while taking cognizance of an offence should have done it under some one of the alternatives to the exclusion of the other. It follows, therefore, that if Magistrate has both a complaint and a police report before him about the same offence, he can take cognizance of that offence on the basis of both. The further question whether after taking cognizance on the basis of both, he can amalgamate them and hold a joint trial of the accused named in the police report as well as in the complaint depends upon S. 239 of the Criminal P.C. and the discretion of the Magistrate, which has to be exercised according to the circumstances of each case."

The application for revision is allowed and the order dismissing the complaint is set aside. The complaint shall now be amalgamated and tried jointly with Criminal Case No. 1500 of 1959.

Lila had been working there during the year 1958 and on or about July 16, 1958, she had a quarrel with her husband Karudas. where she was kept for two days. With the merits of these allegations I am not here concerned.

After part of the prosecution evidence had been tendered before the Sessions Court, the sessions trial was by order dated July 22, 1959, of the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, transferred from the Court of Mr. B. V. Patwardhan, Extra Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, to the Court of Mr. T. L. Junankar, First Additional Sessions Judge. The order impugned in this revision application was passed on July 22, 1959.

A day before the case was transferred as stated above, the prosecution filed an application before Mr. Patwardhan that three witnesses whom the prosecution had not examined during investigation should be allowed to be summoned and examined in the interests of justice. The three witnesses were Dr. Kanikdaley, the Radiologist, Mayo Hospital, Nagpur, Karudas, the husband of the complainant Mst. Lila, and Rama, her father. In their application dated July 20, 1959, the prosecution indicated that the evidence of the husband was necessary on the question of the proof of marriage and lawful guardianship of Mst. Lila, on July 16, 1958, and the father's evidence was necessary in order to prove her age and the report relative to the birth of Mst. Lila made to the police on May 24, 1941. The Extra Additional Sessions Judge Mr. Patwardhan rejected this application so far as the last-mentioned two witnesses were concerned. Thereafter, as I have said above, the trial was transferred to the Court of Mr. T. L. Junankar, the First Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur.

On July 22, 1959, the prosecution put in a further application before Mr. Junankar. By this application they prayed that they would produce Karudas and Rama before the Court and that they should be permitted to examine those witnesses for the prosecution. The application also stated that when the counsel for the prosecution opened the case, he had specifically referred to the evidence of Karudas and Rama and had stated that they would be examined as additional witnesses though they were not examined before or mentioned in the challan. The Additional Sessions Judge rejected this application for the following reason.

"A similar application was already made to Shri Patwardhan, Extra Addl. Sessions Judge, Nagpur, and was rejected by him on 21-7-1959. Parties heard. I do not think that I should review that order dated 20-7-1959 nor do I think that this Court has power to review the same. The application is rejected."

Thereafter on July 25, 1959, the prosecution made a further attempt to get in the evidence of those two witnesses. They made another application reiterating that in the opening address under s. 286 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Public Prosecutor had stated that additional evidence will be adduced by examining Karudas, the husband of the prosecutrix, and Rama, the father of the prosecutrix, for proving the fact of lawful guardianship at the time of the commission of the offence and the age of the prosecutrix at the day of the incident with reference to the birth date of Mst. Lila as shown in the register of births. The prosecution also explained that they were not seeking the help of the Court for issuing process to these witnesses to secure their attendance for giving evidence before the Court but that the prosecution would be producing those witnesses and would keep them in attendance without the aid of the Court and they claimed that under these circumstances they were entitled to examine these witnesses. This application also was rejected by the Additional Sessions Judge on the same day for the following reasons:

"The defence counsel opposes the application. It will be seen that this request was made to my predecessor Shri Patwardhan and was rejected. Today all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and the case has almost come to an end. To permit the prosecution to examine the said witnesses now would cause serious prejudice to the accused. The statements of the said witnesses were never recorded by the police and the accused cannot be said to have any effective material to cross-examine the witnesses with any success. To permit the prosecution to examine the witnesses at this stage will have in fact the effect of filling up the gaps in the prosecution case. Further I am being asked to review my own order."

Now, it seems to me that the first reason given by the First Additional Sessions Judge that his predecessor had rejected a similar request is wholly incorrect. The request made to the predecessor of the First Additional Sessions Judge, namely, Shri Patwardhan, was not that the prosecution should be allowed to examine the witnesses they had produced but that the witnesses should be allowed to be summoned, a request which, as I shall presently show, could legitimately have been rejected by that Judge. The request made to the First Additional Sessions Judge, however, was merely that the witnesses whom the prosecution had themselves produced and who were actually present in Court on that day should be examined. The first reason given, therefore, for rejecting that application does not appear to me to be correct.

I also do not see much point in the second reason given in the order that all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined that day and that the case had almost come to an end. The fact remains that on the day on which the request to examine the witnesses was rejected, the prosecution case had not been closed. That it had almost come to an end is hardly a relevant consideration. The third reason advanced was that the examination of these prosecution witnesses would seriously prejudice the accused because the statements of the witnesses were never recorded by the police and the accused would not have any effective material to cross-examine the witnesses with any success, and moreover, it would help the prosecution to fill up the gaps in the case. These were also the main grounds upon which the application for revision before me was contested on behalf of the opponent by Mr. Ahmed appearing on his behalf.

In cases of trial by a Court of Session, the procedure in this behalf is prescribed by s. 286(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under that section, when the Judge is ready to hear the case "the prosecutor shall open his case by reading from the Indian Penal Code the description of the offence charged and stating shortly by what evidence he expects to prove the guilt of the accused". Then sub-s. (2) prescribes that "the prosecutor shall then examine his witnesses". It is to be noted that in the instant case there is an averment that the prosecutor had in opening his case mentioned the names of these two witnesses as witnesses whom the prosecution will examine in addition to the witnesses mentioned before the Committing Magistrate. This statement in the application was never controverted on behalf of the accused.

Now, it seems to me that ordinarily in a criminal trial it is the right of the prosecution to examine as many witnesses as they choose unless their right is curtailed by some provision of law. There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to limit the right of the prosecution only to examining witnesses examined before the Committing Magistrate, and in so far as s. 286 gives the prosecutor an option to examine his witnesses after opening his case, it seems to me that the prosecution may examine in the Sessions Court witnesses other than those mentioned before the Committing Magistrate.

No doubt, at this stage, it would not be open to the prosecution to have fresh witnesses summoned for the purpose of their evidence being taken and considered in the trial. To that extent the rejection by Mr. Patwardhan of their application to summon new witnesses was, in my opinion, justified.

But the position here is that the prosecution realized their error and abiding by the order passed by Mr. Patwardhan, produced the two witnesses whom they wished to examine on July 25, 1959. This was done while the prosecution case was still being heard and had not been closed. Section 286, sub-s. (2), was therefore clearly attracted. It says that "the prosecutor shall then examine his witnesses" and that does not limit the right of the prosecutor to examine such witnesses as have been summoned only. If the prosecution have additional witnesses ready and available to them for giving evidence and keep them in attendance, their evidence, in my opinion, can be recorded and there is no legal impediment to that course.

A consideration of the provisions of s. 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure also leads to the same conclusion. That section, however, gives the Court a discretion to examine at any stage of any inquiry, trial or proceeding any person in attendance though not summoned as a witness. That however is the power vested in the Court itself. I refer to that power because it does not seem to me that the Additional Sessions Judge in rejecting the application dated July 25, 1959, in the instant case adverted to that power which he undoubtedly had.

Then I turn to the question of prejudice which is the main plank upon which the arguments in revision were based. I am in the first instance unable to see how any prejudice arises in the instant case. At the stage at which the request to examine the two witnesses was made, the prosecution case was still being unfolded and their summoned witnesses were being examined. Their case had not been closed. The so-called prejudice in the instant case appears to me no more and no less than the sort of prejudice—if at all it may be called prejudice—which is always occasioned when a prosecution is launched against an accused and prosecution witnesses are examined against the accused. Moreover, no grievance at all was made before the Additional Sessions Judge that the examination of these witnesses would prejudice the accused or that he was not prepared to cross-examine them.

It was then urged that if the witnesses had been allowed to be examined the accused would have been taken by surprise. If such an objection had been made before the trial Court or is even now made after the case goes back, I have no doubt that the First Additional Sessions Judge will in his discretion give sufficient time to the defence to prepare itself for the cross-examination. If need be, the trial Court may ask the prosecution to state in writing the gist of what these witnesses are going to depose. That such a course is permissible and proper is established by the Full Bench case of Niamat v. Emperor.¹ Thus the objection would be obviated that these witnesses were not examined by the police during the investigation, and surprise would be caused to the accused if they depose for the first time before the First Additional Sessions Judge. If these safeguards are observed, in my opinion there will be no prejudice caused to the accused by the mere fact of these three witnesses being examined as additional witnesses over and above those who have been summoned. I am fortified in the view that I have taken by the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in *Bhagwan Singh v. State of Punjab*² and by an earlier case decided by the Madras High Court in In re B. K. Narayana Reddi.³

Mr. Ahmed relied on the decision of the Madras High Court in In re K. V. R. S. Mani.⁴ That was a case where a request to examine an additional witness was made after the examination of all prosecution witnesses and after the prosecution had closed their case. Obviously, different considerations would prevail under those circumstances.

Reference was then made to the provisions of s. 207A, sub-s. (3), of the Code of Criminal Procedure which was recently added by the amending Act No. XXVI of 1955. It was contended that the view I have taken above would take away the right conferred upon the accused by the said sub-section, to be furnished with copies of all the documents mentioned in s. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, particularly the case diary statements recorded by the police. In my opinion, it is not necessary in the present case to consider to what extent these new provisions of law impinge upon the right of the prosecution to examine all such witnesses as they can keep in attendance and are willing to give evidence, because in the present case, the police have admittedly not made any record of their statements during investigation. The new right given to an accused can only arise where such statements are recorded and not otherwise.

Mr. Ahmed then urged that by examining the two witnesses, the prosecution were merely trying to fill up gaps in the prosecution case in so far as they were trying to prove the age of the girl and the facts relative to her lawful guardianship. He urged that the Sub-Inspector who had investigated the case had been examined and in cross-examination he had admitted that the witnesses Karudas and Rama had been examined by him but they had nothing to state and that, therefore, a new case was now being sought to be made out through their evidence. Should it be found that the witnesses Karudas and Rama had been questioned by the police anent certain facts and had stated before the police that they had no knowledge of them and nevertheless that they are subsequently deposing to those facts before the Sessions Court, then that would be a circumstance which would affect the credibility of their evidence and may lead to a disbelief of it; but I am unable to see how upon that ground it can be held that the prosecution are not entitled to examine them at all. All the circumstances relative to the so-called prejudice which Mr. Ahmed has placed before me seem to be mere circumstances tending to show that these witnesses should not be believed, which is a matter which I have no doubt the learned First Additional Sessions Judge will consider after their evidence is recorded.

I allow the application for revision, set aside the orders dated July 22, 1959, and July 25, 1959, of the First Additional Sessions Judge in Sessions Trial No. 34 of 1959 and order that the two witnesses Karudas and Rama shall be examined as prosecution witnesses on their production by the prosecution and subject to what I have observed in this order.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Secs. 415, 420, 24—Complainant entering into contract with accused on false representation by latter that they were partners of particular firm—Breach of contract by accused—Whether offence of cheating committed by accused.

A complaint was filed charging accused Nos. 1 and 2 with having committed an offence under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, 1860, and accused No. 3 with having abetted the commission of that offence. It was alleged in the complaint that accused No. 3 persuaded the complainant to enter into a contract shipping a certain quantity of goods with a firm on a representation that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were partners of that firm and that accused Nos. 1 and 2 confirmed the representation and it turned out, after the contract was broken and the consignment was not booked, that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were not the partners of the firm but some other persons were in truth the partners of that firm and that but for the representations made, the complainant would not have entered into the contract:—

Held, that the use of the expression "cause" in s. 415 of the Indian Penal Code postulates a direct and proximate causal connection between the act or omission and the harm and damage to the victim, and that as, in the present case, there was no direct relation of cause and effect between the representation alleged to be made and the harm and damage to the complainant as a result of the breach of the contract, an offence under s. 415 of the Code was not committed in consequence of the accused persuading the complainant to enter into the contract for shipment.

SHAH J. The petitioner filed a complaint in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, 19th Court, Bombay, charging accused Nos. 1 and 2 with having committed an offence under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, and accused No. 3 with having abetted the commission of that offence. It was alleged in the complaint that accused No. 3 persuaded the petitioner to enter into a contract shipping 2,000 tons of oil-cake on board s.s. "Dmitri Donskoy" with the Atlas Engineering Company on a representation that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were partners of that firm, and that accused Nos. 1 and 2 confirmed the representation and it turned out, after the contract was broken and the consignment was not booked, that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were not the partners of the Atlas Engineering Company, and that two other persons Babubhai Rikahchand and Lal bhai Babulal Shah were in truth the partners of that firm and that, but for the representations made, the petitioner would not have entered into the contract. Holding that no prima facie case was made out for issuing process against the accused, the trial Magistrate discharged the accused and dismissed the complaint. In the view of the learned Magistrate the possibility of the petitioner knowing that the proprietors of the Atlas Engineering Company were not the accused could not on the evidence be excluded and that in any event it could not be said that but for the representation made by accused No. 3 that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were partners of the Atlas Engineering Company, the petitioner may not have entered into the said contract. The correctness of the order of discharge is challenged in this revision application.

This is one of those cases, in which a civil dispute is sought to be litigated in a criminal Court under the guise of a charge of cheating. The substance of the complaint is that the petitioner entered into a contract for shipment with the Atlas Engineering Company, that that contract was broken and that the persons responsible for committing breach of the contract were accused Nos. 1 and 3, who, though they had no interest in the Atlas Engineering Company, held accused Nos. 1 and 2 out as partners of that firm. Prima facie such a plea will sustain in a civil Court a claim for damages for breach of contract and the petitioner may seek to hold accused Nos. 1 and 2 liable for holding themselves out as partners of the Atlas Engineering Company. An action may also lie in damages against accused No. 3 for the part alleged to have been played by him. But we fail to appreciate how, on the allegations in the complaint, an offence can be made out against the three accused or any of them.

Section 415, Indian Penal Code, defines cheating. That section is in two parts. Deception by fraudulently or dishonestly inducing a person to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain property is cheating under the first part of the definition. Deception of any person by intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property is cheating, under the second part. Under the first part, one of the important ingredients of cheating is that the act of the accused must be done fraudulently or dishonestly and the act must result in inducing the person deceived to deliver property or consent to retention of property. For the application of the second part two conditions must be fulfilled: a person must be intentionally deceived to do or omit to do something which he would not otherwise do and such act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to the person deceived in body, mind, reputation or property. Section 420, Indian Penal Code, is an aggravated form of cheating. If a person cheats another and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security and anything which is signed or sealed and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security, he is liable to be punished under this section. Evidently, in this case on the allegations made, there is no delivery of property to any person or the making, alteration or destruction of the whole or any part of a valuable security or anything which is signed or sealed. Nor can it be said that the delivery, if any, is by dishonest inducement. The accused are alleged merely to have induced the petitioner to enter into a contract of consignment of oil-cake. An act is done "dishonestly" if it is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person (see s. 24, Indian Penal Code) and it is not the case of the petitioner that in inducing the petitioner to enter into a contract, there was any intention to cause wrongful gain to the accused or to cause wrongful loss to the petitioner.

The complaint does not make out a case that by fraudulently or dishonestly inducing the petitioner to deliver any property or to consent to the retention of any property, the petitioner has been cheated. Assuming on the allegations made in the complaint, that but for the representation that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were the partners of the Atlas Engineering Company, the petitioner may not have entered into the contract with that firm, an offence of cheating is not committed, unless the representation causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to the victim. The use of the expression "cause" postulates a direct and proximate causal connection between the act or omission and the harm or damage to the victim. There is in the case nothing in the complaint which may support the contention that damage or harm was caused or was likely to be caused by reason of inducement offered to the petitioner to enter into the shipping contract. The damage may, if at all, arise out of the breach of the contract, but, there is no direct or proximate connection between the inducement and the damage or harm to the petitioner arising out of the breach of contract.

The view that we have taken is supported by the view expressed by the Calcutta High Court in *Harendra Nath Das v. Jyotish Chandra Datta*¹, where the manager of a firm was induced by false representation of the accused to accept a bought note from a non-existent firm for the purchase of jute, and to sign a receipt for the note. It was held (as to the receipt) that the case did not fall within the first part of s. 415, Indian Penal Code, as the accused had no intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain to any one by inducing the manager to make out or give a receipt for the bought note; and (as to the note) the case did not fall within the second part of s. 415, Indian Penal Code, as no loss to property or harm to the manager's reputation resulted proximately and necessarily from the act itself which he was induced to do, viz., acceptance of the contract.

There being in this case no direct relation of cause and effect between the representation alleged to be made and the harm or damage to the petitioner as a result of the breach of contract an offence under s. 415, Indian Penal Code, has not been committed in consequence of the accused persuading the petitioner to enter into the contract for shipment. The rule is, therefore, discharged.

Rule discharged.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[NAGPUR BENCH]

Before Mr. Justice Tambe and Mr. Justice Raju.

GULABRAO ANANDRAO v. RAMJI ANANDRAO.*

Hindu law—Joint family property—Nucleus of joint property—Burden of proof how discharged where plaintiff alleges that certain property acquired with help of nucleus of joint family property.

When a plaintiff files a suit alleging that a certain property belongs to a joint family, the initial burden is on the plaintiff to prove his assertion that the property in question is joint family property. This burden can be discharged by the plaintiff by showing that the property was purchased from joint family funds or by joint labour or by showing that the joint family possessed joint family property, that the nucleus of joint family property either proved or admitted was of such a nature that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired. If the existence of a joint family nucleus or property is either admitted or proved, it must be shown that the nucleus was of such a character that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired.

If the initial burden of proof resting on the plaintiff is thus discharged, then the burden would shift to the defendant to prove that the property in question was acquired by himself with his own self-acquired property and without the aid of the joint property or joint family funds or income, or that the income derived from the ancestral lands had been kept intact or was not available to him.

Shrinivas Krishnarao Kango v. Narayan Devji Kango,¹ referred to.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

N. B. Chandurkar, for the appellant.

B. K. Manohar, for the respondents.

RAJU J. This appeal arises out of a litigation between members of a Hindu family. The appellant Gulabrao, son of Anandrao Zade, is the original defendant No. 2.

The suit was filed by two plaintiffs, who are brothers of the appellant, namely plaintiff No. 1 Ramji and plaintiff No. 2 Gunderao, both sons of Anandrao Zade, who died on March 9, 1938, leaving behind four sons, Shamrao (defendant No. 1), Gulabrao (defendant No. 2—appellant), Ramji (plaintiff No. 1) and Gunderao (plaintiff No. 2), and three sons of a deceased son Vithoba. The three sons of the deceased Vithoba are defendants Nos. 3 to 5. Anandrao also left behind him his widow Radhabai who died on April 16, 1951. The two plaintiffs filed the suit for partition and separate possession of their 2/5ths share in the joint family properties mentioned in Schedules A and B attached to the plaint. Schedule A refers to the immovable property and Schedule B refers to the movable property i.e. ornaments, household utensils, cattle and cash. The immovable properties are fields at mouza Khumari, mouza Jirola, mouza Chargaon, mouza Raulgaon, and houses and kothas at mouzas Khumari and Dorli and an open site at Khumari.

In this appeal it is not necessary to refer to all the points of contention between the parties at the time of the suit because in appeal only one point has been urged. In appeal it is urged that the lower Court, namely, that of the 5th Additional District Judge, Nagpur, which had passed a preliminary decree in favour of the two plaintiffs, for their 2/5ths share in the joint family properties, erred in holding that the fields at Chargaon and Raulgaon and the houses and kotha at Dorli are joint family properties. The contest in appeal between the parties relates only to these properties.

*Decided, August 28/59, 1959. First Appeal No. 180 of 1953, from the decree passed by N. O. Trivedi, 5th Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 25-A of 1952.

With regard to these properties, the plaintiffs' case was that although the fields at Chargaon and Raulgaon were purchased in 1942-43 in the names of Shamrao, the eldest son of Anandrao, and Gulabrao, the second son, they were really purchased out of the income and savings of the joint family, that although Shamrao was the eldest brother the real de facto management was in the hands of Gulabrao. Similarly, as regards the house and kotha at Dorli, plaintiffs' case is that although these were purchased in November 1942 in the name of Gulabrao alone they were purchased from out of the joint family funds and are really joint family property.

On the date of the suit defendant No. 5 Nilkanth was a minor and his guardian-ad-litem was defendant No. 3 Damodhar. He filed a separate written statement wherein the pleas taken by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were substantially repeated.

In their written statement so far as material for the purposes of this appeal, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 contended that Gulabrao was not the de facto manager but in fact ever since he was a child of 5 years Gulabrao has been residing at Dorli with his mawasa Manaji although occasionally he used to visit Khumari at the time of hangam or harvest to receive his share of the joint family income. The defendants denied that the properties at Raulgaon and Chargaon had been acquired from the income of the joint family properties. According to them these properties were purchased by Gulabrao with his separate funds although the sale-deed mentioned the names of Shamrao and Gulabrao as purchasers. It was averred in the written statement that Manaji had gifted his house to Gulabrao by a gift-deed dated March 9, 1934, that Gulabrao also managed and continued to manage the kirana shop of Manaji, that the property was acquired by Gulabrao for himself out of the income from the kirana shop at Dorli which belonged to him solely after the death of Manaji who died in 1940. In the written statement it is also affirmed that Gulabrao got from Manaji cash and movables worth Rs. 6,000. As regards the properties at Dorli, viz. the house and kotha, it was pleaded that these were also purchased by Gulabrao for himself with his own funds, by sale-deeds dated November 6, 1942, and November 11, 1942. The defendants denied that these properties had been acquired by Gulabrao from the joint family funds as alleged by the plaintiffs. As the appeal does not relate to the ornaments, household utensils etc. it is not necessary to refer to the plaint allegations and pleas in the written statement relating to them.

In appeal the learned counsel for the appellant has stated that he does not challenge the finding of the lower Court that there was no previous partition prior to the date of this suit, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to refer to the controversy between the parties at the time of the suit relating to the alleged earlier partition. The only point urged in appeal is that the lower Court erred in holding that the fields at Chargaon and Raulgaon, and the house and kotha at Dorli were joint family properties in which the two plaintiffs are entitled to 2/5th share. That the two plaintiffs were entitled to 2/5th share in the joint family properties is also not disputed in appeal. The only point for decision in this appeal is, therefore, whether the learned Additional District Judge erred in holding that the fields at Raulgaon and Chargaon and the house and kotha at Dorli which are shown as items 3 and 4 and items 5(d) and 5(e) in Schedule A attached to the plaint are also joint family property in which the two plaintiffs are entitled to 2/5th share.

We hold that the learned Additional District Judge was right in his finding on this point for the following reasons.

The two plaintiffs filed the suit for partition and separate possession of their 2/5th share in the joint family property of deceased Anandrao who died on March 9, 1938, leaving behind him his widow Radhabai, his four sons and three sons of his predeceased son Vithoba. In the plaint it was alleged that the properties in dispute in appeal were also joint family properties, although the two sale-deeds P-23 and D-5 in respect of Chargaon fields stand in the name of Gulabrao and Shamrao and although the two other sale-deeds viz. D-6 and D-7 of November 1942, relating to the house and kotha at Dorli stand in the name of Gulabrao alone.

When a plaintiff files a suit alleging that a certain property belongs to a joint family, the initial burden is on the plaintiff to prove his assertion that the property in question is joint family property. See s. 103, Evidence Act. But this burden can be discharged by him in various ways, and when he discharges this burden, the burden of proof then shifts to the defendant who alleges that the property in question does not belong to the joint family but is the self-acquired property of the defendant. The initial burden which rests on the plaintiff who alleges that the property in question belongs to the joint family may be discharged by showing that the property was purchased from joint family funds or by joint labour. He can also discharge the burden by showing that the joint family possessed joint family property, that the nucleus of joint family property either proved or admitted was of such a nature that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired. If the existence of a joint family nucleus or property is either admitted or proved, it must be shown that the nucleus was of such a character that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired.

If the initial burden of proof resting on the plaintiff is thus discharged, then the burden would shift to the defendant to prove that the property in question was acquired by himself with his own self-acquired property and without the aid of the joint family property or joint family funds or income.

These principles are well settled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court. In *Shrinivas Krishnarao Kango v. Narayan Devji Kango*¹ their Lordships of the Supreme Court referred to the following observations of the Privy Council in *Appalaswami v. Suryanarayanamurti*² :—

"...The Hindu law upon this aspect of the case is well settled. Proof of the existence of a joint family does not lead to the presumption that property held by any member of the family is joint, and the burden rests upon anyone asserting that any item of property is joint to establish the fact. But where it is established that the family possessed some joint property which from its nature and relative value may have formed the nucleus from which the property in question may have been acquired, the burden shifts to the party alleging self-acquisition to establish affirmatively that the property was acquired without the aid of the joint family property;..."

In such a case the defendant can discharge his burden of proof by showing, for instance, that the income derived from the ancestral lands had been kept intact or that the income derived therefrom was not available to him or that the purchase was made from his own earnings and from moneys obtained by him without the aid of joint family funds or joint family income.

These principles have to be applied to the facts of this appeal.

Admittedly, the joint family of Anandrao and his sons had both movable and immovable property. Admittedly, the fields at Khumari and Jirola are joint family properties. There is, therefore, a nucleus of joint family property, and the next question for consideration is whether in size and quality the nucleus was of such a character that with its aid the property in question would have been purchased. The properties in controversy are: (i) two fields bearing khasra Nos. 312 and 314 at Chargaon purchased for Rs. 200 by exh. P-23, dated May 26, 1942, from Krishnarao malguzar (1-4 D.W. 2); (ii) two fields khasra Nos. 2 and 3 of Raulgaon, purchased for Rs. 1,500 on November 17, 1943, by D-5, executed by Shankar (D.W. 3); (iii) an open site at Dorli, 30 cubits by 15 cubits, purchased on November 11, 1942, for Rs. 42 under D-6 which has been proved by Suryabhan (D.W. 4), the vendor; and (iv) the kotha at Dorli, 13 cubits by 36 cubits, purchased by Gulabrao in his own name on November 6, 1942, for Rs. 50 from Raghoji who has not been examined.

As regards the admitted nucleus of joint family property, they are (i) four fields at mouza Khumari viz. fields Nos. 346, 347, 19/4, and 418, measuring 10.13 acres, and (ii) two fields at mouza Jirola measuring about 13 acres.

Gunderao (plaintiff No. 2) in his evidence as P. W. 7 has deposed that there are two orange gardens in the fields at mouza Khumari and the trees began to bear fruit during the lifetime of his father Anandrao. When his father died, the garden used to yield Rs. 500 to Rs. 700 per year. The joint family also used to get produce of cotton from the fields worth about Rs. 400. Juar from the field was only sufficient to meet the needs of consumption for the family. In addition, the family used to get one or two khandis of tur from the fields. The family had two agricultural servants who were paid Rs. 200 and Rs. 100 per year. Admittedly, there are about 14 or 15 members of the family. This is admitted both by plaintiff No. 2 as well as Gulabrao (D.W. 13). Gunderao has also deposed that Gulabrao used to look after the entire family affairs and he used to sell oranges from the orange gardens. Shamrao, the eldest member, merely used to look after the cultivation of the fields.

The plaintiffs also adduced evidence of the witnesses Laxman (P.W. 1) and Bhagwan (P.W. 2) to show that the joint family had sufficient funds. Laxman (P.W. 1) who brought account books of one Mukundrao, in whose service he was employed, has deposed that there was a khata in the names of Anandrao, Vithoba, Shamrao, Gulabrao, Ramji and Gunderao, minors by guardian Anandrao, who borrowed Rs. 3,500 in 1927 from his master on a mortgage. On December 7, 1937, the whole mortgage debt was paid off. During the intervening 10 years Anandrao made various payments varying between Rs. 100 and Rs. 1,100. The final payment which was made in 1937 was of Rs. 553. The evidence of this witness is relied on by the plaintiffs for showing that Anandrao was able to save large amounts of money every year and to repay the entire debt of Rs. 3,500 which he had borrowed as early as 1927. In cross-examination the witness merely stated that he could not say from where Anandrao got money to make the last payment. It is not the case of the defendants that Anandrao incurred other debts in order to make repayments to Mukundrao.

The next witness relied on by the plaintiffs is Bhagwan (P.W. 2) who was in the service of Sheikh Subhan, an orange merchant of Nagpur. He has proved that in 1941-42 there was a khata of Gulabrao and also a khata of Shamrao, sons of Anandrao. In 1942-43 there was a khata of Gulabrao Anandrao of Khumari. In the khata of the year 1941-42 the figure of Rs. 3,007 is shown as price of oranges sold and paid to Gulabrao. It is unnecessary to refer to the evidence of this witness relating to the khatas subsequent to 1942-43 because the properties in question were purchased in 1942-43 and the question for determination is whether at about the year 1942-1943 the joint family had sufficient nucleus of property and sufficient surplus of income from which the property in question could have been purchased.

On the question of income from orange gardens Gulabrao has deposed that Gunderao was in charge of selling vegetables and oranges. In cross-examination he denied the suggestion that he used to send Gunderao to sell oranges to dalal Subhan, but he admitted that he used to send Gunderao to bring money for him from Subhan. According to Shamrao (D.W. 12), he, Gunderao and Ramji jointly used to sell orange crop. They did not sell the orange crops to Subhan. The orange garden used to fetch Rs. 200 to Rs. 400 per year. According to him in some years there was loss and in some years there was a saving of Rs. 200. In view of the admission of Gunderao that the orange garden used to yield about Rs. 500 to Rs. 700, the figure of Rs. 3,000 and other figures in Subhan's account running to several thousands could not have related to the orange garden of the plaintiff. Shamrao (D.W. 12) has admitted that from the orange garden there used to be a saving of about Rs. 200 in some years. There is, therefore, no reason to reject the evidence of Gunderao, the plaintiff who in his deposition as P.W. 7 has deposed that the orange garden used to yield about Rs. 500 to Rs. 700. According to Gunderao the cotton crop used to fetch about Rs. 400. This fact is not traversed by either Shamrao (D.W. 12) or Gulabrao (D.W. 13). We, therefore, concur in the finding of the learned Additional District Judge that upon the evidence it is clear that there was joint family property which could yield substantial surplus to the family. In view of this finding the burden of proof would shift to the defendant i.e. Gulabrao to prove that the properties in question were his own self-acquired properties.

This is not a case in which properties have been acquired in the name of one of the members of the joint family. Two of the sale-deeds viz. P-23 and D-5 for Rs. 200 and Rs. 1,500, respectively, are in the names of both Shamrao and Gulabrao. Shamrao is the eldest member of the family and Gulabrao is the second eldest. The very fact that these two sale-deeds were taken in the names of two eldest members of the joint family would ordinarily raise a presumption that the properties purchased by these two sale-deeds were purchased for the joint family. Even when there is no joint family nucleus, if properties are jointly acquired by brothers, there would be a presumption that the joint acquisition by the brothers is joint family property: vide Rampershad Tewarry v. Sheochurn Doss,³ *Haridas Narayandas v. Dekuvarbai*⁴ and *Sitalprasad v. Ramprasad*⁵. As the sale-deeds were both in the names of Shamrao and Gulabrao and as both of them happen to be the two eldest members of the joint family, ordinarily the presumption would arise that the purchase was for the joint family.

Shamrao has, however, supported the case of Gulabrao. According to Shamrao, the fields purchased at Raulgaon viz. the fields purchased by sale-deeds P-23 and D-5, belonged to Gulabrao exclusively and he (Shamrao) had no share in them. According to him, Gulabrao purchased these fields with his own money and he (Shamrao) did not contribute any money. Shamrao also deposed that he executed a farkatnama (release deed D-2) dated March 29, 1951, in favour of Gulabrao. According to him the agreement to execute a release deed was entered into on February 1, 1951. Krishnarao (D.W. 5) of Dorli also deposes to the agreement dated February 1, 1951, by Shamrao in favour of Gulabrao, but there is no reference to this agreement in the final farkatnama or release deed executed by Shamrao on March 29, 1951. This was executed after Gunderao had demanded partition on March 20, 1951. It is not unlikely that the farkatnama was executed in view of the plaintiffs demand for partition on March 20, 1951.

The case of Gulabrao in his written statement is that the properties in dispute were acquired by him for himself out of the income from the Kirana shop at Dorli which solely belonged to him after the death of his mawasa Manaji in 1940. In the written statement he does state in addition that he had acquired cash and movables worth Rs. 6,000 from Manaji, but it is not the case made out in the written statement that he had purchased the property from out of the cash left by Manaji. In his evidence, however, Gulabrao deposed that he had purchased the fields out of the cash of Rs. 5,000 and 200 tolas of silver and 12 tolas of gold which had been gifted to him by his mawasa Manaji. Even in his deposition he does not make out a clear case whether he had used the cash for purchasing the fields or whether he had used the gold and silver for purchase. His deposition is counter to his written statement in which he stated that he had purchased the properties in question from the income of the kirana shop at Dorli belonging to Manaji and which belonged to Gulabrao after the death of Manaji. The case set out in the written statement with regard to all the properties in question has not been proved by the evidence. Gulabrao has not given evidence as to the nature of the income from the kirana shop, nor is there any other evidence on this point.

As already observed, the two main sale-deeds viz. P-23 and D-5, which are for Rs. 200 and Rs. 1,500 respectively, stand not only in the name of Gulabrao alone but in the names of Gulabrao and Shamrao, the eldest members of the joint family. As in this appeal only one question has been argued, the evidence of all the witnesses examined at the hearing of the suit has not been referred to us but only the evidence of the relevant witnesses. We, therefore, concur in the appreciation of the evidence by the learned Additional District Judge and in his conclusion and finding that Gulabrao has not proved that he had purchased the properties in question with his own funds.

We, therefore, hold that the finding of the learned Additional District Judge that the properties referred to in the sale-deeds P-23, D-5, D-6 and D-7 are properties of the joint family in which the plaintiffs have admittedly 2/5th share, and that the properties are not the self-acquired properties of Gulabrao is correct. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Cross-objections have also been filed by respondent Ramji who was original plaintiff No. 1, in regard to an amount of Rs. 4,600 said to have been recovered by the appellant Gulabrao by selling the oranges in 1950-51 to Sheikh Subhan, a dealer in oranges. The respondent Ramji claimed Rs. 920 as 1/5th share in this amount of Rs. 4,600. The claim made in the cross-objections is clearly unfounded because in the plaint itself there is no reference to this amount of Rs. 4,600. In the Schedule B attached to the plaint, which refers to movable property, item No. 13 refers to cash and other miscellaneous articles in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 i.e. Shamrao and Gulabrao. This amount is shown only as Rs. 2,000. In the plaint no case has been made out that any amount representing sale proceeds of oranges is with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and is subject to partition as joint family property. In the cross-objection the amount is referred to as Rs. 4,600 recovered by Gulabrao by selling oranges in 1950-51, but it is not the case of Gunderao (P.W. 7) that the orange garden of the joint family used to fetch Rs. 4,600 in any year. According to him the garden used to fetch only Rs. 500 to Rs. 700 per year. There is no evidence therefore to show that the amount shown in the account books of Subhan as sale price of oranges represents sale price of the oranges of the joint family gardens at Khumari. The cross-objections are clearly therefore ungrounded and are dismissed with costs.

In the result, both the appeal and the cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Appeal and cross-objections dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Secs. 173, 190(1)(b)—Bombay Police Manual, Rule 203; Summary "A", "B", "C"—Investigating Officer in investigation of cognizable offence not filing charge-sheet and in submitting report under s. 173 requesting issue of Summary "A", "B" or "C"—Whether magistrate can direct such Officer to submit charge-sheet.

A magistrate has jurisdiction to direct an Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet when that officer in the investigation of a cognizable offence has not filed a charge-sheet and has in submitting his report under s. 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, requested that Summary "A", "B" or "C" be issued.

SHAH J. This reference raises a question of some importance about the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to direct an Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet when that Officer in the investigation of a cognizable offence has not filed a charge-sheet and has in submitting his report under s. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requested that Summary "A", "B" or "C" be issued.

We may briefly set out the facts which give rise to this reference. Police Constable Murlidhar Goverdhan Patel, attached to the Thana Prohibition Department, was found drunk in the house of one Gunyabai. Investigation was commenced in respect of this incident and a final report was submitted by the Investigating Officer to the Judicial Magistrate, F. C., Thana, requesting that "A" summary be issued. The reasons in support of the request were:—

(1) That the accused was not found in personal possession of illicit liquor.

(2) That there was also no evidence to show if he was found drunk in a public place.

(3) That the main witnesses in the case were interested against the prosecution and they may turn hostile because they were themselves prosecuted for an offence under the Prohibition Act.

(4) That there was no evidence to connect the accused with the liquor bottles that were found in the house of Gunyabai.

The Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Thana, observed that the facts of the case did not warrant the assumption made by the Investigating Officer in asking for "A" Summary, and directed that a charge-sheet be sent up against the constable without making "the witnesses as hostile even before they were given a fair opportunity to come before the Court and depose on oath."

Against this order a revision application was preferred by the State to the Court of Session at Thana. The learned Sessions Judge has made a reference to this Court recommending that the order of the trial Magistrate be set aside, and in the alternative, "C" Summary be granted on the report made by the Investigating Officer.

The Government Pleader, appearing in support of the reference, contends that a Magistrate has no power to call for a charge-sheet from a Police Officer, who after investigating a cognizable case has submitted a report that a summary "A, B or C" be issued. It is urged that the opinion of the Investigating Officer investigating a cognizable offence that the evidence does not warrant the submission of a charge-sheet against the person accused of an offence is binding on the Magistrate and the latter is incompetent to call upon the Officer to submit a charge-sheet when the Investigating Officer asks for a Summary. The learned Government Pleader has in support of his submission invited our attention to a number of decisions, but he has fairly conceded that some of these decisions contain mere dicta which were strictly not necessary for the decision of those cases. Before we refer to these authorities, we may examine the scheme of the Code relating to the investigation of offences. Chapter XIV of the Code falls in Part V which deals with the information to the police and their powers to investigate. A police-officer is empowered to investigate into any cognizable offence without the order of a Magistrate. In respect of a non-cognizable offence, the police-officer has no power without an order from a Magistrate to commence investigation. Where a police-officer receives information about, or has reason to suspect the commission of a cognizable offence, he must forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police-report and to proceed in person, or depute one of his subordinate officers to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and, if necessary, to take measures, for the discovery and arrest of the offender (s. 157). A Magistrate receiving a report from a police-officer relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, may direct an investigation or, if he thinks fit, at once proceed, or depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to proceed, to hold a preliminary inquiry into, or otherwise to dispose of, the case in manner provided by the Code (s. 159). Power is also conferred upon certain Magistrates to record statements or confessions in the course of the investigation under Chapter XIV (s. 164). When a search is made by the Investigating Officer, the record of the search must be sent to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence (s. 165). If the investigation cannot be completed within twenty-four hours, the Investigating Officer must send the accused forthwith to the nearest Judicial Magistrate together with a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the case and power is conferred upon the Magistrate, whether or not he has jurisdiction to try the case, to authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as the Magistrate thinks fit (s. 167). If the Investigating Officer, upon investigation comes to the conclusion that there is no sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of the accused to a Magistrate, if such person is in custody, to release him on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, as such officer may direct, to appear, if and when so required, before a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report and to try the accused or commit him for trial (s. 169). If it appears to the Investigating Officer that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground, the Officer is bound to forward the accused in custody to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report and to try the accused or commit him for trial (s. 170). An Investigating Officer must maintain a diary of his proceedings, setting forth the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him, and a statement of the circumstances ascertained through his investigation and a Criminal Court in the course of a case under inquiry or trial in such Court, has the power to call for the police diaries for the purpose of aiding it during such inquiry or trial (s. 172). It is also prescribed that every investigation shall be completed without unnecessary delay, and as soon as it is completed, the Investigating Officer shall forward to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report, a report setting forth the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case (s. 173).

From this resume of the relevant provisions of the Code, it is evident that at every stage of investigation by a police officer in a cognizable offence, the Magistrate has the opportunity of supervising the investigation. The Legislature has imposed a duty upon the police officer to give intimation to the Magistrate about the information received by him and to produce the accused within 24 hours after the commission of the offence, if the accused is arrested; if a search is made a report is required forthwith to be submitted to the Magistrate; and after the investigation is completed, the police officer is bound to submit a report to the Magistrate of his investigation. If during the course of the investigation by the police, in a cognizable case, a Magistrate has power to supervise the investigation, we are unable to accept the submission of the learned Government Pleader that the opinion formed by a police officer in the course of the investigation as to the complicity of a person charged with the commission of the offence, is conclusive and cannot be called in question by the Magistrate to whom a report is submitted under s. 173. The Legislature has not used the expression "Charge-sheet" anywhere in the Code. By s. 173, a final report is required to be made by a police officer making an investigation in a cognizable offence or when so directed in a non-cognizable offence. By such a report, the Investigating Officer may report that action be taken against the accused for the offence alleged to have been committed—and such a report is a charge-sheet—or that the papers be ordered to be filed because the evidence does not warrant the initiation of a judicial proceeding against the accused. The Bombay Police Manual classifies the orders which may be requested by the Investigating Officer when he is of the opinion that no judicial proceeding need be initiated, as Summaries "A," "B" and "C." A request for "A" Summary is to be made when the police officer investigating the case is of the view that the offence is true but undetected and where there is no clue whatever about the culprits or property or where the accused is known but there is no evidence to justify his being sent up for trial. Request for "B" Summary is to be made when the complaint is maliciously false and for "C" Summary when the complaint is neither true nor false, that is, due to mistake of facts or is of a civil nature.

An order passed by a Magistrate on a report under s. 173(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code requesting that a Summary "A," "B" or "C" be issued is in its very nature a judicial order and not an administrative order. When a report is submitted to a Magistrate under s. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a police officer praying that a Summary of the nature described in r. 203 of the Bombay Police Manual, the Magistrate must act judicially and pass such order on the report as the circumstances may warrant. The Magistrate is not bound to issue the Summary which is asked for; he is not bound to issue a Summary at all. In Boywalla v. Sorab Engineer,¹ Beaumont C.J. observed (p. 532):—

"...When, in the case of a man who has been arrested and released on bail the police-officer reports that there appears to be no case, and invites the Magistrate to discharge the man, the Magistrate is not bound to act upon the police view. He can undoubtedly say: 'I will have a further inquiry in this matter. I think the Police are wrong in suggesting that the accused should be discharged'."

Again it was held in *State v. Shankar Bhaurao*² that a Magistrate who is invited to give "B" Summary, may on the evidence issue "A" Summary. These authorities abundantly establish that a Magistrate dealing with a report of a police officer is not bound by the opinion formed by that officer, and is not bound to issue a Summary merely because it is asked for, and that the Magistrate is bound to deal with the report judicially.

The learned Government Pleader contends that jurisdiction with which the Magistrate is invested to deal with and dispose of the report judicially, does not import the power to order that a charge-sheet be lodged against the accused. The sole argument urged in support of this contention is that there is no such power conferred by the Code upon a Magistrate. In our view, absence of a provision expressly conferring such a power is not decisive. Upon a report of the facts which constitute an offence, by a police officer, a Magistrate has jurisdiction to take cognizance. The report may be one in the form of a chargesheet, or one inviting the Magistrate to issue a Summary. After taking cognizance the Magistrate may in exercise of the powers under s. 204 issue process, if in his view that course is warranted. Even though there is no express provision in that behalf, the Magistrate if he is satisfied that process may not issue, he may discharge the accused. The learned Government Pleader concedes—and in our judgment he is right in so doing—that if a Magistrate, on a report made under s. 173, that Summary be issued, decides to take cognizance of the offence in exercise of the powers under s. 190(1)(b), the police officer will be bound to assist the Magistrate in the inquiry and the trial by making available the witnesses. If a police officer is bound to assist the Magistrate in trying the case when the latter takes cognizance in exercise of power under s. 190(1)(b), we fail to appreciate why the police officer is not bound to submit a charge-sheet in a cognizable case when the filing of such a charge-sheet is ordered by the Magistrate. Normally, a Magistrate to whom a report is submitted will give the fullest consideration to the opinion of a police officer who has collected the evidence in the course of an investigation, and he may not lightly call for a charge-sheet when the police officer has on the opinion formed by him chosen not to file one. But the Magistrate has in a proper case power to demand that a charge-sheet be filed and, in our judgment, there is nothing in the scheme of the Code which justifies the view that the Magistrate who has power to supervise the investigation, has no power to correct the opinion of the police officer, though he has, as is conceded, power to ignore the police officer's opinion. We would require some strong indication in the Code which may justify the view which the learned Government Pleader is asking us to adopt, but none such is to be found in the Code.

We may now briefly refer in chronological sequence to the authorities to which our attention was invited. In *Shukadova Sahay v. Hamid Mian*³, it was assumed that a Magistrate has power to call upon the Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet, and that such an order was a judicial order. In Venkata Subba v. Anjanayulu,⁴ it was observed that (p. 673):

"...The Police must be allowed to form their own opinion of a case when submitting their report and a Magistrate cannot ask them to change their opinion merely because he does not agree with them."

It appears that in that case counsel for the accused and counsel for the prosecution, conceded that the order directing the police to submit a charge-sheet was not a legal order. The decision, given, without any reasons and on a concession made at the Bar, is of little assistance.

The next case to which our attention was invited is Raghunath Puri v. Emperor.⁵ In that case Mr. Justice Mohammad Noor observed that (p. 78):

"...An order calling for a charge-sheet on a report under S. 202 when the Police drew up a first information report is an order under S. 204, Criminal P.C., and in practice is an order for issue of process."

The learned Judge also observed that (p. 76):

"...When such a report is received by the Magistrate, empowered under S. 190(b) he takes cognizance of the offence under that section. Even if the accused is not sent up, i.e., not a charge-sheet but a final report is sent, the Magistrate when he applies his mind to that report may take cognizance of the offence and if he wants to place the accused on trial he can issue his process."

This case does not support the view that a charge-sheet cannot be demanded by a Magistrate when considering the report under s. 173. In fact, it is assumed that a charge-sheet may be ordered to be filed by a Magistrate, when a final report under s. 173, Criminal Procedure Code, is submitted to him. In Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Mukhtadin,⁶ a Division Bench of the Assam High Court held that (p. 274):

"...There is no provision of law by which a Magistrate is empowered to direct the Police to send up a charge-sheet against an accused person against whom an information has been lodged. A Magistrate is only empowered to take cognizance of the case in accordance with s. 190, Code of Criminal Procedure."

In the view of the Court there is no provision of law by which a Magistrate is empowered to direct the police to send up a charge-sheet against an accused person against whom an information has been lodged, and that the Magistrate is only empowered to take cognizance of cases in accordance with s. 190, Criminal Procedure Code. As we have already stated, the absence of an express provision of this nature is not decisive of the competence of the Magistrate to call for a charge-sheet.

The next case to which our attention was invited is *Rama Shankar v. State of U.P.*⁷ In that case the Allahabad High Court took the view that (p. 527) :

"...An investigating officer is required by S. 173 of the Code to submit a charge-sheet, but this does not render his act of submitting a charge-sheet a judicial act.

A court has no judicial control over investigations and over the manner, or the circumstances, in which an investigating officer makes his report under S. 173. An investigating officer's act is wholly administrative. There is, therefore, nothing to prevent his submitting another report in supersession of an earlier one."

This case is not an authority for the proposition that a Magistrate who is asked to issue a Summary may not call for a charge-sheet. The observations relating to the absence of judicial control over the investigation by a police officer were made in support of the view that even when a report has been made and accepted, another report may be made by the police in the same investigation. In Akshoy Kumar v. Jogesh Chandra,⁸ it was observed by the Calcutta High Court that:

"...When a petition of complaint is filed before a Magistrate he has two alternative courses open to him and can follow either of them at his option. He may examine the complainant on oath and proceed under Chap. 18 or he may simply direct an investigation by the police under S. 156(3) and proceed under Chap. 14."

It was further observed that:

"When the police finds the case to be false and reports accordingly, the Magistrate has nothing further to do in the chain of that proceeding. He is in seisin of nothing and neither the police, nor anybody else is complaining before him and he could not entertain" a petition filed by the complainant.

This case again has no bearing on the question under examination; and even the observations relied upon do not support the contention of the Government Pleader.

In a recent judgment of the Orissa High Court in *Hrushikesh v. Krushna Chandra*⁹ it was observed that there is nothing illegal if a Magistrate revises his opinion and calls for a charge-sheet from the police even if the final report of the police is once accepted by him. Narsinham C.J. observed that the consistent view of the Patna High Court was that the Magistrate has the power to call for a charge-sheet after the final report has been accepted by him.

In our view, the power to call for a charge-sheet from the Investigating Officer who has asked for a Summary after investigating a cognizable case is vested in the Magistrate because the Magistrate is required by law to deal with the report made to him judicially and also because the Magistrate has supervisory control over the investigation by a police officer in the course of the investigation of an offence. With respect, we are unable to agree with the view of the Assam and the Madras High Courts that a Magistrate cannot order an Investigating Officer in a cognizable offence to submit a charge-sheet.

We may, however, observe that a Magistrate may not, even though he has the power, lightly pass an order that a charge-sheet be filed. It is only after a careful consideration of the materials placed by a police officer in his report if a Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficiently compelling grounds which require him to disagree with the opinion of the police officer and to reject the prayer for a Summary asked for that he will be justified in calling for a charge-sheet.

On the view taken by us, there will be no order on the Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge.

CRIMINAL APPEAL.

Before Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Naik.

VITHAL KRISHNAJI NIVENDKAR v. THE STATE.*

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (Bom. LVII of 1947), Sec. 18(1)—Whether expression "consideration" in s. 18(1) restricted to consideration other than pecuniary consideration—"Other like sum," meaning of expression.

The expression "consideration" in s. 18(1) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, is used in its normal connotation and includes pecuniary as well as non-pecuniary consideration.

Karamsey Kanji v. Velji Virji,¹ (opinion to the contrary expressed in), not agreed with.

The expression "other like sum" in s. 18(1) of the Act must be read ejusdem generis with fine or premium.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

S. B. Bhasme, for the appellant-accused.

V. T. Gambhirwala, Assistant Government Pleader, for the State.

SHAH J. The accused, Vithal Krishnaji Nivendkar, was tried before the Presidency Magistrate, 7th Court, Dadar, Bombay, for an offence under s. 18(1) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act LVII of 1947. The learned Magistrate convicted the accused of the offence charged and sentenced him to suffer simple imprisonment for one day and to pay a fine of Rs. 3,251 and in default of payment of fine to suffer simple imprisonment for one month. Against that order of conviction and sentence, this appeal has been preferred.

The complainant is one Parduman Ramsingh, who migrated to Bombay sometime in the year 1949. In November 1957 the complainant came to learn that residential accommodation in Waghe Hall at St. Xavier Road at Parel was available. The complainant went to the office of the Tillori Kunbi Samajonnati Sangh and met the accused, who was the President of the Sangh and responsible for the management of the building of the Sangh. The accused demanded Rs. 4,000 as pugree and Rs. 85 p.m. as rent for granting on rent residential accommodation in the building of the Sangh to the complainant. There was some bargaining between the complainant and the accused and ultimately an amount of Rs. 3,251 was settled as the amount, to be paid by the complainant to the accused as consideration for granting the tenancy. The accused asked the complainant to write a letter dictated by the accused wherein it was recited that the amount of Rs. 3,251 was to be a donation by the complainant to the Sangh. At the date of these negotiations, the building of the Sangh was under construction and it was expected to be ready sometime in February 1958. In January 1958 the complainant paid three amounts of Rs. 1,000, Rs. 500 and Rs. 751, and he paid Rs. 1,000 on May 4, 1958. The complainant occupied two rooms leased to him in Tillori Kunbi Sangh Waghe Hall building on May 1, 1958. The accused gave to the complainant a consolidated receipt for Rs. 3,251. Thereafter the complainant also paid Rs. 85 as rent for one month and a receipt was given by the accused. The complainant then filed a complaint in the Court of Presidency Magistrate, 7th Court, against the accused charging the accused with having committed an offence under s. 18(1) of the Act LVII of 1947. The accused admitted that he had received the amount of Rs. 3,251. He, however, pleaded that he was not the landlord and that, in any event, the amount was received by him as a donation to the Trust and not as consideration for granting the tenancy. The learned Judge, on the evidence, rejected the contentions raised by the accused and convicted and sentenced him as stated hereinbefore.

Section 18(1) of the Act LVII of 1947 in so far as it is material provides:

"If any landlord either himself or through any person acting or purporting to act on his behalf or if any person acting or purporting to act on behalf of the landlord receives any fine, premium or other like sum or deposit or any consideration other than the standard rent or the permitted increases, in respect of the grant, renewal or continuance of a lease of any premises, ...shall, on conviction, be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and shall also be punished with fine which shall not be less than the amount of the fine, premium or sum or deposit or the value of the consideration received by him..."

A landlord receiving unlawful charges or a person on behalf of the landlord receiving unlawful charges is liable to be punished under s. 18(1) of the Act. The accused is not the landlord within the meaning of s. 5 of the Bombay Act LVII of 1947, but admittedly he has received Rs. 3,251 from the complainant on behalf of the landlord.

Is the amount received by the accused fine or premium or other like sum or deposit or any consideration other than the standard rent? The amount is not received as fine, and we will assume that the amount was not received as premium: if it is not fine or premium it is not "other like sum" because in the context in which it is used the expression "other like sum" must be read ejusdem generis with fine or premium. But, in our judgment, the amount received by the accused is "any consideration other than the standard rent...in respect of the grant of a lease of...premises". The expression "consideration" is used in its normal connotation and is not restricted to consideration other than pecuniary consideration.

We are unable to agree with the opinion tentatively expressed by Chagla C.J. in *Karamsey Kanji v. Velji Virji*¹ on which Mr. Bhasme relies. In that case, the learned Chief Justice has observed that there was considerable force in the submission that the consideration contemplated in s. 18(1) of the Act LVII of 1947 is not a pecuniary consideration but consideration other than pecuniary. The observation was not strictly necessary for the purpose of that case; and, we may, with respect, observe that there is nothing in the context in which the expression "consideration" occurs in s. 18(1) of the Act, which warrants a restricted interpretation. In its normal connotation the expression "consideration" in the law of contracts, includes consideration pecuniary as well as non-pecuniary, and there is no sufficient indication in the context which may justify us in restricting its connotation to non-pecuniary consideration. We are unable to hold that the penalty clause, which requires the Court to impose a fine which shall not be less than the value of consideration, supports the view that the expression "consideration" was used in a restricted sense.

The contention of the accused that, in any event, there was no nexus between the donation of Rs. 3,251 and grant of the tenancy of the premises in Waghe Hall has no substance. There is clear evidence, on the record, of the complainant and it does not appear to have been shaken in cross-examination, that the accused had as consideration for granting a tenancy of premises in the Waghe Hall demanded initially an amount of Rs. 4,000 as pugree and ultimately he reduced his demand to Rs. 3,251. The learned Magistrate accepted that evidence and we see no reason to differ from him. If acting on behalf of the Sangh, the accused, as its president, demanded from the complainant a certain amount for giving to the complainant in lease a part of the building of the Sangh, in our judgment, it is consideration in respect of the grant of a lease within the meaning of s. 18(1) of Act LVII of 1947. There is, on the evidence, a clear nexus established between the demand of what is called euphemistically donation, and the grant of the lease.

Our attention was invited by Mr. Bhasme to the decision of the Supreme Court in *Tolaram Belumal v. State of Bombay*², and reliance was placed upon the following passage (p. 1209):

"...The section does not make the intention punishable; it makes an act punishable which act is related to existence of a lease. It does not make receipt of money on an executory contract punishable; on the other hand, it only makes receipt of money on the grant, renewal or continuance of the lease of any premises punishable and unless the lease comes into existence, no offence can be said to have been committed by the person receiving the money", and also upon the view that the words "in respect of" used in s. 18(1) of the Bombay Act LVII of 1947, in their widest import must mean "relating to" or "with reference to" and that this relationship must be predicated of the grant, removal or continuation of a lease, and unless a lease comes into existence simultaneously or near about the time the money is received, it cannot be said that the receipt was "in respect of" the grant of a lease. In that case a person who was constructing a building, received from his prospective tenant Rs. 2,400 as consideration under an executory agreement to lease certain rooms in the building when completed, and it was held that the executory contract was not hit by the provisions of s. 18. But we are not, in this case, concerned with a mere executory contract pursuant to which a lease has not "actually come into existence". On May 1, 1959, the premises occupied by the complainant were in existence and a receipt was given by the accused in respect of the payments made and the premises were in fact given on lease to the complainant by the accused and the complainant occupied the same as tenant of the Sangh. In our view, the receipt of the money in respect of which an acknowledgment was given on May 1, 1958, coupled with the grant of the tenancy on and from that date made the payment of money consideration in respect of the grant of the lease of the premises within the meaning of s. 18(1) of the Act LVII of 1947.

On that view of the case, the learned Magistrate was, in our judgment, right in convicting the accused for the offence under s. 18(1) of the Act LVII of 1947. We, therefore, confirm the conviction of the accused and the sentence passed upon him. We give one month's time from this day to the accused to pay the fine. The appeal is dismissed. Interim stay vacated.

Appeal dismissed.

DIGAMBAR TEJIRAM PARDESHI.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Secs. 73, 63(2); O. XXI, r. 72—Set off allowed by Court to decree-holder under O. XXI, r. 72, who has purchased property of judgment-debtor—Whether set off affects right, to rateable distribution of purchase money, of another decree-holder who had applied for execution of his decree to another Court and had attached same property before its sale—Liability cast upon decree-holder who is allowed set off to refund amount if required for rateable distribution whether affected by s. 63(2).

A set-off allowed by a Court under O. XXI, r. 72, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to a decree-holder, who has purchased the property of his judgment-debtor, cannot affect the right under s. 73 of the Code to rateable distribution of the purchase money of another decree-holder, who had applied for execution of his decree to another Court and had got the same property attached before the date of its sale.

Section 63(2) of the Civil Procedure Code does not in any way affect the liability cast upon the decree-holder, who is allowed a set-off under O. XXI, r. 72(2), of the Code, to refund or pay back the amount, if it is required for rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Code.

ONE Digambar (opponent No. 1) obtained a money decree in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Poona, for Rs. 20,348, against opponents Nos. 2 and 3 on July 26, 1952. Opponent No. 1 had obtained interim attachment before judgment of two house properties of opponents Nos. 2 and 3 situate at Pen and Varsayi on April 19, 1951. This attachment was confirmed on July 26, 1952. Opponent No. 1 then got the decree transferred to the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Alibag, and filed a darkhast on September 9, 1952, for sale of the aforesaid properties. In the meantime Ramchandra (petitioner) obtained a money-decree against opponents Nos. 2 and 3 in the Pen Court and filed a darkhast in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Pen, and attached the house at Pen and brought it for sale. The petitioner purchased the house with the Court's permission for the final bid of Rs. 7,100 and as he was allowed a set off he brought back in Court Rs. 4,430-15-9 out of the bid amount. The sale was confirmed on July 9, 1954, and the surplus was ordered to be paid to opponents Nos. 2 and 3. One Anandibai (opponent No. 4) filed a suit against opponent No. 3 and had the surplus amount attached. By a consent decree opponent No. 4 and opponent No. 3 both shared this amount half and half and withdrew that amount from the Court at Pen. Opponent No. 4 also filed a darkhast in the Court at Pen against opponent No. 2 and brought to sale the Varsayi house. Opponent No. 4 purchased it with the Court's permission for Rs. 3,001 and obtained a set off for that whole amount as her decree was for a larger amount.

Opponent No. 1 filed an application under s. 73 read with s. 63 of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of the assets realised in the two darkhasts in the Court at Pen. This application was opposed by the petitioner. The trial Judge granted the application.

The petitioner applied in revision to the High Court. The application along with Civil Revision Application No. 827 of 1956 was heard by Shah and Gokhale JJ. Their Lordships referred the application to a larger bench. Shah J. delivered the following referring judgment on November 13, 1957:—

SHAH J. In these two revision applications against an order passed by the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Alibag, a question as to the true interpretation of s. 63(2) of the Civil Procedure Code arises. By s. 63(1) of the Code it is provided:

"Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached."

By sub-s. (2) of s. 63 it is provided:

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees."

The property of the judgment-debtor was sold by a Court of the lower grade and the decree-holder was given leave to bid and set off the amount due to him under the decree and the question arises whether the assets available for rateable distribution are the balance of the price bid at the auction after such set off. It was held by a Division Bench of this Court in *Shidappa Lazmanna v. Gurusangaya Akhandaya*¹ that the order of a Court of the higher grade calling upon the decree-holder, who has purchased the property and has been permitted to set off under O. XXI, r. 72(2), of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court of the lower grade, to refund the decretal amount which he was allowed to set off was without jurisdiction, as the decree must be considered to be satisfied to that extent under O. XXI, r. 72(2), of the Civil Procedure Code. It was further held that the expression "any proceedings" in s. 63(2) includes an order made under O. XXI, r. 72, for set off. This view appears to be inconsistent with the opinion of another Division Bench of this Court in *Dhirendrarao Krishnarao v. Virbhadrappa*². Sir John Beaumont C.J. delivering the judgment in that case, without referring to the earlier judgment in Shidappa's case on this point observed as follows (p. 313):

"A preliminary point was taken by the applicant that no rateable distribution could be ordered because of the direction that he be allowed to set-off the amount of his decree against the purchase money, such order being said to be 'proceeding' within section 63(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. That order was made under power conferred by Order XXI, rule 72(2), of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the order is, in my opinion, mere machinery, which does not affect the rights of third parties. Apart from the order allowing set-off, the decree-holder, who purchased, would have to bring the purchase money into Court and then he would be paid, as far as the moneys went, the amount due to him on his decree. To avoid this procedure the Court can allow set-off, but all that the order allowing such set-off means is that the decree-holder can exercise his right by setting off the amount of his decree against that portion of the proceeds of sale to which he is entitled. He cannot set-off against a portion of the proceeds of sale which belongs to other parties."

The learned Chief Justice expressly approved of a judgment of this Court in Navaj v. Totaram.³ It may be observed that Navaj's case was also decided by Mr. Justice Patkar and Mr. Justice Broomfield who decided Shidappa's case. But in Navaj's case the facts did not invite the application of s. 63 of the Code. In that case the property of the judgment-debtor was sold and the decree-holder was allowed set off. An application for rateable distribution of the assets realised was thereafter made, and the Court held that the set-off allowed to the decree-holder was subject to the order for rateable distribution which the Court may make, and that the decree-holder who had purchased the property and was allowed set-off was liable to bring into Court the amount for which he was allowed set-off, and the entire amount realised at the sale must be rateably distributed. It was observed in that case that an order under O. XXI, r. 72, of the Civil Procedure Code is procedural and is meant only for the convenience of the decree-holder who is permitted to bid at an auction. The view taken by this Court in Shidappa's case has not been accepted by other Courts. In *Iswardas v. Corporation of Madras*⁴ the Madras High Court accepted the judgment in the case of Dhirendrarao Krishnarao v. Virbhadrappa as correctly laying down the law. Similarly, in Vishnu Ram v. Bank of Bihar,⁵ the Allahabad High Court also appears to have accepted the view of Dhirendrarao's case as correctly interpreting s. 63. The view of the Nagpur High Court in *Kesheorao Balwantrao Deshpande v. Mulchand Shekulal Agarwal*⁶ is also inconsistent with the judgment in Shidappa's case.

As the question is of some importance, we direct that this case be placed before the learned Chief Justice for constituting a larger Bench for decision of the question

"Whether an order for set-off passed under Order XXI, rule 72, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is a 'proceeding' within the meaning of section 63(2) of the Code."

The question was heard by a full bench composed of Chainani C.J. and S. T. Desai and Tarkunde JJ.

G. S. Gupta (Sr.), for the applicants, in both the Civil Revision Applications.

H. R. Gokhale, with V. N. Gadgil, for opponent No. 1, in both the Civil Revision Applications.

B. W. Adik, for opponent No. 4, in Civil Revision Application No. 473 of 1956.

CHAINANI C.J. The question referred to the full bench is:

"Whether an order for set-off passed under Order XXI, rule 72, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is a 'proceeding' within the meaning of section 63(2) of the Code?"

The real question which arises in the two cases, in which this reference has been made to the full bench and in other similar cases, however, is whether a decree-holder, who has been allowed a set-off under O. XXI, r. 72, can be called upon to pay in Court the amount of set-off so as to make it available for rateable distribution amongst all holders of decrees against the same judgment-debtor under the provisions of s. 73 of the Code. In consultation with the learned advocates for all the parties, we have, therefore, reformulated the question for our decision as under:

"Whether by reason of sub-section (2) of section 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a set-off allowed by a Court under Order XXI, rule 72, to a decree-holder, who has purchased the property of his judgment-debtor, can affect the right under section 73 to rateable distribution of the purchase money of another decree-holder, who had applied for execution of his decree to another Court and had got the same property attached before the date of its sale?"

The provisions with regard to rateable distribution are contained in s. 73. Sub-section (1) of this section provides that, where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made applications to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed amongst all such persons. There is a proviso to this section "with which we are not concerned in this case. Sub-section (2) of this section states that, where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets. This section provides for rateable distribution of the assets realised by a Court amongst decree-holders, who have made applications to the same Court for execution of their decrees. Where, in execution of a decree, the Court sells a property belonging to the judgment-debtor, the assets become available to the Court and can, therefore, be said to be held by the Court as soon as the property is sold. (See Navaj v. Totaram.¹) If, therefore, the property belonging to a judgment-debtor is sold in execution of a decree passed against him, another creditor will not be entitled to rateable distribution of the sale proceeds, unless he has also applied for execution of his decree before the date of sale.

Order XXI, r. 72, which is one of the rules beginning with r. 64 relating to sale, provides that no holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property. Sub-rule (2) of this rule states that, where a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase-money and the amount due on the decree may, subject to the provisions of s. 73, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly. This sub-rule, which is a rule of convenience, empowers the Court to allow a decree-holder to set off against the purchase price the amount due to him on his decree. Instead of his having to deposit the entire amount of purchase money, he may then deposit only the excess, if any, of the purchase money over the decretal amount. The effect of this sub-rule, to use the words of Vivian Bose J. in Kesheorao v. Mulchand,² is that, instead of the Court actually taking the money in cash from the decree-holder and handing it back to him again, it treats this as having been done and its order amounts to what would be a credit and debit entry in a book of accounts. There are what have been called in some cases a notional receipt of the purchase amount by the Court and a notional payment of the decretal amount to the decree-holder. This concession, which is given to a decree-holder, cannot, however, affect the rights of other parties in respect of execution of their decrees. This is specifically provided in the sub-rule, which states that the set-off is subject to the provisions of s. 73. If, therefore, a decree-holder has been allowed a set-off, even though the applications for the execution of decrees made by the other decree-holders were pending at the same time, the former will have to make available the amount, which he has set off, so that it might be rateably distributed. He takes the amount by way of set-off subject to the rights of other decree-holders under s. 73. There is, therefore, an obligation upon him to refund the amount, if the other decree-holders, who are entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73, have made applications for execution of their decrees before the date of sale.

This is the legal position, when applications for execution of decrees by different decree-holders have been made to the same Court. Where, however, applications have been made to different Courts by persons, who have obtained decrees against the same judgment-debtor, the provisions of law, which are applicable, are those contained in s. 63. This section is in the following terms:

"63. (1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees."

This section does not lay down the principles according to which or the mode in which rateable distribution is to be made. It only provides for the Court, which has to make rateable distribution, where applications for execution of decrees have been made to more than one Court. In such cases, the duty is cast upon the Court of highest grade or where there is no difference in grade between the Courts, on the Court under whose decree the property was first attached, to receive and realize the assets of the judgment-debtor. In effect, therefore, the duty of executing all decrees and distributing the assets rateably amongst different creditors is cast upon the Court of the highest grade or the Court under whose decree the property was first attached. In order to enable it to perform this duty, such Court may, if the property has been already sold by another Court, call upon that Court to send to it the sale proceeds of the property (See *Deekappa v. Chandasappa*³ and *Shidappa v. Gurusangaya*⁴). The manner in which the assets of a judgment-debtor are to be distributed between rival decree-holders is laid down in s. 73. Consequently, after receiving the sale proceeds from another Court, such Court will adjudicate upon the claims of the various decree-holders and distribute the amount between them in accordance with the provisions of s. 73.

We must next consider what the position is when the other Court has allowed a decree-holder to set off the decretal amount against the purchase money in satisfaction of his decree. If all the applications for execution of different decrees are made to the same Court and if that Court has, through mistake, oversight or otherwise, permitted one of the decree-holders to set-off the purchase money against the amount due to him on his decree, the Court is competent to direct him to deposit in Court the amount which he has been allowed to set-off, so that the other competing decree-holders may share it along with him. For under sub-r. (2) of r. 72 of O. XXI a set-off can only be allowed subject to the provisions of s. 73. This clearly means that the set-off is allowed on the condition that the decree-holder will pay back the amount, which he is allowed to set-off, if it is required for rateable distribution. The position will not in any way be different, when the applications for execution of different decrees have been made to different Courts and not to the same Court. Order XXI, r. 72 will apply in both the cases. The liability of the decree-holder to refund the amount arises under the condition on which he was allowed to set it off. It is not dependent on whether the applications for execution of various decrees were made to the same Court or to different Courts. Consequently, even when applications for execution of decrees have been made to different Courts, the decree-holder, who has been allowed a set-off, can be called upon to pay or deposit in Court the amount, if it is required for rateable distribution amongst various decree-holders under s. 73.

It has, however, been urged by Mr. Gupte that this cannot be done, because sub-s. (2) of s. 63 does not invalidate any proceedings taken by a Court executing any one of the various decrees against the same judgment-debtor. It is, however, not necessary to set aside or modify the order allowing a set-off before calling upon the decree-holder concerned to pay the amount, of which a set-off has been allowed to him. He was allowed to set-off the purchase amount subject to the condition mentioned in sub-r. (2) of r. 72, that is subject to the rights of other decree-holders to share the same amount under s. 73. The order permitting the set-off having been passed subject to the condition that the decree-holder would have to pay back the amount, if it is liable for rateable distribution under s. 73, in paying back the amount, he will only be complying with the order itself and the condition, subject to which by the order the set-off was allowed to him. The question of the order allowing the set-off being invalidated, therefore, does not arise.

This is also the view, which has been taken by the Madras High Court in Iswardas v. Corporation of Madras.⁵ At p. 1033 Venkatasubba Rao J. has observed as follows:

"...The fact that execution may be pending in more than one Court under section 63 can make no difference and the principle of that decision holds good. Now, turning to section 63(2), if the decree-holder purchaser is called upon to bring back the proceeds (as in our opinion he should be), what is the 'proceeding' that can be said to be thereby invalidated? As already stated, the purchase by the decree-holder does not confer upon him an unqualified right, but is subject to the terms of section 73; in other words, ... the very order of the Court, that is, the 'proceeding', did cast upon the decree-holder the duty to bring back any part of the proceeds when so required."

With respect, we agree with these observations.

Mr. Gupte has relied on the decision of Patkar and Broomfield JJ. in Shidappa v. Gurusangaya. In that case, it was held that if a decree-holder has been allowed a set-off and his decree is treated as satisfied, he cannot subsequently be called upon by another Court to refund the amount allowed to him as a set-off. It was observed that the word "proceeding" used in sub-s. (2) of s. 63 is wide enough to include not only the sale but also the order allowing the decree-holder to set off the decretal amount against the purchase price. Both Patkar J. and Broomfield J. delivered separate but concurring judgments. The learned Judges gave two reasons for the view that a Court could not direct a decree-holder to pay back the amount, which another Court had allowed him to set-off. The first reason was that there is no provision in the Code which entitles the other Court to order the decree-holder "to pay the amount of the set-off in Court in order that it might become assets held by the Court and available for rateable distribution." With respect, it seems that the learned Judges lost sight of the provisions contained in sub-r. (2) of r. 72, which specifically provide that every set-off, which is allowed under this rule, is subject to the provisions of s. 73. The other reason given was that the words "any proceeding" in sub-s. (2) of s. 63 mean not only the sale but also include the orders passed by the Court in connection with the sale. In regard to this second reason, a contrary view has been taken by another Division Bench of this Court in Dhirendrarao Krishnarao v. Virbhadrappa.⁶ In that case, Beaumont C.J. observed as follows (p. 313).

"A preliminary point was taken by the applicant that no rateable distribution could be ordered because of the direction that he be allowed to set-off the amount of his decree against the purchase money, such order being said to be 'proceeding' within section 63(2) of the Civil Procedure Code...and the order is, in my opinion, mere machinery, which does not affect the rights of third parties. Apart from the order allowing set-off, the decree-holder, who purchased, would have to bring the purchase money into Court and then he would be paid, as far the moneys went, the amount due to him on his decree. To avoid this procedure the Court can allow set-off, but all that the order allowing such set-off means is that the decree-holder can exercise his right by setting off the amount of his decree against that portion of the proceeds of sale to which he is entitled."

In the view, which we take, it is not necessary to decide whether the order made under sub-r. (2) of r. 72 allowing a set-off is "a proceeding" within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of s. 63. In our judgment, sub-s. (2) of s. 63 does not in any way affect the liability cast upon the decree-holder, who is allowed a set-off under sub-r. (2) of r. 72, to refund or pay back the amount, if it is required for rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Code. The object of s. 63 clearly is to avoid multiplicity of proceedings and to ensure equitable distribution of the assets of a judgment-debtor, which have been realised, amongst all his creditors. It does not lay down any principle of exclusion.

The reply to the question, which we have formulated for our decision, will, therefore, be in the negative.

Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (XXIV of 1951), Secs. 2(b), 9(1)—Cultivation by servants under supervision of separated father on behalf of his minor son—Whether such cultivation personal cultivation by son within s. 2(b)—Whether notice terminating tenancy under s. 9(1) given by telegram a valid notice—Party inviting decision of Revenue Tribunal on question of fact and advancing elaborate arguments on it—Whether such party can later challenge decision of Tribunal on such question on ground of want of jurisdiction of Tribunal.

A cultivation by servants under supervision of a separated father on behalf of his minor son is personal cultivation by the son within the meaning of s. 2(b) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

A notice given by telegram is a notice in writing within the meaning of s. 9(1) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

J. N. Chandurkar, for the petitioner.

S. V. Natu, for respondent No. 1.

TAMBE J. This is an application under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India by one Anna, son of Shivling of Pusad formerly a protected lessee of S. No. 130/1-B, situate at mouza Pusad. It arises out of a matter under the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, hereinafter referred to as the Act. Originally the petitioner had taken a lease from the joint family consisting of Baba and his two sons Vithal and Sambha, third son Motiram had already separated. Facts germane to the point we have to consider in brief are: On December 27, 1954, a partition was effected between Baba, Vithal and Sambha. It should be mentioned that Vithal is a minor boy, aged about 9 or 10 years. In this partition the aforesaid field fell to the share of Vithal. This partition amongst the members of the family was reduced to writing on that date and the document was registered on December 29, 1954. It appears that prior to the execution of the deed of partition on December 27, 1954, a notice was sent by Baba on behalf of Vithal under s. 9(1) of the Act intimating to the petitioner that the land was required by Vithal for personal cultivation and therefore it was proposed to terminate the tenancy as and from March 31, 1955. To remove the lacuna that this notice was prior to the date of the execution of the deed of partition, another notice by telegram was given on December 28, 1954. The petitioner then moved the Sub-Divisional Officer under s. 9(3) for a declaration that the aforesaid notices had no effect. He inter alia contended that the alleged partition was a mala fide one, it was only a cloak, Baba, Vithal and Sambha were all joint, they had more than 50 acres of land and, therefore, they were not entitled to give notice. It was also denied that Vithal wanted the land for personal cultivation. Another contention was also raised that the notice given after the partition by telegram was not a valid notice within the meaning of sub-s. (1) of s. 9. The Sub-Divisional Officer took a view that the notice dated December 22, 1954, being prior to the date of partition was not a valid notice; the notice dated December 28, 1954, being a notice by telegram was not a notice within the meaning of sub-s. (1) of s. 9 of the Act. In the alternative he held that the partition deed was registered on December 29, 1954; and therefore it took effect as and from December 29, 1954, the notice by telegram being a day before the date of partition was also not valid and in this view of the matter he allowed the application of the petitioner and gave a declaration that the notice given by the landlord Vithal under s. 9(1) of the Act was of no effect. Vithal took an appeal against this decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer to the Additional Deputy Commissioner, who disposed of the appeal on altogether a different ground. He did not agree with the finding of the Sub-Divisional Officer. He held that there was a partition, notice given on December 12, 1954, was a notice within the meaning of s. 9(1) and was perfectly a valid notice. He, however, took a view that even though the field in question had fallen to the share of Vithal he cannot be deemed to be a landholder inasmuch as his name was not recorded in the record of rights and he not having been recorded as a landholder was not a landholder within s. 9(1) of the Act competent to give notice. In this view of the matter and on grounds entirely different from those given by the Sub-Divisional Officer he dismissed the appeal. Vithal took a second appeal to the Bombay Revenue Tribunal. The learned Members of the Tribunal disposed of the second appeal again on a different ground. The Tribunal relying on its previous decision that partition was a transfer dismissed the appeal. Vithal then approached this Court by a petition under arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution. The view taken by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal that partition was a transfer was not maintained in *Manabai Hasi v. Ramchandra Dama and in view of that decision of this Court the order of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal was set aside and the case was remanded to the Tribunal for disposal according to law. On remand this appeal was disposed of by the Bombay Revenue Tribunal on November 26, 1958. It held that the partition was a genuine partition; notice dated December 28, 1954, was a valid notice within the meaning of s. 9(1) of the Act and consistently with this view it allowed the appeal, set aside the orders of the revenue authorities below and dismissed the application filed by the petitioner under s. 9(3) of the Act. It is against this order of the Bombay Revenue Tribunal that the petitioner has come to this Court.

Mr. J. N. Chandurkar, learned counsel for the petitioner, in the first instance contends that the Bombay Revenue Tribunal had committed an error of law in deciding the question of genuineness or otherwise of the partition; the Tribunal was not a Court of fact; there was no finding of fact recorded on this question either by the S. D. O. or the Collector and the Tribunal should, therefore, have remanded the case to the subordinate revenue authorities; it deciding this question of fact is beyond its jurisdiction, and the order of the tribunal is liable to be set aside. In support of his contention he relied on a decision reported in *Nagayya Gurupadayya v. Chayappa Santamappa*¹. In our opinion, this contention has very little merit. Even assuming that the Bombay Revenue Tribunal is not a Court of fact and had no jurisdiction to decide a question of fact the petitioner had never objected before the Tribunal that it should not go into this question of fact. On the other hand, from the order of the Tribunal it appears that elaborate arguments had been advanced on behalf of the petitioner on this question; the arguments had been considered by the Tribunal and ultimately it had recorded its aforesaid decision. A party who takes a chance before a Court or a Tribunal cannot later on turn round and say that the finding recorded is without jurisdiction. A division bench of this Court in *Gandhinagar Motor Transport Society v. State of Bombay*² has held that before a question of jurisdiction of a Tribunal is raised on a petition under arts. 226 and 227, objection to jurisdiction must be taken before the Tribunal whose order is being challenged. The petitioner not having done so, on the other hand, having chosen to invite a decision of the Tribunal on this question it is no more open to him to say that the decision of the Tribunal on this question of fact is without jurisdiction so far as this petition is concerned. The decision which is relied upon, Nagayya Gurupadayya v. Chayappa Santamappa is distinguishable on facts. Apart from the fact that it deals with another enactment, in that case the points which were argued before the Tribunal were only points of law, yet the Tribunal of its own accord recorded a finding on a question of fact on which there was no finding at all recorded by either of the revenue authorities below. That being the position, that order was set aside by the High Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under art. 227 of the Constitution and the case was remanded. Such is not the position here.

It is next contended by Mr. Chandurkar that Vithal, respondent No. 1, is only a minor; he is living with his father; the father is looking after his cultivation. In these circumstances it cannot be said that the landlord viz. Vithal requires the land for personal cultivation. Reference was made to certain extracts from a book on the basis of which he contends that the use of the expression 'requires' in sub-a. (1) of s. 9 connotes an element of necessity or urgency.

It cannot be said that there is any matter of urgency for the minor to cultivate the field when it is clear that it will not be possible for him to himself cultivate it. It is also contended by Mr. Chandurkar that the cultivation by the father is not the personal cultivation of the minor within the meaning of s. 2(b) of the Act. Now, it is not possible for us to accept that there could be no matter of necessity or urgency for the minor to get the field for personal cultivation even though he himself may not be able to cultivate it. It is a question of fact and that question has been decided against the petitioner. That finding has to be accepted.

In support of his other contention viz. that the cultivation by father is no personal cultivation by son within the meaning of s. 2(b), Mr. Chandurkar referred us to the decision in *Kisanlal Jiwanlal Nathani v. Bombay Revenue Tribunal*³, to which one of us (Tambe J.) was a party. This decision no doubt supports the contention that cultivation by the separated father on behalf of his minor son cannot be said to be a cultivation by a member of one's family. But, then, this is not the case here. The evidence is that cultivation is done by servants. It is only supervision over the servants that is done by the father on behalf of his minor son. That being the position, viz. that the actual cultivation being by the labour of servants it cannot be said that this is not a case of personal cultivation by son within the meaning of s. 2(b) of the Act. It cannot be also said that the minor does not require the land for his personal cultivation.

It is next contended that the notice given by telegram is not a notice in writing within the meaning of s. 9(1) of the Act. Mr. Chandurkar contends that what is intended is that the tenant must get a notice in writing from his landholder and he must be satisfied that it is really a notice sent to him by his landholder and his landholder wants the land. To accept such a contention, in our opinion, would be reading more than what s. 9 requires. The requirement of s. 9 is that the notice must be in writing. It cannot be disputed that the telegram is a writing. If at all any such dispute is raised that the telegram is not sent by the landholder it is a matter which could be decided as any other question of fact is decided. In our opinion, therefore, there is no case made out for interference with the findings of the Tribunal that the partition is genuine, that the land is required for personal cultivation by the minor and that the notice terminating the tenancy is a valid notice within the meaning of s. 9(1) of the Act.

In the result the petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Secs. 279, 337, 336—Accused prosecuted for offences under ss. 279 and 337—Offence under s. 337 compounded with Court's leave—Whether prosecution of accused under s. 279 can be continued.

Where the accused is prosecuted for offences under ss. 279 and 337 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, the compounding of the offences under s. 337 of the Code will not prevent the prosecution from being continued under s. 279 of the Code.

THE facts appear in the judgment.

V. T. Gambhirwala, Assistant Government Pleader, for the State.

P. S. Nadkarni, for the respondent-accused.

SHAH J. One Kamalkar Prabhakar Juvekar, who will hereinafter be referred to as the accused, was charged before the Presidency Magistrate, 12th Court, Bandra, Bombay, in case No. 1953/P of 1958, for offences punishable under ss. 279 and 337, Indian Penal Code. It was the case for the prosecution that on October 10, 1958, the accused drove S. K. M. M. Co.'s Bus No. BYL 4441 in a rash and negligent manner and caused injuries to one Balkrishna Ramchandra Payale. At the trial Payale and the accused purported to compound the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, and asked for the permission of the Court in that behalf. The trial Magistrate granted leave to compound and acquitted the accused of that charge. He then observed that the charge under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, also failed in view of the order of acquittal for the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, and in support of that view he relied upon an unreported decision of this Court in *Homi Jehangir Lali v. The State*². Against the order of acquittal for the offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, the State has appealed to this Court.

Section 279, Indian Penal Code, penalises rash driving or riding on a public way. A person who drives any vehicle or rides on any public way in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person is liable to be punished under s. 279, Indian Penal Code. This offence falls within Chap. XIV of the Indian Penal Code which is a chapter dealing with offences affecting public health, safety, convenience etc. An offence under s. 279 is essentially an offence against public safety. By s. 337, Indian Penal Code, causing hurt by an act endangering life or personal safety of others is penalised. By that section, whoever causes hurt to any person by doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others is liable to be punished in the manner provided thereby. This section occurs in Chap. XVI, which deals with offences affecting the human body. Under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, the maximum sentence which may be imposed is rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. Under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, the maximum sentence which may be imposed is rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both. The offence punishable under s. 337 is the offence of hurt committed in certain defined circumstances. Undoubtedly, s. 279 penalises rash or negligent driving which endangers human life or is likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, but on that account the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, and the offence under s. 279 are not of the same nature or character. By s. 336, Indian Penal Code, an act, endangering life or personal safety of others, which is done rashly or negligently is penalised, and evidently the offence punishable under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, is an aggravated form of the offence defined by s. 336, Indian Penal Code. The offences under ss. 279 and 337, Indian Penal Code, are, however, offences of different nature and the conduct referred to therein is penalised with different objects. An act, which is rash or negligent or is likely to endanger human life, may be the result of driving any vehicle or riding on a public way. Undoubtedly the two sections overlap, but that does not, in our judgment, make those offences of the same character. The offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, is non-compoundable; and the compounding of the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, will not prevent the prosecution from being continued under s. 279, Indian Penal Code. When compounding of an offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, is permitted, the Court permits the aggrieved party to accept private satisfaction for the injury caused to him, but thereby the Court is not seeking to permit composition of an act which is dangerous to the public. The composition of the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, sanctioned by the learned Magistrate, therefore, did not result in the acquittal of the accused for the offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Nadkarni, for the accused, contended that whenever on account of rash or negligent driving simple hurt is caused to any other person, a charge under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, may be made, and if grievous hurt is caused, a charge under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, may be made against the accused and in neither case a prosecution for a charge under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, may be sustained. We are unable to accept this argument. If a person drives a vehicle or rides on a public way in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, he commits an offence, against public safety. If, by so driving a vehicle or riding on any public way, he causes an injury to any other person, he also commits an offence punishable under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, and if he causes grievous hurt, he commits an offence punishable under s. 338, Indian Penal Code. If, by such rash or negligent driving the accused has caused injury to some person, offences punishable under ss. 279 and 337, Indian Penal Code, will be committed, and acquittal of the offence under s. 337 or s. 338, Indian Penal Code, as a result of the compounding will still leave the charge under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, outstanding.

Strong reliance was sought to be placed by Mr. Nadkarni upon a judgment of this Court in Homi Jehangir Lali v. The State. The accused in that case who was charged with offences under ss. 279 and 338, Indian Penal Code, was permitted by the trial Magistrate to compound the offence under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, with the complainant and was acquitted of that offence. An express order acquitting the accused of the offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, was not passed, but that charge was abandoned, and no proceeding in the case against the accused remained outstanding. A fresh summons was thereafter issued by the trial Magistrate to the accused for offences under ss. 279 and 338, Indian Penal Code, read with ss. 74, 124 and 116, of the Motor Vehicles Act. The accused then applied to this Court for quashing the proceedings on the ground that as he was acquitted of the offence under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, no fresh proceeding could lie against him for an offence alleged to be committed in the same incident for which a charge under ss. 279 and 338, Indian Penal Code, was made against him. This Court upheld the contention raised by the accused and quashed the charge observing, though it was not necessary for the purpose of the decision of the case to do so—that the offence under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, was an aggravated form of the offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code. With respect, we are unable to agree with that view. An offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, is an offence against public safety and the fact that one of the component ingredients of the offence under s. 337, where this offence is the result of rash and negligent driving, may constitute independently an offence punishable under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, will not, in our judgment, justify the view that the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, is an aggravated form of the offence penalized by s. 279, Indian Penal Code. It may appear somewhat incongruous if the argument of the petitioner be accepted that an offence punishable under s. 337 for which the maximum sentence of fine prescribed is lighter than the sentence prescribed by s. 279, Indian Penal Code, is an aggravated form of the latter offence. Where a person accused of one offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, is acquitted, the acquittal may mean that the accused was not guilty of causing hurt to the person or that he was not acting rashly or negligently. Where an offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code is compounded, the composition can, in the very nature of the offence, be of causing hurt to the person so injured and not of doing a rash or negligent act, especially when the rash or negligent act is of driving a vehicle or riding on a public way in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to that person. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the view of the trial Magistrate that the order of acquittal passed in favour of the accused for the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, precludes the prosecution of the case under s. 279, Indian Penal Code.

On that view of the case, we set aside the order of acquittal passed by the trial Magistrate for the offence under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, and direct that the accused be tried for that offence. The order of acquittal passed in favour of the accused for the offence under s. 337, Indian Penal Code, will, however, stand.

Order accordingly.

A person was engaged as a bidi roller by the owner and occupier of a bidi factory and his hours of work were fixed, but there was no compulsion on him to attend the factory during those hours. He could attend the factory and leave it at any time he chose during the working hours and could remain absent. There was no actual 'supervision' on his work in the ordinary sense of that expression. a fixed daily or weekly wage, but was paid at fixed rates on the quantities of bidis turned out by him. There was no express contract between the owner and occupier of the factory and the bidi roller about the 'work' and there was no stipulation about the minimum quantity of work to be done by him every day. On the question whether the bidi roller could be said to be 'employed' within the meaning of that expression in s. 2(1) of the Factories Act, 1948:—

Held, that in the instant case, the nature of the work being of the simplest and a well-defined task and the remuneration being on the basis of quantity of work done, little direct supervision was actually needed to be exercised but such supervision as was felt necessary by the management was there and there was the right to supervise the manner in which the work was to be done, and that applying the prima facie test of the existence of right to supervise and control the manner in which the work is to be done as determinative of the existence of the relationship of employer and employee, the bidi roller, in the present case, was in the employment of the management and a 'worker' within the meaning of that expression in s. 2(1) of the Act.

S. T. DESAI, J. This Reference by the Additional Sessions Judge, Nasik, raises the vexed question of the connotation of the expression "employed" in s. 2(1) of the Factories Act which gives the interpretation of a "worker". It involves a decision, trifling in pecuniary amount, but of considerable consequence to a large number of persons engaged as bidi rollers by manufacturers of bidis. The decided cases do not lay down any definition exclusive or inclusive of the expression "employed" nor any criterion of absolute applicability as to the exact conception of that expression used in the Factories Act (to be referred to by us as the Act). The question that we have to determine is whether the relationship of employer and employee subsisted between the owner of a bidi factory and a person rolling bidis in that factory and the question arose when the Inspector of Factories prosecuted the owner for contravening the provisions relating to leave in s. 79 of the Act. Four indices of a contract of service were discussed in a decision of the House of Lords in England and have been referred to in a recent decision of our Supreme Court. Of this more hereafter.

The accused is the owner and occupier of a bidi factory, Jay Prakash Sudhir Private Limited, and one Pandurang Londhe did the work of rolling bidis in that factory. The services of Pandurang Londhe and 59 other persons doing similar work were terminated by the accused as from August 17, 1957, by putting up a notice dated August 12, 1957. The Inspector of Factories paid a visit to the factory of the accused on August 22, 1957, and found that Pandurang Londhe had worked for 70 days and had earned leave for 4 days which he had not enjoyed and took the view that he should have been paid wages for the leave period. The position as regards the other 59 persons was similar and the Factory Inspector filed sixty complaints against the accused alleging contravention by him of the provisions of s. 79(1) of the Act. The principal defence of the accused and one with which we are here concerned was that Pandurang Londhe was not a "worker" within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Act as he was not "employed" by the accused. Accused is the owner of a number of bidi factories where inter alia the work of rolling bidis is done by hundreds of persons. The learned First Class Magistrate, Sinnar, held against the accused and convicted and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10. The matter was carried in revision to the Sessions Court at Nasik and the learned Additional Sessions Judge being of the view that the order of conviction against the accused should be quashed has made a report to this Court under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Certain facts which are not in dispute and not disputable in this case are that in case of the persons who attend the factory of the accused for the work of rolling bidis the hours of work are fixed but there is no compulsion to attend the factory during those hours. They may attend the factory and may leave it at any time they choose during the working hours and can remain absent. There is no actual 'supervision' on their work in the ordinary sense of that expression. They are not paid a fixed daily or weekly wage but are paid at fixed rates on the quantity of bidis turned out by them. It is also clear from the evidence that there was no express contract between the accused and Pandurang Londhe about the "work" and there was no stipulation about the minimum quantity of work to be done by him every day. The learned Judge below has referred to a decision of the Supreme Court *Chintaman Rao v. State of M. P.*¹ and to some other decisions and observed that it is clear from the decided cases that the real test to find out if a person is a worker or not is to see whether the owner or occupier of the factory exercises any supervision and control over him as to the details of his work and on a consideration of the facts stated above he has expressed the view that Pandurang Londhe and the other persons who did the work of rolling bidis in the factory of the accused were not "workers" within the four corners of the Act. He has also pointed out that in the circumstances of the case it would be almost impossible for the accused to comply with some of the provisions of the Act.

It has been argued before us by the learned Government Pleader that the real test is not whether the owner or occupier of the factory actually exercises any supervision or control but whether he has the right to exercise the same. Given the existence of that right or authority its exercise or non-exercise during the actual work of rolling bidis is irrelevant. It is also urged that the operation of rolling bidis is one and so simple that no direct supervision is necessary. The work does not run into any details and the initial directions would be all that would be necessary and those also would be meagre. Having regard to the nature of the work and particularly the fact that payment was made on piece-work basis, so the argument ran, no direct supervision of the operation was at all necessary but the right or authority to control the work was all along there. The learned Government Pleader has relied on the following observations in the judgment of the Supreme Court in *D. C. Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra*² (p. 268):

"The principle which emerges from these authorities is that the prima facie test for the determination of the relationship between master and servant is the existence of the right in the master to supervise and control the work done by the servant not only in the matter of directing what work the servant is to do but also the manner in which he shall do his work, or to borrow the words of Lord Uthwatt at page 23 in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Coggins and Griffith (Liverpool) Ltd., "The proper test is whether or not the hirer had authority to control the manner of execution of the act in question."

The nature or extent of control which is requisite to establish the relationship of employer and employee must necessarily vary from business to business and is by its very nature incapable of precise definition. As has been noted above, recent pronouncements of the Court of Appeal in England have even expressed the view that it is not necessary for holding that a person is an employee, that the employer should be proved to have exercised control over his work, that the test of control was not one of universal application and that there were many contracts in which the master could not control the manner in which work was done...

The correct method of approach, therefore, would be to consider whether having regard to the nature of the work there was due control and supervision by the employer..."

On the other hand, it has been argued by Mr. M. V. Paranjpe, learned counsel for the accused, that the facts of the case must lead to the conclusion that there was in this case no control and no supervision and the relationship of the accused and the bidi roller was not that of an employer and an employee or master and servant but that the bidi roller was really in the position of an independent contractor. Strong reliance has been placed on the following observations from a decision of the Madras High Court reported in *Palaniappa Mudaliar v. Addl. Ist Class Magistrate*⁴:

"A person working for the owner of an establishment on the conditions 'come when you like, go when you like, work when you like, stop when you like, work as fast as you can, work as slow as you like, work on what you like or not at all', cannot be said to be 'employed' by the owner of the establishment and will not fall within the definition of 'worker' in section 2(1) of the Factories Act, 1948."

Learned counsel for the accused has also relied on certain observations in the case of Chintaman Rao v. State of M. P. recently decided by the Supreme Court.

In Chintaman Rao v. State of M. P., the Supreme Court has considered the concept of employment in s. 2(1) of the Act which defines the expression "worker" as under (p. 391):

"... 'worker' means a person employed, directly or through any agency, whether for wages or not, in any manufacturing process, or in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for manufacturing process, or in any other kind of work incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process, or the subject of the manufacturing process."

Their Lordships observed at p. 391:

"...The concept of employment involves three ingredients: (1) employer, (2) employee and (3) the contract of employment. The employer is one who employs, i.e. one who engages the services of other persons. The employee is one who works for another for hire. The employment is the contract of service between the employer and the employee whereunder the employee agrees to serve the employer subject to his control and supervision."

Their Lordships went on to observe:

"...There is a well understood distinction between a contractor and a workman and between contract for service and contract of service..."

A 'contractor' is a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work for other persons without submitting himself to their control in respect to the details of the work."

From the current of the decisions on the subject and particularly the two decisions of the Supreme Court to which we have already referred, the following propositions are clearly deducible:

(1) The concept of employment in the definition of 'worker' in s. 2(1) of the Act involves three ingredients of employer, employee and the contract of employment. The employment is the contract of service between the employer and the employee whereunder the employee agrees to serve the employer subject to his control and supervision:

(2) The prima facie test for the determination of the relationship of employer and employee is whether or not the owner or occupier of the factory had right to supervise and control the manner of execution of the work in question:

(3) The nature or extent of control which is requisite to establish the relationship of employer and employee must necessarily vary from business to business:

(4). No distinction can be drawn from the circumstance of a person being remunerated at so much per day or by the job or piece-work:

(5). The circumstance that rules regarding hours of work, etc. applicable to other persons may not be conveniently applied to the case of persons doing particular work such for instance that of bidi rollers does not prevent the relationship of employer and employee existing between the management and the persons doing such work.

But there are many contracts of service where the management cannot be said ostensibly to control or supervise directly the manner in which the work is to be done by persons engaged for the purpose although it may be clear that the work done is an integral part of the business. The prima facie test of supervision and control is not always easy to apply in the context of modern industrial conditions. Though the broad principles governing the question have been affirmed in the decided cases no conclusive test and no definite criterion of universal applicability has been laid down for the determination of the question whether in a given case a person is a worker or an independent contractor. Doubt and difficulty must beset the question for contracts which fall under either category have at times many characteristics and features which are common and the inquiry no doubt perplexing must ultimately be resolved like any complicated question of fact.

The border line between an employee employed in service and an independent contractor is at times rather fine and a clear-cut demarcation is not always possible. At one end of the scale can be the case, to take the illustration of a bidi roller who attends and works in a bidi factory and is paid wages in the ordinary sense that is on periodical basis. The nature of the work being very simple little direct supervision would be necessary on the part of the employer except for the purpose of seeing that the bidi roller puts in full time and regular work. But the control and supervision is indubitably there, and no one would suggest that the bidi roller is not a worker employed by the owner or occupier of the factory. At the other end of the scale can be the case of a contract by the owner of a bidi factory with a Sattedar to whom the management supplies tobacco and bidi leaves and the Sattedar fulfils the contract by engaging persons to do the work of rolling bidis in his own place or in the houses of those persons. Such was the substantial position in the case of Chintaman Rao v. State of M. P. decided by the Supreme Court and as their Lordships held in that case the Sattedar cannot be said to have been employed as a 'worker' by the management. He only performs his part of the contract by making bidis and delivering them at the factory. But between these two cases can lie a number and variety of intermediate cases where the circumstances may point towards one conclusion or the other.

Four indices of a contract of service derived from authorities of Courts in England were recapitulated by Lord Thankerton in *Short v. J. and W. Henderson Ltd.*⁵ decided by the House of Lords (p. 429):

"...these are (a) the master's power of selection of his servant; (b) the payment of wages or other remuneration; (c) the master's right to control the method of doing the work; and (d) the master's right of suspension or dismissal."

After stating the four indicia Lord Thankerton observed (p. 429):

"Modern industrial conditions have so much affected the freedom of the master in cases in which no one could reasonably suggest that the employee was thereby converted into an independent contractor that, if and when an appropriate occasion arises, it will be incumbent on this House to reconsider and to restate these indicia. For example, (a), (b) and (d), and probably also (c), are affected by the statutory provisions and rules which restrict the master's choice to men supplied by the labour bureaux, or directed to him under the essential work provisions, and his power of suspension or dismissal is similarly affected. These matters are all also affected by trade union rules, which are, at least primarily made for the protection of wage-earners. The statement of Lord Justice Clerk Alness in Park v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Company (1928 S.C. 121, at p. 134) that selection, payment and control are inevitable in every contract of service, is clearly open to reconsideration."

After referring to the four indicia of a contract of service and the observations quoted above Bhagwati J. observed in the case of D. C. Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra.⁶ (p. 268):

"...until the position is restated as contemplated in Short v. J. & W. Henderson Ltd. we may take it as the prima facie test for determining the relationship between master and servant."

It is not our purpose to suggest any precise orientation of those four elements or indicia of a contract of service but it seems permissible to us humbly to state that the principles enunciated in the decisions of the highest tribunals to which we have referred leave it open to the Court to evolve necessary corollaries albeit within the matrix of those principles. 'Supervision' and 'control' are not expressions of inflexible import and the exercise of the same can in some cases be of a very nebulous character. The scope as also the manner of the exercise of supervision and control in a given case must of necessity depend on a variety of factors such for instance as the nature of the work done by a person, the circumstances in which and the place where he is asked or permitted to do the work, the skill or technique or method, if any, required of him in performance of the work, the status and the number of persons engaged in performance of the work and in a large majority of cases on the mode or manner or remuneration adopted in respect of the particular work required of a person.

Applying the prima facie test of the existence of right to supervise and control the manner in which the work is to be done as determinative of the existence of the relationship of employer and employee and considered in the light of the observations we have made, the facts of the case before us lead to the conclusion that the bidi roller Pandurang Londhe was in the employment of the accused and a 'worker' within the meaning of that expression in s. 2(1) of the Act. The root of the matter in cases of this type lies in the nature of the work and the mode of remuneration adopted by the management. The nature of the work in the case before us being of the simplest and a well-defined task and the remuneration being on the basis of quantity of work done little direct supervision actually needed to be exercised but such supervision as was felt necessary by the management was, of course, there and what is more important there was the right to supervise the manner in which the work was to be done. It is abundantly clear that it was due to these two elements of the simple nature of the operation and payment on the basis of quantity of work actually done that the management had little occasion to give specific directions as to the manner of doing the work or to watch the progress of the work. These aspects appear to us to be the speciality of the situation. The modus operandi adopted by the management shows that the right and authority to control the manner in which the work of turning bidis was to be done was also there. It cannot seriously be disputed that the management had the power to control and give directions to the bidi rollers as to the manner of rolling bidis but the nature of the operation being very simple, any occasion for actual exercise of that power could hardly have arisen. But then it was urged on behalf of the accused that the bidi roller was free to go to the factory when he liked and leave it when he liked and was not even bound to put in any minimum quantity of work. Now it would seem that in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the mode of payment and the system of work adopted by the management itself this freedom was more apparent than real or substantial. In any case this freedom even if real and though of some cogency cannot, in our judgment, be regarded as critical or decisive of the relationship. A contrary view founded simply on this element of freedom to work for as much time as the bidi roller liked would enable dexterous employers to avoid provisions of law otherwise applicable and aimed at protecting those who are inops consilii by adopting a modus operandi to the ostensible nature of which little objection can be taken and with which an average worker may readily fall in line. But the Court will look at the body and substance of the arrangement and then determine the real relationship of the parties and fasten responsibility according to its true and real character. It is a question of substance and not of mere form. For all these reasons we are of the opinion that the contention pressed on behalf of the State must be upheld.

There remains for consideration a further contention urged on behalf of the accused. It was contended that the order of conviction was not sustainable even if the relationship of employer and employee existed between the parties. The argument was that s. 79 which deals with the question of "leave with wages" cannot apply to a worker who is paid wages according to the quantity of work done by him and not per day or per week. It was said that there being no fixed hours of work and no fixed daily wage in case of such worker s. 79 can have no operation. Sections 79 and 80 read together make it abundantly clear that wages for period of leave are payable to a worker at a rate equal to the daily average of the total full time earnings for the days on which he has worked and in our opinion the right to claim wages for leave can be claimed by a worker whose wages are regulated on the basis of the amount of work put in by him. The present contention must, therefore, be negatived.

In the result the order of conviction and sentence passed by the learned Magistrate must be upheld and there will be no other order on the Reference.

ADMISSION—Evidentiary value of.—Admission by party to suit concerning subject-matter in dispute.—Whether Court entitled to consider such admission in subsequent proceeding concerning same subject-matter.

An admission on a question of fact made by a party in the course of a proceeding can be regarded as a good piece of evidence relying on which the opposing party may contend that the claim made in the subsequent proceeding is unjustifiable. Therefore, the Court is entitled to consider admissions solemnly made by a party concerning the subject-matter in dispute in the course of a proceeding in adjudging upon the truth or otherwise of the claim made by the party in a subsequent proceeding concerning the same subject-matter.

The implied authority of the advocate to enter into the compromise is, however, limited to the action in which he has been engaged and does not extend to matters which are extraneous to the action or which are merely collateral to it.

ARBITRATION ACT (X of 1940), S. 31.—Dispute between plaintiff and defendants relating to breach of agreement by defendants and refund of earnest money paid by plaintiff referred to arbitration.—Court refusing to pass decree on award made by arbitrators on ground that award compulsorily registrable not registered.—Suit filed by plaintiff against defendants to recover earnest money.—Whether suit barred by virtue of award.

A dispute between the plaintiff and the defendants relating to a breach of agreement by the defendants to sell certain property to the plaintiff and the refund of earnest money to the plaintiff was referred to arbitration by the parties. When the award made by the arbitrators was sought to be filed in Court under the Arbitration Act, 1940, the Court refused to pass a decree in terms of the award on the ground, alleged by the defendants, that the award which was compulsorily registrable was not registered. The plaintiff then filed a suit against the defendants to recover the earnest money paid by him to the defendants. On the question whether the suit was barred under ss. 31, 32 and 33 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, by virtue of the award:—

Held, that as the award had no legal existence, it did not bar the plaintiff's suit which was based on his original cause of action.

ARBITRATION (PROTOCOL AND CONVENTION) ACT (VI of 1937), S. 2.—Indian Independence (International Arrangements) Order, 1947, Schedule, Cls. 1, 3, 4.—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 178.—Arbitration Act (X of 1940), Sec. 14.—Agreement to refer disputes arising out of contract to arbitration in London in accordance with rules of specified Association.—Award obtained in London.—Petition for filing award in Court in India under Act VI of 1937.—Maintainability of petition.—Whether award a foreign award within s. 2 of Act.—Award whether made in pursuance of an agreement for arbitration to which Protocol applies.—Act VI of 1937 whether has force in India after January 26, 1950.—Applicability of art. 178, Indian Limitation Act, to application for filing award under s. 5 of Act VI of 1937.

Under a contract the respondents agreed to sell to the petitioner Indian groundnut oil on certain terms and conditions set out in the contract including the term that "all other terms and conditions as per London Oil and Tallow Trade Association Contract." One of the terms of the London Oil and Tallow Trade Association Contract was to the effect that "any dispute arising out of this contract shall be settled by arbitration in London in accordance with the Rules endorsed on this contract." On the petitioner contending that the respondents had failed to supply the goods agreed to be sold by them to the petitioner under the contract, the matter was referred to arbitration in London in accordance with the rules endorsed on the standard form of the contract of the London Oil and Tallow Trade Association. The petitioner obtained an award in his favour and filed a petition under the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, in the High Court, praying that the award may be ordered to be filed in Court and a decree may be passed according to it. The respondents resisted the application contending that the arbitral procedure including the constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal was not governed in the instant case by the will of the parties within the meaning of clause 2 in the First Schedule to the Act, but the parties had bound themselves by the provisions contained in the London Oil and Tallow Trade Association contract as regards the arbitral procedure and the constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal and their will in that connection had been expressed and that, therefore, the Protocol set forth in the First Schedule to the Act did not apply and the award was not a foreign award within the meaning of s. 2 of the Act:—

Held, that clause 2 in the First Schedule to the Act does not preclude the will of the parties in connection with the arbitral procedure and the constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal being expressed in the instrument whereby the parties agree to refer disputes that may arise in connection with the contract to arbitration, and that, therefore, the agreement for arbitration in the instant case was one to which the Protocol applied and the award was a foreign award within the meaning of s. 2 of the Act.

Clause 2 in the First Schedule to the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, requires that the constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal should be governed by the will of the parties and that will can be expressed in the agreement of reference. By the expression of that will the Protocol is not excluded.

The Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, has not ceased to have force in India after January 23, 1950.

Article 178 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, does not apply to an application for filing an award under s. 5 of the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937.

FRANCESCO CORBI v. GORAKHBHAI.

BAR COUNCILS ACT (XXXVIII of 1926), S. 4(3)—Constitution of India, Art. 14—Whether s. 4(3) and resolution passed by Bombay High Court in pursuance of that section violate art. 14—Constitution whether guarantees right of franchise and right to be elected to political institution—Power of High Court to strike down law enacted by Parliament on ground that it violates fundamental right.

Section 4 (3) of the Indian Bar Councils Act, 1926, and the resolution passed by the Bombay High Court on April 10, 1952, in pursuance of the provisions of that section cannot be challenged on the ground that art. 14 of the Constitution of India is violated by them.

Where the right conferred on a person is not guaranteed by the Constitution and does not flow from it and is neither a fundamental right, nor a common law right, nor a natural, inherent or unalienable right, but a franchise dependent upon the law and is thus merely a creature of a statute, it can be asserted only to the extent and subject to the conditions specified in the statute creating it. Therefore, where the Legislature brings into existence a political institution and makes any provisions concerning its constitution or composition, the provisions of the law which bring that institution into existence cannot be challenged under art. 14 of the Constitution, on the ground that the various interests concerned are unequally represented thereon.

The power of the High Court to strike down the provisions of a law enacted by the Parliament, if it finds that the impugned provision as enacted violates a fundamental right claimed by a petitioner, is not in any way limited by the fact that the impugned law was enacted by Parliament and not by the State Legislature.

BENAMI TRANSACTION, burden of proof.

The burden of proof that a transaction is a benami transaction is on the party who alleges that the transaction is benami and the burden must be strictly discharged. In order to succeed the party so alleging must put the Court in possession of legal and satisfactory evidence and it will not suffice to point to matters of suspicion or even to plausible conjecture.

BERAR LAND REVENUE CODE, 1928—
Default in payment of land revenue—Land put up to auction and sold by revenue authorities without notice of sale to defaulter—Necessity of such notice—Whether sale void for want of notice—Applicability of principle of natural justice.

Though the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, do not prescribe that a notice shall be given before the property of a defaulter is sold, it is a principle of natural justice that the defaulter must receive such a notice before his property is sold. In the absence of any notice the sale is liable to be set aside.

—S. 73(1)—Whether proviso to s. 73(1) applies in cases where commencement of tenancy known—Meaning of expression “commencement of tenancy”—Proviso, interpretation of, in relation to provision of which it is a proviso—Statement of Objects and Reasons when can be referred to in relation to enactment.

The proviso to s. 73(1) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, does not apply in cases in which the commencement of tenancy is known. Therefore, a tenant cannot, under this proviso, claim the status of a tenant of antiquity if the date of commencement of his tenancy is known.

The words ‘commencement of tenancy’ refer to the original or the first tenancy under which the tenant or his predecessor-in-title entered into possession of the land as a tenant and since the time of which tenancy he and his predecessors-in-title have been in continuous and uninterrupted possession of the land.

The duty of the Court is to effect a harmonious construction between a proviso and the provision to which it is a proviso and so far as possible the proviso must be so interpreted and its meaning so restricted as to bring it within the ambit and purview of the main provision itself.

The Statement of Objects and Reasons which led to the enactment of a statute is not admissible as an aid to the construction of the statute. But it can be referred to for the limited purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time which actuated the sponsor of the Bill to introduce the same and the extent and urgency of the evil which he sought to remedy.

(b)—Cultivation by servants under supervision of separated father on behalf of his minor son—Whether such cultivation personal cultivation by son within s. 2(b)—Whether notice terminating tenancy under s. 9(1) given by telegram a valid notice—Party inviting decision of Revenue Tribunal on question of fact and advancing elaborate arguments on it—Whether such party can later challenge decision of Tribunal on such question on ground of want of jurisdiction of Tribunal.

A cultivation by servants under supervision of a separated father on behalf of his minor son is personal cultivation by the son within the meaning of s. 2(b) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

A notice given by telegram is a notice in writing within the meaning of s. 9(1) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

Where a party had advanced elaborate arguments on a question of fact before the Bombay Revenue Tribunal after having chosen to invite its decision on it and the arguments were considered by the Tribunal and the Tribunal had recorded its decision thereon, held that it was not then open to such party to say that the decision of the Tribunal on this question of fact was without jurisdiction.

If at any time the area in possession of a person claiming to be a protected lessee under the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, exceeds fifty acres, it is incumbent on him to make a selection of an area upto fifty acres and give intimation to the landholder and Revenue Officers as required by s. 4(2) of the Act. If he does not do so, he cannot be deemed to be a protected lessee at all, in respect of any area in his possession.

—S. 8—Lease terminated by landlord under s. 9(1) on ground that land required for personal cultivation—Possession delivered by lessee—Application by lessee under s. 9(6) stating that land leased out by landlord to another person—Maintainability of such application—Whether operation of s. 8 excluded when lease terminated on ground that landlord requiring land for personal cultivation.

The operation of s. 8 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, is altogether excluded in the one case contemplated by s. 9(1) of the Act, viz. where the lease was terminable on the ground that the landholder required the land for cultivating the land personally.

The words in s. 8(1) (g) of the Act “as provided in s. 9” only qualify the word “notice” occurring in that clause of s. 8(1). Therefore, s. 8(1)(g) merely refers to the notice and its various requirements mentioned in s. 9(1) and to nothing further. It has no reference to the remaining sub-sections of s. 9.

Under ss. 8(1)(g) and 9 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, so far as termination of any lease of land held by a protected lessee is concerned the landholder has two options: (a) to terminate by notice on the ground that he requires the land for cultivating it personally, [s. 9(1)] and (b) to terminate by notice in other cases, [s. 8(1)(g)]. In the former case, he need not have recourse to any authority or obtain orders of a Revenue Officer, but the right is given in such a case to the tenant to challenge the notice on the two grounds mentioned in s. 9(5) and in that event the Revenue Officer has to adjudicate in accordance with sub-ss. (3) to (9) of s. 9. The notice in this case must fulfil the requirements of s. 9(1). In the latter case, the notice also must fulfil all the requirements of s. 9(1) excepting obviously the requirement as to the landholder requiring the land for cultivating it personally. In this case the landholder must obtain the orders of the Revenue Officer to terminate the lease.

The period of two years fixed in r. 9 of the Rules made under the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, is the minimum period during which the landholder is expected to cultivate the land personally after taking over the land from the tenant on the ground of personal cultivation. The rule does not in terms prohibit the transfer or sale of the land before the lapse of two years from the date of re-entry, but the fact that lands have been sold is conclusive that after the sale the landlord would be incapable of cultivating the land personally for himself unless there is a stipulation in the sale deed that the landlord was to relinquish the possession at some later date mentioned in the deed itself. Therefore, prima facie, the fact of sale before the lapse of two years from the date of re-entry would show that the landholder was putting himself beyond the possibility of fulfilling the requirement of personal cultivation for the prescribed period under s. 9(6) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951.

In r. 9 the expression "two years" cannot be construed to mean two cultivating seasons. The two years are to be computed from the specific and definite date of the re-entry by the landholder.

The words, in s. 9(6) of the Act, "a landholder fails at any time during such period as may be prescribed" indicate that the landholder is expected to cultivate the land during the entire period so prescribed; failure of the landholder to cultivate the land even for a short period will entail the consequence of forfeiture.

When an order under s. 9(6) of the Act is passed in favour of the tenant for restoration of the possession the right of the tenant to claim compensation flows from the order and begins from the next agricultural year. Therefore, the word "compensation" must be construed in a restricted sense, namely, that the tenant would be entitled to compensation for the damage caused by injury to the field but there would be no legal basis for the claim either for the income of the land or for the value of the crops for two years.

In order to obtain the benefit of the provisions of s. 9B(a) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, it is necessary to prove that land-revenue could be legally fixed and was in fact fixed. The burden to do so rests on the tenant and that burden cannot be discharged by saying merely that by virtue of some law the landlord has now become liable to pay to the Government a sum of money by way of land-revenue. A bare declaration of liability to pay land-revenue is not equivalent to fixing of land revenue and announcing it at a settlement.

money which was agreed upon at the time of the lease.

The purpose of s. 23 of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, is to provide that if a lessee possesses any rights independently of the Act, those rights are not limited or abridged by any of the provisions of the Act except the provisions contained in s. 7(1) of the Act. Therefore, the rights safeguarded are the rights which the lessee has acquired independently of the Act and not the rights granted to the lessee by the Act itself.

The plaintiff filed applications under s. 4 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act for adjustment of his debts, and in these applications he did not mention certain mortgages created by him in favour of the defendants and that the defendants were his creditors. A general notice under s. 14 of the Act was ordered to be issued by the Court. Thereafter the plaintiff filed a civil suit against the defendants under s. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, for taking accounts of the mortgages, and the civil Court decreed that a certain amount was due to one of the defendants from the plaintiff. In the meantime the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Court held that the plaintiff was a debtor and his debts were below Rs. 15,000. A final award was then passed but the award did not mention the debts of the defendants nor did it mention the defendants as creditors. The plaintiff filed a suit for a declaration that the mortgage debts of the defendants were extinguished and that the decree in the civil suit was void and not binding on the plaintiff. On the question whether the decree in the civil suit was without jurisdiction in view of s. 51-A and s. 56 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act:—

Where the names of certain creditors and their debts are not mentioned in the application for adjustment of debts under s. 4 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, and a general notice is issued under s. 14(b) of the Act, then the general notice will be binding on the creditors whose names and debts are not included in the application, and their debts would be governed by s. 15(1) of the Act.

The point of time referred to in s. 13(1) of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, is not relevant for determining the comparative strength between rival unions where applications are made for registration by the rival unions. In such cases the relevant time would be time when an occasion arises for exercising the powers and performing the duties contained and laid down in the third proviso to s. 14 of the Act. Therefore, the point of time with reference to which the membership of rival unions applying for registration is to be considered is not the date of the application or the month of the application made by them but is the occasion when the claims of the other unions fall to be considered.

—S. 78(1A)(c)—Whether employees can initiate proceedings under s. 78(1A)(c) where there is in existence a representative union of industry wherein employee employed—Right of employee to appear and conduct proceedings initiated by him—Agreement referred to in s. 115A whether agreement arrived at when no industrial dispute pending before relevant authority.

Section 79 of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, confers a right to initiate proceedings under s. 78(1A)(c) of the Act on the employee directly affected, notwithstanding the fact that in the particular industry where the employee is employed there is in existence a representative union.

Under ss. 27A, 32 and 33 of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, the right of an individual employee to appear and conduct the proceedings initiated by him is not destroyed unless and until the representative union appears in the case on behalf of that employee whose grievance is being ventilated before the authorities concerned. Section 27A of the Act does not contemplate an appearance of the representative of the employees which might be contrary to the interests of the individual employees who might have initiated a proceeding under the Act.

The agreement referred to in s. 115A of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946, is an agreement arrived at between the employer and the representative union reached after the commencement of the industrial dispute before an Arbitrator, Wage Board, Labour Court or Industrial Court. Therefore, an agreement which is arrived at at a time when no such dispute is pending before any of these authorities will not fall under the terms of s. 115A of the Act.

—S. 4—Bombay Land Requisition Ordinance, 1947, Sec. 4(1)—Premises let out prior to January 1947 but thereafter till November 1955 used as lodging houses—Order of requisition made in October 1957—Landlord alleging that premises occupied by licensees on date of order

BOMBAY LAND REQUISITION ACT,
S. 4—(Contd.)

—Whether premises intended to be let within s. 4(3) and therefore premises liable to be requisitioned—Notification under s. 6(1) whether necessary before s. 6 can apply to scheduled areas mentioned in s. 2(1).

Certain rooms in a building situated in the city of Bombay were let out by the landlord before January 1, 1947. From January 1, 1947, to November 1955 these rooms were used as a lodging house. After November 1955 they were occupied by certain persons and it was alleged by the landlord that the occupation by these persons was as licensees and not as tenants. On October 10, 1957, an order for requisitioning these rooms was made under s. 6(4)(a) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948. The order was challenged by the landlord inter alia on the ground that the rooms did not constitute premises within the meaning of the Act as these were not intended to be let, because they had never been in fact let after the Bombay Land Requisition Ordinance, 1947, came into force on December 4, 1947, or the Act came into force on April 11, 1948. On the question whether it could be said of the premises, assuming that these were given to licensees on October 10, 1957, that they were intended to be let as defined in s. 4(3) of the Act and were, therefore, premises which were liable to be requisitioned under the Act—

Held, that as the landlord had expressed his volition by letting out the rooms prior to January 1, 1947, he could be said to have intended the rooms to be let within s. 4(3) of the Act, although these were not let when the Act came into force, and that, therefore, the rooms were premises within the meaning of the Act and the Government could exercise its power under s. 6 of the Act in respect of the premises.

The Notification referred to in s. 6(1) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, is an entirely different notification to the notification mentioned in s. 2(2) of the Act.

Section 6(1) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, provides that even in the scheduled areas mentioned in s. 2(1) of the Act the provisions of s. 6 are not automatically to apply. A notification by Government issued under s. 6(1) is necessary before the provisions of s. 6 can apply to a scheduled area as a whole or any part of it.

The observation made in State of Bombay v. Virendra Mohabbay, (1950) 52 Bom. L.R. 627, to the effect that there was a drafting error in s. 6(1) of the Act because it refers to premises situated in the areas specified by the Provincial Government by a notification in the Official Gazette and it does not refer to areas specified by the Act itself under s. 2(1) is not justified by the language used in the Act.

The declaration made under s. 5(2) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, is not conclusive evidence as regards the person entitled to reside in the premises which are sought to be requisitioned.

Under s. 5 of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, the declaration is made conclusive as regards the actual non-residence of the person referred to in the order for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of order. The declaration does not preclude the real owner, landlord or tenant from showing that he is the real owner, landlord or tenant and not the person mentioned in the declaration.

Therefore, under this section, the Government can requisition a part of a flat in a building in which the landlord or the tenant has not actually resided for a continuous period of six months immediately preceding the date of the order of requisition.

A declaration of vacancy made under s. 6(4)(a) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, cannot be challenged either on the facts on which the declaration is based or on the ground that in law such a declaration cannot be made.

A declaration that there is a vacancy can be challenged under art. 226 or under art. 227 of the Constitution of India only on the ground that the declaration was malā fide or that there was some extraneous factor which led the Government or the officer concerned to make that declaration.

On an assignment by a tenant of the premises in his occupation to a third party there is a vacancy within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 6 of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, although the assignee may be in occupation of the premises. Under the Act the State has the right to requisition the premises, if they are vacant as understood by the Act, even though the premises be in possession of a statutory tenant and even though his possession may be protected against the landlord.

—S. 6—Intimation of vacancy given by landlord to authorised officer in prescribed form—Intimation sent by ordinary post and beyond time prescribed under s. 6(2)—Intimation received by officer—Whether such intimation effective—Mode prescribed by s. 6(2) that intimation to be given by registered post whether mandatory or directory—Intimation referred to in s. 6(3) whether intimation referred to in s. 6(1) or whether such intimation must fulfil requirements of ss. 6(1) and 6(2)—Failure to give intimation under s. 6(2) whether precludes landlord from giving intimation subsequently—When Court can construe expression "shall" in statute as directory or procedural.

Where an intimation of vacancy of premises was given by the landlord under s. 6(1) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, to an authorised officer in the prescribed form, but it was given by ordinary post and not within the time prescribed by s. 6(2) of the Act, and it was established that the officer had received it, such an intimation would be an intimation within s. 6(3) of the Act, and the landlord could occupy the premises after the lapse of one month from the date of the receipt of the intimation by the officer and it is not open to the State Government to requisition the premises after the lapse of such period unless there was a fresh vacancy.

In order to get relief from the Court on a writ petition, not only must the petitioner come with clean hands, not only must he not suppress any material facts, not only must he show the utmost good faith, but he must also satisfy the Court that the making of the order will do justice and that justice lies on his side.

The mode prescribed by s. 6(2) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, that the intimation shall be given by registered post is directory.

The intimation referred to in s. 6(3) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, is the intimation referred to in s. 6(1) of the Act.

The failure on the part of the landlord to give the intimation required by s. 6(1) of the Act does not debar him from giving a subsequent intimation.

In order to place a proper construction on the expression "shall" in a statute the Court must look to the scheme of the Act in order to determine what are the consequences which the law has laid down as a result of non-compliance with that mandatory direction. The consequence may be penal, the consequence may be that a particular order passed is invalidated, the consequence may be that a particular right is not acquired or a particular obligation is imposed, or the consequence may be not stated in the law at all. When no consequence is apparent in the law it is possible for the Court to take the view that although the statute has used the expression "shall" it must be construed as being directory or procedural rather than mandatory in the strict sense of the term.

The word "release" used in ss. 6(1) and 9(1) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, does not mean restoration of physical possession. The word is used not as other word for restoration of possession, but as something precedent to transfer and/or restoration of physical possession of the premises.

A de-requisition order made under s. 9(1) of the Act is complete in all its effects and aspects when it is made. It is, therefore, complete before service or communication thereof on the landlord and even if physical possession is not transferred to the appropriate person.

Under s. 6 of the Act a vacancy can arise by reason of release of the premises from requisition under s. 9(1) notwithstanding the fact that the de-requisition order is not communicated to the person concerned and physical possession of the premises in question is not given to such person.

An order of requisition under the Act in all its aspects is completed by merely making an order for the purpose. Even when physical possession is not transferred to the Government and/or taken on behalf of the Government, a requisition order made would exist in all its effects.

In the case of a person suspected or accused of an offence under the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, the police officers are not empowered by law to take that person, against his will, to a doctor for medical examination. If force is sought to be used by the police officers in taking such a person to a doctor, he can lawfully exercise the right of private defence against them under s. 97 of the Indian Penal Code, and if he does so exercise the right, he cannot be convicted either under s. 353 or 352 of the Indian Penal Code.

Section 157 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, lays down some of the duties, and none of the rights, of an officer in charge of a police station. That section has no relevance whatever to the consideration of the extent to which a police officer can act in curtailment of the rights of the subject as regards his person or his property.

The exception contained in the first paragraph of s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, applies where a public servant acts irregularly in the exercise of his powers, and not where he acts outside the scope of his powers.

Section 15 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, expressly prohibits subletting and, therefore, a contract to the contrary cannot neutralise its prohibitory effect. Therefore, an agreement between a tenant and his landlord whereby the tenant was permitted to sub-let the premises is void under s. 15 of the Act and s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and is unenforceable.

The non obstante clause in s. 15 of the Act means that even if any other law allowed subletting, e.g. s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the subletting would, because of s. 15, be unlawful. This would apply to contracts also as all contracts would fall under the provisions of the law relating to contracts i.e. the Indian Contract Act.

An agreement to waive an illegality is void on grounds of public policy and is unenforceable.

In order to decide whether a suit comes within the purview of s. 28 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, what must be considered is what the suit as framed in substance is and what the relief claimed therein is. If the suit as framed is by a landlord or a tenant and the relief asked for is in the nature of a claim which arises out of the Act or any of its provisions, then only and not otherwise will it be covered by s. 28 of the Act.

A suit which is essentially one between the landlord and tenant does not cease to be such a suit merely because the defendant denies the claim of the plaintiff. In the same way, a suit which is not between the landlord and tenant and in which judging by the plaint no claim or question arises out of the Act or any of its provisions does not become a suit covered by the provisions of s. 28 of the Act as soon as the defendant raises a contention that he is a tenant.

Under s. 15 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, there can be no valid sub-tenancy after the coming into operation of the Act notwithstanding anything contained in any other law. The assessee, who carried on business as dealers in tea, purchased diverse brands of tea from registered dealers and without the application of any mechanical or chemical process mixed up the brands of tea purchased in bulk by them and sold the tea as tea mixture. Under the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, when a landlord seeks to eject the tenant upon the ground that the tenant had done acts of destruction and permanent injury to the land, he must give two separate notices to the tenant, one under s. 14 of the Act intimating to him that he had done an act which was destructive of or permanently injurious to the land, and another under s. 24 of the Act after the expiry of three months from the date of the first notice i.e. after the tenancy of the tenant had terminated, specifying the act of destruction or injury and intimating to the tenant that if he failed within a period of one year from the date of the receipt of the notice to restore the land to the condition in which it was before the act of destruction or injury was done to it, he would be ejected from the land.

By a notice under s. 14 of the Act the landlord can only communicate to his tenant his decision to terminate his tenancy after the lapse of three months from the service of the notice. If the landlord goes beyond it and calls upon the tenant to do something which the landlord is not entitled to ask the tenant to do under the provisions of s. 14, e.g. calls upon the tenant to hand over possession of the land to him upon the expiry of three months from the date of receipt of the notice then, in so far as he calls upon the tenant to do something which he cannot ask him to do under s. 14 the notice is an invalid notice. A notice under s. 14 does not terminate a tenancy forthwith i.e. with effect from the date of its receipt and, therefore, a notice under s. 14 would also be invalid if it tells the tenant distinctly that by that notice itself his tenancy is terminated.

Section 31B(1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, is an independent provision which stands by itself and controls s. 31A(b) of the Act; it is not subject to the provisions of s. 31A(b). Therefore, if the land cultivated by the landlord personally is less than the ceiling area prescribed for that land under the Act, the landlord cannot, in order to make up his ceiling area, recover possession of more than half the area of the land leased out to his tenant.

BOMBAY TENANCY AND AGRICULTURAL LANDS ACT, S. 44—(Contd.)

The State Government, where it has taken over management of lands belonging to a landholder under Chapter IV of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, is liable to render an account of its management to the landholder during the pendency of the management and to pay the balance left, after making provision for the payment of items mentioned in s. 48 of the Act, at the end of the year.

The ownership of lands taken under management under Chapter IV of the Act does not vest in the State Government. The only thing that vests in the State Government or in the Manager appointed is the right to possession and of management together with all powers for the purposes of such management which the landholder, but for the notification issued under s. 44 of the Act, could have exercised.

A suit filed by a landholder against the State Government for rendition of accounts of its management and for the payment of balance can be entertained by a civil Court and is not barred by s. 85(1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948.

The defendant, who was in occupation as tenant of certain lands since 1946, became a protected tenant by virtue of s. 8A of the Tenancy Act of 1939, under the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948. On April 15, 1950, by virtue of Bombay Act 8 of 1950 the village in which these lands were situated became a part of Greater Bombay and, therefore, ss. 88(1)(c) of the Act became applicable to the village and none of the provisions of ss. 1 to 87 of that Act applied to the lands. In a suit filed on May 26, 1953, by the plaintiffs-landlords for possession of the lands, the defendant contended that he was a

Held, that the provisions of s. 88(1)(c) of the Act are an express provision in the Act as contemplated under s. 89(2)(b) of the Act, and, that, therefore, after the village became a part of Greater Bombay on April 15, 1950, the protected tenancy right of the defendant ceased to have the protection of the provisions of ss. 1 to 87 of the Act.

Act XIII of 1956 void on ground of excessive delegation of legislative power.

The Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1956, is covered by Entry 18 in List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India and is a legislation with reference to "land" and, therefore, the State Legislature was competent to enact the Act.

The Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1956, is covered by art. 31A of the Constitution and is, therefore, not unconstitutional on the ground of its having violated the fundamental rights enshrined in arts. 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution.

The words of the definition of "estate" contained in s. 3(5) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1919, mean "any interest in lands" which comprise within their scope alienated as well as unalienated lands and cover holdings of occupants within the meaning thereof.

Section 7 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1956, is not void on the ground of excessive delegation of legislative power.

"Any other factors which may be prescribed" referred to in s. 7(b) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act, 1956, are factors ejusdem generis to the factors mentioned earlier in the section and not any and every factor which might cross the mind of the executive.

Act I of 1915 whether covers land within town planning area—Interpretation of statute.

A land included in a sanctioned draft Town Planning Scheme under the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1915, can be acquired by Government under s. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

The word "land" used in s. 51 of the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1915, covers land situated within a town planning area or outside it.

If a statute is clear and unambiguous, then, subsequent legislation cannot affect its interpretation. It is the duty of the Court to interpret a statute and not for the Legislature to do so and this has to be done with reference to the language used in the statute itself. An amendment is not necessarily made to remove a lacuna. It may be introduced ex mero motu.

The meaning of s. 66 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, read with s. 62 of the Act, is that, though a municipality may acquire land outside its limits, it must utilise that property for the purpose of the Act within the limits of the municipal borough only i.e., for the benefit of the citizens residing within the municipal borough.

The revisional powers under s. 22B of the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, can be exercised by the Commissioner of Sales Tax even in respect of orders of subordinate authorities passed prior to December 1, 1953 (when s. 22B came into force), provided the revisional order is passed by him before the expiry of two years from the date of the order sought to be revised.

Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already past, must be presumed, out of respect to the Legislature, to be intended not to have a retrospective operation. But the presumption against retrospective construction has no application to enactments which affect only the procedure and practice of Courts or tribunals.

Under the relevant rules framed under the Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, the Sales Tax Officer or the Assistant Commissioner has jurisdiction in the first instance to deal with all the cases of registered dealers in the Vidarbha region and scrutinize their returns, and it is only when he finds from the material on record or it is established that the gross turnover or taxable turnover of the assessee in the year preceding the year of assessment exceeds the pecuniary limit, he has to transfer the case to the Assistant Commissioner. The Act has by necessary implication conferred jurisdiction on the Sales Tax Officer to determine what are the cases which fall within his jurisdiction. Therefore, whatever he does upto that stage, e.g. issue of a notice under s. 11(2) of the Act, is done by him within his jurisdiction, even if he thereafter reaches a conclusion that the case is triable by an Assistant Commissioner.

P. and Berar Local Fund Audit Act—Corporation passing resolution to send at its expense delegates at Health Conference in England—Whether resolution beyond powers of Corporation and, therefore, ultra vires—Right of Corporation to incur expenditure—Court's power to issue writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ or order.*

The City of Nagpur Corporation passed a resolution at a meeting of the Corporation accepting an invitation received from the Secretary of the Royal Society for the Promotion of Health, London, requesting it to send delegates at the Health Conference of representatives of Commonwealth countries to be held in England. In pursuance of an order of the Government of India allotting foreign exchange for meeting the expenses out of India for two delegates it was decided to send two delegates to the Conference at the expense of the Corporation. On the question whether the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948, conferred a power upon the Corporation to expend money on the object involved in the resolution passed by the Corporation:—

Held, that the resolution of the Corporation which permitted the incurring of expenditure for sending delegates to the Conference was beyond the powers of the Corporation and was, therefore, ultra vires.

CITY OF NAGPUR CORPORATION

Quaere: Whether the Corporation was competent to pass a resolution at all selecting delegates for attending the Conference at their own costs.

Section 58(s) of the City of Nagpur Corporation Act contemplates that there must be a reasonable and legitimate connection between what is sought to be done and the promotion of public health, safety and convenience of the public.

Under s. 58(c) of the Act the further educational facilities are those intended for the people in general living within the limits of the Corporation. This section, therefore, cannot be interpreted as permitting expenditure by the Corporation for providing special educational facilities to its Councillors.

Mere sanctioning of an expenditure which is of a special nature by the Corporation is not enough. Either the amount proposed to be spent should be included in the budget [s. 84] or should be expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee [s. 84, proviso (a)]: If it is not included in the budget or if it is not expressly sanctioned by the Standing Committee, the expenditure would be unauthorized.

Every Municipal Corporation is entitled to spend money only when the power to do so is expressly conferred upon it by the Act bringing the Corporation into existence, or is necessarily implied from any power expressly granted by the Act or is essential to the object for which the Corporation is created.

There must be a substantial compliance with the Constitutional or statutory provision as to the right of the municipal corporation to incur expenditure. Such power is to be exercised by the authority named in the Act and by no one else.

The statutory provision prohibiting the incurring of expenditure out of the municipal fund without prior appropriation cannot be transgressed.

Where money is sought to be expended outside the Corporation limit, a very strong case must be made by the Corporation to show that the incurring of this expenditure was essential to the due performance of its duties by the Corporation and that it was bound to result in benefit to the people living within the municipal limits of the Corporation.

Courts may not inquire into the unreasonableness or reasonableness of a municipal act or ordinance but reasonableness of municipal action is subject to review and inquiry by the Courts.

Under the C. P. and Berar Local Fund Audit Act it is only the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts who can take the initiative and report that an expenditure has been wrongly incurred or a payment has been wrongly made by members of the Municipal Corporation voting on a resolution for incurring such expenditure or making such payment. Under the Act no citizen is entitled to move the Government to take action against the members of the Corporation who had voted for the resolution to refund the amount.

CITY OF NAGPUR CORPORATION ACT, S. 57—(Contd.)

The requirement of a demand by a person who seeks the issue of a writ of mandamus is necessary where that person seeks to compel a public authority or a public body to perform its duties under the statute.

If the Court comes to the conclusion that the petitioner is entitled to have his grievance removed, then it has the power to issue an appropriate writ or order though it may not strictly be a writ of mandamus.

Section 57(1)(m) of the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948, confers a power on the Corporation to regulate markets by making bye-laws in that respect and not by merely passing a resolution. Therefore, where the Corporation sought to regulate meat markets and prohibit the sale of meat in weekly markets by merely passing a resolution, held that the action of the Corporation in prohibiting the sale of meat in weekly markets could not be upheld under s. 57(1)(m) of the Act.

The Corporation of the City of Nagpur is empowered under the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948, and bye-law 3 to charge an amount for use and occupation of its property and not fees in the legal sense i.e. charges for the service which is rendered by the Corporation to the occupiers of that property. It is not open to the Corporation to charge or claim any amount it likes as rent for the occupation of its property like markets, stalls etc. but the charges must be reasonable.

Bye-law No. 1 and clauses (i) and (ii) of bye-law No. 14 are not ultra vires of the Constitution of India.

COMMISSIONS OF ENQUIRY ACT (LX of 1952), S. 3—Constitution of India, Art. 14, Seventh Schedule, List I entry 94, List III entry 45—Meaning of expression "any definite matter of public importance" in s. 3(1) of Act—Whether conduct of individual person or company or group of individual persons could call for inquiry under Act—Nature of functions, performance of which contemplated by s. 3—Law with respect to inquiries for purpose of any matter in Lists I, II and III whether can cover any aspect of the matter and be for administrative purpose—Scope of inquiry under law made under entries 95 and 45 of Lists I and III respectively whether limited to future legislative purpose—Principles to be followed by Courts when constitutionality of law attacked as violating art. 14—Basis of permissible classification whether can be gathered from extraneous materials—Whether Court can deny existence of discretionary power conferred on Government on the bare possibility that such power may be misused or abused.

The expression "any definite matter of public importance" in s. 3(1) of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, 1952, does not mean only some matter involving the public benefit or advantage in the abstract, e.g.

COMMISSIONS OF ENQUIRY ACT,

public health, sanitation or the like or some public evil or prejudice, e.g. floods, famine or pestilence or the like. The conduct of an individual person or company or a group of individual persons or companies may assume such a dangerous proportion and may so prejudicially affect or threaten to affect the public well-being as to make such conduct a definite matter of public importance urgently calling for a full inquiry under the Act.

The functions, the performance of which is contemplated by s. 8 of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, 1952, must be such as are ancillary to and in aid of the inquiry itself and cannot be read as a function independent of or unconnected with such inquiry.

The law to be made by the appropriate Legislature with respect to entry 95 in List I and entry 45 in List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India may cover inquiries into any aspect of the matters enumerated in any of the lists mentioned therein and is not confined to those matters as mere heads of legislative topics. The law with respect to inquiries for the purpose of any of the matters in the lists may also be for administrative purposes and the scope of the inquiry under such a law will cover all matters which may properly be regarded as ancillary to such inquiries. The words "for the purposes of" in the aforesaid entries indicate that the scope of the inquiry is not necessarily limited to the particular or specific matters enumerated in any of the entries in the list concerned but may extend to inquiries into collateral matters which may be necessary for the purpose, legislative or otherwise, of those particular matters. Therefore, the inquiry which may be set up by a law made under these two entries is, in its scope or ambit, not limited to future legislative purposes only.

The words "as and by way of securing redress or punishment" in the later part of cl. (10) of notification No. S.R.O. 2993 dated December 11, 1956, issued by the Union of India under s. 8 of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, 1952, go outside the scope of the Act and such provision is not covered by the above two legislative entries and must, therefore, be deleted. The efficacy of the notification is in no way affected by the deletion of the offending words mentioned above.

The following principles must be constantly borne in mind by the Court when it is called upon to adjudge the constitutionality of any particular law attacked as discriminatory and violative of the equal protection of the laws:—

(a) that a law may be constitutional even though it relates to a single individual if, on account of some special circumstances or reasons applicable to him and not applicable to others, that single individual may be treated as a class by himself;

(b) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles;

(c) that it must be presumed that the Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the need of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems manifest by experience and that its discriminations are based on adequate grounds;

(d) that the Legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm and may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be clearest;

(e) that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation; and

(f) that while good faith and knowledge of the existing conditions on the part of the Legislature are to be presumed, if there is nothing on the face of the law or the surrounding circumstances brought to the notice of the Court on which the classification may reasonably be regarded as based, the presumption of constitutionality cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reasons for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile or discriminating legislation.

A statute which may come up for consideration on a question of its validity under art. 14 of the Constitution of India, may be placed in one or other of the following five classes:—

(1) A statute may itself indicate the persons or things to whom its provisions are intended to apply and the basis of the classification of such persons or things may appear on the face of the statute or may be gathered from the surrounding circumstances known to or brought to the notice of the Court. In determining the validity or otherwise of such a statute the Court has to examine whether such classification is or can be reasonably regarded as based upon some differentia which distinguishes such persons or things grouped together from those left out of the group and whether such differentia has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute, no matter whether the provisions of the statute are intended to apply only to a particular person or thing or only to a certain class of persons or things. Where the Court finds that the classification satisfies the tests, the Court will uphold the validity of the law.

(2) A statute may direct its provisions against one individual person or thing or to several individual persons or things, but no reasonable basis of classification may appear on the face of it or be deducible from the surrounding circumstances, or matters of common knowledge. In such a case the Court will strike down the law as an instance of naked discrimination.

(3) A statute may not make any classification of the persons or things for the purpose of applying its provisions but may leave it to the discretion of the Government to select and classify persons or things to whom its provisions are to apply. In determining the question of the validity or otherwise of such a statute the Court will not strike down the law out of hand only because no classification appears on its face or because a discretion is given to the Government to make the selection or classification but will go on to examine and ascertain if the statute has laid down any principle or policy for the guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of selection or classification. After such scrutiny the Court will strike down the statute if it does not lay down any principle or policy for guiding the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of selection or classification, on the ground that the statute provides for the delegation of arbitrary and uncontrolled power to the Government so as to enable it to discriminate between persons or things similarly situated and that, therefore, the discrimination is inherent in the statute itself. In such a case the Court will strike down both the law as well as the executive action taken under such law.

(4) A statute may not make a classification of the persons or things for the purpose of applying its provisions and may leave it to the discretion of the Government to select and classify the persons or things to whom its provisions are to apply but may at the same time lay down a policy or principle for the guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of such selection or classification, the Court will uphold the law as constitutional.

(5) A statute may not make a classification of the persons or things to whom their provisions are intended to apply and leave it to the discretion of the Government to select or classify the persons or things for applying those provisions according to the policy or the principle laid down by the statute itself for guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of such selection or classification. If the Government in making the selection or classification does not proceed on or follow such policy or principle, it has been held by the Supreme Court, e.g. in Kathi Rawat v. The State of Saurashtra, [1952] S. C. R. 435, that in such a case the executive action but not the statute should be condemned as unconstitutional.

The basis of permissible classification under art. 14 of the Constitution need not appear on the face of the law itself but may be gathered from any extraneous materials.

The bare possibility that the wide discretionary powers conferred on the Government by a statute may be misused or abused by the Government cannot per se induce the Court to deny the existence of the powers.

An inspector appointed under s. 138(iv) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, can by virtue of s. 645 of the Companies Act, 1956, with the prior approval of the Central Government under s. 239(2) of the Companies Act, 1956, exercise the powers under s. 239 of the Companies Act, 1956.

If the Legislature saves and deals with a particular provision of the law, when in the earlier sections it had dealt generally and saved other provisions of the law, it does not follow that by reason of the specific mention of a particular provision of the law the other provisions dealing with the same subject are not saved and do not fall within the general provisions contained in the earlier sections.

The accusation referred to in art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India is an accusation with reference to a criminal proceeding and, therefore, as an investigation held by an inspector appointed under the Companies Act, 1956, to investigate the affairs of a company, is not a criminal proceeding, art. 20(3) of the Constitution is not applicable to the provisions of s. 240(5) of the Companies Act, 1956, under which there is an obligation upon the person examined to answer questions put to him and the possibility of these answers being used in evidence against him although the answers may be of an incriminating nature.

Even an obiter of the Supreme Court of India deserves the highest respect and it is incumbent upon the High Court to accept even the obiter as correctly laying down the law.

When in a case a particular clause of a section or an article in the Constitution of India calls for interpretation, and in order to interpret it the Supreme Court interprets the whole section or article and lays down the proper canon of construction, that interpretation is binding upon the High Court unless the Supreme Court in any subsequent decision has departed from the interpretation laid down by it in this decision.

CONSTITUTION OF INDIA, ART. 13.

Article 13(3) of the Constitution of India does not confer upon the order, rule, regulation, notification, etc. referred to in cl. (a) of art. 13(3), the character identical with the character of the Act of the Legislature. All that it says is that the order, notification etc. shall have the same force, and shall be treated on the same footing as the Act of the Legislature.

BHUKUBA D. SANGAMNER BIDI KAMGAR UNION. 61 Bom. L. R. 764.

—ART. 14.

The following principles must be constantly borne in mind by the Court when it is called upon to adjudge the constitutionality of any particular law attacked as discriminatory and violative of the equal protection of the laws:—

(a) that a law may be constitutional even though it relates to a single individual if, on account of some special circumstances or reasons applicable to him and not applicable to others, that single individual may be treated as a class by himself;

(b) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles;

(c) that it must be presumed that the Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the need of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems manifest by experience and that its discriminations are based on adequate grounds;

(d) that the Legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm and may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be clearest;

(e) that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation; and

(f) that while good faith and knowledge of the existing conditions on the part of the Legislature are to be presumed, if there is nothing on the face of the law or the surrounding circumstances brought to the notice of the Court on which the classification may reasonably be regarded as based, the presumption of constitutionality cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reasons for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile or discriminating legislation.

A statute which may come up for consideration on a question of its validity under art. 14 of the Constitution of India, may be placed in one or other of the following five classes:—

(1) A statute may itself indicate the persons or things to whom its provisions are intended to apply and the basis of the classification of such persons or things may appear on the face of the statute or may be gathered from the surrounding circumstances known to or brought to the notice of the Court. In determining the validity or otherwise of such a statute the Court has to examine whether such classification is or can be reasonably regarded as based upon some differentia which distinguishes such persons or things grouped together from those left out of the group and whether such differentia has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute, no matter whether the provisions of the statute are intended to apply only to a particular person or thing or only to a certain class of persons or things. Where the Court finds that the classification satisfies the tests, the Court will uphold the validity of the law.

(2) A statute may direct its provisions against one individual person or thing or to several individual persons or things, but no reasonable basis of classification may appear on the face of it or be deducible from the surrounding circumstances, or matters of common knowledge. In such a case the Court will strike down the law as an instance of naked discrimination.

(3) A statute may not make any classification of the persons or things for the purpose of applying its provisions but may leave it to the discretion of the Government to select and classify persons or things to whom its provisions are to apply. In determining the question of the validity or otherwise of such a statute the Court will not strike down the law out of hand only because no classification appears on its face or because a discretion is given to the Government to make the selection or classification but will go on to examine and ascertain if the statute has laid down any principle or policy for the guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of selection or classification. After such scrutiny the Court will strike down the statute if it does not lay down any principle or policy for guiding the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of selection or classification, on the ground that the statute provides for the delegation of arbitrary and uncontrolled power to the Government so as to enable it to discriminate between persons or things similarly situate and that, therefore, the discrimination is inherent in the statute itself. In such a case the Court will strike down both the law as well as the executive action taken under such law.

(4) A statute may not make a classification of the persons or things for the purpose of applying its provisions and may leave it to the discretion of the Government to select and classify the persons or things to whom its provisions are to apply but may at the same time lay down a policy or principle for the guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of such selection or classification, the Court will uphold the law as constitutional.

(5) A statute may not make a classification of the persons or things to whom their provisions are intended to apply and leave it to the discretion of the Government to select or classify the persons or things for applying those provisions according to the policy or the principle laid down by the statute itself for guidance of the exercise of discretion by the Government in the matter of such selection or classification. If the Government in making the selection or classification does not proceed on or follow such policy or principle, it has been held by the Supreme Court, e.g. in Kathi Raning Ramat v. The State of Saurashtra, [1952] S.C.R. 435, that in such a case the executive action but not the statute should be condemned as unconstitutional.

The basis of permissible classification under art. 14 of the Constitution need not appear on the face of the law itself but may be gathered from any extraneous materials.

—ART. 14.

Where the right conferred upon a person is not guaranteed by the Constitution and does not flow from it and is neither a fundamental right, nor a common law right, nor a natural, inherent or unalienable right, but a franchise dependent upon the law and is thus merely a creature of a statute, it can be asserted only to the extent and subject to the conditions specified in the statute creating it. Therefore, where the Legislature brings into existence a political institution and makes any provisions concerning its constitution or composition, the provisions of the law which bring the institution into existence cannot be challenged under art. 14 of the Constitution, on the ground that the various interests concerned are unequally represented thereon.

MANILAL v. UNION OF INDIA.

—ART. 20 (3)—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sec. 162—Accused without compulsion furnishing evidence which could be used against him—Whether using such evidence at trial of accused violates constitutional guarantee under art. 20 (3)—Whether asking accused to give his handwriting for purpose of comparison with disputed document amounts to taking statement under s. 162 of Code.

The constitutional guarantee under art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India protects a person accused against being compelled to furnish evidence against himself. Where the evidence is collected by a police officer under a judicial mandate as in the case where pursuant to a search warrant, documents or things are seized and produced in Court, there is no circumvention of the constitutional guarantee; nor is every volitional act of a person accused which is evidence, or facilitates collection of evidence against him, to be deemed compelled merely because the act is, relied upon in the judicial proceeding against the person accused. Therefore, the Constitution does not prohibit a person accused of an offence from furnishing evidence which may be used against him; it only affords a protection against compulsion in furnishing evidence.

When a person accused of an offence accompanies a police officer in the course of investigation or complies with a request to give his handwriting or thumb impression for comparison, he does not give a statement, proof of which is prohibited by s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898.

ART. 226.

The word "authority" in art. 226 of the Constitution of India does not include a purely judicial tribunal. The entries in the Lists contained in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India are Legislative heads primarily designed to demarcate the areas of legislative competence of the Union and the State Legislatures. They give simple enumeration of categories of legislation and are not designed to circumscribe or logically define the ambit of art. 248 of the Constitution. It would be difficult, therefore, to read in any entry in List I any restriction by implication or otherwise on the residuary legislative power conferred on the Union Legislature by art. 248.

ART. 310—Army Instructions in India—Civilian employed in defence service whether entitled to protection under art. 311(2)—Whether non-observance of rules in Army Instructions gives cause of action to such civilian—Army Instructions whether affect art. 310.

A person holding any post connected with defence within the meaning of art. 310(1) of the Constitution of India is not included in the class of persons holding a civil post under the Union referred to in art. 311(1) of the Constitution. A civilian employed in defence service is not entitled to protection under art. 311 and is not entitled to any reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken in regard to him.

The rules contained in Army Instructions in India (No. 212/1949 dated June 25, 1949) do not affect the provisions of art. 310 of the Constitution regarding the tenure of office of persons employed in the service of Government of India or State. The Army Instructions, therefore, are not binding on the Union and the non-observance of the rules contained therein do not give any cause of action to a civilian employed in the defence service.

ART. 311—Government of India Act, 1935, [25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42], Sec. 240 (8)—Departmental proceedings duly carried out against plaintiff, a police officer, and order of punishment made against him—Government issuing show cause notice against plaintiff for enhancement of punishment—Plaintiff dismissed from service by Government—Whether necessary for Government to mention and include in show cause notice grounds why it wanted to impose enhanced punishment—Plaintiff whether given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against action proposed to be taken against him—Validity of show cause notice.

A departmental enquiry duly carried out satisfies the provisions of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India so far as opportunity is to be afforded to a Government servant in connection with the investigation of charges levelled against him. After such an enquiry is duly carried out, it is unnecessary under the provisions of art. 311(2) to give a second opportunity to the Government servant (defaulter) to once again reargue the matter as regards the conclusions already reached in the departmental enquiry.

Certain departmental inquiry proceedings were duly carried out against the plaintiff who was a police officer and he was reduced in the pay-scale grade for a period of one year. This punishment was confirmed in appeal and the plaintiff accepted the order of punishment as binding and suffered the punishment. Thereafter, by a show cause notice, the State of Bombay considering that the punishment inflicted upon the plaintiff was inadequate, called upon him to show cause why he should not be dismissed from the police force. In reply to this notice the plaintiff in his representations raised all contentions as regards the merits of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment. The plaintiff was subsequently dismissed from the police force. In a suit filed by the plaintiff against the State it was contended that he was entitled to a show cause notice calling upon him to show cause against the decision arrived at in the departmental inquiry and also that the decision in the departmental inquiry was the ground on which the State had relied for the purpose of enhancement of punishment and that, therefore, he had not been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken against him as required under art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India, and his dismissal was, therefore, invalid:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff had reasonable opportunity of showing cause in respect of the charge levelled against him as also the quantum of punishment that was intended to be inflicted upon him and that it was not necessary that further grounds regarding the intended punishment of dismissal ought to have been mentioned or included in the notice given by the Government, and

The law with respect to inquiries for the purpose of any of the matters in the list may also be for administrative purposes and the scope of the inquiry under such a law will cover all matters which may properly be regarded as ancillary to such inquiries. Implied powers, doctrine of.

The doctrine of implied powers under a statute can be applied only where the following conditions are fulfilled:—

(1) There must be duty imposed or power prescribed.

(2) On a reasonable construction of the statute there must be an impossibility in the exercise or fulfilment of that power, resulting in making its object or purpose nugatory.

(3) The impossibility must be such that it is not an impossibility in an individual case because there the law cannot permit powers by implication, but the impossibility must be of a general nature so that the purpose and object of the duty or power is rendered impossible of achievement in every case. It is only then that powers by implication can be inferred.

(4) The implication cannot contradict the expressed intent which must always prevail and where it becomes necessary to read an implication into an enactment the scope of the implication must be limited only to what is reasonably necessary and no more.

Legislative practice.

If the Legislature of a country has been accustomed to use any word or expression with a more restricted or extended meaning than might be commonly attributed to it in its ordinary sense, the Court should not blandly shut out that consideration but should avail of that assistance, albeit limited, in the process of interpretation. Legislative practice is one of the accepted aids to construction and furnishes extrinsic evidence to which resort may legitimately had when the Court has to construe a word or phrase and the task of preferring one meaning to another can really be said to have arisen.

Reasonableness how adjudged.

In ascertaining whether the impugned statute is unreasonable, no abstract tests can be laid down. Reasonableness or otherwise of the statute has to be adjudged in the light of the nature of the right infringed, the object of imposing the restriction, the extent and the gravity of the evil to be remedied, the degree of harm or inconvenience to the aggrieved citizen in the context of the benefit intended to be achieved for the benefit of society and similar other considerations. Even serious inconvenience or hardship resulting to a citizen by the imposition of a restriction on the exercise of his fundamental rights cannot be decisive of unreasonableness of a statute. Nor can the restriction be called unreasonable because its degree or extent is delimited by reference to a point of time or some period in the past.

Rule of construction relating to provisions of enactment in pari materia—Decisions of English Courts on analogous provisions of English law how far to be adhered to.

On analogous provisions of the Indian law unaffected by the specialities of the English law and on fundamental concepts and on broad general principles, decisions of Courts in England may be useful and of considerable guidance if utilised with due care and caution. Danger, however, lies in phrases used aptly enough in a particular context and opinions weighty and useful in their own sphere and context being treated as doctrine of universal application or adopting those principles as riders to the actual statutory language. Rigid adherence to decisions of Courts in England must be deprecated and particularly when they have a bearing on the English law of property with its highly technical and overrefined rules affecting realty which operated when the English enactment came into force.

The rule of construction relating to provisions of enactments in pari materia is one of great convenience, and aid from outside may legitimately be derived when any doubtful point of interpretation of any provision has to be solved. But reference to it simply on the ground of similarity has to be avoided.

KHATIBABAI v. CONTROLLER OF ESTATE DUTY.

61 Bom. L. R. 719.

"Shall", how to be construed.

In order to place a proper construction on the expression "shall" in a statute the Court must look to the scheme of the Act in order to determine what are the consequences which the law has laid down as a result of non-compliance with that mandatory direction. The consequence may be penal, the consequence may be that a particular order passed is invalidated, the consequence may be that a particular right is not acquired or a particular obligation is imposed, or the consequence may be not stated in the law at all. When no consequence is apparent in the law it is possible for the Court to take the view that although the statute has used the expression "shall" it must be construed as being directory or procedural rather than mandatory in the strict sense of the term.

may also consider what was the understanding of the law prior to the amendment and may even ascertain what the defect sought to be remedied by enacting the amending Act was. If a statute is clear and unambiguous, then, subsequent legislation cannot affect its interpretation. In every plaint the plaintiff has to aver that the Court in which it is filed has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the claim made therein. In the absence of such an averment, the Court must reject it, unless the Court is satisfied from the other averments in the plaint that it has, prima facie, jurisdiction to entertain the plaint and that the plaintiff's omission to make the averment as to jurisdiction is a mere clerical or accidental error. But where a plaintiff lodges his claim and denies the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it, the Court must throw it out forthwith. The reason why the Courts refuse to entertain writs when an alternative remedy is available is that the Legislature has set up tribunals for decision in appeals and that the remedy which the Court could give, the petitioner could obtain from these tribunals. But whether the petitioner should be disentitled to maintain the petition or not is a matter of discretion with the Court, and if the Court is satisfied that the petitioner will not get justice from the appellate tribunal or that he would have no confidence in the decision of the tribunal or that the appeal would be nothing more than an appeal from Caesar to Caesar, then the Court is not bound to accede to the submission of the State that it should not hear the petitioner and the petitioner should be referred to the appellate tribunal set up under the Act.

Under s. 154 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the condition as to a first information report being reduced to writing and that it shall be signed by the person giving it, is a mere matter of procedure and failure to observe the procedure as to signature will not make the information given, if it is reduced to writing, inadmissible.

On a report submitted to a Magistrate of the first class under s. 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, by a police officer after completing investigations with reference to offences which are exclusively triable by a Special Judge under s. 7(1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to consider the report and grant the type of summary (as contemplated in the Police Manual) which according to him is appropriate in the circumstances of the case.

Before it could be said that a Magistrate has taken cognizance under s. 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, it is not sufficient that he should have applied his mind to the report submitted to him by a police officer under s. 173 of the Code, but he must do something for proceeding under the subsequent provisions of the Code, e.g., under s. 200, under which the Magistrate has to examine the complainant on taking cognizance of an offence.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 173
—(Contd.)

- A police officer after completing investigation in connection with an offence under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, and s. 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, submitted a report to a First Class Magistrate under s. 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, and requested that 'B' summary may be issued in respect thereof. The Magistrate on merits passed an order granting 'A' type of summary on the report. On the question whether the Magistrate had power to consider the report and act on it, it was contended that the Magistrate was not empowered to take cognizance of the offence which was exclusively triable by a Special Judge under s. 7(1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952, and that he could not take cognizance of the offence by refusing to issue 'B' summary and in issuing 'A' summary in contravention of the provisions of s. 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947:—

Held, that the Magistrate was not deprived of his power to take cognizance of the offence even though it was exclusively triable by a Court of a Special Judge and, therefore, the submission of the report by the police officer and his request for the issue of 'B' summary and the order passed granting 'A' summary were not without jurisdiction, that as no further proceedings were intended to be taken by the Magistrate it could not be said that the Magistrate in issuing 'A' summary had taken cognizance of the offence, and that, therefore, the order could not be challenged on the ground that it was bad as the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence without any previous sanction as contemplated under s. 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act.

A magistrate has jurisdiction to direct an Investigation Officer to submit a chargesheet when that officer in the investigation of a cognizable offence has not filed a charge-sheet and has in submitting his report under s. 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, requested that Summary "A", "B" or "C" be issued.

A magistrate may not lightly pass an order that a charge-sheet be filed. It is only after a careful consideration of the materials placed by a police officer in his report if a magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficiently compelling grounds which require him to disagree with the opinion of the police officer and to reject the prayer for a summary asked for that he will be justified in calling for a charge-sheet.

Where the accused before the commencement of his trial is not supplied with copies of the police statements of prosecution witnesses as required under s. 173(4) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the prosecution is not thereby debarred from examining these witnesses.

If the prosecution intends to lead evidence copies of which have not been supplied to the defence, the Magistrate might put the prosecution on terms and insist that the additional evidence should not be allowed to go on record unless and until copies of the police statements of witnesses are supplied in advance to the defence.

Where, however, the Magistrate feels that prejudice is likely to be caused to the defence by reason of the fact that the witnesses, who have already been examined, could not thereafter be examined with a view to falsify the additional evidence, which was about to be tendered, the Magistrate in his discretion might disallow the prosecution to tender the additional evidence.

Under s. 264 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the substance of the evidence is to be recorded at the time when the evidence is given in Court. Therefore, where the substance of the evidence is embodied in a judgment from memory or from short notes made at the time when evidence was given it does not amount to compliance with s. 264 of the Code.

The expression “the substance of the evidence” occurring in the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, implies that all the important or substantial part of the deposition of each witness should be recorded by the presiding authority.

In a trial under the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, by virtue of s. 116 of the Act it is incumbent upon the magistrate to record the substance of the evidence of each witness when the evidence is led in Court. Failure to record such evidence would generally vitiate the trial.

Next day, i.e. on February 23, 1958, when the complainant tried to enter the room the accused personally obstructed the complainant from entering the room. On the question whether the Magistrate was in law justified in passing the order under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it was contended by the accused that the

On the question whether it was open to the High Court to antedate the decree passed by it and direct that it should bear the same date as the decree passed by the trial Court:—

Thereafter, proceedings under s. 104A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act were started against the petitioner for revision of the assessment levied on the land, on the ground that he had diverted his holding to non-agricultural purposes. The assessment was accordingly revised under the Diverted Lands Revision of Assessment Rules, 1952. On the question whether the Rules applied to the Malik-makbuz holding:—

Held, that although land-revenue came to be fixed by the revenue officer during the currency of the settlement under Chapter VI of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, the Malik-makbuz holding could not be regarded as having been assessed at settlement within r. 1(2) of the Assessment Rules, and that, therefore, the Rules did not apply to such holding and the revision of assessment in accordance with the Rules was illegal.

If parties enter into a contract and arrive at an agreement to the effect that a licence shall be irrevocable or shall be limited for a particular duration, the licensor will not be entitled to terminate or revoke the licence at his will.

The plaintiff, who had lost his suit in the first Court for possession of a room in the defendant's occupation, during the pendency of his appeal entered into a compromise with the defendant. The appeal Court passed a consent decree whereby the plaintiff agreed to allow the defendant to be in exclusive possession of one-third portion of the room and further agreed that the defendant's right as a licensee to occupy it was irrevocable so long as the Bombay Rent Act remained in force. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for possession of the one-third portion of the room in occupation of the defendant, it was contended by the plaintiff that the licence was revocable at his will as it did not fall in any of the two classes of cases of irrevocable licences set out in s. 60 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882:—

Held, that apart from s. 60 of the Indian Easements Act which means that where a case falls in either of the two categories mentioned therein the licence is made irrevocable, under the law of contract the plaintiff was precluded from revoking the contract because of the contractual engagement into which he had entered.

ESTATE DUTY ACT (XXXIV of 1953), S. 5—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. Ch. 30), Secs. 1, 3(b)—Settlement of property where interest reserved by settlor for life and settlement not taking effect as will—Lesser part of property i.e. interest reserved could pass by application of general rule laid down in s. 5—Whether whole of settled property to be deemed to pass—Applicability of s. 12—"Property passing on the death," definition of—Decisions of English Courts on analogous provisions of English law how far to be adhered to—Rule of construction relating to provisions of enactments in pari materia.

Section 12 of the Estate Duty Act, 1953, lays down the special rule that in case of a settlement of any property with reservation to the settlor of any interest in such property for life, although less may pass by application of the general rule laid down in s. 5 of the Act (i.e. only the interest which was reserved), the whole of such property of the settlor, the subject-matter of the settlement in which he has reserved interest for life, must be deemed to pass on the settlor's death.

The object of the Legislature in enacting s. 12 of the Act was that where an interest, however small, is reserved by a settlor under any settlement not taking effect as a will for life or any other period determinable by reference to death, the whole of the property would be deemed to pass even though otherwise a lesser part thereof might pass, and that if he has reserved to himself the right by the exercise of any power to restore to himself or to reclaim the absolute interest in such property, the whole property would pass whether he has reserved any aliquot share in the income of any other interest in the property or not.

By a wakf-ul-ud certain properties were transferred to Mutavalls by the settlor, a Sunni Hanafi Mohammedan, who reserved for the maintenance during her lifetime 62½ per cent. of the net income of the property and the remaining income was given in certain proportion to her daughter and her children for their maintenance. Under this deed it was further provided that after the death of the settlor the entire income of the property was to be paid in certain proportion to her daughter and her children from generation to generation.

ESTATE DUTY ACT, S. 5—(Contd.)

There was, in the deed, an ultimate provision for the benefit of the poor or for any other purpose recognised by the Mussalman law as a religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent character. After the death of the settlor, the Collector of Estate Duty included all the properties in the estate duty assessment under s. 12 of the Estate Duty Act, 1958. On the question whether the entire Wakf property or only 62½ per cent. of the Wakf was chargeable to estate duty, it was contended that there was actual passing of the interest of the settlor on her death which was 62½ per cent. of the income of the properties, and that, therefore, the property that could be brought to estate duty under s. 5 of the Act could only be 62½ per cent. of the corpus and the fact that the case was wholly covered by the language and scope of s. 12 of the Act which expressly deals with such a settlement and such reservation of interest, was of no consequence:—

Held, that s. 12 in terms applied to the settlement in the case and, therefore, the entire Wakf property was chargeable to estate duty.

To ascertain whether a property has passed on the death of person within the meaning of the Estate Duty Act, 1958, the comparison must be made between the persons beneficially interested the moment before the death and the persons so interested the moment after the death.

The scheme of the Estate Duty Act, 1958, is substantially the same as the scheme of the English Finance Act of 1894.

On analogous provisions of the Indian law unaffected by the specialities of the English law and on fundamental concepts and on broad general principles, decisions of Courts in England can be useful and of considerable guidance if utilised with due care and caution. Danger, however, lies in phrases used aptly enough in a particular context and opinions weighty and useful in their own sphere and context being treated as expressing doctrines of universal application or adopting those principles as riders to the actual statutory language. Rigid adherence to decisions of Courts in England must be deprecated and particularly when they have some bearing on the English law of property with its highly technical and overrefined rules affecting realty which operated when the English enactment came into force.

The rule of construction relating to provisions of enactments in pari materia is one of great convenience and aid from outside may legitimately be derived when any doubtful point of interpretation of any provision has to be solved. But reference to it simply on the ground of similarity has to be avoided.

EVIDENCE—Notes of post-mortem examination recorded by medical officer—Whether such notes admissible in evidence—Practice (Criminal)—Whether notes of post-mortem examination where evidence relating to such examination relevant should be taken on record—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Sec. 159.

Notes of post-mortem examination prepared by a medical officer are admissible in evidence where the same are duly proved by the testimony of the medical officer who has performed the examination and has recorded the same. As a matter of practice such notes of post-mortem examination, where the evidence relating to the post-mortem examination is relevant, should be taken on the record.

The notes of the post-mortem examination are not intended to be mechanically admitted on the record of the case. In every case when the medical officer is examined before the Court to establish the cause of death disclosed by a post-mortem examination, he must be called upon to give evidence about the matters which have a bearing on the questions to be decided by the Court and he must also be called upon to depose whether the record made by him in the notes of the post-mortem examination are true and if the medical officer deposes to the truth of the record made by him, the record itself may be treated as evidence.

The words "information received from a person accused of any offence" in s. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, cannot be read to mean that he must be an accused when he gives the information but would include a person if he became subsequently an accused person, at the time when that statement is sought to be received in evidence against him.

Where a person goes to a police officer and makes a statement which shows that an offence has been committed by him, he accuses himself and though he is formally not arrested, since he is not free to move wherever he likes after disclosure of the information to the police he must be deemed to be in custody of the police within s. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

A complaint in writing made by a person who dies sometime thereafter, expressing apprehension of death at the hands of a person is admissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, when the person whose conduct is the source of the apprehension is charged with the offence of murder of the person making the complaint.

If the fact to be proved is a statement made by a person since deceased, and it is admissible under a provision other than s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, its admissibility cannot be denied because it does not fall within the provisions contained in s. 32 of the Act.

The deceased had submitted a written complaint against her husband on August 15, 1958, to the Commissioner of Police which inter alia stated: "As this concerns with my whole life, I am afraid, if no prompt action is taken, a poor life would be destroyed." At the trial of the husband for the murder of his wife, which was committed on October 27, 1958, it was contended that the complaint submitted by the deceased was inadmissible in evidence under s. 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act:—

Held, that the statement showing apprehension of death on account of the conduct of the husband was admissible as a statement relating to the circumstances of the transaction under s. 32(1) of the Act:

that the fact that the deceased had made a complaint against her husband, which may have constituted a motive for the husband to commit the offence charged, was a fact, which could be proved under s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act, and production of the original complaint would be probative of that fact.

A judgment in another Land Acquisition Reference not inter partes and with reference to another property situate in the vicinity of the land in question is not admissible as an instance from which the market value of the land in question can be deduced.

Held, that this was a clear case where the necessary presumption as to the character of the document could be drawn under s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and, therefore, the failure to tender formal evidence as to the nature of the document did not prevent the document from being admitted in evidence. The evidence of a witness given in the committing Magistrate's Court which is brought on record in the Sessions Court under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, stands on exactly the same footing as evidence given in the Sessions Court and it would be "testimony" within the meaning of s. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, which could be corroborated under s. 157.

The word 'statement' used in s. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, means only 'something that is stated' and the element of communication to another person is not necessary before 'something that is stated' becomes a statement under that section.

FACTORIES ACT (LXIII of 1948), S. 2(1), —Partners of concern where manufacturing process going on working in such factory—Whether persons workers within s. 2(1).

The factory inspector visited the premises of a saw mill where certain manufacturing process was going on with the aid of power and found thirty workers engaged in some job or other. The accused produced a register containing nineteen names in one place and nine additional names at another place. The factory inspector finding that all the thirty persons engaged in the factory were workers within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1948, lodged a complaint for the violation of s. 7(1) read with s. 92 of the Act and also of r. 4 of the Bombay Factories Rules, 1950. The accused contended that the mill was a partnership concern and the nineteen names mentioned in the register were the names of the partners, that the nine additional names appearing in it were the names of workers who were working on wages in the mill and that the remaining persons were partners of another concern which was situated on the same premises as the mill. It was contended for the prosecution that as the partners in the mill had engaged themselves in doing the work on the premises of the factory, they fell within the definition of the word 'worker' in s. 2(1) of the Act, and inasmuch as the number of such workers exceeded ten, the provisions of the Act were violated:—

Held, that the partners of the mill who were found working in the factory could not be considered as employees, because so far as they were concerned, there was neither any employer nor any contract of employment, and that, therefore, they were not workers within the meaning of s. 2(1) of the Act.

A person was engaged as a bidi roller by the owner and occupier of a bidi factory and his hours of work were fixed but there was no compulsion on him to attend the factory during those hours. He could attend the factory and leave it at any time he chose during the working hours and could remain absent. There was no actual 'supervision' on his work in the ordinary sense of that expression. He was not paid a fixed daily or weekly wage but was paid at fixed rates on the quantities of bidis turned out by him. There was no express contract between the owner and occupier of the factory and the bidi roller about the 'work' and there was no stipulation about the minimum quantity of work to be done by him every day. On the question whether the bidi roller could be said to be 'employed' within the meaning of that expression in s. 2(1) of the Factories Act, 1948:—

Held, that in the instant case, the nature of the work being of the simplest and a well-defined task and the remuneration being on the basis of quantity of work done, little direct supervision was actually needed to be exercised but such supervision as was felt necessary by the management was there and there was the right to supervise the manner in which the work was to be done, and that applying the prima facie test of the existence of right to supervise and control the manner in which the work is to be done as determinative of the existence of the relationship of employer and employee, the bidi roller, in the present case, was in the employment of the management and a 'worker' within the meaning of that expression in s. 2(1) of the Act.

Under ss. 79 and 80 of the Factories Act, 1948, the right to claim wages for leave can be claimed by a worker whose wages are regulated on the basis of the amount of work put in by him.

Under s. 21(1)(a)(b) of the Factories Act, 1948, the safety contemplated either by securely fencing the transmission machinery or by its position or by its construction is absolute safety but such absolute safety must be only against reasonably foreseeable risks and dangers of coming into contact with the transmission machinery.

Section 21 of the Factories Act, 1948, gives protection not merely to the careful, the vigilant and the conscientious workman, but to the careless, the indolent, the inadvertent, the weary, and even perhaps in some cases, the disobedient. But the carelessness, the indolence, the inadvertence, the weariness and even the disobedience of a workman are things which an occupier of a factory can and is expected to reasonably foresee and should, therefore, provide against. Such risks and dangers are foreseeable and must under s. 21 of the Act be provided against. But s. 21 cannot be given the meaning that it imposes a duty upon an occupier of a factory to provide for safety against even unforeseeable risks and dangers.

Section 21 of the Factories Act, 1948, does not contemplate a provision being made for the safety of an employee who is assigned the work of repairing machinery or of shifting machinery or of installing new machinery.

Some carding machines in the carding department of a mill, which was a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1948, were being shifted to some other place during the recess time, when the machinery was not in motion. Instructions were issued to do the shifting only during the recess when the shaft and pulleys were not in motion. One of the carding machines had been stopped working as it was to be shifted on the following day. On this day a few minutes before the recess a workman placing a ladder against a steam pipe stood up on it and attempted to take a belt of this carding machine which was lying idle on a hanger on the other side of the shaft and pulley which were in motion. In doing so the workman was entangled in the belt and the moving shaft and died as a result of the injuries sustained by him. On these facts the accused, who was the manager of the mill, was charged under s. 21(1)(iv)(b) of the Factories Act, 1948, for having failed to securely fence the shaft and pulleys of the carding department of the factory which formed part of the transmission machinery. The prosecution contended that the safety aimed at by s. 21(1)(iv) of the Act whether by fencing or by position or by construction, is absolute safety and that the shaft and pulleys in the instant case were not, by their position, absolutely safe to every person employed in the factory. The accused contended that the safety provided by s. 21(1)(iv), though absolute, could be only against foreseeable risks and dangers and not otherwise and that, therefore, the shaft and pulleys did not require to be fenced as they were in such a position as to be safe to every person employed in the factory as they would have been if they were securely fenced:—

Held, that in the circumstances of the case, the risk from the unfenced overhead shaft and pulleys was not foreseeable risk, and that, therefore, there was no breach of the provisions of s. 21(1)(iv)(b) committed by the accused.

A suit was filed in the High Court by the plaintiffs, a company incorporated in the State of New York, which was based on an award given by a domestic tribunal in New York and on which award a decree was obtained from the Supreme Court of the State of New York. It was established on the pleadings that the defendants, who were alleged to be carrying on business in Bombay, had accepted the terms of business in Bombay which terms of business included a submission to arbitration to the tribunal in New York. On the question whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, it was contended by the defendants that no part of the cause of action had arisen in Bombay, that as a foreign judgment was passed on the award, the only suit that could be filed was a suit on the foreign judgment and not on the award and that a suit could be filed only on an award which was enforceable by itself and which did not require in any way to be completed in order that it should become enforceable:—

Held, that the agreement to go to arbitration constituted an important material and necessary part of the cause of action and that part of the cause of action had arisen in Bombay.

that as it is open to a party who has obtained a foreign judgment to sue in the alternative on the original cause of action which resulted in his obtaining the foreign judgment, it was competent to the plaintiffs who had obtained a foreign judgment on the award to rely on the original cause of action which in the present case was the award, that the plaintiffs were suing on the award which could be enforced in the State of New York and it was made enforceable and complete by obtaining the foreign judgment, and that, therefore, the suit on the award was maintainable and the Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit on the award.

Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, is wide enough to permit the Court to raise a presumption not only with regard to oral evidence, but also with regard to documentary evidence.

Where a copy of the judgment of a foreign Court duly certified by the legal keeper thereof and with a proper certificate obtained from the Indian Consul was sought to be admitted in evidence but its production was objected on the ground that under s. 78(6) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, further proof of the character of the document according to the law of the foreign country was not given:—

Held, that this was a clear case where the necessary presumption as to the character of the document could be drawn under s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and, therefore, the failure to tender formal evidence as to the nature of the document did not prevent the document from being admitted into evidence.

Where an award is given by a tribunal selected by the parties and when the tribunal is a domestic tribunal and not a tribunal set up by the laws of a foreign country, it is not open to a party, who is a party to the award, to contend that the award was not given on merits. If the award was given against the rules of natural justice or it was fraudulently obtained, the party may not be prevented from putting forward that contention.

It is only in those cases where the Court for some reason or other passes a judgment against a party without investigating into the merits of the matter that it could be said that the decision is not given on the merits. The mere fact that the decision is ex parte, the mere fact that the defendant after being served does not choose to appear, does not make an ex parte decision a decision not on merits.

There are cases where it can be said that a Court or a tribunal has not considered the point and therefore the decision, in the absence of such consideration, is not a decision on a particular matter. But there are also cases where the point is so obvious that it would have been taken if it was a good point, and then it is open to the Court to say that indirectly the matter has been decided by that Court because the decision was not based upon the acceptance of that particular submission.

Accused, a natural born British subject, entering India on Pakistan passport on July 12, 1956—Visa obtained by accused valid for certain period after entry into India—Accused failing to leave India after expiry of such period—Whether accused a foreigner, when he entered India, within s. 2(a) of Act before its amendment—Accused whether had contravened para. 7 of Order—Words "said period" in para. 7 whether refer to period mentioned in visa.

The accused who was a natural born British subject within the meaning of s. 2(a)(i) of the Foreigners Act, 1946, (before the section was amended by the Foreigners Laws (Amendment) Act, 1957) entered India on July 12, 1956, on a passport obtained from the Government of Pakistan. He had obtained a visa from the High Commissioner for India in Pakistan which was valid for three months from the date of entry into Indian territory. The accused did not leave India after the expiry of this period and he was thereupon prosecuted for an offence under s. 14 of the Foreigners Act, 1946, for having contravened para. 7. of the Foreigners Order, 1948, and s. 18 of the Act:—

Held, that the accused was not a foreigner when he entered India on July 12, 1956, as defined in s. 2(a)(i) of the Act as it stood then and therefore he was not obliged to comply with the provisions of para. 7 of the Order.

Act XVIII of 1925 whether law with respect to matters enumerated in entry 46.*

The words "taxes on luxuries or entertainments or amusements" in entry 50, List II, Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935, have not a restricted meaning so as to confine the operation of the law to be made thereunder only to taxes on persons receiving the luxuries, entertainments or amusements. The entry contemplates luxuries, entertainments and amusements as objects on which the tax is to be imposed. Therefore, a law which imposes tax on the act of entertaining is within the entry whether it falls on the giver or the receiver of that entertainment.

Section 78 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, is a law with respect to matters enumerated in entry 50 and not entry 46, List II, Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935, and the Bombay Legislature had ample power to enact this law.

Plaintiff's adoption made in former Kolhapur State before coming into force of Act—Vat Hukum passed by Kolhapur State providing for ex post facto sanction to adoptions—State Government according ex post facto sanction to plaintiff's adoption after coming into force of Act—Competency of State Government to accord such sanction.

The plaintiff's adoption took place in 1900 in the former Kolhapur State. In a Vat Hukum passed by the Kolhapur Government in connection with adoptions there was a provision under which the Kolhapur Darbar could accord ex post facto sanction to adoptions which affected Inam properties and which were made without getting the sanction of the Kolhapur Darbar. The Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, came into force on December 31, 1956, and on June 26, 1957, the State Government accorded ex post facto sanction to the plaintiff's adoption. Debts—Debt by father—Avyavaharika debt, what is—Father, managing director of bank drawing salary, incurring liability as result of negligence in discharge of his duties as such director—Whether such liability incurred an Avyavaharika debt—Pious obligation of sons to discharge debts of father not tainted with immorality or illegality whether comes to an end on partition of joint family property—Partition taking place after decree and pending execution proceedings—Sale of whole joint family estate in execution—Whether partition saves shares of sons or impairs rights of creditors—Sons not challenging the liability of their interest in execution of decree against father and Court ordering sale of whole estate—Whether auction-purchaser's right defeated on ground that sons not brought on record—What passes to auction-purchaser where right, title and interest of judgment-debtor are sold—Words "right, title and interest" in s. 165 of Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. V of 1879).

Under Hindu law an Avyavaharika debt is any debt for a cause repugnant to good morals.

Where as a result of certain proceedings taken against a father, who was a managing director of a co-operative bank receiving a salary, by the liquidator of the bank, a payment order for a certain amount was made against him by the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies, held that the liability incurred by the father as a result of negligence in the discharge of his duties as a managing director was not an Avyavaharika debt.

Under Hindu law the liability of the sons to discharge the debts of the father which are not tainted with immorality or illegality is based on the pious obligation of the sons which continues to exist in the lifetime and after the death of the father and it does not come to an end as a result of partition of the joint family property. All that results from partition is that the right of the father to make alienation comes to an end.

HINDU LAW—Debts—(Contd.)

Where the pious obligation exists and partition takes place after the decree and pending execution proceedings, the sale of the whole estate in execution of the decree cannot be challenged except on proof by the sons of the immoral or illegal purpose of the debt and partition cannot relieve the sons of their pious obligation or their shares of their liability to be sold or be a means of reducing the efficacy of the attachment or impair the rights of the creditor.

In cases where the sons do not challenge the liability of their interest in the execution of the decree against the father and the Court after attachment and proper notice of sale sells the whole estate and the auction-purchaser purchases and pays for the whole estate, the mere fact that the sons were ex nomine not brought on the record would not be sufficient to defeat the rights of the auction-purchaser or put an end to the pious obligation of the sons.

Where the right, title and interest of a judgment-debtor are set up for sale as to what passes to the auction-purchaser is a question of fact in each case dependent upon what was the estate put up for sale, what the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser intended to buy and did buy and what he paid for.

The words "right, title and interest" occurring in s. 155 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, have the same connotation as they had in the corresponding words used in the Civil Procedure Code existing at the time the Bombay Land Revenue Code was enacted.

In execution proceedings it is not necessary to implead the sons or to bring another suit if severance of status takes place pending the execution proceedings because the pious duty of the sons continues and consequently there is merely a difference in the mode of enjoyment of the property.

3. FEMALE POSSESSED OF PROPERTY.

—Hindu female possessed of property—Effect of Hindu Succession Act on legal rights of.

The effect of the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, on the legal rights of a Hindu female possessed of property and those of the reversionary heirs of the last male holder is that:—

(1) a female Hindu would now become the full owner of the property of which she is possessed, whether she acquired the property before or after the commencement of the Act;

(2) as she would now hold the property of the last male holder as a full and not limited owner, the other heirs of the last male holder can no longer be called reversionary heirs;

(3) the provisions of s. 14 of the Act being retrospective in operation would affect suits filed before the commencement of the Act, i.e. June 17, 1956, so that any such suit in which the reversionary heir claims a declaration about his or her reversionary right regarding the property of the last male holder or any relief that "would, in any manner, be inconsistent with the full proprietary rights conferred on the female Hindu by s. 14 of the Act, would become incompetent by reason of the fact that the heir has ceased to be a reversionary heir.

61 Bom. L. R. 560.

4. JOINT FAMILY PROPERTY.

—Joint family property—Nucleus of joint property—Burden of proof how discharged where plaintiff alleges that certain property acquired with help of nucleus of joint family property.

When a plaintiff files a suit alleging that a certain property belongs to a joint family, the initial burden is on the plaintiff to prove his assertion that the property in question is joint family property. This burden can be discharged by the plaintiff by showing that the property was purchased from joint family funds or by joint labour or by showing that the joint family possessed joint family property, that the nucleus of joint family property either proved or admitted was of such a nature that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired. If the existence of a joint family nucleus or property is either admitted or proved, it must be shown that the nucleus was of such a character that with its help the property in controversy could have been acquired.

If the initial burden of proof resting on the plaintiff is thus discharged, then the burden would shift to the defendant to prove that the property in question was acquired by himself with his own self-acquired property and without the aid of the joint property or joint family funds or income, or that the income derived from the ancestral lands had been kept intact or was not available to him.

(b) Desertion.

S. 10—Desertion—Essential ingredients of.—Wilful neglect, what amounts to—Whether animus deserendi necessary where offence charged is wilful neglect—Reasonable excuse or just cause as answer to charge of desertion.

Under s. 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, proof of the requisite animus deserendi is necessary where the matrimonial offence charged is wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage.

Conduct of a spouse to amount to wilful neglect must be deliberate and intentional failure to perform the obligations of married life indicative of a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage. Mere neglect of opportunities of consorting or every indifference or want of proper solicitude for the other spouse is not wilful neglect within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 10(1) of the Act.

The burden of proving desertion is upon the spouse who alleges desertion.

In order to establish a plea of desertion there must be a separation in fact between the two spouses and there must also be, on the part of the deserting spouse, an intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. From the point of time when it is claimed that desertion has commenced, the two conditions must co-exist, though it is not necessary that when separation commenced there must be animus deserendi, i.e. intention to forsake or abandon the other spouse. But it is not merely on proof of separation and the existence of the requisite animus deserendi that a decree for judicial separation will be passed. There must be two other elements on the co-existence of which alone the deserted spouse will be entitled to a decree for judicial separation, and those elements are (i) the absence of consent on the part of the deserted spouse and (ii) the absence of conduct on the part of the deserted spouse giving reasonable cause to the spouse leaving the matrimonial home to form the necessary intention.

In a matrimonial dispute, the matrimonial offence must be established to the satisfaction of the Court beyond reasonable doubt, and, though not as a matter of law, as a rule of prudence, independent corroboration of the version of the parties is sought. Such corroboration, however, need not be by direct testimony: it may be obtained from the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances.

Per S. T. Desai J.: Wilful neglect, in the context of the matrimonial offence of desertion, must be such neglect as can be regarded as the "withdrawal from a state of things." The neglect, wilful neglect, must be in the discharge of matrimonial obligations, and there must be such a failure of the fulfilment of those obligations—the common obligations of the marital state—as would amount to a total forsaking or abandonment of those obligations. Therefore, this failure, this total forsaking or abandonment of consortium evidences the factum of separation and the wilful manner of inflicting it evidences the requisite animus deserendi. It would not be appropriate to dissociate animus deserendi, which is the essence of desertion even when one speaks of desertion by wilful neglect. It is implicit in the concept of desertion, and it is implicit in wilful neglect. Animus deserendi is not merely an attribute or an incidence of the matrimonial offence of desertion. It is of the very nature of that offence and of the essence of it. Therefore, it would be fallacious to say that there need be no proof of animus deserendi in a case of desertion founded on the plea of wilful neglect.

A petition founded on the charge of desertion can be resisted by the opponent-spouse if she or he is able to show that there was reasonable excuse or just cause for the separation. The "just cause" must be "grave and weighty" or "grave and convincing". But it can be something which falls short of a matrimonial offence.

property recognised as Navawali of property by former Kolhapur State—Defendant adopted by widow in 1949 without obtaining sanction of adoption from Kolhapur authorities—Plaintiff, another widow of deceased holder, inheriting property—Defendant granted ex post facto sanction to his adoption in 1958—Whether defendant could divest plaintiff's title to property acquired under s. 14—What is possession contemplated by s. 14.

The last male holder of certain Inam property died leaving him surviving his two widows, A and the plaintiff, but no lineal descendants. A was recognised as the Navawali of the property by the former Kolhapur State. On March 14, 1949, defendant No. 1 was adopted by A as a son to her deceased husband. A died on March 18, 1949, and the plaintiff became entitled by inheritance to the property as the sanction of the Kolhapur State authorities to the adoption of defendant No. 1 was not obtained. On June 6, 1958, defendant No. 1 was informed by the Government of Bombay that orders granting sanction ex post facto to his adoption by A on March 14, 1949, were issued. Defendant No. 1 relying on this sanction claimed the property as the adopted son. The plaintiff contended that on A's death the property had devolved upon her by inheritance and as she had acquired rights of full ownership in the property on the coming into force of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, on December 21, 1956, defendant No. 1 could not divest her of her title which was by law made absolute and indefeasible:—

Held, that the estate possessed by the plaintiff, which had become absolute by virtue of s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, was not liable to be divested on the grant of the sanction ex post facto to the adoption of defendant No. 1.

A sanction ex post facto to an adoption may have the effect of divesting property vested in another person by inheritance from the sole surviving coparcener, or a limited owner, but that rule in so far as it is inconsistent with s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is superseded by cl. (b) of s. 4 of the Act.

Full ownership contemplated by s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is not subject to any incident of divestiture by adoption.

The possession contemplated by s. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, is legal possession and property in the wrongful occupation of a trespasser either directly or through his tenants is nonetheless possessed by a Hindu female within the meaning of s. 14 of the Act. YAMUNABAI V. RAM MAHARAJ.

rights of Hindu female possessed of property and of reversionary heirs of last male holder.

Under s. 15(1)(a) read with s. 16 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, the sons and daughters (including the children of a deceased son or daughter) and the husband of a female dying intestate, are entitled to inherit her property simultaneously. Therefore, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, a daughter can challenge the validity of any adoption made by her widowed mother and its binding character in so far as it affects her legal status as the heir of her mother inasmuch as, by virtue of the adoption, the adopted boy would be introduced as an heir to the mother, in respect of property held by her, if she were to die intestate.

The effect of the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, on the legal rights of a Hindu female possessed of property and those of the reversionary heirs of the last male holder, is that—

(1) a female Hindu would now become the full owner of the property of which she is possessed, whether she acquired the property before or after the commencement of the Act;

(2) as she would now hold the property of the last male holder as a full and not a limited owner, the other heirs of the last male holder can no longer be called reversionary heirs;

(3) the provisions of s. 14 of the Act being retrospective in operation would affect suits filed before the commencement of the Act, i.e. June 17, 1956, so that any such suit in which the reversionary heir claims a declaration about his or her reversionary right regarding the property of the last male holder or any relief that would, in any manner, be inconsistent with the full proprietary rights conferred on the female Hindu by s. 14 of the Act, would become incompetent by reason of the fact that the heir has ceased to be a reversionary heir.

The assessee purchased leasehold interest in certain land and the right to purchase it from a person who had obtained these from the owner of the land. The assessee then purchased a half share in the reversion from the owner and on May 5, 1946, he entered into an agreement with a housing society for sale of his right in the land and obtained Rs. 60,000 as earnest money. The assessee then purchased from the owner his right of reversion in the remaining half share. In 1950 the assessee executed a conveyance in favour of the society conveying the land to the society for Rs. 1,23,677 odd. The assessee made a profit of Rs. 96,796 in this transaction. On the question whether the amount of Rs. 96,796 was liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52, it was contended by the assessee that tax appropriate to the amount of Rs. 60,000 received by the assessee as part of the price in the year 1946 was payable in the assessment year 1946-47 and the tax on the balance was payable by the assessee in the year of assessment 1951-52, and that even if the amount of Rs. 60,000 was earnest money, when the sale deed was executed, and the assessee received the full price of Rs. 1,23,677 odd, in the amount of Rs. 60,000 which was appropriated towards the price at the date of the sale-deed must be regarded as embedded the characteristic of income received in the year 1946 and that amount was liable to be taxed in the year in which it was initially received and not in the year in which the sale-deed was executed and the amount was appropriated towards the price:—

Held, that on the facts of the case the amount of Rs. 60,000 was earnest money and not part payment of the price, that the principle of s. 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, did not apply to the present case where the amount of Rs. 60,000 was left in deposit with the assessee for due performance of a contract which amount was subsequently appropriated towards the price on the execution of the sale-deed, and that the amount of Rs. 96,796, which was the profit made by the assessee in the transaction, was taxable in the year of assessment 1951-52 and was not liable to be apportioned as income for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1951-52.

HASMUKHLAL PARIKH v. COMM., INC.-TAX.

Payment made by managed company to managing agent of company for deterioration of the managing agency as a profit making apparatus—Character of such payment—Whether a revenue or capital receipt—Company agreeing to pay to its managing agent, appointed for certain period, commission at certain rate on its annual profits—Subsequent agreement between company and managing agent whereby rate of commission reduced for remaining term of managing agency—Compensation paid by company to managing agent for releasing company from onerous term as to remuneration in previous agreement—Whether such amount of compensation paid by company and received by managing agent a revenue or a capital receipt.

The assessee firm was appointed the managing agent of a company for a period of thirty years from November 9, 1888, and the company agreed to pay to the firm a commission during every year at the rate of twenty per cent. on the net profits of the company. Thereafter a supplementary agreement was made between the firm and the company whereby the remuneration of the firm from September 1, 1946, was reduced to ten per cent. of the net annual profits of the company and in consideration the company agreed to pay Rs. 7,50,000 as compensation, for the remaining term of the managing agency, "for releasing the company from the onerous term as to remuneration contained" in the previous agreement. The sum of Rs. 7,50,000 paid by the company and received by the firm was, for the relevant assessment year, treated by the Income-tax Officer as a revenue receipt in the hands of the firm and taxed as such. On the question whether this sum was a revenue receipt liable to tax:—

Held, that the sum of Rs. 7,50,000 was paid and received not to make up the difference between the higher remuneration and the reduced remuneration but was in reality paid and received as compensation for releasing the company from the onerous terms as to remuneration as it was in terms expressed to be,

that so far as the company was concerned, it was paid for securing immunity from the liability to pay higher remuneration to the firm for the rest of the term of the managing agency and, therefore, a capital expenditure and so far as the firm was concerned, it was received as compensation for the deterioration or injury to the managing agency by reason of the release of its rights to get higher remuneration and, therefore, a capital receipt, and that, therefore, the sum was not a revenue receipt liable to tax.

—S. 4(3)(i)—Insurance Act (IV of 1938).—Assessee firm principal agents of insurance company—Business conducted by assessee as principal agents settled on trust exclusively for charitable purposes—Whether income arising from such business exempt from tax under s. 4(8)(1)—Whether principal agency property within s. 4(8)(1)—Applicability of proviso to s. 4(8)(1) as amended by Indian Income-tax Amendment Act (26 of 1953).

The assessee, which was a partnership firm, were appointed principal agents of an insurance company and remuneration was paid for conducting the business as principal agents. The appointment was subject to termination by either party giving to the other party one month's notice in writing. Thereafter the business conducted by the assessee as principal agents was settled on trust exclusively for charitable purposes. On the question whether the income arising to the assessee in respect of the assessment years 1951-52 to 1954-55, as chief agent of the insurance company was exempt from tax under s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, it was inter alia contended by the Department (1) that the principal agency was nothing but a right of service and it could not be regarded as business and, therefore, not property held upon charitable trust and (2) that in respect of the assessment years 1952-53 to 1954-55, the case fell within the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Act as amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953:—

Held, that the principal agency conducted by the assessee was a business and, therefore, "property" within the meaning of s. 4(3)(i) of the Act, which was capable of being lawfully settled upon trust for charitable purposes; that the business of the assessee, not being one which was carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution, was not governed by the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Act as amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953, and that the income was governed by the operative part of s. 4(3)(i), and that, therefore, the income arising to the assessee, in respect of the four assessment years, as chief agent of the insurance company, was exempt from tax under s. 4(3)(i) of the Act.

The business referred to in cl. (b) of the proviso to s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, need not be business which is held for religious or charitable purposes, provided it is business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution.

DHARMA VIJAYA AGENCY v. COMM. INC.-TAX.

—S. 4(3)(i)—Trust created for relief of members of Jewish or other communities and other public charitable purposes—Trust-deed providing that preference to be given to relations and members of settlor belonging to Jewish faith and not less than half the income of trust fund to be given to members of Jewish faith including settlor's relations—Whether such trust a public charitable trust and exempt from taxation under s. 4(8)(1).

Under a Deed of Declaration of Trust executed by Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and others, the trust fund was declared to be held by the trustees upon trusts to apply the net income thereof, for all or any of the six purposes enumerated in clause 13 therein, namely, (a) the relief and benefit of the poor and indigent members of Jewish or any other community of Bombay or other parts of India, or of the world, (b) the institution, maintenance and support of hospitals and schools, colleges or other educational institutions, (c) the relief of any distress caused by the elements of nature such as famine, pestilence, fire, tempest, flood, earthquake or any other such calamity, (d) the care and protection of animals useful to mankind, (e) the advancement of religion and (f) other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the foregoing purposes. Clause 13 contained certain provisos which inter alia stated: "Provided always that in applying the income as aforesaid the Trustees shall give preference to the poor and indigent relations or members of the family of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart., including therein distant and collateral relations; provided further that in the application of income of the said Charitable Trust Fund the said Trustees for the time being shall observe the following proportions, viz: that not less than half the income of the said funds shall at all times be applied for the benefit to the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay only (including the relations of Sir Sassoon David, Bart. as aforesaid) and Jewish objects and particularly in giving donations to the members of the Jewish Community of Bombay on the anniversary of the death of the said Sir Sassoon David, Bart. and his wife... and the remaining income for the benefit of all persons and objects including Jewish persons and objects and in such proportions as the said Trustees may think proper". On the question whether the trust fund was exempt from taxation under s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, it was contended by the Department that the trust was primarily for the benefit of the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart.:—

Held, that the earlier part of cl. 18 of trust-deed, omitting the proviso, constituted a public charitable trust, that the circumstance that in selecting the beneficiaries under cl. 18(a) preference is given under the proviso to the relations or members of the family of Sir Sassoon David, Bart., did not affect that public charitable trust, and that, therefore, the income from the trust properties came within the scope of s. 4(3)(i) of the Act, and was entitled to exemption from tax.

Under an agreement a manufacturing company agreed to sell their electric lamps only through a partnership firm, which was doing business in electrical goods and as commission agents, in a specified territory and the firm in its turn undertook not to sell the lamps sold to it to any one outside the territory nor to deal in any competing business in electric lamps. This agreement was determined by notice served by the company on the firm. The firm continued to carry on its original business in electric goods including electric lamps and could sell the company's lamps as regular lamp dealers. The company "as a gesture of goodwill" offered to compensate for the loss which it was apprehended would be caused to the firm by agreeing to pay a certain amount per annum to each of the partners for a period of three years and this compensation was expressly designated "three years remuneration". On the questions whether the amount so received by each of the partners was a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and if so, whether it was liable to be not included in the total income of the recipient by reason of s. 4(3)(vii) of the Act:—

Held, that as the monopoly rights under the agreement did not constitute an asset, the extinction of those rights did not affect the conduct of the business of the firm and, therefore, the compensation paid for extinguishing the rights cannot be regarded as a capital asset, and the receipt of the amount was a taxable receipt for the purpose of the Act and

Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, the amount was given to the employee to recompense or remunerate past services and, therefore, the amount could be brought to tax under s. 7(1) read with Explanation 2 of the Act.

The assessee firm, which carried on business in several commodities, in the course of their business submitted a tender to a railway company and undertook to supply certain commodities to the company. In accordance with the terms of the tender the assessee deposited a certain amount as a security for properly carrying out the contract. The assessee failed to carry out the contract with the result that the company forfeited the amount which was deposited with it in respect of the tender. On the question whether in computing the business profits of the assessee under s. 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the assessee was entitled to claim deduction of the amount forfeited as a trading loss:—

Held, that as the making of the deposit was incidental to the business which the assessee was carrying on, the deposit could be looked upon as a business expenditure and as it was forfeited it was a business loss in respect of which the assessee could claim deduction.

Where it is incumbent on a partner to attend to the management and affairs of the partnership business and he finds he is unable or disabled to do so and the other partners permit him to have some other person to discharge his duty by the firm or to depute for him, the remuneration paid to that person will be an admissible deduction under s. 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

One of the two partners of a firm executed certain writings under which he made a gift of certain sums to his daughter-in-law and his grandchildren out of the amount standing to his credit in the partnership account. Entries were accordingly made in the firm's books with the knowledge and consent of the partners whereby out of the moneys which stood to the credit of the partner the amount of the gift was debited to his account with such consent and credited to the account of the donees with the intention of making them creditors of the firm. The donees accepted the transaction of gift, the firm accepted the transaction and not only paid interest on the amount accepted as due to the donees but also allowed the donees to withdraw moneys from time to time. Held, that in the circumstances of the case a completed and legally valid gift of the aforesaid sums was made by the partner in favour of his daughter-in-law and grandchildren.

claimed—Whether income-tax department can frame its own standard of commercial prudence where amount of compensation claimed as permissible deduction.

For claiming a deduction under s. 10(2)(xx) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, what is required is that the expenditure must be germane to the business of the assessee and not something which is de hors the business of the assessee. If it is an expenditure of the nature of compensation for termination of the services of an employee, the closer test would be that of commercial expediency. If the payment is made under the honest belief that the claim by the employee for compensation or damages is justified and the assessee has acted in the matter of the settlement of the claim as an ordinary prudent businessman would act, it would not be for the income-tax department to say that the claim would not have succeeded in its entirety or even partly in a Court of law. In such a case the Department cannot insist on framing its own standard of reasonableness or prudence. It cannot claim the right or discretion to look at the matter subjectively but must examine it objectively. If the Department reaches the conclusion that the payment does not reflect a genuine transaction, it can object to it, or if the payment appears to have been made for a collateral purpose, it may not accept the claim for allowance. So also if the payment is made with an indirect or improper motive or for some consideration attende the business or out of sheer generosity. The test, in fine, must be of commercial expediency.

—S. 10(2)(xx)—Leases granted by Government, under leases, right to enter upon lands and win manganese ore—Leases transferring such right to assessee for consideration—Whether consideration paid by assessee a capital or revenue expenditure.

By certain leases the Government granted to a mining syndicate the beds, veins and seams of manganese ore lying in or under the lands described in the leases with certain rights and subject to certain restrictions. All these rights of the mining syndicate under the leases were transferred to the assessee company under an agreement. On the question whether the consideration paid by the assessee for purchasing the rights of the mining syndicate under the mining leases was capital expenditure and as such not an allowable deduction, it was contended by the assessee that the manganese ore lying underground though unascertained—but nonetheless ascertainable—was sold to the mining syndicate and by transfer of the rights the assessee had in substance acquired a stock of manganese ore for the purposes of its business and, therefore, the expenditure incurred by the assessee for acquiring the stock-in-trade of a business was revenue expenditure.

Held, that the consideration paid for acquiring the means to obtain the stock-in-trade could not be regarded as consideration paid for acquiring the stock-in-trade itself, and

so ore from the lands described in the leases must be regarded as capital expenditure.

Under an agreement of sale the assessee company which was registered on July 21, 1949, took over all the assets (namely building, machinery, plant, furniture and tools) of the business of a partnership firm which had started doing business from July 1, 1948, including its goodwill for a consideration. Payment of consideration was made by the assessee company by allotting a certain number of fully paid up shares of the assessee company. Neither the credits and outstandings nor the debts and liabilities of the partnership firm were taken over by the assessee company. For the relevant assessment year the assessee company claimed the benefit of an exemption from tax under s. 15C of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, on the ground that it was a newly established industrial undertaking. The Department contended that this was a case of reconstruction of a business already in existence within s. 15C(2)(f) of the Act and, therefore, the assessee company could not claim exemption under s. 15C:—

Held, that this was not a case of a newly established industrial undertaking formed by reconstruction of a business already in existence and, therefore, the assessee company was entitled to relief from tax under s. 15C of the Act.

The underlying idea of a reconstruction must be of a "business in existence". There must be a continuation of the activities and business of the same industrial undertaking. The undertaking must continue to carry on the same business though in some altered or varied form. If the alterations and changes are substantial, there would be little scope for describing what emerges as a reconstruction of the business. Thus, if the ownership of a business or an undertaking changes hands not ostensibly but in reality and effectively, that would not be reconstruction or if the very nature of the business is changed, that again would not be reconstruction. On the other hand, reorganization of the business on sounder lines or alterations in the mode or method or scope of the activities of the business or in its personnel or control of the business which may even be by some changes in the constitution of persons interested in the undertaking would be no more than reconstruction of the business if it is substantially the same business carried on by substantially the same persons.

A provision relating to exemption in a taxing statute must as far as possible be liberally construed and in favour of the assessee, provided in doing so no violence is done to the language used. Id.

In the year of account the assessee, which was a newly established industrial undertaking, made a profit. The Income-tax Officer in assessing the total income of the assessee for the relevant assessment year, deducted out of the net profits the losses carried forward from the previous years and the unabsorbed depreciation of the previous years and when it was found that the total income of the assessment year was exhausted, he did not give to the assessee the benefit of s. 15C of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. On the question whether the losses brought forward from the preceding years should be set off against the profits of the year of account before allowing the assessee the benefit of s. 15C of the Act:—

Held, that s. 15C of the Act merely provides a partial exemption from payment of tax by newly established undertakings, and therefore, in the computation of tax, the amount of losses carried forward is liable to be deducted out of the income of the year of account and it is only after the quantum of tax is ascertained that exemption from payment under s. 15C could be given by the taxing authorities, and that, therefore, in the instant case the losses brought forward from the preceding years could be set off against the profits of the year of account before allowing the assessee the benefit of s. 15C.

Income arising from accretions to the assets transferred by the assessee to his minor children cannot be taxed in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3)(a)(iv) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The assessee, who was the holder of certain shares in a company, gifted these shares to his minor son. The company, thereafter, issued bonus shares by increasing its capital and the assessee's minor son was allotted certain bonus shares in respect of his original holding of shares. On the question whether the dividend income from the bonus shares held by the assessee's minor son was taxable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:—

Held, that the source of the dividend income from the bonus shares was not the assets transferred but the accretion thereto and that income could not be regarded as arising even indirectly from the assets transferred by the assessee, and that, therefore, the dividend income from the bonus shares held by the assessee's minor son was not taxable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(3) of the Act.

To attract the provisions of s. 16(3)(b) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, an income or benefit must be received or derived by the wife or the minor in the year of account. What is sought to be taxed under the section is not a non-existent income but an existing income which is received by someone other than the assessee. Therefore, under this section an assessee can only be taxed on the income from a trust-deed created by him for the benefit of the minor provided in the year of account the income is either received by the minor or the benefit is derived by the minor under the trust-deed.

By a trust-deed dated January 12, 1953, the assessee set aside a certain amount, and the deed provided that the interest on that amount should be accumulated and added to the corpus and his minor daughter was to receive the income from the corpus increased by the addition of interest when she attained the age of eighteen years on February 1, 1959. She was then to receive the income during her lifetime, and after her, the corpus was to go to other persons. In computing the total income of the assessee for the assessment year 1964-65 the Income-tax Officer included a sum of Rs. 410 which amount represented the income derived in the year of account from the trust fund. On the question whether the sum of Rs. 410 could be so included in the assessee's total income under s. 16(3)(b) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:—

Held, that under s. 16(3)(b) of the Act the assessee cannot be assessed to Rs. 410 which amount was not received by his minor daughter and in respect of which his daughter could not claim any benefit in the year of account.

Under a trust-deed created by the assessee's father the trustees were to hold the trust funds upon trust to pay the net interest and income thereof to the assessee for the maintenance of himself and his wife and for the maintenance, education and benefit of all his children till his death. The assessee received a certain amount under the trust-deed and the Income-tax Officer under s. 41(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, included this amount in the total income of the assessee for the relevant assessment year. On the question whether this amount could be properly included in the income of the assessee:—

Held, that under the terms of the trust-deed the assessee was not the sole beneficiary and the amount was received by him in the capacity of a trustee, and that the assessee could, therefore, be assessed under s. 41(1) of the Act, and the amount received by him under the trust-deed could not be added to his total income.

Dividend income of an assessee who is a resident is not exempt from the operation of s. 18A(6) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and, therefore, penal interest can be levied under that section in case of such income.

S. T. Desai J. The words "income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply" in s. 18A(6) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, read contextually can only mean that while determining the amount of penal interest under s. 18A(6) and applying the ratio of eighty per cent. to the amount of tax paid in advance and the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment, the Income-tax Officer must exclude from the amount of tax determined at the regular assessment the amount of tax for which provision is made under s. 18, that is the amount of tax which is deducted at source under sub-ss. (2) to (3D) and the amount of tax

The Income-tax Officer on certain evidence produced before him came to the conclusion that the assessee was maintaining a separate set of books which had not been produced before him and which recorded the transactions which had not been entered in the account books that the assessee had produced. On that the Income-tax Officer issued a notice under s. 22(4) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and on the failure of the assessee to comply with the notice, he proceeded to assess the assessee under s. 23(4) of the Act. The assessee appealed to the Assistant Appellate Commissioner under s. 30 and attempted to argue the question whether the Income-tax Officer was right in the view that he took that the assessee maintained two sets of books of account and also whether the Income-tax Officer was right in assessing the assessee under s. 23(4). The Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that it was not open to the assessee to argue that question as he had not made an application under s. 27 for cancellation of the assessment made under s. 23(4):—

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the assessee could have made an application under s. 27 and that as he had failed to do so, it was not open to him to challenge the validity of the assessment under s. 23(4) in an appeal under s. 30.

The question whether on a notice issued under s. 22(4) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the assessee was justified in not producing books which were held by the Income-tax Officer to be suppressed and which the assessee contended did not exist, is a question which falls within the ambit of s. 27 of the Act, and therefore, the assessee cannot agitate this question in an appeal under s. 30 of the Act against the order passed by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23(4) of the Act on the failure of the assessee to comply with the notice under s. 22(4).

—S. 23(5)(b)—Income-tax Officer applying s. 23(5)(b) to unregistered firm on finding that firm had made profit during relevant assessment year—Assistant Appellate Commissioner on appeal holding that loss sustained by firm in assessment year and directing Income-tax Officer to modify assessment—Income-tax Officer carrying loss to partners of firm in their assessments—Maintainability of Income-tax Officer's Order—Applicability of proviso (d) to s. 24(2).

The Income-tax Officer in assessing a partnership firm which was unregistered found that it had made a profit during the relevant assessment year and applying s. 23(5)(b) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, he assessed the partners of the firm carrying the profit into their individual returns and made no demand upon the firm. On appeal by the firm the Appellate Assistant Commissioner found that there was error in the computation of income made by the Income-tax Officer and held that in the assessment year there was a loss in the total world income of the firm. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner directed the Income-tax Officer to modify the assessment made by him. The Income-tax Officer thereafter gave effect to the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under s. 31 of the Act and carried the loss to the partners in their assessments and granted a refund to them. On the question whether the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner left the Income-tax Officer free of his earlier order and whether he was under a duty to re-consider the position under s. 23(5)(b) of the Act:—

Held, that the reversal of the finding of profit destroyed the substratum of the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to act under s. 23(5)(b) and his order automatically fell through, and that in the light of the losses determined by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the Income-tax Officer was under a duty to apply his mind de novo to determine whether he should, in the altered circumstance, apply s. 23(5)(b) to the case or not.

Section 23(5)(b) and proviso (d) to s. 24(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, must be read in harmony, and when so read, yield the only result that proviso (d) is to be invoked, subject to the conditions under s. 23(5)(b) to obtain more revenue for the State by applying s. 23(5)(a) of the Act.

Proviso (d) to s. 24(2) could only be resorted to when, in spite of taking the losses to the accounts of the partners, more revenue would be available to the State. The proviso is an enabling one. An unregistered firm, treated as such in the previous years, may, during any year, be treated as a registered firm provided the Revenue would benefit. It may be that the firm may have a loss in that year or was carrying a loss from the previous years but, if by treating the firm as registered, the Revenue would be benefited, the proviso can be used.

—S. 23A—Order under s. 23A(1) made on company and undistributed portion of assessable income determined—Total income of company as determined including a sum directly taken to general reserve by company—Sum so taken taxed as capital gains in hands of company—Proportionate share in undistributed income of company included in total income of assessee—shareholders of company—Whether portion of s. 23A dividend attributable to capital gains of company should be taxed as capital gains of assessee under s. 17(6).

The Income-tax Officer made an order in the case of a company under s. 23A(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (as it stood before its amendment in 1955). In making the order of assessment on the company the Income-tax Officer determined the total income of the company and determined the undistributed portion of the assessable income of the company for the relevant year. The total income of the company as determined included a certain amount which the company had taken directly to the general reserve fund and not to the profit and loss account and no part of it was distributed as dividend. This sum was brought to tax in the hands of the company as "capital gains" under s. 12B of the Act. The Income-tax Officer in assessing the assessee, who was a shareholder of the company, for the relevant year, included in his total income his proportionate share in the amount of the undistributed portion of the income of the company. The assessee contended that the portion of s. 23A dividend attributable to capital gains in the hands of the company should be taxed in his hands also at the rate appropriate to "capital gains" as indicated in s. 17(6) of the Act:—

Held, that an equation could not be established between the capital gains of the company and the dividend which the assessee was deemed to have received by operation of s. 23A of the Act, and that by reason of the legal fiction contained in s. 23A, the proportionate undistributed income of the company had become the dividend income of the assessee and was liable to be taxed as such.

The assessee's wives held shares in a private limited company which were purchased with funds provided by the assessee. For the assessment years 1949-50 and 1950-51 an order under s. 23A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was passed in making the assessment of the company, and the income deemed to have been distributed as dividend under s. 23A of the Act in the hands of the wives of the assessee was sought to be included in the income of the assessee under s. 16(8) of the Act. On the question whether such dividend income was so assessable in the hands of the assessee:—

Held, that where by a mere fiction the income is deemed to have been received but which has not in fact been received, s. 16(8) of the Act can have no application, and that, therefore, the dividend income in the present case which was deemed to have been distributed to the assessee's wives under s. 23A was not assessable in the hands of the assessee under s. 16(8) of the Act.

If, having regard to the net commercial profits so ascertained, it appeared to the Income-tax Officer that it would not be unreasonable to distribute sixty per cent. of such income as dividend amongst the shareholders, an order under s. 23A of the Act may properly be passed.

The assessee carried on business as a wholesale dealer in cloth and it also carried on business in speculation in gold, silver, cotton, etc. For the assessment year 1949-50 the assessee made a return of its total income from business and in arriving at the figure of the total income it deducted from the gross income a certain amount brought forward as loss suffered in the speculation business in the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49. It was claimed by the assessee that the cloth business and the business in speculation constituted the same business within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. It was found that only one set of accounts was maintained i.e. in the set of books maintained for the assessee's cloth business, the dealings in speculation were also entered. There was one cash book and the bank accounts were also the same, both for the dealings in cloth as well as in speculation. Receipts either from the assessee's dealings in cloth or from speculation were deposited in these books and similarly withdrawals for purposes of payment either in regard to dealings in cloth or dealings in speculation were made from these books and accounts. The capital employed for both the businesses was the same and the receipts of one business were utilised for purposes of the other business indiscriminately and vice versa and the items of overhead and other expenses were common. Both the businesses were carried on from the assessee's shop and the businesses were carried on with the help of the same staff:—

Held, that on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the business in speculation and the cloth business conducted by the assessee did not constitute one and the same business, and that, therefore, the assessee was not entitled to set off against the profits from the cloth business in the year of account the losses in the speculation business brought forward from the preceding years of account.

Though not a conclusive test, an important test which may properly be applied in a case like this, is, whether one of the two businesses conducted by the assessee could be stopped without affecting the texture or framework of the other.

Normally where the assessee carries on two different lines of business, it is a question of fact whether they constitute two separate and distinct businesses or whether they are in truth branches or departments of one and the same business. The conclusion of the Tribunal, which is founded on no evidence or which is unreasonable or perverse, may not be regarded as binding even if it is apparently on a question of fact. If the question is one of legal inference to be drawn from the facts proved, it may be regarded as a question of law.

Per S. T. Desai J. In determining the question whether two businesses can be called the same business or not, consideration must be directed to the concordant activities, if any, and to the basic singleness, if any, of the two businesses. If the activities are diverse and distinct and there is no basic oneness in the nature of the two businesses, then it cannot be said that they are the same business for the purpose of s. 24(2) of the Income-tax Act.

INCOME-TAX ACT, S. 24B—Death of partner in firm of attorneys and his son joining partnership—Arrangement between son of deceased partner and continuing partners that realisation of work done prior to death of partner to be divided between previous partners—Sums of moneys realised after death of partner and certain amount paid to estate of deceased partner—Whether such amounts liable to tax under s. 24B in hands of the deceased by his legal heirs and representatives.

One Amarchand N. Shroff, who was a partner in a firm of attorneys, died and his son joined the firm as a partner. An arrangement was arrived at between him and the continuing partners that in respect of the work done prior to the death of his father, the realisation was to be divided between the three previous partners. Certain sums of moneys were realised during the subsequent five years after the death of the aforesaid partner and five amounts were paid to his estate. The Income-tax Department initiated proceedings under s. 84 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in respect of these realisations as income in the hands of an entity styled as "Shri Amarchand N. Shroff by his legal heirs and representatives" and the status of that entity was given to be that of an individual. On the question whether these realisations were assessable to income-tax in the hands of the assessee "Amarchand N. Shroff by his legal heirs and representatives," the Department contended that the case fell within the ambit of s. 24B of the Act:—

Held, that the receipt of the realisations could not be equated with income but could be regarded as a capital receipt and, therefore, s. 24B was not applicable to the present case.

The words "income, profits and gains" appearing in s. 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, refer to the income, profits and gains made in connection with a discontinued business under whatever head the same may have to be shown and they do not refer to any particular head of income, profits and gains with its varying nomenclature and varying content.

The expression business in s. 25(3) of the Act refers to the activity which is styled business. What has to be discontinued is that activity before the section can apply and the tax which is referred to in connection with that activity business refers to the tax charged under any of the heads under which the income, profits and gains made as a result of such activity may have been entered. If such income, profits and gains included interest on securities which constituted the stock-in-trade of that business, the tax paid under the head "Interest on securities" would be covered.

The assessee firm was a dealer in securities and securities constituted the stock-in-trade of its business. It received certain sums as interest on securities during the accounting year 1946 and the accounting period January 1, 1947, to June 30, 1947. The assessee firm was dissolved on June 30, 1947, and as it had paid tax in connection with its business under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, it became entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. On the question whether the assessee firm was entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) of the Act in respect of the interest on securities:—

Held, that the assessee firm was entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) of the Act in respect of the interest on securities.

INCOME-TAX ACT, S. 34—Assessee making 'voluntary' return showing income below maximum not chargeable to tax—Income-tax Officer issuing notice under s. 34 upon assessee to submit return—Assessee submitting similar return and Income-tax Officer completing the assessment of assessee—Whether notice under s. 34 and assessment thereon valid.

For the assessment year 1945-46 a public notice under s. 22(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was published on May 1, 1945. On January 5, 1950, the assessee submitted a "voluntary" return of his income for the assessment year 1945-46 showing a total net income which was below the maximum not chargeable to tax. The Income-tax Officer did not act on this return, but on February 27, 1950, he issued a notice purporting to be under s. 34 of the Act calling upon the assessee to submit his return. This notice was served on the assessee on March 8, 1950, and the assessee submitted a return similar to his previous return. The Income-tax Officer then completed the assessment of the assessee for the assessment year 1945-46 on February 26, 1951. On the question whether the notice issued under s. 34 and the assessment thereon were valid in law:—

Held, that as the return was already filed by the assessee on January 5, 1950, there was neither an omission nor a failure on the part of the assessee nor was there any question of assessment 'escaping' and, therefore, the notice under s. 34(1) and the consequent assessment were invalid.

—S. 35—Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act (XXV of 1953), Secs. 1(2), 13, 3(2), 7(2), 30(2)—Income-tax Officer in order passed before coming into force of Amending Act giving credit to assessee under s. 18A(5) for amount representing interest on tax paid in advance—After coming into force of Amending Act, Income-tax Officer under s. 35 making an order that assessee entitled to interest only on difference between advance payment made and amount assessed to tax—Applicability of s. 35—Whether previous order made by Income-tax Officer disclose a mistake apparent from the record.

The Income-tax Officer by his assessment order made on October 9, 1952, for the relevant assessment year, assessed a company under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and in the order the company was given credit for a certain amount under s. 18A(5) of the Act as it stood then, as representing interest on tax paid in advance. After the coming into force of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1953, on May 24, 1953, whereby a proviso was added to s. 18A(5) of the Act which proviso was deemed to have come into force on April 1, 1952, the Income-tax Officer exercised his power under s. 35 of the Act and purported to rectify the mistake apparent from the record in regard to the credit for the amount allowed by him to the company by making an order that the company was entitled to get interest not on the whole of the advance amount of tax paid by the company, but only on the difference between the payment made and the amount which the company was assessed to tax under s. 28. On the question whether the order made by the Income-tax Officer on October 9, 1952, which was proper and valid when it was made, could be said to disclose a mistake apparent from the record, as the said order would be erroneous in view of the subsequent amendment made by the Amending Act which was intended to operate retrospectively:—

Held, that the subsequently inserted proviso must be read as forming part of s. 18A(5) of the principal Act as from April 1, 1952, that the order passed by the Income-tax Officer on October 9, 1952, was, therefore, inconsistent with the provisions of the proviso and must be deemed to suffer from a mistake apparent from the record, and that, therefore, the Income-tax Officer was justified in exercising his power under s. 35 of the Act.

—S. 35—Necessity of notice under first proviso to s. 35(1)—Whether want of such notice renders adverse order against assessee invalid where he knows of rectification proceedings and matter discussed with him—Written down value determined under s. 35 whether can be redetermined in following assessment years—Whether Income-tax Officer can redetermine figure of original cost—Record referred to in expression "apparent from record" in s. 35 whether means only order of assessment—Whether recalculation of written down value, rectifying mistake apparent from record.

The rule laid down as to notice in the first proviso to s. 35(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, is not so rigid that if, as a matter of fact, the assessee knows of the proceedings and the matter has been discussed with him then an adverse order would be invalid merely because no notice under s. 63 of the Act was given.

The limit to which the Income-tax Officer can go back does not stop at the written down value of the previous year but extends up to the figure of the original cost, and the method enjoined by s. 10(5)(b) is not that the Income-tax Officer should merely scale down the written down value of the previous year but that he should take into consideration the actual cost, determining it for himself, if necessary, take also into consideration the allowances granted in the past and then make his own computation as to the written down value for the assessment year with which he is concerned. Therefore, merely because under s. 35 of the Act some written down value and the depreciation amount have been determined they are not a final determination binding for all times to come nor does the determination operate as estoppel or res judicata for the following years.

The record referred to in the expression "apparent from the record" in s. 35 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, does not mean only the order of assessment but it comprises all proceedings on which the assessment order is based and the Income-tax Officer is entitled for the purpose of exercising his jurisdiction under s. 35 to look into the whole evidence and the law applicable to ascertain whether there was an error. If, therefore, he doubts the written down value of the previous year it is open to him to check up the previous calculations in accordance with the law applicable including the rules made thereunder.

A mistake contemplated by s. 35 of the Act is not one which is to be discovered as a result of an argument, but it is open to the Income-tax Officer to examine the record including the evidence, and if he discovers any mistake, he is entitled to rectify the error provided that if the result is enhancement of assessment or reducing the refund then notice has to be given to the assessee and he should be allowed a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

For the assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 the Income-tax Officer passed orders on various dates assessing the total income of the assessee company for the relevant assessment years, the previous years being calendar years 1949, 1950 and 1951. At the time of making these assessments the Income-tax Officer allowed a rebate of income-tax on undistributed profits under Part I, Para. B, proviso (i) of the relevant Schedules to the Finance Acts of 1950, 1951 and 1952. For the assessment year 1953-54, the calendar year being 1952, the assessment order showed that the assessee company had incurred losses. The assessee company, however, declared and paid dividend for the calendar year 1952 and these were paid out of the reserves formed out of the profits of the previous years viz. 1949, 1950 and 1951, which had been subjected to tax. The Income-tax Officer called upon the assessee company to show cause why action should not be taken under s. 35(10) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as, according to him, dividends declared by the assessee company for the assessment year 1953-54 had come out of reserves of earlier years on which rebate was allowed on undistributed profits. The Income-tax Officer ultimately passed orders on the assessee company under s. 35(10) of the Act. The assessee company challenged the orders contending that as the provisions of s. 35(10), which were added by the Finance Act, 1956, and came into force on April 1, 1956, became operative only from April 1, 1956, the original assessment orders which had been made before that date, had become final and conclusive before that date and these assessments could not be affected or touched or altered in any manner by the subsequent legislation introduced for the first time by s. 35(10):—

Held, that on a fair reading of s. 35(10) of the Act the Income-tax Officer in the instant case was authorised to recompute the tax payable by the assessee company by reducing the rebate originally allowed as if the recomputation was a rectification of a mistake apparent from the record and, therefore, he had the power to pass the impugned order under s. 35(10).

—S. 41. See INCOME-TAX ACT, 1922, S. 16(3) (6). 61 Bom. L. R. 187.

—S. 42 (1)—Indian company doing business of non-resident assessee company—Under terms of agreement between companies, Indian company appointed sole agents of assessee company and Indian company not to buy products of any other company—Commission, advertising and propaganda allowances to be paid by assessee company to Indian company in the latter's territory—No difference in rate at which goods sold by assessee company to Indian company or to an Indian constituent—Whether assessee company liable under s. 42(1) in respect of products supplied and shipped directly to Indian company by assessee company.

The assessee company which was registered in the United Kingdom was doing the business of manufacturing and selling pharmaceutical preparations and medicines. Prior to 1947 it had a branch in India which used to sell its goods in the taxable territories, but early in 1947 the business of the assessee company came to be carried on by an Indian company incorporated and registered under the Indian law. An agreement was arrived at between the two companies whereby inter alia it was provided that the assessee company appointed the Indian company their sole authorised agents in India; that the assessee company would allow the Indian company commission on all goods supplied to the Indian company's territory; that the assessee company would grant the Indian company an advertising and propaganda allowance on its supplies, calculated at 20 per cent. on the net invoice value after deduction of commissions on such supplies; that all goods invoiced by the assessee company direct to the Indian company would be charged at normal prices, a separate credit note to be sent to the Indian company for commission and advertising and propaganda allowance; that on shipments made to customers in the Indian company's territory, a credit note covering commission and advertising allowance to be sent by the assessee company to the Indian company; that the assessee company would charge the Indian company for supplies shipped direct to the Indian company at current export prices; that the Indian company would undertake to effect an energetic advertising and propaganda campaign in connection with the products of the assessee company upto the extent of the total advertising allowances received by the Indian company from the assessee company and that the Indian company would undertake not to buy or interest itself in any products other than those obtained from the assessee company. The Income-tax Department contended that there was a business connection in regard to all the dealings of the assessee company in respect of the sale of its products in the taxable territories and relied on s. 42 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The assessee company did not dispute its liability in respect of goods sold directly to its customers in India nor did it raise any dispute in respect of goods invoiced by it to the Indian company, but it raised a dispute in respect of products supplied and shipped directly to the Indian company, alleging that the sales made by the assessee company which had taken place outside the taxable territories were between principal and principal and as such there was no business connection in the taxable territories within the meaning of s. 42(1) of the Act.

Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, in regard to the goods in question there was a business connection within the meaning of s. 42(1) of the Act.

—S. 42 (2)—Assessee company incorporated in India and doing business as ship repairers—Share capital of assessee company beneficially owned by non-resident shipping companies—Assessee company under agreement with non-resident companies repairing ships of these companies at cost and without charging profits—Whether assessee company chargeable to tax under s. 42 (2).

The assessee was a private limited company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act and was carrying on business as marine engineers and ship repairers. Its registered office was in Bombay and it was resident and ordinarily resident in India. Its entire share capital was beneficially owned by two British companies whose business consisted in plying ships for hire. Under an agreement entered into with the two non-resident companies, the assessee repaired their ships at cost and charged no profits. On the question whether on these facts the assessee was chargeable to tax under s. 42(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, it was contended by the assessee (1) that s. 42(2) of the Act imposes a charge only on a business carried on by a non-resident, and that, therefore, no tax could be imposed under that provision on the business of the assessee who was a resident; and (2) that it is a condition for the levy of a charge under s. 42(2) that the non-resident must carry on business with the resident, and that in the instant case that condition was not satisfied:—

Held, that the business which is the subject-matter of taxation under s. 42(2) is that of the resident and not of a non-resident.

that having regard to the course of dealings between the non-resident companies and the assessee it could be said of the former that they carried on business with the latter within the meaning of s. 42(2), and that, therefore, the assessee was chargeable to tax under s. 42(2).

A non-resident must be held to carry on business with a resident within s. 42(2) of the Act, if the dealings between them form concerted and organised activities of a business character.

INCOME-TAX ACT, S. 60—Notification No. 878F of March 21, 1922 and Notification No. 8 of March 24, 1922—Managing Director receiving monthly salary from company—Certain amount out of salary disallowed in assessment of company—Whether such amount liable to be taxed in hands of assessee managing director—Applicability of Notification.

The assessee, who was the managing director of a private limited company, received a certain amount per month as salary from the company. In the relevant assessment year the Taxing Authorities disallowed the claim of the company for a certain amount out of the salary paid to the assessee, as in their view, it was not an expenditure laid out or expended wholly or exclusively for the company's business within the meaning of s. 10(2)(iv) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In the hands of the assessee, his entire remuneration received from the company was sought to be taxed and it was contended by the assessee that the salary paid to him in excess of the amount allowed as deduction in the assessment of the company having already been taxed in the hands of the employers was not liable to be taxed over again in his hands. In support of his contention the assessee relied upon Notification No. 878F dated March 21, 1922, as amended by Notification No. 8 of March 24, 1922:—

Held, that under the Notification it is only where the sum paid is out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business and that by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the sum paid, the same has not been allowed as a deduction but has been included in the profits of the business, that the benefit of the Notification may be given to the assessee.

that, in the instant case, the salary was paid at a stipulated rate per month to the assessee and was not paid out of or determined with reference to the profits of the business, and the disallowance of the amount was not by reason of the mode of payment or determination of the salary out of the profits of the business, and

that as these conditions under the Notification were not fulfilled, the assessee could not have the benefit of the Notification and the amount in question could be taxed in the hands of the assessee.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES ACT (XIV of 1947), S. 2 (b)—Parties to industrial dispute, pending references to Industrial Tribunal under s. 10, arriving at settlement to refer disputes to private arbitration—Application by such parties to Tribunal for permission to withdraw pending cases—Terms of settlement, stating that dispute should be referred to specified arbitrators, attached to application—Tribunal by order giving "award as per terms of settlement"—Order published in Official Gazette—Complaint made by party to dispute under s. 33-A of dismissal within one month of publication of award—Whether order made by Tribunal, award within meaning of Act—Effect of the order passed by Tribunal.

During the pendency of certain references made to the Industrial Tribunal under s. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the parties arrived at a settlement, by which they agreed to refer the dispute between them to private arbitration. Accordingly the parties applied to the Industrial Tribunal for permission to withdraw the cases pending before it and to this application they attached the terms of the settlement which stated that the disputes should be referred for decision to certain specified arbitrators. On this application the Industrial Tribunal made the following order: "The terms of agreement have been filed by the parties. I, therefore, give my award as per terms of settlement appended herewith." This order was published as an award in the Government Gazette. Thereafter complaints were made to the Industrial Tribunal under s. 33-A of the Act by the petitioners, one of the parties to the dispute, in which they contended that as they had been dismissed within one month from the date of the publication of the award, there had been a contravention of the provisions of s. 33 of the Act:—

Held, that the effect of the order passed by the Industrial Tribunal was that the proceed-

The profession of a solicitor is not an industry within the meaning of the word in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and therefore a dispute between a firm of solicitors and its employees is not an industrial dispute which could be the subject of a reference under the Act.

An essential requisite of industry is the existence of relationship of master and servant. This relationship must exist in the industry itself. Only that business, trade, undertaking or calling can be held to be an industry, which requires the co-operation of both the employer and the employees for carrying on that business, trade, undertaking or calling.

Under s. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the question of the subject-matter of reference is left to the subjective decision and opinion of the Government. There is no obligation on the Government under this section while making a reference to a Court of inquiry or a tribunal to make a reference of the whole of the dispute and/or of the whole demand made.

competent to Court to make reference where Court satisfied that it should be made.

Under s. 12(5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, it is open to Government to consider in each case whether conciliation has failed and whether the demands of the workers are such as required adjudication. Not only when the demands are frivolous, but even if they are not justified, even if they are not appropriate in the context of the times or in the context of financial conditions, it would be open to Government not to refer the disputes to adjudication.

Section 12(5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, makes it obligatory upon the Government to consider the report of the Conciliation Officer. The section does not provide that the satisfaction ultimately required by the Government is a satisfaction that can only be based upon the report of the Conciliation Officer. It would, therefore, be open to Government to rely on other materials, other facts, other statistics other than those which appear in the report of the Conciliation Officer. All that is relevant and germane to the statutory satisfaction can be availed of by the Government in coming to its conclusion.

The satisfaction that the Government has got to arrive at is not a judicial or quasi judicial act. It does not call for any judicial process, although it would be more satisfactory if Government were to discuss various matters in the presence of both the parties before it came to a particular conclusion.

When reasons are given by Government under s. 12(5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, for not making a reference, and the Court is considering those reasons, if the reasons disclose any extraneous matter taken into consideration by the Government, or if they disclose a failure on the part of the Government to take into consideration any relevant factor required by law, the Court can say that these reasons are not reasons which fall within the ambit of s. 12(5) and compel the Government to give proper reasons.

The reasons must disclose the mental process which has resulted in Government not being satisfied. The Court will not be concerned with how that mental process worked or how the conclusion was arrived at. But if the conclusion is germane to the failure on the part of the Government to be satisfied, then the Court cannot ask the Government to give particulars for the reasons given so that the particulars could be considered and investigated by the Court.

The satisfaction of the Government is a condition precedent to the making of a reference under s. 12(5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and, therefore, however satisfied the Court may be, the Court, on a petition made to it to direct the Government to make a reference, cannot place itself in the position of the Government and make a reference by reason of its own satisfaction.

The expression "concerned in such dispute" in s. 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, means really concerned or directly, personally or primarily concerned in such dispute, and not merely interested in such dispute.

Certain workers of a mill belonging to the ring frame department of the mill, who were working as doffers, were dismissed by the mill for misconduct. The workers made an application under s. 33A of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, to the Industrial Tribunal contending that at the date of their dismissal certain disputes between the mill and its workmen were pending before the Tribunal, that it was obligatory upon the mill to take permission of the Tribunal before dismissing them and that as the mill did not obtain such prior permission, the mill violated the provisions of s. 33 of the Act. The disputes pending before the Tribunal when these workers were dismissed related to determination of seniority between certain workers of the bleaching department of the mill and the change over which was to be effected upon the basis of the seniority. On the question of the maintainability of the application under s. 33A of the Act:—

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES ACT, 8. 33 —(Contd.)

Held, that the applicant workers were not the workmen concerned in the disputes which were pending before the Tribunal at the date upon which they were dismissed and that, therefore, the provisions of s. 33 of the Act were not attracted and the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the application under s. 33A of the Act.

By virtue of the Kolhapur State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949, Vat Hukum No. 14 of July 4, 1891, issued by the Maharaja of Kolhapur is not a law in force in the areas forming part of the former Kolhapur State after March 1, 1949.

out road—Such claimant whether could also be separately paid value of land reserved for road.

In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in assessing the market value of land on the basis of a hypothetical scheme for residential buildings by laying out the land in plots, it is not what the claimant may have expected to receive by sale of the area of one or two plots out of the land which is to be decisive of the value of the land, but what the valuer may regard as the value of the plots aggregated after deducting the expenses of providing such amenities as water connections, well laid-out roads, drainage facility and electrical connections, which the purchasers may normally expect to obtain in the sector in which the land is situate.

In the valuation of land on the basis of a hypothetical building scheme it would be unfair to award to the claimant the value of the separate plots, in which is fully reflected the value of the additional amenity of having well laid-out roads and also separately to pay to the claimant the value of the land reserved for the road.

Lands which are assessed to land revenue as agricultural land and which are valued in assessing compensation payable to the occupants as land fit only for agricultural use, cannot in valuing the interest of the claimant therein be treated as fit for non-agricultural use.

When land is acquired, all the interests of the owners of the land but not the interest of the State are notified for acquisition and after the composite value for all these interests is assessed the compensation is distributed amongst the owners of the diverse interests in the land in apportionment proceedings. Where, therefore, the Land Acquisition Officer proceeds to assess the compensation payable to the occupants in one proceeding and the compensation payable to the claimant in a separate proceeding, such proceedings would be irregular.

The circumstance that the land under acquisition may be put to non-agricultural use after it is acquired by the State has to be ignored under s. 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and compensation cannot be awarded to the claimant on that account.

A benefit to arise out of land is "land" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and by the acquisition of that interest the claimant becomes entitled to the market value thereof on the date of the publication of the notification. Therefore, compensation payable to a claimant for extinction of his interest as Inamdar of the land can be awarded as market value of that interest and not as compensation for damage and he is entitled to the 15 per cent. solatium on the amount awarded to him.

Every piece of land within a municipal area may not be assumed to have an immediate building potentiality.

Section 23 or section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, does not preclude the Court from considering facts, which, though occurring after the date when the right to compensation accrues, help the Court in estimating the value of the property at the relevant date. It would, therefore, be improper to discard facts which have actually occurred, even though after the date of notification, which throw light on the question of the value of the land in question at the relevant date and which assist the Court to a correct ascertainment of such value.

A Notification under s. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in respect of certain lands held by a Khot was issued on January 19, 1950, and the question was as to what amount of compensation was payable to the Khot for the loss of the privilege of levying non-agricultural assessment on the lands accruing on the date of the notification:—

Held, that in view of the Salsette Estates (Land Revenue Exemption Abolition) Act, 1951, (if the Act is held valid and applicable to the claimant Khot), compensation payable to him would be for the period between January 19, 1950, and March 1, 1952, when the Act came into force.

While arriving at the value of the right of compensation for the loss of the privilege of levying assessment accruing on the date of the notification, the Court is entitled to and must look into facts which have actually occurred in preference to mere hypothetical considerations.

LIMITATION ACT, (IX OF 1908), S. 14 Plaintiff failing to prove affirmatively that previously instituted suit prosecuted by him in good faith and with due diligence—Whether plaintiff entitled to benefit of s. 14—Burden of proof.

When the plaintiff has not satisfied the initial burden which lies upon him to bring his case within s. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, namely, that the previously instituted suit was prosecuted in good faith and with due diligence, the burden would not shift to the defendant to show the contrary.

—S. 134—Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Secs. 17(1) (b), 49—Mortgagor's suit for possession after redemption—Applicability of art. 134 to such suit—Burden of proof whether on defendant that mortgagee has transferred larger interest than justified by mortgage—Partition severing only joint status of members of Hindu coparcenary without division of property by metes and bounds—Document evidencing such severance whether comes within purview of s. 17(1)(b) of Indian Registration Act.

Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, contemplates a sale by the mortgagee in excess of his interest as such. Therefore, to attract the operation of art. 134, the defendant has got affirmatively to prove that the mortgagee or his successor-in-interest has transferred a larger interest than justified by the mortgage. If there is no such proof, the shorter period under art. 134 is not available to the defendant in a suit for possession after redemption.

Under Hindu law a partition by allotting specific properties or parcels to individual coparceners may be effected orally, but if the parties reduce the transaction to a formal document which is intended to be the evidence of the partition, it has the effect of declaring the exclusive title of the coparcener to whom a particular property is allotted by partition, and is, thus, within the mischief of s. 17(1)(b).

of the Indian Registration Act, 1908. But a partition which is only a severance of the joint status of the members of the coparcenary i.e. what was once a joint title, has become a divided title though there has been no division of any properties by metes and bounds, may be brought about by a document and such a document which affects only the status of the member or the members who have separated themselves from the rest of the coparcenary, does not come within the purview of s. 17(1)(b) of the Act, and is, therefore, not compulsorily registrable.

—S. 144—Suit by purchaser for possession of undivided interest of separated member of joint Hindu family in property kept joint at partition—Whether such suit governed by art. 120 or 144—Such suit whether must be filed within twelve years from date of purchase or within twelve years on which purchaser's title denied.

Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, applies to a suit for possession by the purchaser of the undivided interest of a separated member of a joint Hindu family in property, which was kept joint at the time of the partition or when members of the joint family separated from each other. The purchaser must file his suit for possession within twelve years from the date on which his title is actually denied.

If a person purchases the share of a separated member in property, which was not actually partitioned but which continues to be held jointly by the separated members of the family by his purchase, such a person acquires all the rights of his vendor, including his right as a co-owner to joint possession of the property jointly held and also his right to obtain by partition separate possession of his share in that property.

—ART. 181—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O.XXI. r. 11—Plaintiff's suit for possession decreed on December 20, 1947, on condition that plaintiff deposited certain amount in Court—Appeal by parties to suit dismissed on October 31, 1955—Application for execution of decree without deposit of money made on October 8, 1956—Deposit made by October 9, 1958—Whether application barred by time—Applicability of arts. 181 and 182—Whether application not in accordance with law because not accompanied by deposit.

Plaintiff filed a suit against the defendants for possession of property and the suit was partly decreed on December 20, 1947, whereby possession was granted to the plaintiff on condition that he deposited a certain amount in Court. The parties to the suit appealed and their appeals were dismissed on October 31, 1955. On October 2, 1956, the plaintiff made an application for execution of the decree without depositing any money along with it, but by October 9, 1958, he had deposited the amount in Court. On the questions whether the application for execution was barred by time and whether it was not in accordance with law, the defendants contended that the decree passed by the trial Court was a conditional decree and that to such a decree the appropriate Article of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, which applied was art. 181 of the Act, and, therefore, the application was barred by time, and that as the plaintiff's application was not accompanied by the deposit, it was not in accordance with law:—

Held, that on general principles, apart from the provisions of item 2 in column 3 of art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, where execution is sought of a decree passed in a suit in which an appeal has been preferred and decided, the starting point of limitation would be the date of the appellate decree, that even though art. 181 of the Act applied to an appellate decree, the deposit of the amount having been made by the plaintiff within three years of that decree and the execution application having also been made during this period, the application was not barred by time.

that the relief which the plaintiff had sought was clearly one which was awarded by the decree and the executing Court had jurisdiction to grant it, but if ultimately the plaintiff failed to deposit the amount within the time allowed by the Court, then the Court could dismiss his application but it could not do so simply on the ground that the amount was not put in along with the application for execution.

Normally the article which is applicable to an application for execution is art. 182, and it is only in those cases where for some reason that article does not apply that art. 181, which is a residuary article, can be pressed in aid. Where the question is whether the main article or the residuary article applies, what the Court must do is to determine whether any of the starting points in art. 182 is applicable to the particular application for execution. If none of the starting points is applicable then only the Court can resort to art. 181.

There is a distinction between a case where an application is liable to be dismissed on the ground that it is not in accordance with law and one where it is liable to be dismissed on the ground that the decree-holder is not entitled to obtain any relief because of non-compliance with the condition laid down in the decree sought to be executed.

61 Bom. L. R. 1410.

—ART. 182—Application to set aside award decree rejected—Appeal against order of rejection dismissed—Darkhast filed to execute award decree—Whether period of limitation runs from date of award decree or date on which appeal against application dismissed—Word "appeal" whether restricted to appeal from order or decree sought to be executed.

LIMITATION ACT, ART. 182—(Contd.)

The word "appeal" in column 3 of art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, is not restricted to an appeal from an order or decree which is sought to be executed, but includes an appeal from an order having direct and immediate connection with the decree which is sought to be executed.

In a suit filed by the plaintiff to set aside a sale-deed in respect of property valued at about Rs. 17,000, an award decree was passed on October 19, 1950, for Rs. 4,000. The plaintiff then filed an application to set aside the award decree praying that the decree should have been passed for an amount of Rs. 17,000 and odd. This application was rejected, and an appeal from this order of rejection was dismissed by the High Court on July 8, 1953. The plaintiff on November 11, 1954, filed a darkhast to execute the award decree. On the question whether the darkhast was in time:—

Held, that the order which was passed on the plaintiff's application had a direct and immediate connection with the award decree sought to be executed, that the starting point of limitation was, therefore, July 8, 1953, on which date the High Court dismissed the appeal filed by the plaintiff from the order rejecting his application, and that, therefore, the darkhast was in time.

Under the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act, 1950 where a home-farm land stands in the name of certain persons as khudkashi land and is in their possession on the date of vesting under the Act, the rights and interests of other persons in this land which were subsisting at the time of the coming into force of the Act are not affected by the Act but are kept intact, and if any dispute arises as to the title to this land, that dispute will have to be decided by the civil Court as contemplated under s. 38 of the Act. If, however, before the coming into force of the Act the persons in whose name the land stands had obtained exclusive title to the land against the other persons who were co-owners of the land, by virtue of adverse possession or by relinquishment or otherwise, then under s. 4(2) of the Act they would be entitled to retain possession of the land and they would become malik makbuzas of the land under s. 38(1) of the Act.

The applicant made an application under s. 40 of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act, 1950, for conferral of malik makbuzas right in respect of certain land, contending that under s. 40 of the Act read with r. 1 framed thereunder he had become an occupancy tenant of the land and, therefore, he was entitled under s. 41 of the Act to be declared a malik makbuzas of the land upon payment by him of the requisite rent. On July 12, 1955, the applicant filed an appeal against the order made on his application to the M.P. Board of Revenue under s. 40 of the Act. Pending the appeal the M.P. Land Revenue Code, 1954, came into force on October 1, 1955, and it repealed, among other provisions, s. 40 of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act, 1950. On the question whether the appeal lapsed because of the repeal of s. 40 of the Act, upon which the applicant's right was founded:—

Held, that the foundation of the application under s. 41 of the Act was the right conferred by s. 40 of the Act which right had already accrued to the applicant and was not taken away by any of the provisions of the Code, that as the proceedings before the Tribunal arose out of the application made by the applicant under s. 41 of the Act, the application was saved by s. 241 of the Code, that the order made under s. 41 of the Act was made appealable under s. 84 of the Act and that section was not repealed by the Code, and that, therefore, the appeal did not lapse.

A right acquired under s. 40 of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act, 1950, is saved by s. 239 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code, 1954, read with ss. 147 and 240 of the Code.

In order to enable a master to take disciplinary action against his servant it is not a condition precedent that the misconduct on the part of the servant must arise within his employment and not outside his employment. The test in each case will be whether the servant is conducting himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his obligations undertaken by him either expressly or impliedly in accepting the service. The inconsistency may arise on account of any act of the servant, either in the course of his employment or outside it, which injures or has the tendency to injure his master's business or interests or reputation. In the case of a private servant it is the master who in his own discretion decides the question of the disciplinary action to be taken against his servant. In the case of a public servant it is not the master but certain officers of the common master who decide this question, but their powers in that respect are regulated by the Act or rules framed thereunder.

On a Departmental Inquiry being held by the District Superintendent of Police, Wardha, on the conduct of a police constable, it was found that he had behaved very rudely with a member of the public, outside his employment. The District Superintendent of Police passed an order whereunder the police constable was reduced in pay by a certain amount per month for a period of two years and it was further ordered that the reduction would postpone his future increments. On the question whether it was open to the Police authorities to take any disciplinary action against the police constable as the misconduct as found was committed by him not during the course of employment but was outside the employment and whether the District Superintendent of Police had acted within his authority in awarding the punishment which he had awarded for the misconduct found:—

MASTER AND SERVANT—(Contd.)

Held, that the police constable had conducted himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his service inasmuch as he had acted contrary to the discipline prescribed for a police officer in cl. (11) of Regulation 64 of the Central Provinces and Bearar Police Regulations, and as his conduct was likely to bring disrepute to the police force, he had exposed himself to a disciplinary action, but, that the punishment awarded by the District Superintendent of Police was in excess of the authority and powers conferred on him under the provisions of Regulation 226, and that the punishment awarded contravened the specific provisions of cl. (a) of Regulation 217.

To justify dismissal of a servant by his master, the servant must contravene the express or implied conditions of his service, irrespective of the fact whether such contravention was during or outside the course of his employment. The following types of misconduct are illustrative of the contravention of the implied conditions of service, viz., (i) where the act or conduct of the servant is prejudicial or likely to be prejudicial to the interests of the master or to the reputation of the master; (ii) where the act or conduct of the servant is inconsistent or incompatible with the due or peaceful discharge of his duty to his master; (iii) where the act or conduct of a servant makes it unsafe for the employer to retain him in service; (iv) where the act or conduct of the servant is so grossly immoral that all reasonable men will say that the employee cannot be trusted; (v) where the act or conduct of the employee is such that the master cannot rely on the faithfulness of his employee; (vi) where the act or conduct of the employee is such as to open before him temptations for not discharging his duties properly; (vii) where the servant is abusive or if he disturbs the peace at the place of his employment; (viii) where the servant is insulting and insubordinate to such a degree as to be incompatible with the continuance of the relation of master and servant; (ix) where the servant is habitually negligent in respect of the duties for which he is engaged and (x) where the neglect of the servant, though isolated, tends to cause serious consequences.

The Minimum Wages Act, 1948, does not cast a statutory obligation upon the State Government to fix or revise the rates of minimum wages strictly according to the cost of living index. Therefore, if the cost of living index in a particular locality is not strictly followed while fixing or revising the rates of minimum wages under s. 3 of the Act, no breach of a statutory duty is committed.

Section 3(3)(a)(iv) of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, is not discriminatory and it, therefore, does not violate the provisions of art. 14 of the Constitution of India.

When a notification issued by Government in pursuance of the power conferred upon it by the statute is challenged under art. 14 of the Constitution of India as being discriminatory, the challenger must prove not only that the notification is not based on any classification or that it is based on classification which is not founded upon intelligible differentia having rational relation to the object which the Legislature has sought to attain by enacting the statute, but further that the discrimination is intentional and purposeful.

The second part of cl. 6, cl. 7 and the Explanation contained in the Schedule to the notification No. MWA-1557-J, dated June 11, 1958, issued by the State of Bombay under s. 5(2) read with s. 5(1) (b) of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, are ultra vires of the powers of the State Government. The remaining provisions of the notification are intra vires of the powers of Government and, therefore, valid and effective.

Sections 2(A), 8 and 4 of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, cast a duty on the appropriate Government to fix a minimum rate of wage (which is only a bare subsistence wage) which should be paid to the employee in respect of his employment or in respect of the work done by him in such employment on his fulfilment of the terms of the contract of employment, express or implied. The power thus conferred on the appropriate Government includes the power to interfere with the terms of the contract between the employer and the employee so far as they relate to the fixation of the wage rate, and the appropriate Government has powers by necessary implication to do all acts necessary to so fix the minimum rate of wage as would effectively compensate or remunerate the employee in respect of his employment or in respect of the work done by such employee in his employment.

The powers conferred on the appropriate Government under the Act to interfere with the terms of the contract between the employer and the employee are limited. Those powers are to interfere with the terms of the contract so far as they relate to fixation of wage for the work done in the employment. It is, therefore, not open to the State Government in fixing minimum rate of wages to interfere with the other terms of the contract between the employer and the employee.

MINIMUM WAGES ACT, S. 5—(Contd.)

The words "in any other case" in s. 20(3)(4) of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, relate only to the three types of claims other than the fixed minimum rate of wage, mentioned in s. 20(1) of the Act. These words do not confer jurisdiction on the Authority constituted under s. 20 to deal with all and every kind of wage dispute arising between the employer and the employee, e.g. disputes relating to the ascertainment and fixation of minimum rate of wage payable to the employee.

In the absence of any provision in the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, for a decision of disputes between the employer and the employee relating to the ascertainment and fixation of minimum rate of wage payable to an employee, by necessary implication it has to be assumed that it is left to the State Government to constitute a tribunal for the said purpose wherever found necessary.

Section 8(3)(b)(iv) of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, does not relate to a fixation of wage. It directs the appropriate Government to indicate the manner of calculation for purposes of conversion of the rate fixed by it per month into a rate per day and vice versa.

The doctrine of implied powers under a statute can be applied only where the following conditions are fulfilled:—

(1) There must be a duty imposed or power prescribed.

(2) On a reasonable construction of the statute there must be an impossibility in the exercise or fulfilment of that power, resulting in making its object or purpose nugatory.

(3) The impossibility must be such that it is not an impossibility in an individual case because then the law cannot permit powers by implication, but the impossibility must be of a general nature so that the purpose and object of the duty or power is rendered impossible of achievement in every case. It is only then that powers by implication can be inferred.

(4) The implication cannot contradict the expressed intent which must always prevail and where it becomes necessary to read an implication into an enactment the scope of the implication must be limited only to what is reasonably necessary and no more.

A notification issued by the State Government under s. 26(2) of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, withdrawing an exemption from the application of the Act previously granted by it is an administrative act, and therefore before issuing the notification it was not necessary for the Government to conform to the principles of natural justice.

MORTGAGE—Equitable mortgage—Sole mortgaging coparcener mortgaging property vested in him to bank—Cash credit loan account for specified amount opened with bank as consideration for mortgage—Mortgagor covenanting to repay loan after one year, and on failure to do so, bank entitled to recover amount due by sale of mortgaged property—Two extensions of one year each granted by bank of cash credit loan arrangement—Enforcement of mortgage by bank on failure of mortgagor to pay amount found due at foot of account—Suit by son of mortgagor born after date of execution of mortgage and not conceived on or before that date for declaration that mortgage not binding upon his share in mortgaged property—Whether son can challenge mortgage—Mortgage whether continued to remain in operation notwithstanding the two extensions of cash credit arrangement—Whether mortgage became effective on the date of its execution.

The defendant on June 4, 1947, executed a mortgage deed, called a deed of equitable mortgage, in respect of certain property belonging to him, in favour of a co-operative bank to secure a loan for a certain amount. On the date of the execution of the deed the defendant was the sole coparcener in a joint Hindu family. The deed inter alia stated that the defendant had opened a cash credit loan account with the bank for developing his business and the defendant could from time to time withdraw upto the amount of the mortgage loan. Under the deed the defendant covenanted to repay to the bank on or before June 3, 1948, the amount received by him or whatever amount he might withdraw from the cash credit loan account and it was stipulated that the mortgage documents were to remain in possession of the bank till the mortgage amount was repaid by the defendant. It was also provided that if the defendant failed to repay the loan within the time stipulated, the bank was entitled to recover it by sale of the mortgaged property. On May 4, 1948, and again on June 3, 1949, the defendant made applications for extension of the cash credit loan arrangement for a period of one year respectively and both the extensions were granted. On June 3, 1950, a certain amount remained due to the bank at the foot of the account and as the defendant remained indebted in that account till 1952, proceedings were taken against him under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925. An award was obtained by the bank under which the defendant was directed to pay the amount due out of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff, who was the son of the defendant, born on April 28, 1948, and who was not conceived on or before June 4, 1947, filed a suit inter alia for a declaration that the mortgage of the property executed by the defendant in favour of the bank and the award in favour of the bank were not binding upon his share in the property mortgaged.

Held, that the mortgage was binding upon the defendant who as the sole surviving coparcener was competent to dispose of the property vested in him and the plaintiff not being in existence at the date of the mortgage could not challenge it.

that notwithstanding the applications for renewal of the agreement under which the cash credit arrangement was extended, the mortgage continued to operate on the property, that when the deed of mortgage was executed for a consideration which was to be advanced in future, the mortgage became effective and enforceable against the totality of the interest of the joint family of which the defendant was the sole surviving coparcener and the birth of the plaintiff subsequently did not affect the enforceability of that mortgage against that interest, and that, therefore, the award obtained by the bank against the defendant was binding upon the plaintiff's share in the property mortgaged.

MOTOR VEHICLES ACT, S. 47—(Contd.)

General and special provisions relating to public matter—How effect to be given to.

It is open to a State Transport Undertaking to make an application for grant of a stage carriage permit under s. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939.

Section 68C of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, contemplates the preparation of a scheme by the Corporation, and it is only when such a scheme is decided upon that the provisions of that section apply. Where the Corporation does not prepare a scheme, the provisions of s. 68C cannot be availed of. In those circumstances, the provisions of s. 47 which are wide and general in their terms can be availed of by the Corporation.

It is not open to the Regional Transport Authority in exercising its powers under Chapter IV of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, to grant a permit to a State Transport Undertaking and to refuse to a private undertaking solely with the object of giving effect to the policy of nationalisation of road transport which has been decided upon by the Government. The comparative merits of both must be considered and the applications for grant of permit must be decided bearing the respective merits in mind.

Where there are two sets of provisions dealing with some public matter, one section being unqualified and the other containing a qualification, effect must be given to those provisions containing qualifications. But for this principle to apply, the general and special provisions must be applicable to the same set of circumstances. Where the general principles deal with one set of circumstance and the special provisions deal with another set of circumstance, the latter provisions will apply only where those other circumstances exist.

Chapter IV-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, does not debar a State transport undertaking from making an application under Chapter IV of the Act for a stage carriage permit.

Section 68-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, is merely an enabling section, and, therefore, it does not make it compulsory or mandatory for a State transport undertaking to prepare a scheme as envisaged in that section.

LXI of 1947)—Wife of municipal councillor working as teacher in municipal school before his election as councillor and continuing to do so thereafter—Whether councillor disqualified under s. 12(2)(b) of Municipal Boroughs Act—Applicability of s. 28(1).*

The respondent was elected a councillor of a municipality governed under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. The wife of the respondent was working as a teacher for the past several years before his election, in a school conducted by the municipality and she continued to do so thereafter. On the question whether the respondent was disqualified to remain as a councillor it was contended that the respondent could be said to have directly or indirectly an interest in the employment of his wife with or under the municipality within the meaning of s. 12(2)(b) of the Act and that s. 28(1) of the Act was applicable though the disqualification had commenced before the election of the respondent:—

Held, that the respondent's duty as a councillor was or at any rate was likely to be in conflict with his interest in his wife's employment with municipality and, therefore, he suffered from disqualification within the meaning of s. 12(2)(b) of the Act; and that the bar of s. 28(1) of the Act applied to the case of the respondent as the disqualification was not only a pre-existing one but one which continued after his election.

The word "officer" occurring in r. 43 of the Rules framed by the Nadiad Borough Municipality under s. 58(a) and (b) read with s. 46 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, must be understood in a wider sense, and not in the narrower sense as defined in r. 2(5) of the Rules. Therefore, the president would be included in the word "officer" as used in r. 43 and the procedure prescribed in that rule for the purpose of voting would apply for electing a president.

MUNICIPAL ACT (BOROUGH), S. 58

In the absence of any statutory provision or precedent of a Local Government body, the person presiding over that body should adopt some well recognised procedure relating to the business which the meeting is convened to transact. For electing a president any one of the three well-established rules of procedure could be adopted, viz. (1) the procedure for election of mayor of the Bombay Municipal Corporation as set out in r. 10 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Rules and Regulations, (2) the procedure relating to the election of the Speaker set out in r. 6, cl. 3 of the Bombay Legislative Assembly Rules and (3) the procedure relating to the election of the Speaker of the House set out in r. 6, cl. 4, of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the House of the People. It is a basic principle of the above rules of procedure that a person declared elected as the president of a body has the vote of the majority of its members in his favour.

61 Bom. L. R. (O.C.J.) 1129.

—S. 63—Resolution moved in Corporation to express regret and horror at execution of foreign dignitary and his associates in foreign country—Resolution inter alia describing such persons as fighters for freedom of their country—Whether Corporation competent to discuss and pass such resolution—"Likely to promote public instruction," ambit of expression in s. 63 (k) Expression "business" in s. 36(k), meaning of—Court's power to hold municipal action invalid and ultra vires when to be exercised.

A resolution was moved at a meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation by a councillor of the Corporation under which it was sought to express deep regret and horror at the execution of one Imre Nagy, a former Prime Minister of Hungary and his three associates. The resolution drew attention to the fact that these persons were "fighters for freedom of their motherland, who by displaying, great courage and steadfastness even at the cost of their lives in the cause of their country's freedom have upheld the dignity of man and rendered great service to the highest value of life, viz. "Freedom." The resolution stressed that the executions were contrary to the doctrine of 'Panchshila' enunciated by the Prime Minister of India and practised by India and accepted by other countries of the world. Finally, by the resolution the Union Government was requested to communicate the same to the families of the late Imre Nagy and his associates with an expression of the Corporation's sympathy in their sad bereavement. On the question whether the action of the Corporation in discussing and passing this resolution would be ultra vires the Corporation:—

Held, that the ultimate decision whether a resolution proposed to be moved before a meeting of the Corporation is likely to promote instruction is, under the Act, entrusted to the Corporation and as no appeal is provided against its decision, the Court will not interfere if the question is arguable or if two views are possible, and that as in the instant case it was arguable that the resolution and the debate on it were likely to educate or instruct the public to love their country and to be ready to fight for its freedom, the resolution could not be said to be beyond the scope and ambit of the Act, and one which the Corporation could not discuss.

The expression "business" in s. 36(k) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888, includes only that business which can be said to relate to municipal administration or Municipal Government of Greater Bombay.

The Court will not hold a municipal action invalid and ultra vires the powers of the municipality if it entertains a reasonable doubt on the point and deems the question as fairly and reasonably arguable on the ground that there is room for holding different opinions on the point. It will decline to issue its mandate unless it is satisfied that it is plain and palpable that the act complained of clearly and manifestly transcends the powers conferred on the municipality by statute.

Per S. T. Desai J. The resolution in question and discussion relating to it fall within the ambit of the expression "likely to promote public instruction" in s. 63(k) of the Act, and, therefore, the Bombay Municipal Corporation was competent to discuss and, if the majority of its councillors so decided, to pass the resolution.

The general rule is that the Court will not inquire into the policy, expediency or propriety of a municipal act, and while it has undoubted jurisdiction to determine whether a municipal act is ultra vires or not, it will not, in reviewing the vires of the act complained of, probe into the motive or purpose of those initiating or voting on the same.

Section 313(i) of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1949, comes into operation if the facts disclose that a particular factory is completely destroyed and that, in substance, a new factory has been brought into existence. If, on the other hand, the facts establish that the factory was not completely destroyed, but that there was only discontinuance of the factory, then, if the factory comes to be re-opened or renewed, the offence will not be committed unless the prosecution shows that discontinuance was for more than three years, or unless the case comes within the proviso to s. 313 of the Act. The test to be applied in each case is to discover whether the functions performed or capable of being performed by the undestroyed parts are such that the factory cannot efficiently function as a unit and can perform the task of producing the final result or product for the production of which it was erected and for which alone it was intended to exist. The substance of the matter has got to be considered. If, on the evidence, the substance of the matter turns out to be that the old factory has come to be destroyed in the sense that the old factory cannot, in substance, perform its function, then, it would come within the purview of s. 313(i). On the contrary, if the substance of the whole matter is that the factory has not come to be destroyed but it has only come to be discontinued, then, in that case, s. 313(iii) would apply.

Under ss. 59, 60 and 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, a municipality has power to provide by rules a scheme for granting remissions in the matter of recovery of any of the taxes specified in s. 59 of the Act including a terminal tax.

Failure by a municipality governed under the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, to refund an amount of tax, while accepting liability to refund the same, cannot be said to be an "act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution" of the Act. Therefore, where the plaintiff was in the first instance bound to pay a tax to a municipality and had in fact paid the same, but under the law prevailing the plaintiff was entitled to refund of a percentage of the tax paid and the municipality while admitting liability did not refund the same, a suit filed by the plaintiff for refund of tax would not be governed by s. 167-A of the Act, but by art. 62 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

Under a rule framed by a municipality under s. 59(1)(xi) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, the municipality provided for the levy of "a tax in respect of all hotels, boarding houses, eating houses, restaurants, tea or coffee-houses and other places where food, meals, refreshments, tea, coffee or other non-intoxicating drinks are provided on payment of money." The municipality under this rule claimed to levy the tax on an unincorporated private members' club, the property and funds of which belonged to the members for the time being jointly in equal shares, contending that the club was an hotel or that it was covered by the expression "other places etc." appearing in the aforesaid rule:—

Held, that the two elements to constitute an hotel viz. access thereto by the public or a section thereof and supply of articles constituting meals and drinks for a price being absent in the present case, the club was not an hotel within the meaning of the rule framed by the municipality;

that the expression "other places" which follow upon the words "all hotels, boarding houses, eating houses, restaurants, tea or coffee houses" must be interpreted as words describing a place falling within the same genus viz. a place where the public or a section thereof has access, and, therefore, the club falls outside the ambit of the rule; and that, therefore, the club was not liable to pay any tax under the rule.

Section 59(1)(xi) of the Act lays down a principle and fixes a standard which the municipalities have to follow in imposing a tax and the Legislature cannot, in the circumstances, be said to have abdicated itself and, therefore, the delegation of power to impose any tax cannot be struck down as being in excess of the permissible limits of delegation of legislative functions.

Section 96A of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, is not restricted in its application to cases where permission to erect a building is refused absolutely. The section also contemplates cases where there is refusal to sanction permission for construction on a part of the land on which the building is proposed to be constructed. Therefore, if the municipality refuses permission to alter, add to or reconstruct a building, the refusal must be accompanied by a resolution to acquire the land on which the building stands. Where, therefore, the municipality does not pass such a resolution and refuses permission which is applied for under s. 96(1) of the Act, the refusal is invalid and construction of a building in contravention of that refusal is not penalised by s. 96(5) of the Act.

Under the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, the power to employ servants is reserved with the municipal committee not only by the general provisions of 10(I) of the Act, but expressly by the provisions of s. 25(1) of the Act. This power cannot be exercised by the President of the municipality unless it is delegated to him by a bye law made under s. 25(1) or under s. 27 or unless it is exercised in a case covered by cl. (iii) of the proviso to s. 25(1).

MUNICIPALITIES ACT, S. 25(6)—Rules framed under s. 25(6)—Employee of Municipal Committee appealing against his exclusion from promotion by Committee—Competency of such appeal—Whether refusal by Committee to promote employee can be regarded as punishment.

The rules framed under s. 25(6) of the Central Provinces and Berar Municipalities Act, 1922, are limited to appeals against departmental punishments only. They cannot be regarded as general rules enabling any employee of the Municipal Committee who is aggrieved by any decision of the Municipal Committee to prefer an appeal.

No Government servant has a vested right to promotion; if a person though entitled because of the length of his service or of his qualifications to promotion is not promoted in due course, it cannot be said that he has been punished. Where, therefore, the Municipal Committee refuses to promote its employee in due course, it cannot be regarded as a punishment. The action of the Municipal Committee may be regarded as a punishment only where as a result of it the existing position of its employee is worsened.

The expression "system of assessment" occurring in s. 67(2) of the C. PARTNERSHIP ACT (IX of 1932), S. 14—Indian Trust Act (II of 1882), Sec. 83, III. (d) —Partnership consisting of two partners dissolved by notice given by partner B to partner P—Notice stating that out of entire amount of profit of partnership lying with P, half to be given to B within four days and that B wishing to break off relations with P—P subsequently purchasing property out of amount of profit belonging to partnership—Whether such property partnership asset and B entitled to a share in it—Benami transaction—Burden of proof—Whether onus of proof on party alleging that transaction is benami—Burden of proof in such case how discharged.

A partnership consisting of two partners B and P was dissolved by a notice given by B to P on September 26, 1946, which stated that till the date of the notice a net profit of Rs. 20,000 was made by the partnership business and that the amount of profit was with P, that out of this amount P should pay half of it to B within four days of the receipt of the notice and that henceforth B wished to break off all relations with P. On April 9, 1947, P purchased certain property for Rs. 10,500. On the question whether the property became a partnership asset so as to give B a share therein on the assumption that P had paid the purchase price of the property out of the amount of profit in his hands belonging to the partnership:—

Held, that as the partnership in the case was dissolved in 1946 and as B had broken off all relations with P and claimed an eight anna share in the profits which he alleged were in the hands of P, the purchase of the property could not be regarded as a transaction of the partnership, in the circumstances of the case, so as to give B a share therein on the ground that he was a partner.

Even during the subsistence of a partnership, if property is purchased out of partnership assets, it does not necessarily become partnership property, and where property is purchased not for the purpose of business or for the PENAL CODE (Act XLV of 1860), S. 2—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Secs. 179, 5(1)—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Secs. 16 ill. (b), 88—Foreigner committing offences within India though corporeally present outside India at time of offence—Whether Indian Penal Code applies to such person—Exercise of criminal jurisdiction whether dependent on locality of offence or nationality of offender—Authorship of document whether can be proved by contents of the document—Whether permissible to construe Indian Penal Code in accordance with notions of criminal jurisdiction prevalent when Code enacted—How far legitimate to construe Code with reference to modern needs.

Under s. 2 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, the Code applies to a foreigner who has committed an offence within India notwithstanding that he was corporeally present outside India at the time of the commission of the offence.

The meaning of the phrase "every person" in s. 2 of the Indian Penal Code is that it comprehends all persons without limitation and irrespective of nationality, allegiance, rank, status, caste, colour or creed. The section must be understood as comprehending every person without exception barring such as may be specially exempt from criminal proceedings or punishment thereunder by virtue of the Constitution (see art. 86(2) of the Constitution of India) or any statutory provisions or some well-recognised principle of international law, such as foreign sovereigns, ambassadors, diplomatic agents and so forth, accepted in the municipal law.

Exercise of criminal jurisdiction depends on the locality of the offence and not on the nationality of the alleged offender except in a few specified cases such as ambassadors, princes etc.

The fastening of criminal liability on a foreigner in respect of culpable acts or omissions in India which are juridically attributable to him notwithstanding that he is corporeally present outside India at the time, is not to give any extra-territorial operation to the law; for it is in respect of an offence whose locality is in India, that the liability is fastened on the person and the punishment is awarded by the law, if his presence in India for trial can be secured.

It is implicit in s. 3 of the Indian Penal Code that a foreigner who commits an offence within India is guilty and can be punished as such without any limitation as to his corporeal presence in India at the time.

PENAL CODE, S. 2—(Contd.)

The authorship of a document may be proved by internal evidence afforded by the contents of the document. This mode of proof may be of considerable value where the disputed document purports to be a link in a chain of correspondence some links in which are proved to the satisfaction of the Court. In such a situation the person who is the recipient of the document, be it either a letter or a telegram, would be in a reasonably good position both with reference to his prior knowledge of the writing or the signature of the alleged sender, limited though it may be, as also his knowledge of the subject-matter of the chain of correspondence, to speak of its authorship. In an appropriate case the Court may also be in a position to judge whether the document constitutes a genuine link in the chain of correspondence and thus to determine its authorship.

Illustration (b) to s. 16 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, only means that each one of the facts mentioned therein (the fact that a letter was posted in due course and the fact that it was not returned through the Dead Letter Office) is relevant. It cannot be read as indicating that without a combination of these facts no presumption of the receipt of the letter by the addressee can arise.

Although under s. 88 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, no presumption can be drawn as to the person who delivered the message for transmission, the contents of the message received, in the context of the chain of correspondence may furnish proof of authorship of the message at the dispatching end.

Where the charge against the accused is under s. 420 read with s. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, but the actual findings support a conviction of the accused under s. 430 of the Code, the conviction of the accused under s. 420 would be valid unless prejudice is shown to have occurred.

It is not permissible to construe the Indian Penal Code at the present day in accordance with the notions of criminal jurisdiction prevailing at the time when the Code was enacted. It is legitimate to construe the Code with reference to the modern needs, wherever this is permissible, unless there is anything in the Code or in any particular section to indicate the contrary.

The accused, who was tried for an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code for the murder of his wife, in his defence stated that he had seen his wife coming out of the house of her paramour on the night previous to the offence, that when he saw her the following morning working in a field and questioned her about it, she talked to him impertinently, threatened to go and live with her paramour and used foul language, that when he caught her hand she kicked him and that, thereupon, he lost his self-control, took out a small pen-knife and dealt five or seven blows with it on his wife's person. On the question whether Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Code was available to the accused:—

Held, that the incident which the accused alleged had occurred in the field in the morning was not sufficient in law to constitute grave and sudden provocation within the meaning of that expression used in Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is extremely hazardous to apply Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code to a case like the above merely on the ground that offences against marital rights are made punishable in India. What has to be considered in a case of this kind is whether provocation which was offered was of a kind which would cause a reasonable man belonging to the same —S. 409—Accused collecting amount of fine from landholder in his capacity as public servant—Accused misappropriating such amount—State not entitled in law to enforce fine—Whether accused had committed offence under s. 409.

Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, merely requires that there must be entrustment of property to a public servant and breach of the trust committed by him in respect of the property entrusted. It is not necessary under the section that the property in respect of which the offence is committed must be shown to be the property of the State. Therefore, where the State is not entitled in law to collect an amount from the tax-payer, and the amount is received by a person acting as a public servant in exercise of his duties, he holds the amount for and on behalf of the State and in his hand it becomes part of the public fund and if he misappropriates that amount, he commits the offence of criminal breach of trust.

Section 405 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, does not contemplate that the property in respect of which an offence of criminal breach of trust may be committed must be property which belonged to the complainant. Provided there is entrustment of property, it matters little whether the complainant on whose behalf the property is entrusted is the owner thereof or not.

The accused as a Talati employed under the revenue department was invested with authority to collect land revenue and fines ordered to be received under the Land Revenue Code from landholders. The accused pursuant to an order of the Mamlatdar collected a certain amount of fine from a landholder. The accused misappropriated this amount. It was found that the alleged liability of the landholder for the amount collected by the accused could not have been lawfully enforced by the state by revenue or other lawful process. On the question whether the accused had committed an offence punishable under s. 409 of the Indian Penal Code:—

Held, that as the accused was a public servant and had received in his capacity as a public servant the amount of fine, he was entrusted with that amount and he was bound to pay the same in the Government Treasury or to account for the same under the rules made in that behalf by the Land Revenue Code and as the accused had misappropriated the amount entrusted to him, he had committed criminal breach of trust in respect thereof.

—S. 415—Complainant entering into contract with accused on false representation by latter that they were partners of particular firm—Breach of contract by accused—Whether offence of cheating committed by accused.

A complaint was filed charging accused Nos. 1 and 2 with having committed an offence under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, 1860, and accused No. 3 with having abetted the commission of that offence. It was alleged in the complaint that accused No. 3 persuaded the complainant to enter into a contract shipping a certain quantity of goods with a firm on a representation that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were partners of that firm and that accused Nos. 1 and 2 confirmed the representation and it turned out, after the contract was broken and the consignment was not booked, that accused Nos. 1 and 2 were not the partners of the firm but some other persons were in truth the partners of that firm and that but for the representations made, the complainant would not have entered into the contract:—

Held, that the use of the expression "cause" in s. 415 of the Indian Penal Code postulates a direct and proximate causal connection between the act or omission and the harm and damage to the victim, and that as, in the present case, there was no direct relation of cause and effect between the representation alleged to be made and the harm and damage to the complainant as a result of the breach of the contract, an offence under s. 415 of the Code was not committed in consequence of the accused persuading the complainant to enter into the contract for shipment.

The defendant sublet certain premises to the plaintiff in April 1945 on a monthly rent, and the plaintiff continued to be in exclusive possession and occupation of the premises and paid the rent to the defendant. In 1954 the defendant filed an ejectment application against the plaintiff in the Court of Small

Causes, Bombay, under s. 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, to recover possession of the premises on the basis that they were given to the plaintiff under leave and licence and that the licence was revoked. The plaintiff contended that he was the lawful sub-tenant of the defendant. The Court, however, passed an order in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff then filed a suit in the Bombay City Court under s. 47 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act for a declaration that the defendant's ejectment application was an act of trespass and that the defendant was not entitled to recover possession of the premises. In his plaint the plaintiff after describing himself as a lawful sub-tenant of the defendant stated that he was entitled to the protection of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. The defendant inter alia contended that the plaintiff was not his sub-tenant but was in occupation of the premises as his licensee and that the suit as framed by the plaintiff could not be entertained by the Bombay City Civil Court:—

Held, that as the order of possession obtained by the defendant was under the summary procedure provided under Chapter VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the plaintiff was entitled to challenge that order by filing a suit as contemplated by ss. 46 and 47 of the Act, that merely because of the statement in the plaint that the plaintiff was entitled to the protection under the Bombay Rent Act, the suit did not fall within the ambit of s. 23 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, and that, therefore, the Bombay City Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

PREVENTION OF CORRUPTION ACT (II of 1947), S. 4(1)—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Secs. 161, 165—"Gratification", meaning of expression—Person accused of offence under s. 161 proved to have taken gratification other than legal remuneration—Statutory presumption to be raised by Court under s. 4(1) of Prevention of Corruption Act—Burden of proof—Accused whether bound to prove that gratification not accepted as a reward such as mentioned in s. 161—Natura motive or of such proof.

The expressions "gratification" as used in s. 161 and "valuable thing" as used in s. 165 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, are not mutually exclusive in their connotations. Acceptance of a valuable thing by a public servant may amount to acceptance of gratification within the meaning of s. 161 of the Code.

Section 4(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, not only dispenses with the proof by the prosecution of one of the essential ingredients of the offence under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, namely, that gratification was accepted or agreed to be accepted or attempted to be obtained as motive or reward for performing an official act, but the section imposes upon the person accused, when it is proved that he has accepted or obtained or agreed to accept or attempted to obtain gratification other than legal remuneration, the burden of proving that it was not as a motive or reward that the gratification was obtained. The Court is required to raise the statutory presumption subject to the limits prescribed by s. 4(3) of the Prevention of Corruption Act when it is proved that the public servant tried for an offence under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code has received gratification.

The presumption is not one which is required to be rebutted by evidence establishing the defence of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. If the person accused shows a reasonable preponderance of probability enough to support a verdict in a civil action, that the gratification was not as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do an official act, the burden may be deemed to be discharged.

Section 135(2) of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, empowers the Central Government to appoint an officer only for the limited purpose of determining the quantum of the liability of the Railway Administration to pay the tax leviable by the local authority and not for determining the question of the liability of such Administration to pay a tax at all. It is, therefore, not competent to such an officer to consider, in a proceeding before him under s. 135(2) of the Act, the very factum of the liability of the Railway Administration to pay the tax of which the amount, if any, is required to be determined by it. The officer may, however, construe the notification issued under s. 135(1) of the Act or enquire into the existence of the notification. If he hold that there is no notification, he must straightaway proceed to dismiss the application made under s. 135(2) of the Act.

In every plaint the plaintiff has to aver that the Court in which it is filed has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the claim made therein. In the absence of such an averment, the Court must reject it, unless the Court is satisfied from the other averments in the plaint that it has, prima facie, jurisdiction to entertain the plaint and that the plaintiff's omission to make the averment as to jurisdiction is a mere clerical or accidental error. But where a plaintiff lodges his claim and denies the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it, the Court must throw it out forthwith. The position is not different where an initial averment as to the Court's jurisdiction is withdrawn by the plaintiff, either expressly or by necessary implication, later on.

A municipal corporation is included within the expression "municipality" appearing in the Fourth Schedule of the Representation of the People Act, 1950.

The expression 'municipality' used in the Constitution of India as well as in the Fourth Schedule of the Representation of the People Act, 1950, includes all bodies entrusted with the administration of municipal affairs of a city or a town.

A notified area committee is not included in the expression "municipality" used in the Fourth Schedule of the Representation of the People Act, 1950.

Section 27 of the Representation of the People Act, 1950, confers on all the members of the local authorities specified in the Fourth Schedule of the Act, a right to get their names entered in the electoral roll of the local authorities' constituency. Therefore, under the 7th item [i.e. "Janapada Sabhas (Rural Circle)"] in the Fourth Schedule to the Act relating to the State of Bombay, such a right is conferred not only on members selected from rural circles of the Janapada Sabhas but also on members selected from urban circle of the Janapada Sabhas.

The Electoral Registration Officer erroneously entered the names of the members of certain notified area committees in the Vidarbha electoral roll of the Vidarbha Local Authorities Constituency for electing members to the Bombay Legislative Council. On the question whether this error on the part of the Officer attracted the provisions of s. 100(I)(d)(iii) &

The expression "decision of the High Court" in s. 116B of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, means the final order of the High Court disposing of the appeal on merits or otherwise. Therefore, an order of the High Court permitting withdrawal of the appeal filed against the Tribunal under s. 116A of the Act and ordering disposal thereof, is a decision within the meaning of s. 116B of the Act, and such an order is final and conclusive and not open to review by the High Court.

In order to come within the ambit of the term 'corrupt practice' under s. 123(4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, there must be a false statement of fact by a candidate or his agent which is made in relation to the personal character or conduct of any other candidate. Adverse criticism, however severe, however undignified or ill-mannered, however regrettable it might be in the interests of purity and decency of public life, in relation to the political views, position, reputation or action of a candidate, will not bring it within the mischief of the statute. The Court in such matters cannot judge these statements in the light of their decency or desirability in so far as they are political statements not calculated to attack the personal character or conduct of any rival candidate. What is objectionable is a false statement of fact, and not a false statement of opinion however unfounded or however unjustified. It is only when the person beneath the politician is sought to be assailed and his honour, integrity and veracity are challenged and such a statement is false that it can be said that a false statement of fact about his personal character and conduct is made; and once it is established that such a statement was made, the question whether there was malice or not is immaterial. In ascertaining the true nature of the statement made, the Court must take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances including the occasion when it was published or made, the person against whom it was made, the person publishing it or making it, the audience or readers to whom it is addressed as also the precautions or care taken by the publisher to verify the truth or otherwise of the statement challenged.

The correct legal position regarding agency in elections is that the relation is not the common law one of principal and agent, but the candidate may be responsible for the acts of one acting on his behalf, though such acts are beyond the scope of the authority given, or in violation of express injunction.

Describing a candidate, who is contesting an election as an independent candidate, as really not independent but as being supported by other parties or prominent persons of other parties will not amount to an attack on his personal character.

Section 4(1) of the Saurashtra Adjudication of (Special Courts) Suits Ordinance, 1949, contemplates suits which sound in tort and not suits in contract.

Where the Ruler of a State, previous to its integration with the State of Saurashtra, had entered into a contract with the plaintiff and the plaintiff filed a suit against the State of Saurashtra to enforce the contractual obligation undertaken by the Ruler, on the question whether the suit fell within the ambit of s. 4(1) of the Saurashtra Adjudication of (Special Courts) Suits Ordinance, 1949:—

Held, that the expression "anything done or omitted" in s. 4(1)(i) of the Ordinance means anything done or omitted unilaterally, that what was done by the Ruler was to enter into a contract with the plaintiff which was a bilateral act and the enforcement was not of any right or remedy in respect of anything done or omitted to be done, but the suit was for the enforcement of the contract entered into between the plaintiff and the Ruler, and hence the suit did not fall within s. 4 of the Ordinance, and that, therefore, the suit did not abate by reason of the provisions of s. 3(1) of the Saurashtra Suits against Government (Abatement and Adjudication) Act, 1961.

When a citizen seeks to enforce his contractual right or his rights under the ordinary law of the land, merely because he is asserting those rights against the State, the State cannot rely on the provisions of art. 363 of the Constitution of India for contending that because the liability was taken over by the State from the merging State under a covenant, the right of the citizen cannot be adjudicated in a civil Court as provided by art. 363 of the Constitution

A Board constituted under s. 5 of the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 1952, is a Court.

Where under Notifications issued by the Government of Saurashtra under ss. 17 and 19 of the Saurashtra District and Subordinate Civil Courts Ordinance, 1948, an Assistant Judge was empowered to try appeals from decrees and orders of "subordinate Courts" as would lie to the District Judge and as may be referred to him by the District Judge concerned and the Assistant Judge was invested with powers to entertain such appeals from the decrees and orders of "subordinate Courts" as would lie to the District Judge:

Held, that the Assistant Judge, to whom an appeal filed against an award made by a Board constituted under s. 5 of the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 1952, was transferred by the District Judge concerned, had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, as the Board was a Court within the meaning of the expression "subordinate Courts" which occurred in the Notifications.

If a statute creating a tribunal says that the tribunal shall be a Court for the limited purpose of certain sections of certain enactments, then the tribunal is not a Court in the sense in which the word "Court" is used in the context of hierarchy of Courts established in the Union of India.

SAURASHTRA LAND REFORMS ACT (XXV of 1951), S. 2—Lands granted as 'giras' by former Ruler of State to petitioner continued by United State of Saurashtra on condition that petitioner not to evict tenants on lands—Government of Saurashtra by notification under Act declaring petitioner 'girasdar' and incorporating in notification condition that petitioner not to evict tenants—Application by petitioner for allotment of "garkhed land" under s. 19 of Act—Whether petitioner's application could be granted—Whether there is conflict between, s. 12 and s. 18—Whether Government can impose restrictions upon rights of girasdar.

The former Ruler of a State in Saurashtra granted certain agricultural lands as 'giras' to the petitioner who was a junior member of the ruling family. After the administration of the State was taken over by the United State of Saurashtra, an agreement was arrived at between the Ruler and the Government of India under which the lands were regarded as lawfully granted to the petitioner but subject to the restriction that the grantee was not to evict the tenants on the lands. After the coming into force of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act, 1951, the Government of Saurashtra by a notification dated July 20, 1954, declared the petitioner a girasdar subject to the provisions of s. 18 of the Act, and conditions imposed by the Government of India that he could not evict tenants were incorporated in the notification. In the meanwhile on March 21, 1952, the petitioner applied for an order of allotment of "garkhed land" under s. 19 of the Act read with r. 4. On the question whether the petitioner's application could be granted:—

Held, that as the condition incorporated in the agreement arrived at between the Ruler and the Government of India was accepted by the petitioner, who had knowledge of it, it ensured for the benefit of the tenants for whose benefit it was imposed, that as the notification which declared the petitioner a girasdar, expressly preserved the rights of the tenants and imposed a disability upon the petitioner preventing him from evicting the tenants in the lands of which he was declared a girasdar, that declaration also ensured for the benefit of the tenants under s. 18 of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act, 1951, and that, therefore, the petitioner's application could not be granted.

SAURASHTRA LAND REFORMS ACT,
S. 2—(Contd.)

The rights which a tenant has and which are not limited or abridged under s. 18 of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act, 1951, are to be regarded as enforceable so long as the tenancy is subsisting. Therefore, where there is statutory determination of tenancy under s. 12 of the Act as a result of an order of allotment of land to the girasdar passed by the Mamlatdar, the girasdar becomes an occupant of the land under s. 39 of the Act and the rights of the tenant holding that land are extinguished.

There is nothing in the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act, 1951, which requires the Government when declaring a landlord a girasdar, not to impose any conditions upon him, or not to declare the rights of the tenants in the land of which the landlord is declared a girasdar.

SEA CUSTOMS ACT, S. 29—(Contd.)

An assessment order made under s. 87 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, is an administrative order and not a quasi-judicial order.

The difference between an administrative and a quasi-judicial order does not lie merely in this that in the case of a quasi-judicial order a writ of certiorari can be issued. The more fundamental difference between the two orders is that in the case of a quasi-judicial order the Court must require and demand from the authority exercising his functions that he will conform to the judicial process.

In making an assessment or in issuing a short levy notice under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the assessing authority must give reasons for his decisions i.e. as to how and why the assessing authority came to a particular conclusion or made the assessment in a particular manner.

Where, however, such reasons are not given, but the reasons are disclosed in affidavits at the trial, then the Court could look into those reasons and consider those reasons as if they were the reasons embodied in the order itself.

The reason why the Courts refuse to entertain writs when an alternative remedy is available is that the Legislature has set up tribunals for decision in appeals and that the remedy which the Court could give, the petitioner could obtain from these tribunals. But whether the petitioner should be disentitled to maintain the petition or not is a matter of discretion with the Court, and if the Court is satisfied that the petitioner will not get justice from the appellate tribunal or that he would have no confidence in the decision of the tribunal or that the appeal would be nothing more than an appeal from Caesar to Caesar, then the Court is not bound to accede to the submission of the State that it should not hear the petitioner and the petitioner should be referred to the appellate tribunal set up under the Act.

In determining the real value of goods for the purposes of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the Customs authorities are not bound by the price shown on the invoice by the importer. The invoice is an important piece of evidence to determine what the real value is. But that piece of evidence may be discarded if the authorities take the view that it is not a genuine document or if they take the view that over and above the price which is being paid some other consideration has passed under the document.

Section 30(b) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, does not in any way import into its construction any consideration as to the character of the importer. What is emphasised is the cost of the goods, whoever the importer may be.

In order to test the genuineness of the invoice the customs authorities may requisition to their aid any other facts, but only for that purpose. They may consider if they like the cost, in Europe, cost of production, or any other factor. But all those considerations must ultimately be directed to the determination and ascertainment of the only fact which has got to be determined and ascertained under s. 30(b) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, which is the cost of the goods of like kind and quality at the place of importation.

SEA CUSTOMS ACT, S. 167—Imports and Exports (Control) Act (XVIII of 1947), Sec. 3(2)—Constitution of India, Art. 226—Expression "value" in s. 167(37)(c) whether means "real value" as defined in s. 30 or cost price—Value relevant for purpose of offence under s. 167(8)—Practice (Civil)—Prerogative writs—Rule Nisi when should Court grant—Construction of statutes—Penal statutes how to be construed.

The expression "value" in s. 167(37)(c) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, means "real value" of the goods as required to be stated under s. 29 of the Act and as defined in s. 30 of the Act.

Where the import or export licence speaks only of c.i.f. value of the goods, it is the c.i.f. value of the goods and not the real value of the goods that is relevant for the purpose of the offence alleged to have been committed under s. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

In cases where small penalties are imposed by the customs authorities and no fundamental right of the subject is violated, the Court should be slow in granting Rule Nisi unless it is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out for the interference of the Court by issuance of any of the extraordinary writs, and the circumstances of the case demand its interference. A petitioner who seeks relief from the Court by issuance of any of the prerogative writs should take care to set out in his petition the reasons why he approaches the Court instead of adopting the normal machinery available to him under the Act by appealing to higher authorities.

Penal statutes are construed with reference to the true meaning and the real intention of the Legislature.

Section 178A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, does not infringe the constitutional guarantees afforded by art. 19(1)(f) and (g) of the Constitution of India so far as gold is concerned.

The effect of s. 23A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, is not to incorporate the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, into the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, but the effect is of incorporating the restrictions imposed by sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 8, sub-s. (1) of s. 12 and cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 13 in the Sea Customs Act, 1878, with certain modifications in s. 188 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

Under Item 8 of s. 167 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the liability to pay penalty arises only when it is proved that the person proceeded against is concerned in the importation in India or exportation from India of goods contrary to the provisions of the law. The mere finding that the goods found in a person's possession were smuggled goods is not sufficient to impose a penalty.

The burden cast on a person under s. 178A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, from whose possession gold is seized would be discharged by him either by proving that the gold seized from him was on the Indian soil prior to September 4, 1939, or that it was brought on the Indian soil subsequent to that date on the authority of a licence granted in that behalf by the Reserve Bank of India and duty thereon was paid, if any was payable.

Speech made in Parliament by the sponsor of a Bill may be referred to by the Court for the limited purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time which actuated the sponsor of the Bill to introduce it and the extent and urgency of the evil which he sought to remedy.

A civil Court would have jurisdiction to consider the validity of decisions and orders made under the provisions of ss. 182 and 188 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, on the grounds that the provisions of the Act had not been complied with or that the Tribunal had not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure.

The word 'liability' used in Part VII of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, includes not only a financial obligation but also obligations of every other kind, including one of reinstating government servant wrongly dismissed.

The meaning of the term "actionable wrong" in s. 88 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, is an illegal or unauthorised act infringing a legal right of another affording him a ground for action in law. Therefore, where the petitioners, who were citizens of India, challenged the orders of their dismissal on the ground of infringement of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India, the wrong complained of would be an

Therefore, where the petitioners' claim is that their services had been wrongfully terminated in contravention of art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India, for the purposes of s. 88(b) of the Act they must establish that the entire cause of action, namely, the order for termination of their services and the consequence of that order i.e. the fact that they were removed from their services, had arisen within the aforesaid territories.

TAXATION LAWS (EXTENSION TO MERGED STATES AND AMENDMENTS) ACT (LXVII of 1949), SS. 3, 6—Merged States (Taxation Concessions) Order, 1949; Paras 12, 4—Indian Income-tax Act

TAXATION LAWS (EXTENSION TO MERGED STATES AND AMENDMENTS) ACT, SS. 3, 6—(Contd.)

(XI of 1922), Secs. 60A, 23A, 18A(8)—Assessee company, a non-resident, incorporated in former Indian State—After merger of State, Extension Act bringing into force Indian Income-tax Act in merged State from April 1, 1949—Income-tax Officer making order against assessee under s. 23A in respect of assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49—Whether assessee could claim benefit of exemption granted by para. 12 of Taxation Concessions Order, 1949—Interest added to tax under s. 18A(8) whether tax for purpose of computation under s. 23A.

The assessee was a private limited company incorporated in a former Indian State. On August 1, 1949, the State was merged in the Province of Bombay and on December 31, 1949, the Taxation Laws (Extension to Merged States and Amendment) Act, 1949, came into operation and under it the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Indian Finance Act, 1949, were brought into force in all the merged States on April 1, 1949. The Income-tax Officer held the assessee to be non-resident for the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 (accounting years 1946 and 1947), and made an order under s. 23A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, against the assessee in respect of these years. The assessee contended that it was entitled to claim the benefit of the exemptions granted by para. 12 of the Merged States (Taxation Concessions) Order, 1949, made under s. 60A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to make any order against the assessee under s. 23A in respect of its profits and gains of the previous years ended December 31, 1946, and December 31, 1947:—

Held, that incomes which were not touched by the Taxation Laws (Extension to Merged States and Amendment) Act, 1949, could not benefit by the exemption and that as the Merged States (Taxation Concessions) Order, 1949, could not embrace incomes which were not within the ambit of s. 60A, the Income-tax Officer was not precluded from making the impugned order.

The amount of interest added to tax as provided in s. 18A(8) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, does not become tax for the purpose of computation envisaged by s. 23A of the Act.

The entire immovable property of a joint Hindu family which consisted of ancestral property and subsequent acquisitions remained after severance of the joint family status by partition between the plaintiffs and the defendant, who were members of the family, with the defendant. The defendant did not maintain separate accounts of the income received from the properties in which the plaintiffs had a share and the properties acquired by him after the partition. The defendant dealt with the income derived from his share and the share of the plaintiffs. It was contended by the plaintiffs that when the defendant continued to receive the share of the income even after partition in the ancestral and joint family properties and mixed up the income belonging to their share with the income of his own share and acquired properties from time to time, all the properties so acquired must be deemed to be impressed with the character of the fund out of which the properties were acquired i.e. the acquired properties belonged to the plaintiffs and the defendant as tenants in common:—

Held, that because the defendant continued to receive the rents and profits of the share of the plaintiffs in the properties which were originally ancestral or joint family properties he did not thereby become a trustee of the rents and profits so received for the plaintiffs, although he was liable to account for the rents and profits received by him, that the fact that the defendant failed to maintain separate accounts of the income of the plaintiffs' share collected by him did not impress the fund accumulated by him after severance with the character of a fund belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendant, that the fund in the hands of the defendant was still a fund of which he was the owner and it was not impressed with any trust in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the property acquired with the aid of that fund was the exclusive property of the defendant and the plaintiffs had no claim or share in that property.

Section 3 of the Wealth-tax Act, 1957, which authorises the levy of wealth-tax on the net wealth of a Hindu undivided family is not ultra vires the Union Parliament.

The expression "individuals" used in entry No. 86 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India includes an association of individuals such as a Hindu undivided family.

Quaere: Whether in the residuary powers of the Union Parliament power to legislate on a topic which is partially dealt with by a specific entry in the first List may be regarded as included.

Per S. T. Desai J. The entries in the Lists contained in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India are legislative heads primarily designed to demarcate the areas of legislative competence of the Union and the State Legislatures. They give simplex enumeration of categories of legislation and are not designed to circumscribe or logically define the ambit of art. 248 of the Constitution. It would be difficult, therefore, to read in any entry in List I any restriction by implication or otherwise on the residuary legislative power conferred on the Union Legislature by art. 248.

If the Legislature of a country has been accustomed to use any word or expression with a more restricted or extended meaning than might be commonly attributed to it in its ordinary sense, the Court should not blandly shut out that consideration but should avail of that assistance, albeit limited, in the process of interpretation. Legislative practice is one of the accepted aids to construction and furnishes extrinsic evidence to which resort may legitimately be had when the Court has to construe a word or phrase and the task of preferring one meaning to another can really be said to have arisen.
